

I AM NOT
THAT KIND OF TALENT

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 1

1. The Demon King's most powerful card (1)

Tak. A pale white hand vigorously touched the desk.

What was underneath was none other than white paper.

After a short pause, the hand that stopped for a moment slowly withdraws, leaving only the paper behind.

The man who was watching the hand move away lowered his gaze and focused his eyes on the paper on the desk. My eyes turned to the paper without much notice, and when I saw the words 'Resignation' written on it, I stopped and immediately grew to the size of a small drop.

The white-haired, red-eyed man, who had been watching the entire process without a moment's hesitation until he suddenly raised his head, looked straight into the station, where his confusion was clearly visible, and spoke with a voice as firm as his face.

"I will quit my job."

***

If there are 'heroes' in the empire, there are 'corps commanders' in the Demon King's army.

If the empire puts forward capable generals, the Demon King will also put forward 'corps commanders'.

To that extent, the corps commander is the devil's sword and shield, and a symbol of power.

Officially, there are twelve corps commanders of the Demon King, from the 1st corps commander to the 12th corps commander, but in fact, there is one more corps that is worthless to call an openly hidden secret.

The 0th Legion is a strict secret, although not only everyone in the Demon Castle knows it, even the enemy Imperial Army knows about it.

In fact, the person who killed the 'last hero' is the commander of the army, and is in fact the most powerful member of the Demon King.

The kind of card that gives you peace of mind just by having it suddenly quits.

"no! "What the heck!"

I can't miss out on a talented person like you like this! With that will, Demon Lord Caber grabbed his subordinate's trouser legs and hung down.

He usually doesn't talk much and doesn't move much, so when he came here in person, I wondered what was going on. I was even happy to see it.

But this is what they say at best.

Probably not sincere. As always, I guess I'll just give it a try. It must be so.

I raised my head, still holding on to my pant legs. Red eyes met our gazes and silence fell.

He would probably have guessed what he was trying to say through his eyes.

‘If I’m going this far, you really won’t say I’m quitting, right?’

His eyes, which had been hard all along, trembled slightly as if his intention had worked. At first glance, it was not noticeable, but the Demon King, who was concentrating on him, was able to grab it with alacrity.

It shakes. Then we shouldn’t stop here.

I let go of the leg I had been holding on to and jumped up. Instead, the area I caught this time was both shoulders.

“Why on earth? What don’t you like? How are your subordinates treating you? Are you discriminating against me just because I’m human? What kind of bastard are you?! “I will die young right away...!”

Contrary to their somewhat intense voices, they were convinced that they couldn’t do that.

Inaction is so strong that even though we are human, we have no choice but to admit it.

No, what is ‘recognition’ all about? To the demons, his inaction is so overwhelming that they cannot even show their will to win. Let alone his great victory, everyone is in awe and respect of him, so how big of a bastard would dare to touch him?

Nevertheless, there was a reason for doing this.

Deon Hardt. In the Demon King's Castle, he is called 'Demon Arut' and is in fact a 'human' with a status second only to the Demon King.

Since he was the only human in the Demon Castle, I don't know what other humans were like, but unlike other demons, he was extremely reluctant to see someone's blood.

So, if it comes out like this, you have no choice but to react somehow.

—Sure enough.

Just as I was about to leave the office, my wrist was grabbed.

When I turn around, red eyes reminiscent of blood are staring straight at me. The Demon King struggled to raise the corners of his mouth.

'...I guess I finally feel like talking.'

If you try to shake it off, you can do whatever you want.

However, the other person was one of his favorite subordinates, and he had just submitted his resignation, and he had intended this from the beginning, so instead of shaking it off, he sighed and sat down in his seat.

"I ask again. "What is the reason?"

"...Are you going to kill me?"

I was just curious about the truth, but what came back was a question, not an answer.

Are you going to kill me? What kind of scary words.

I was startled and raised my head, and our eyes met. Creepy-looking red eyes were looking at him without even the slightest blink. I laughed out loud.

‘I didn’t mean to do that, but if I push it any further, I’m going to have my head ripped off.’

Although he was a demon lord with no one to oppose except the warrior, the man in front of him was a threat even to him.

If he decides to aim for the neck, this side will also have to take its own share of damage. It will probably be quite annoying.

A soft voice came out with the intention of calming the other person down.

“There is no way I would kill you. So what’s the reason? “I’m just curious.”

“...that.”

After a moment of silence, he opened his mouth. And then burst out loud.

‘...whoop?’

“blood! “Blood!!”

“ah.”

Blood poured out. Very casually onto a desk full of documents.

I reflexively stretched out my hand and received the blood. My head was spinning to the point where I couldn’t even think about doing anything else.

Is it poison? No, I was using poison detection magic from the moment I saw the blood, but there was no reaction. Then there is only one thing left.

aftereffect.

Officially, Deonhardt has killed the champion.

He is truly a 'warrior'. Of course, he had to take a lot of damage, and because of that, his body, which was not in good condition to begin with, was completely destroyed. There were times, like now, that I often vomited blood.

'Actually, that's not the case, but anyway, the aftereffects are right and the result is the same.'

It seems like hemoptysis has occurred a few times before, but it is clearly visible that the frequency has clearly increased.

Wow. The thought that we might lose valuable talent made me grind my teeth.

At that time, perhaps realizing the situation too late, Deon covered his mouth and took a couple of steps back from the desk. A voice that seemed to be holding back blood came out with difficulty.

"sorry. The documents..."

"That's not the problem now! Your doctor! OBring the corps commander's doctor!! "The patient in charge is sick right now. Where are you and what are you doing?"

A roar resounded throughout the Demon King Castle, creating a commotion.

***

Ben, the attending physician, comes running in from afar, panting.

My impressions of making a dirty red stain on the carpet of the Demon King's room were very simple.

'It's fucking ruined.'

I was just going to submit my resignation and quit my job. That's when the blood came out, staining the documents, staining the carpet, and causing trouble to the doctor in charge... Isn't this a perfect situation for anyone to see?

As long as you get hit, you'll be lucky.

The opponent is a demon. If they were humans, they would simply get angry and move on, but these are the people who will swing their swords and say, 'Apologise with your life!'

Because of this, I went white, stiffened, and desperately responded to Ben's examination.

"Daemon, can you hear me? How many of these do you see?"

"There are three."

Instead of struggling to live with a steady answer, I thought back to the situation from a little while ago.

My name is Deon Hardt. There is a slight misunderstanding, and in the Demon King's Castle, he is known as 'Demon Arut'.

No, no. It's not 'a little'. The reason I submitted my resignation letter is precisely because of this 'misunderstanding.'

The misunderstanding is that everyone in the Demon Castle, including the Demon King, is under the illusion that I am extremely strong.

Ha funny sound. The cook in this castle is probably stronger than me. At least the chef is a 'demon', isn't he?

Anyway, that's not what's important.

The continued excessive evaluation gave me a sense of fear and seemed to warn me that I should take action before it was too late.

Isn't generous evaluation good? It's also good if it's reasonable.

Excessive overvaluation makes one fearful of repercussions. Especially where I am, the Demon King Castle. Imagine that even the devil is overestimating me and treating me accordingly, and the truth is revealed.

Maybe that day will be the day I die. Even if I die, I will not die gracefully.

'I want to run away.'

However, if you run away without saying a word, the Demon King will definitely come after you with his army, saying, 'I can't let a talented person like you go!!' If you're not careful, getting caught isn't enough and you could be imprisoned or, in the worst case scenario, even die.

Even among humans, 'If you don't have it, I'll destroy it!' There's a guy who does that, but there's no way he's a demon.

I've never heard of enemies being similar to each other. After all, he resembles the emperor of an empire when it comes to caring for talented people.

Even if I told him the truth, he wouldn't believe me, and even if I did, he might blow my head off, saying, 'You've been fooling me this whole time?!'...

So, I tried to confront him directly and tie the knot. If the situation were to come up, I had the intention of looking into the atmosphere, leaving a letter of resignation and saying I would quit, and disappearing like the wind.

I didn't know that the devil would grab the leg of his pants and hang out.

"no! "What the heck!"

I expected it to stop to some extent.

'But this wasn't in my plan!'

Speaking of trouser legs, does this guy called the Demon King have no pride?!

Even though I was screaming inside, I couldn't even move.

Because I was scared.

'There's a devil on my leg! 'Fuck you devil!!'

The opponent is the devil. He is the strongest demon king of all time, having defended the demon castle without major damage despite clashing with warriors every time. If he even lifts a finger, my life disappears.

So what would happen if you make a wrong move and end up kicking him?

It was something that could be expected without even having to test it.

Therefore, I stood motionless like a statue until he took his hand away first.

I was so nervous that I bet that if the Demon King had taken his hand off just a little later, he would have suffered cramps.

Anyway, there must have been some kind of change of heart, and when our eyes met, the demon king withdrew his hand and stood up. It's good that I left my pants on, but what I grabbed this time was my shoulder!

He put his hands on both shoulders, perhaps as an appeal to somehow catch me, and started talking one after another while making eye contact.

By the way, Demon King.

"Why on earth? "What don't you like?"

The reason I submitted my resignation letter in the first place was,

"How are my subordinates treating me?" "Are you discriminating against me just because I'm human?"

It's because they did it so well that it was a burden.

You may be thinking that this is ‘treatment commensurate with one’s skills,’ but I don’t think so. I really don’t have any abilities!

Rather, he is just a weak human whose physical abilities are lower than that of an ordinary person.

‘I should have suspected it when I first tried to recruit him.’

I should have doubted what use a person like me had.

There was nothing I could do because it felt like they would kill me on the spot if I refused...

...Huh? That’s right. Now that I think about it, there was no choice from the beginning.

‘...life.’

I swallowed the sigh that had reached my throat. We have to escape from here now.

The final boss, the Demon King, has been treating me better than I thought, so it’s not entirely impossible...

“Which bastard are you?! I will die young right now...”

No! no no!!

I was startled and caught him as he walked toward the office door.

Is there anyone who can catch it? Who would be criticized if they killed their subordinates prematurely? Of course, I, the cause, will be the target!

See, even if you treat them well, they don’t treat you too well. Oh damn, why do I feel like crying?

Fortunately, the Demon King sat down with a sigh, probably because it was true.

"I ask again. "What is the reason?"

For some reason, the way his voice calmed down seemed like he was alive.

It might be an illusion, but I thought it would be better to be careful, so instead of answering, I asked while looking at his eyes.

"...Are you going to kill me?"

Oh, this isn't it. I was so nervous that my words came out bluntly.

As expected, the devil's symbol, the station, takes on a unique appearance and faces this way.

What do those eyes mean?

'How did know?' Is the look in his eyes like, 'Do you want me to kill you and save you?' Is it a look of concern?

Maybe it means, 'This is why quick-witted subordinates are annoying.'

Should I apologize now...? Or, if I apologize before that, will they let me live?

No matter how much I think about it, I can only think of a bleak future.

I couldn't avoid his intense gaze and just fidgeted and moved my lips, but the demon king, who was looking at my face thoroughly as if trying to find out my inner thoughts, soon shook his head.

“There is no way I would kill you. So what’s the reason?
“Let’s hear it first.”

I hesitated for a moment, but it was only for a moment.

Since we were going to negotiate anyway, this is a necessary procedure. You cannot and should not run away.

That’s why I just opened my mouth.

“...that.”

Whoops.

The familiar fishy scent of blood spread from my mouth to the tip of my nose.

“blood!! “Blood!”

“ah.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 2

2. The Demon King's strongest card (2)

Only then was I able to understand the situation.

This damn body! Even if you have to cough up blood, here you are! shit!

I see documents littered with blood. Plus, the demon lord who is receiving my blood with his hands... Oh my god.

'It was a dirty life.'

I quickly covered my mouth and fell from the desk, leaving a short message in my mind.

Even so, it is already a dirty document and the hands of the devil are stained with blood. As expected, I heard the sound of teeth grinding together, probably because I was angry.

I slowly opened my mouth, swallowing the scream that was about to burst out as the murderous pain pierced my entire body.

"sorry. The documents..."

"That's not the problem now! Your doctor! Call the 0th Corps Commander's doctor!! "The patient is sick right now. Where are you doing?"

...huh?

My mind froze at the unexpected situation.

After a while, my mind could barely come up with another hypothesis.

Oh, you're angry at your doctor.

In short, it's like this. The reason I had this accident was because I was sick. It means that the doctor did not do his job properly, which means that the reason I had an accident was because of the doctor.

So, instead of kicking me, I guess I'll kick my doctor.

So, where will the resentment of the attending physician, who was suddenly struck by fire, go?

This is the devil's castle. After reminding myself that my doctor was also a demon, I sat down with an expression of liberation.

It was fucking ruined.

***

"The patient is sick right now, where are you doing?"

Overwhelming demon energy swept the entire castle.

It is obvious even without looking who the owner of this thick and heavy magic energy is. The attending physician, Ben, was prepared to die today and hurriedly packed his visit bag.

Of course, the only subordinate whom the Demon King thinks this much about is Daemon, the proud commander of the 0th Corps, his patient.

Sure enough, when I arrived at the Demon King's office, I saw Demon sitting on the bare floor with his mouth covered. What is dripping down the hand is none other than blood.

As a result, the carpet in the office became dirty, but since the Demon Lord would not care about such a thing, I approached him without worrying about it.

I scolded myself as I quickly helped the person, who seemed to have lost strength in his legs and had no intention of getting up, and sat him down on the sofa.

Not being able to show up quickly when a patient is sick is a disqualification as an attending physician. Even if Demon gets angry and breaks this neck, I won't have anything to say.

I'll have to recover before that, though.

First, he extended three fingers.

First, check consciousness.

"Daemon, can you hear me? How many of these do you see?"

"There are three."

Consciousness is normal and visual field is normal.

Everyone in the Demon Castle knows why Demon is like this. There was no way I didn't know.

That's because everyone saw it clearly.

The image of him stopping a warrior who was about to destroy himself with a mere human body.

As if that weren't enough, the scene where the warrior's life was taken away with a light gesture.

Since he suffered the hero's self-destruction entirely on his own, it was natural that his body was damaged.

So are you looking down on me?

'No way.'

A weakened body and fighting ability are two different things. You might not know what other people are doing, but this person is different. I could probably take this life right away if I wanted to. Then I will know that I am dead only after I die.

Just looking at his vivid, alive eyes even though he was coughing up blood was like that.

The eyes are so red that I wonder what they would look like if fresh blood pooled in a circle. Those eyes, which stood out even more because of the pure white hair, contained a clear expression of 'death.'

I can do this because I have killed countless people and seen countless deaths. How dare you look down on me?

Ben, trying to suppress the fear and awe that surged through him, calmly opened his mouth.

"As you might expect, it's an aftereffect."

As if he had expected it, a look of resignation passes over the Demon Lord's face. He also closed his mouth for a moment out of bitterness. However, the person involved, Demon, was different.

An expression that doesn't even seem to matter. No, that's clearly an expression of boredom.

I heard it too much. Because I'm already sick of it.

He placed the handkerchief given to him by the Demon King to his mouth and buried himself deeply in the sofa, as if he was saying something for nothing.

Ben and even the Demon King were left speechless by the attitude that was close to resignation or liberation.

'How can you be so resolute?'

If it had been other corps commanders, the chaos would have happened long ago.

Whether you draw your sword, shake your fist, or sit quietly and threaten. His murderous eyes would have shined brightly and he would have told me to fix it somehow.

Isn't that what you should do?

That's the reason for your existence.

As soon as I thought about it, I felt like I could sigh. A sigh closer to relief than frustration or anger.

Subconsciously, I thought that Ben was very fortunate to be the doctor of the 0 Corps commander.

'No, now is not the time.'

I immediately shook off my thoughts, collected my emotions, and quickly searched through my visitation bag.

“As always, this is a medicine that helps with internal injuries. “I’m sorry that I can only do this.”

“Thank you.”

After confirming that Demon-sama received the medicine bottle and drank it, Ben slowly closed his eyes.

Well then, I’ve finished my job. Now the inevitable time has come.

Demon King, who had been giving off a ‘let’s see me’ vibe since he just arrived here. Knowing full well that the price of ignoring him is death, he carefully stood up and faced the demon king.

There are no complaints whatsoever. It’s not unfair. It was clearly his fault for not being able to quickly respond to the patient’s abnormality.

Perhaps Demon-sama is also angry, if not angry, at least disapproving of this.

Therefore, once he received the Demon King’s wrath, he was prepared to endure the Demon King’s wrath if he survived. Daemon, who should be the most angry, came forward.

...why?

***

The devil is trying to kill the doctor!

I reflexively jumped up from my seat and grabbed Ben’s wrist.

Ben looks at me with wide eyes, probably surprised. Perhaps equally unexpectedly, the Demon King was also looking at me with wide eyes.

Are you surprised? I was surprised too. But I couldn't help it.

If I beat up my doctor like this, wouldn't all the resentment be directed at me? No matter how gentle Ben is, he would naturally be upset if he was criticized for something that wasn't his fault.

By then it will be too late.

I have to stop it in order to survive!

With that resolve, I was the first to open my mouth to the Demon King, who was still unable to speak.

"I'm not feeling well, so I'll just leave. Of course, my doctor too. "It's unfortunate, but I'll have to postpone the topic of resignation until later."

"Huh? Resignation...? No, I got it first. "Go quickly and rest."

Perhaps because he doesn't want to talk about the resignation letter, he passes it off as expected.

I'll definitely talk about it next time! First of all, the timing was not good today, so I quickly walked out of the office, telling myself.

And I don't know how long I walked.

When we stopped, we were standing halfway down a fairly long hallway.

Since there were only one or two hallways, I peeked out the window to figure out the location.

As in the sunless Demon World, you can see a garden covered in the veil of night outside the hallway window. Instead of the sun, three moons took its place, softly illuminating the garden.

If you look at it up to this point, you might think the scenery is pretty nice, but look over there. What flower has teeth? Was it a man-eating plant? The plant next to it even has eyeballs. Plus it blinks!

As I shuddered in disgust, I heard a faint voice next to me.

“That Demon....”

“Hmm? ...ah.”

Come to think of it, I was still holding my wrist. I was so out of my mind that I couldn’t even realize it.

I slowly let go of my hand and glanced at Ben’s eyes. You’re not offended, are you?

Fortunately, there was no sign of displeasure on his face. Instead, what caught my eye was a complexion as pale as mine.

It seems like he’s a bit restless...

“Does it hurt anywhere?”

“no. I just...”

A feeling of resignation appears on his face.

As I looked at him with great concern, wondering if he was really in pain, he let out a small sigh.

Ben licked his pale lips, then bit his lips once as if he was preparing for something, and bowed his back.

“It may be presumptuous, but I dare ask you to let us go with as little pain as possible!”

“...Huh?”

For a moment, I even forgot to manage my facial expressions. A feeling of absurdity would probably have clearly appeared on my face by now. The goofy voice was a bonus.

I’m glad he’s bending over. Seeing as he wasn’t making any movement, it seemed like he couldn’t hear my voice either.

I quickly managed my facial expression and cleared my throat.

I can’t bear to ask out loud what kind of bullshit that is, so I’ll change the subject a bit...

“What does that mean?”

“Ah... no. I made a mistake. sorry!”

I tried to ask kindly, but he was shocked instead.

Is he really in pain? They say people can’t cut their own hair, but what if the doctor is sick?

Even that doctor is my doctor.

Feeling anxious that I might end up entrusting my body to a patient, I let out a small sigh and said,

“I won’t kill you.”

I don't know what it is, but I won't kill you. No, I can't kill you.

If I had the ability to kill demons, I would have abandoned my role as corps commander and escaped a long time ago. Why would I live here with such anxiety?

I can only sigh at the pitiful situation I am once again realizing.

With a depressed heart, I trudged to my room, leaving the dumbfounded Ben behind.

***

Contrary to appearances, I know that Demon is the most generous of all the corps commanders. But who would have thought that He would protect even those who failed to fulfill their duties?

No, he seems to think that I didn't fail to do my duty in the first place.

Maybe it's because he was born as a human, but his thoughts are different from those of demons, so we don't know his standards.

But how embarrassed he must have been when I suddenly asked him to kill me without pain. What's worse is that people who usually use polite language ask 'What?' It was to the point where I blurted out something like that.

But there is a reason for such an illusion. Other corps commanders. Even if they had saved me, the reason would have been 'I had to kill them with my own hands to relieve their anger.'

Anyway, it would have been nice if I had stopped talking quickly. Unfortunately, I didn't notice and thought that my words made him feel very uncomfortable, so I even asked for forgiveness. It was a burden placed on him.

In a situation where he had nothing to say even if he was punched in the back of the head, Daemon spoke with a faint sigh instead of raising his hand.

[I won't kill you.]

Honestly, I was shocked. Isn't this too generous?

I was always proud to be that person's doctor, but I had never been more proud than I was today. I guess I'll have to grab a bottle of alcohol today and go see the official corps commander's personal doctor setter.

The scene where he had to deal with bad-tempered corps commanders and grabbed his head out of envy was already eye-catching.

Of course, there is work to be done before that.

'So that the same thing will never happen again...'

Ben's eyes lit up slightly as he remembered the pitiful sight of his patient, Demon Arut, who was dripping blood.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 3

3. 0 Corps Commander Deon Hardt (1)

"I hate paperwork!"

These were the words I uttered when I first heard the offer to recruit from the Demon King. Thanks to this, by taking on the unofficial position of commander of the 0th Corps, I became like a scarecrow who just had to sit still.

There are no complaints whatsoever. When I watch other corps commanders groaning under a pile of documents, I feel proud of myself for saying such a thing.

However, if I had to pick one fatal flaw....

"I'm bored!"

It's so boring! There is nothing to do and even if you go out, it is always night in the Demon World and only terrible plants live in the garden.

However, going to the devil is crazy, and going to other army commanders is also like going to your own deathbed. The guys under me always avoid me, as if they don't want to deal with humans, and I can't trust them either... so in the end, I have to do it. What was possible was bound to be limited.

For example, something very wholesome like a cube or a puzzle....

“Hit it!!”

Chrrrrrr.

Thousands of puzzle pieces flew in the sky. I sighed and looked around the room. Large, neatly assembled puzzles were framed and decorating the walls.

At first, I started guessing 50 or 60 numbers just to kill time, but when I came to my senses, I was guessing 6000 items.

I could fucking sell it. I, a bastard, needlessly focus too much.

I burst out laughing out of a sudden sense of desperation and opened the door. The employee waiting in front of the door was seen visibly flinching and hastily lowering his head. I said, pretending not to notice his desperate movements to avoid eye contact.

“Bring me a drink.”

“yes?!”

“Alcohol. It doesn’t matter what kind it is. “As long as it’s alcohol, it’s fine.”

“But...”

Contrary to his desperate attitude, where he seemed to do whatever he was told to do, he kept hesitating with a face that looked like he was about to cry.

I think I can roughly understand why this reaction is happening. From what I could see, Ben must have stopped it.

I was born with a weak body. This abnormal white hair, red eyes and pale skin are proof of this. That's why they vomit blood whenever they get the chance.

Here, the cause can be attributed to 'aftereffects of the battle with the hero', so it's a good thing, but it's a bit sad that I can't drink alcohol. To be precise, I really feel sorry for Ben's strong work ethic.

There is something a doctor who examined me when I was young said.

[It seems like all the health that should be distributed evenly throughout the body is concentrated only in the liver!]

In reality, I didn't get drunk easily in most cases, so it wouldn't be a lie. Thanks to this, I was able to get away safely even after taking medicine that was not good for my body... Anyway.

So that means it's okay for me to drink alcohol. They say they won't die.

So, give me the alcohol. Now is the time when you need a drink.

0 Now that I realize that I am the commander of a corps and have nothing to do but just put together a puzzle in my room, I can't stand it with my sanity.

When I looked at it intently, telling him to bring it quickly, the servant shook his shoulders and ran off somewhere.

...Wait, what is the answer?!

“It’s not like I won’t bring it.”

Yes, it’s not like he ran away or went somewhere else to do something he wasn’t told to do.

Even as I muttered that, for some reason, I trembled from the ominous feeling that came over me.

The ominous feeling was spot on. The attendant, who had disappeared without answering, has returned.

—With the devil lord.

You traitorous bastard.

“You want to drink?”

He glared at the attendant with resentment in his eyes, but quickly closed his eyes when he heard the Demon King’s voice.

If you answer yes, nagging will start coming. Now that I couldn’t say no, I gave up and hung my head.

However, what came back far exceeded expectations.

“Are you itchy like that?”

“...yes?”

“I assumed you were bored because there were no battles these days, but I didn’t expect it to be this bad. I guess I was looking at you too softly. “I apologize.”

Ah, no, no, wait a minute.

I just wanted to drink, but why did my stream of consciousness go in that direction...?

“If you really want, I can let you participate in a small battle. These days, the commander of the 9th Corps, who is on the front lines, is making a fuss about being boring. I think the situation will change if you go. What do you think? “How about going there at least?”

If the 9th Corps commander is out there...

‘It’s the front line.’

A place where large and small battles frequently occur as it borders the empire. Are you going to send me to a place like that?

Ah, I understand. Are you telling me to die while being used as a meat shield on the battlefield so that my body, which is weak enough to die even if I drink alcohol, has at least some use?

Me indeed. Because it’s dirty and disgusting. Oh, you don’t have to eat it.

“it’s okay.”

I’m definitely not doing this because I’m scared. I’m doing this because it’s dirty.

“Well, that’s a good decision. “Even if I go, I won’t see enough blood to satisfy you.”

It doesn’t even make sense anymore. Ah, corrected. I froze because I was scared.

Anyway, it’s too much to threaten someone like this just because they tried to drink some alcohol.

While making eye contact, I secretly looked down to see if my feelings would be revealed. The Demon King's voice continued.

"Anyway, no drinking. Is there anything you can do to overthrow the Demon King's Castle? If you're really bored, take a look around your corps or at least look around the garden. Hien said he was happy that he brought in new flowers this time."

I suddenly raised my head. That crazy guy?

It's obvious that he's a demon, so we'll skip it and Hien is a gardener. I dare say that even if he is crazy, he is definitely crazy. What are you crazy about?

To a gross and dangerous man-eating plant!

At first, I tilted my head because it didn't seem fitting that there was a gardener in the Demon King's Castle, but after looking around the garden with him, I was completely convinced.

[Because he's this kind of guy, he works at the Demon King's Castle!! I believed it was a peaceful job! !! never! [I wonder if you believe in demons!!]

It is a valuable experience that you have experienced with your body and engraved in your bones. Since I couldn't just ignore him, I looked at the Demon King with a serious expression.

"Let's take a look at the corps."

Legion members are dangerous, but they are definitely better than that crazy gardener.

...Though it was only five minutes ago that I was heading to the 0th Corps' training ground.

"Oh, Demon!"

"...Hien."

To hide his pale complexion, he quickly raised his hand and swept his face.

And when I raised my head, I made eye contact with a man with an elegant appearance who had come right in front of me.

What a surprise!

"Are you tired?"

"Well, just a little..."

"In that case, smelling the flowers is the right thing to do. I brought in new flowers this time, would you like to take a look? "I'm especially showing it to Demon first."

It's the devil. The devil was smiling with his eyes folded.

Normally it would be a sight that would leave me spellbound, but I was just trying to use my brain to find a way to escape. I didn't even notice his appearance.

Why don't you fall for that look? That's right, he's a man.

I don't know if it's a succubus, but if it's an incubus, is there any way to get over it? I may be going crazy here these days, but not so much that my sexual identity is shaken.

'Now that I think about it...'

Isn't this kid secretly a high-ranking person? Perhaps because he is an incubus, he has a talent for reducing options to one.

Are you tired?

Route A: I'm tired > The scent of flowers is the best for those times!

Route B: I'm not tired > Then, you should take a look at the flowers I brought in this time...

Normally, I would have given in to his words and had to go around that horrible garden. But now I have a great excuse.

"This is difficult because I was just going to check on my corps members."

"Ah... I guess we can't postpone it, right?"

"...."

Be persistent.

You can postpone it as much as you want. The 0 Corps members didn't even look for me, and when I did, they didn't come close or talk to me, but instead just watched my every move with their eyes lit up.

In fact, all I have to do there is to sit in a corner, fiddle with my sword, and then leave.

Oh, touching the sword here is not a metaphor, it really just means touching. It would be troublesome if I just swung my sword in a stupid pose and my skills got worse.

Anyway, it's possible to put it off, but I still don't like it. Wasn't the reason I was heading to the 0th Corps' exclusive training ground in the first place to avoid this guy?

“....”

“....”

Suddenly, I realized that the silence was longer than I thought. I guess I was thinking so long that I missed the right time to answer.

I rolled my eyes and looked at Hien, wondering if I was offended by the prolonged silence. He must have been looking in this direction at the same time, and our eyes happened to meet.

Before Hien could even think about how to react, his shoulders trembled. Then, his usual gentle smile disappeared and he bowed down.

“sorry.”

“...?”

“I was presumptuous.”

At this point, I feel the need to think again about the race called demons. It wouldn't be a bad idea to discuss it properly at this point.

Now, today's topic.

Is it a trait of demons to suddenly apologize?

‘Why is he like this again?’

***

Hien is an incubus. The very incubus that is looked down upon as shallow.

It was pure luck that I became a gardener in the Demon King's Castle. My hobby is collecting and growing all kinds of dangerous plants, and while I was crossing the street carrying a rare man-eating plant, I was noticed by the Demon Lord and recruited as a gardener.

There was no way such a high-ranking person, as high as a corps commander, would treat me properly.

Right now, the servants are spitting and swearing when they make eye contact, but they wouldn't dare to catch the eye of the corps commander. You'll be lucky if it doesn't bother you. In fact, there were people who bullied me by kicking me.

What can an incubus do against such people? I just have to endure it.

That day was also a day when I was fully exposed to verbal abuse and violence.

"Something like an incubus..."

Hien, who had fallen down, crushing the garden he had carefully maintained with his entire body, instead of getting up right away, fixed his gaze on the floor.

It was painful to see the precious plants destroyed, but now there was a more important situation at hand.

The commander of the 10th Corps with an unpleasant look.

The man who had blown Hien away just because he was in front of his path was muttering with a frown on his face.

“I’m so distraught that I’m going crazy, but there’s nothing wrong with it...”

Hien just lowered his head.

The 10th Corps commander is someone who wants to show off his power. If you jump up like you did when dealing with the 1st or 3rd corps commanders, they will take it as a provocation.

Because of that, I was shaking my head and pretending that I couldn’t get up because I was in pain.

“Ah...”

“Hmm?”

A very small voice that did not fit in with the unfamiliar Demon King Castle was heard as if it were groaning.

I can understand up to that point. It could be that an attendant who had just arrived here discovered this scene by chance.

The problem was the reaction of the 10th Corps commander.

“omg...!”

Hien’s head went up reflexively.

Did I hear it wrong? His expression is too blatant to say he heard it wrong.

An expression close to shock. At first glance, Hien’s expression seemed to show fear and awe, and without realizing it, he turned his head to follow his gaze and was able to see a 'human'.

A skinny body that looks rather weak than ordinary. Alien white hair and red eyes. Plus pale skin. If it weren't for the completely imperceptible magical power, I wouldn't have even dreamed that I was human.

'...Come to think of it.'

At some point, rumors like a storm began to swirl around the Demon King Castle. When exactly was it? It was probably around the time the war with the hero had just ended.

[They say someone other than the Demon King killed the hero.]

[They say the Demon King tried to recruit him right on the spot.]

[They even said it was a human.]

'It's him.'

The protagonist of the rumor, which I believed was a rumor. My intuition was telling me that it was him.

It was the words and actions of the 10th Corps commander that drove a wedge into him.

"Here... for some reason..."

"I heard there was a gardener, so I came to see him, but... I guess I got the timing wrong."

"Oh no."

Someone as high as a corps commander treats them with caution. That means that person is stronger or has a higher status than him.

Now that I think about it, it seemed like I vaguely heard a rumor that he had been given the position of commander of Corps 0.

The commander of the 10th Corps, who was waving his hand, said he could have a conversation in peace and quickly retreated, moving his steps from where he had stopped and approaching me.

You said you came to see me. I'm curious as to what the purpose is, but I don't have any high expectations.

'That's because I'm an incubus.'

Even the opponent is Commander 0. What are the chances that he will treat me well?

—I definitely thought so.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 4

4. 0 Corps Commander Deon Hart (2)

“Nice to meet you. I heard you are a gardener. “I heard you are taking care of almost all the plants in the Demon King’s Castle?”

A friendly voice full of kindness. Hien, forgetting his own situation, dared to raise his head and looked at him blankly.

...Those ridiculous odds actually happened.

The Commander of Corps 0 showed kindness that far exceeded expectations and said,

“The Demon King’s Castle is quite large and it is amazing.”

Hien felt something moved towards him.

He is recognized by the Demon King and has been given the status of Commander of the 0 Corps. Even if he was that arrogant, no one would say anything.

Nevertheless, he used honorifics and showed respect for the other person.

‘Is this the same leisure as the powerful that we only heard about?’

The less confident you are in yourself, the more you exaggerate your abilities, raise your voice, and try to put others down.

In that sense, it was revealed through his words and actions that Commander 0 Corps at least had confidence in himself.

He may or may not know that they are enhancing his presence...

“I am curious about what the plants in the Demon King’s Castle are like. Can I ask for guidance?”

Just acknowledging the incubus is not enough, and even asks for guidance on what to do when ordered.

There, Hien relaxed his blank expression and smiled.

[What is his name?]

[What did you say, but it was vague and faint...]

“Daemon. Demon Arut.”

A name that is more like a demon than a demon.

That day, Hien recalled that name several times.

After that, we tried to become friends.

No, it’s not that I dared to become friends. I was just worried about his health as he was in his room, so I tried my best to talk to him, hoping he would take a walk in the garden.

As expected, unlike other corps commanders, Demon did not ignore my words. There was no violence or verbal abuse.

He would often walk around the garden, answering questions steadily, albeit with a stiff expression.

Even though he could have kicked me out or at least pushed me away saying that I wanted to be alone, he was so considerate that he always walked next to me when I went for a walk.

That's why it looks like he's become so arrogant.

How dare you do something like Incubus.

'I can't believe I made such a mistake.'

I crossed the line today.

***

I still regret what happened that day.

At first, I just happened to see the garden from afar before entering the Demon King's castle and learned of the gardener's existence while talking about it with the Demon King.

I should have just said 'I guess so' and passed it on.

But I, who knew nothing, was happy. A gardener. I never thought such a healthy job would exist in the Demon King's Castle.

In this place full of blood-crazed demons, there are normal people like an oasis. As soon as I completed all the necessary procedures, I started looking for him.

And I was able to meet a man with a handsome appearance faster than I expected.

“nice to meet you. I heard you are a gardener. “I heard you are taking care of almost all the plants in the Demon King’s Castle?”

This is the den of demons. No matter how insignificant it may seem, you are stronger than me, so respect is basic.

If I get on someone’s nerves and get hit, I’m going to go for it that day. Isn’t that kind of death too vain?

“The Demon King’s Castle is quite large, and it’s amazing.”

Still, extreme honorifics are difficult. If you look down on it, problems will arise. All you have to do is show that you respect them to some extent. Of course, I was afraid of offending her, so I gave her flattering compliments in moderation.

Anyway, I’m so happy that I’m starting to talk faster.

I paused for a moment, then pretended to be calm, cleared my throat, and spoke again.

“I’m curious what the plants in the Demon King’s Castle are like. Can I ask you to guide me?”

His face had a blank expression for a moment, but a bright smile spreads like a flower blooming.

He was willing to do it – and he saw hell.

A demon is still a demon!

This is a painful quote engraved in my life philosophy.

From that day on, whenever we met, Hien invited me to take a walk in the garden. I couldn't bear to refuse because I didn't know what kind of harm I would get from that scary plant if I refused, so I walked around the garden crying and eating mustard.

Of course, I made sure to keep Hien, the person who recommended the walk, by my side.

What if those horrible plants try to eat me while this guy is away? I can't die alone! Even if we die, let's die together! Well, it was roughly like this.

...For some reason, he seems to be getting friendlier as the days go by.

***

I looked at Hien with a troubled expression as he kept apologizing.

Why is he apologizing again? I couldn't figure out the cause, so I rolled my eyes and started looking back on the previous situation.

What happened before he apologized?

...nothing.

'Nothing really happened.'

I was silent and this guy was also silent. All the silence did was get a little longer.

Then our eyes met and he immediately apologized...

'...No way.'

I'm going to bow down and apologize like this, so does that mean we can walk together in the garden even if it takes some time?

It would be difficult to refuse like this, right?

This bastard. I said it was a bit of a high-end, but now that I see it, it was blatantly high-level.

Well, that's good. I came back alive every time, so if there are no problems this time, I should be able to come back alive.

After preparing my mind for a moment, I looked down and saw Hien still bowing down.

"There is no need to do that. "Please raise your head."

He slowly raises his head. After seeing that his expression was still frozen, I shook my head inwardly.

I'm going. I'm going. I'm going, so relax your expression.

"So where are the new flowers we brought in this time?"

"...yes?"

Was the answer not enough?

As if to show off, I took a step towards the garden. I spoke clearly and reassuringly to the person who followed me without realizing it.

"They said I would go see the flowers. "Aren't you going to guide me?"

"Ahhh! I'll do it!"

Hien hurries to find a torch.

Unlike demons who are accustomed to the night, I, as a human, need a torch to observe plants in detail.

To be honest, I don't really want to observe it closely, but that devil bastard always asks me to observe it closely.

Did you say that yourself? Of course not! However, the term 'unspoken pressure' is not there for nothing.

After excitedly explaining about plants, he stares at me with those sparkling eyes. How could I not take a look?

"Then follow me now!"

Hien, holding the torch, seems to have regained his energy and smiles brightly as if nothing had happened.

He recovered quickly. So, while thinking trivial things like why did I apologize earlier, I was about to follow him without thinking, but I paused for a moment and looked down at my empty hands.

I took the torch from Hien, held it tightly, and followed his guidance as I entered the western garden.

As expected, it is abnormal, gross, and scary every time I see it.

The goosebumps I felt when the plant with eyes that I looked down from the hallway looked at me... I walked faster to get out of sight, and its eyes rolled back and stared at me. I was so scared that I almost dropped the torch.

"That Demon."

“yes?”

“The torch is for me....”

“It’s okay.”

Uh-huh, where are you trying to steal my weapon? I secretly put more strength into the hand holding the torch.

They’re man-eating plants and all, but in the end, they’re all ‘plants’. Regardless of whether it eats people or not, once it is burned with fire, it cannot be used again.

So, here, this is my weapon and my lifeline. You can’t just leave it up to us.

“How much further do we have to go than that?”

My mind is slowly reaching its limits.

Even pretending to be calm takes a lot of mental strength. Just when I thought I might faint while standing like this, fortunately Hien pointed somewhere with his finger as if living up to my expectations.

“We’re almost there. “That’s it.”

His eyes turned to where his fingertips were pointing.

“...Oh...”

My mouth opened and an exclamation came out.

Actually, this is not an exclamation or anything like that. It was a suppressed scream. The last command from the head, which had turned completely white from the huge impact, was to scream as loudly as it could.

‘What the fuck is that! ‘That’s a plant?’

crazy! Where do you see that’s a plant?

Wrong. This isn’t normal. We have to get out of here right now...

“Daemon?”

“...ah.”

I barely stopped walking as I was about to retreat.

I don’t know how lucky I am that my face is naturally pale, so even if it turns whiter, it won’t be noticeable. If my complexion was normal, my pale white color would definitely stand out.

My reaction was natural. Even if it were someone other than me, I probably would have reacted the same way.

That’s not a plant! It’s an animal!

The plants were moving so actively that I wondered what it would be like if someone with their feet stuck in the ground tried to use evil force to get out.

“Keeeeeee!”

...Correction. It was glowing.

“What plant is screaming?!”

Oops, I spoke informally without realizing it!

Despite his worries about what would happen if he got angry, Hien paid more attention to the content rather than the tone of speech.

“They say it’s a man-eating plant. It’s so insignificant that Demon doesn’t seem to notice it, but even though it looks like that, that roar has a weak spirit in it. “As soon as they hear this, they will freeze and won’t be able to run away.”

“ ....”

“It’s a good thing that it’s a ‘man-eating’ plant. “Demons don’t eat, so the servants of the Demon King’s Castle don’t have to worry about being eaten.”

No, it’s probably the opposite. It’s not that that guy is insignificant, it’s that I am so insignificant that I don’t feel any peer.

And you seem to have forgotten...

‘I’m human, you crazy idiot...’

Can you please remember that I’m not a demon? No, rather, water is dripping from that flower right now. Is that saliva? Is that it?!

What is so angry about that boneless monster or plant that shakes its stem wildly? If you’re good at bending your lupus, you might be able to reach this point...

Kwaang!

‘Hi!’

I barely avoided it!

“What a range!”

“Haha, it looks like Demon was surprised too. It definitely has a long range, right? It will probably cover a 10m radius. We are breeding hard now, so soon we will be able to completely cover the Demon King Castle. “You can look forward to it.”

Then how do I get around? Are you going to kill me?

As expected, I should have submitted my resignation letter then, regardless of whether I vomited blood or not. No, it shouldn't be like this, I have to pay it now. I need to get out of this crazy place as soon as possible. This is no place for humans to live.

The fact that I couldn't sense the monster's presence seemed to have worked in an unexpected way.

Normally, I would have hesitated and made up my mind several times, but now I was trying to do it without hesitation. In other words, I'm not in my right mind right now.

‘let's go. ‘Where is the Demon King now?’

If I had a strong body, I might have believed that and felt proud. But unfortunately, my body is below average. For me, who needs to be extremely careful in order to survive, the Devil's Castle is literally the worst environment.

So I'm going to submit my resignation right away, but for some reason, one foot feels like it's stuck on the ground and won't move.

“Daemon!”

“...huh?”

Huh!

The sound of the wind passes by my ears. My vision seemed to change quickly, and when it stopped, the world was turned upside down.

Oh, I'm hanging upside down. But why?

"...crazy!"

Before your eyes, a flower bud the size of a person opens wide and reveals its disgusting teeth. The stem was tightening around my ankles to prevent me from running away.

So, this is the situation. We were given the opportunity to explore the stomach of a man-eating plant.

...by force.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 5

5. 0 Corps Commander Deon Hardt (3)

Strangely enough, even in this ridiculous situation, my hands were tightly holding onto the lifeline.

A burning torch held tightly in my hand. Without even realizing it, I swung it towards the stem that was tying my leg.

“Keeeeeeeek!”

With a loud roar that threatens to tear your eardrums, the stem falls off your ankle.

good! It's a good thing I carried the torch myself! I really didn't think there would be something to write about, but...

‘But... why does my back feel cool?’

That disgusting flower also seems to be moving further away... No, it's good that it's getting further away, but somehow...

‘Wait a minute! It's falling!!’

What was the height here? It covers a radius of 10m, so wouldn't it be closer to 10m?

“...Haha fuck.”

Save people!!

Even though he was so shocked that it was no wonder his heart was jumping out of his mouth, his body, which had rolled over on the battlefield, was steadily preparing to fall.

Yes, it's sure to break in one or two places, but... it's better than breaking your neck.

I made up my mind and tried to fall at the right time, but someone grabbed me.

“Dedededemon! Are you okay?! Where are you hurt? “Are you injured anywhere?”

I'm the one who should be surprised, so why are you stuttering? How come you even chewed your tongue?

I wanted to push this bastard, the culprit of everything, into the mouth of that man-eating plant right now, but I held back.

It's not because the opponent is stronger than me. When I felt the arms firmly supporting me, I raised my head and looked at Hien.

‘...I caught you, so I'll just look at you this time.’

I fell from that high place and caught it without difficulty. No matter how light I am, I'm still within the weight range of a normal adult, but demons are demons after all.

“Daemon?”

“...it's okay.”

I gently pushed his chest.

Hien took my refusal based on survival instinct as a signal to come down and carefully lowered me to the floor.

As I landed on the floor, the world started shaking around.

I stood there with my eyes closed for a moment to help my shaking bones settle back into place. Then, I lowered my hand to cover my face and looked back at Hien. And...

“....”

I had no choice but to remain silent.

Behind Hien's back, the background, which should have been a combination of the silver of the moonlight and the black of the night, was stained red.

The acrid smell stings my nose and the hot heat heats my skin.

A ray of cold sweat ran down my back.

It's not because it's hot....

'This... is because of me, right?'

The garden was burning because of my lifeline torch, which I lost when it fell.

***

I will die today.

'No, I will definitely die.'

Hien lowered his head helplessly as the heat touched his skin.

The plant he was tending tried to eat Demon. Of course, Demon couldn't possibly be defeated by something like a plant, so it was clear that he didn't like that plant. Otherwise, there would be no reason to be offended by such a trivial attack.

He didn't like that plant, or rather the garden itself, so he was looking for a reason to burn it down.

Maybe he didn't like Hien himself.

The plant's fault is the gardener's fault.

Regardless of Demon's intention, in the end, it was the plant he was tending that attacked first, and Demon had no choice but to counterattack after being attacked.

As a result, not only could she no longer blame him for the burning of the garden, but she was also put in a situation where she had to take responsibility again.

In the first place, I didn't even list the idea of holding Demon responsible for the burned down garden as an option.

'If I don't like it, it's my fault.'

He is usually a very generous person. Just hearing his doctor, Ben, brag about it.

So, if you're angry, it's probably because something on this side has offended you.

Even though I was prepared, I am still afraid of death. He smoothed his face, which was clearly turning white, and looked at Demon-sama's back while biting his lip.

I don't know if it's because he's from behind or because I can't tell his expression, but he seems to have a different vibe from the usual Demon.

'No, no. Now is not the time to look at the mood.'

It's time to lie down flat.

I bent down towards him, who was only looking at the flames devouring the garden without even turning around.

"sorry."

His foot, which was showing its heel, slowly turns around.

Hien closed his eyes tightly when he saw the other person's shoes facing him.

***

Hey, it rides really well.

Is this what it was like for slash-and-burn farmers who fled to avoid excessive taxes from their lords to set fires to farm in the mountains?

The problem is that this is not a mountain, but the devil's castle, and there is no farming.

'What do we do...?'

Even if you ride well, you ride too well.

The disgusting man-eating plant that attacked me had already been completely consumed by the flames and no longer made its terrible screams, and other disgusting plants around also disappeared into the fire without a sound.

The fire, which had already engulfed half of the western garden, was greedily expanding its scope to devour the remaining plants, as if it were still not enough.

I feel a stinging gaze on the back of my head. It's probably Hien's perspective.

I didn't have the courage to look back to see what kind of expression he was making, so I just stared at the red-stained garden in half-fascination.

Oh yeah. I have no intention of denying it. This is escapism.

This is the garden of the devil's castle, and the gardener is, of course, a devil. It means demons.

'Someone please turn off this light. Anyone is welcome, so please.'

As I was making a prayer for rain, hoping that it would at least rain, I heard a faint voice behind me.

"sorry."

"...?"

I thought I heard wrong. Obviously, this is a situation where I should apologize, but why is he apologizing?

He claimed that he heard with his ears correctly, but with his head, he insisted that he heard incorrectly, so despite much hesitation, he slowly turned around to find out whether it was true or not.

Fortunately, what came into view was not Hien with an angry expression, but Hien bowing down.

I was half relieved but didn't understand so I stayed silent, so he added an explanation on his own.

"I didn't know you didn't like that plant or this garden."

"...."

"Or maybe you're angry at me...."

"No, that's not true."

Do I seem like a person with no conscience? I gently touched my face and looked at Hien again.

Anyway, what you're saying is that you think I set the fire because I didn't like those man-eating plants or the garden itself? But instead of getting angry, he apologized.

"Aren't you crazy?"

"sorry."

"That's not it..."

Now I see that this bastard was a brat.

Anyway, looking at the situation, I don't think he will be angry at me for this. I also think the chances of survival are higher this way than if I foolishly missed the torch.

So what should I say now?

"...I don't really like the garden, but I don't hate it either."

No, I honestly don't like it. I absolutely hate it. Gross!

However, it is impossible to ask the gardeners of the Demon King's Castle to grow ordinary flowers of the human world, such as roses and lilies, so what can you do? I have to endure it.

"Then..."

"I hope you will refrain from growing that plant I showed you a moment ago."

"Ah yes! All right. "I will throw away all the seeds."

Even throwing it away. I have no intention of getting involved in raising you as you please at home.

Anyway, it seemed like everything had been resolved, so I nodded, but a shadow appeared behind Hien, who had a determined expression on his face.

Anyone can see that it looks like a human or a demon. As I narrowed my eyes and looked at it, wondering who it was, a voice came from the shadows.

—A very familiar voice.

"What kind of fire is this?"

Hien's body stiffened. It wasn't noticeable, but I froze too.

That voice is definitely....

"Who made it? "Did you do it on purpose?"

Because it belonged to the one and only king of the demon world, known as the Demon King, who is said to be the strongest of all time.

"What are you doing here, Demon King?..."

“Then my castle is on fire, are you telling me to stay still?”

The Demon King, who cut off Hien’s doubts at once, turned his head. As his eyes slowly roll, he takes a look at the flames, and with a particularly eerie glow, Hien and I are in his field of vision.

His eyes, which had been inorganic when he saw Hien, took on a bright color as soon as he saw me.

“I was wondering why there was a fire and no one put it out...”

He stroked his hair and smiled. Obviously towards me.

Oh, is this it?

Today is your memorial day.

As expected, the devil said my name. Perhaps because there are other people around him, it is not his real name, but a name known in the demon world.

“You were there, Demon.”

When I wave my hand at the same time, the thick smoke around me rushes out and disappears into the distance. Only then could I see clearly.

There are a lot of demons lying around. They were looking this way with troubled expressions, unable to do either this or that.

No, if you had come earlier, you would have put out the fire quickly. Why are you just standing there and watching? Thanks to you, I made it to the devil.

“So what don’t you like?”

“...?”

“Are you mad at the gardener or just don’t like the garden?
“I can kill that guy if I want, but what should I do?”

No, wait a minute. I think I heard that the gardener brought it here himself. How can you talk about killing someone so easily?

There is no smile in the eyes at all to dismiss it as a joke. He looked back at Hien in confusion, but even he, who had to defend himself with pleading or whatever, kept his head down calmly as if he would accept whatever decision was made.

I hurriedly opened my mouth as I felt like the Demon King was really going to kill Hien like this.

“I’m not angry at the gardener or I don’t like the garden.”

“Then why? ...No, before that. “Then can I turn off that light?”

“yes? yes.”

When I suddenly nod my head, those who were waiting rush over and cast magic.

Huge water droplets are created in the empty sky and pour down all at once. It might have been just one or two people, but with so many people doing this, it was really instantaneous for the lights to go out.

Why did you set fire to the garden when you could have done it so quickly ?”

Here I paused for a moment.

First of all, there is no reason to speak out about Hien's misunderstanding and expose it to the eyes of useless people. So should I tell the truth?

'What would your reaction be if I told you that I almost died because of just one plant?'

'You're saying you're weak enough to be overwhelmed by a single plant, so you've been fooling me this whole time, right? Wouldn't they say, 'Die!' Or maybe 'burn my garden just because of that?' They may try to kill you while doing so.

However, I have no choice but to answer the devil's question. I thought for a moment about what answer to give, but Hien suddenly intervened and explained on my behalf.

"The plant I brought in this time attacked Demon. So Demon got angry and started a fire."

"...."

Hey. This bastard was a spy. Who sent it? Revolutionary army? Or was it sent by the Empire's noble faction?

While I was wondering how to fix this so that word would spread that he had done well, he seemed to have not finished speaking yet, and after a moment, he opened his mouth. The voice was trembling slightly.

"It's my fault. "We didn't educate them properly."

The word 'education' is completely inappropriate for plants, but no one here seemed to feel awkward.

Well, if you think about what it looked like a little while ago, it was closer to an animal than a plant.

“Ugh.”

At that moment, a short moan penetrated my ears. When I suddenly raised my head, what I saw in my field of vision was the Demon King, who was holding Hien’s neck with one hand and lifting it up... Hien, whose face was distorted by the interrupted breathing, but who was not resisting.

‘Oh, I’m really going crazy. Yuyamu, I could have finished it well, but why....’

The air is different. It’s so heavy and serious that it’s enough to crush a person and explode.

While he was speechless and struggling, the demon king holding Hien’s neck turned his head and looked this way. His face, which had clearly been grim until he saw Hien, calmed down when he turned to look at him. No, he was clearly smiling.

“What should I do?”

“...yes?”

“Shall I kill you?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 6

6. 0 Corps Commander Deon Hardt (4)

Light tone as if asking about the lunch menu. It was so casual and light that I almost answered without thinking, but I quickly shut my mouth and took a step back.

The Demon King raised his eyebrows as if that was strange, but now was not the time to worry about such things.

Someone's life depends on my every word. Since entering the Demon King's Castle, I have not opened my mouth in peace even for a single moment, but at this moment, I have to be more careful than usual.

Really....

"I'm going to be amazed."

"huh?"

"I said the story was already over."

The Demon King muttered that he thought he had heard something strange, but then turned his attention to what was being said.

"Then what did you decide to do?"

“By not growing that plant.”

“It’s too weak.”

“yes?”

Dissatisfaction appeared on the Demon King’s face.

“I attacked you. It’s not a matter that simply ends there. You are an important talent, and as such, you should not be looked down upon by anyone. It may not happen, but what if you let your guard down and get hurt? Then, your level of evaluation will plummet. From an opponent you can never beat to an opponent you think you can beat if you play well. But is it so easy to get over it? No matter how much I respect you, this is not possible. “At least the limbs should be cut off.”

I don’t know where to start. It’s one thing to cut off the limbs of Hien, the gardener, and one thing to show respect for me.

I feel like my blood pressure is rising after hearing so much nonsense.

...Seeing as the nosebleed broke out, I guess it wasn’t because of my mood.

“Demon?!”

The embarrassed Demon King throws Hien away and comes towards us.

Hien suddenly fell to the floor...

“Daemon!”

Why are you just lie down.

It jumped up and ran towards me, even rolling its body around as if it was going to come at me at all costs.

It feels like the ground is shaking. ... Now that I think about it, I ended up hanging upside down because of that damn plant. It was enough to make blood rush to my head.

I covered the lower pipe, which was clearly a mess, with my hand and tried to balance it as it was about to collapse.

The weak skin burns and the eyes that have been exposed to fire feel stinging. My vision became distorted here and there, and my ankle, which had been caught by a plant stem, began to feel sore later on.

Wow, this body is real.

“Jeong... set up!”

“Daemon... can you... hear... my voice?”

This is a new record in a different sense. Shit.

In the midst of a faint voice, I slowly closed my eyes, resenting my weak body.

At first glance, before I closed my eyes, I thought I heard Ben’s voice behind me, but before I had time to figure out whether it was true or not, the darkness came.

It must have been a mistake. The room he stays in is far away from here, so how could I have known? Even if someone called us via communication, it would be impossible to get here in that short a time.

***

As soon as I opened my eyes, what I saw was a very familiar ceiling. I rolled my eyes a little more and looked at the walls. I saw that there were huge, well-fitted puzzles hanging in frames... it was 100% my room. hmm.

Without thinking, I tried to get up, but I curled up with a short moan due to the faint pain that surged throughout my body.

Then, a familiar voice came from a room where I thought no one would be present.

"It will be quite inconvenient to live for a while."

"...Ben?"

"Yes, Demon."

Ben, who was sitting at the table in the middle of the room preparing medicine, pushed his chair aside and stood up.

He approached me, checked my eyes, sighed faintly, and grabbed my arm and lifted it up as if showing off. White bandages were carefully wrapped around his arms, all the way to his fingertips.

"Do you see it? "You are mild, but you have suffered burns all over your body."

"...."

"My eyes are a little damaged, probably from looking at the fire for so long. Fortunately, it is a self-healing part, which would have been permanently damaged if I had not been careful."

"...uh um."

“Why did someone whose skin turns red after just 20 minutes of exposure to sunlight set themselves on fire? “If you’re angry, shouldn’t you just kill that person?”

Was he always this extreme...? What should I say? Aren’t you gentle?

However, the atmosphere is not suitable to say anything. Look at those eyes. It’s burning brighter than the flames I saw in the garden. Even the emotion contained therein is... Anger?!

It’s a little unfair, but it would be better to get out of this topic quickly. After desperately racking my brain, I confessed the unpleasant memory.

Ben’s voice that I thought I heard at that time.

“Ben. “Did you come to the garden when I was having a nosebleed?”

“yes? Why are you asking this again? “You even talked to me.”

“...yes?”

***

It was only after talking with Ben that I was able to get a rough idea of the situation. In short, I was out of my mind.

I faced the demon lord half-conscious, and as a result, Hien survived with all four limbs intact.

In Ben’s words, I spoke confidently in front of the Demon King.

If you respect me, can you respect me just this one more time?

“To be exact, he said, ‘Did you say you respect me?’ and when the Demon King said yes, he said, ‘Then, can you respect me one more time?’”

Then the Demon King asked, ‘What?’ and I said cheekily, ‘What?’ and pointed at Hien with my finger.

Ah, the expression “cheeky” here is something I added arbitrarily. There’s no way Ben would have said such a mean thing.

In any case, the fact that I dared to say and do such things to the Demon King does not change.

I couldn’t bear to show my frustration openly and spoke to Ben, who was looking at me with a puzzled expression, flexing his facial muscles.

“...You have a good memory.”

“thank you. In fact, none of those who were there at that time will forget that scene. “No matter how much time passes.”

I mean, it was that intense. Ah, I want to be alone. I hope everything turns off.

I quietly buried my face in the pillow.

I can’t believe I did such a terrible thing. I feel like I want to deny reality if I can. If I had remembered what happened back then, I would have done whatever it took to forget it. So, the loss of memory is not completely incomprehensible.

Oh, I don't want to think about it anymore. I just hate thinking about this.

The good news is that the number of people who talk to me in the Demon King's Castle is extremely limited. So, if I just keep quiet, no one will say anything about this matter anymore.

There was a time when I thought...

"Hmm."

I sat on the bed, hugged the pillow, and closed my eyes as hard as I could.

If you don't notice that I'm uncomfortable even after seeing this, then you're a guy who doesn't even have a clue.

I feel very uncomfortable right now. So much so that if anyone talks to them, be it a demon or something, they will glare at them with all their might.

When I ask why I feel this way, people talk to me like I said before. An extremely limited number of them all mention work in the garden.

All together! entire!

[As you said, I respected you and decided to keep you alive.]

Even the tactless devil who came to visit me.

[Daemon, I was really grateful for what happened then. And I'm sorry. [For no reason] It's because of me...]

Even the gardener, Hien, who had been ignoring me from the beginning.

Even my doctor, Ben, who stopped by every day to look at my wounds, mentioned the work in the garden whenever he got the chance.

[Probably many people were impressed. You stopped the devil just to save one gardener.]

Did you do it?! How can everyone be so oblivious? Is it a demon trait?

“Mmm.”

“...Are you uncomfortable?”

“No, thanks.”

Even today, Ben was changing bandages next to me.

Well, let's just think about it here. Still, it seems to be less so these days.

Every time I close my eyes, Ben twitches his fingertips, and I really wonder where the spirit that scolded me when I just woke up after what happened in the garden has gone.

By the way, I thought it was just a full-body burn, but I actually suffered mild burns all over my body. I didn't jump into the fire, I was only briefly exposed to the heat, but it's a shame that I got burned.

It would be nice if I could forget this memory too. No, it is impossible to forget because of the wound, so it would be better if the memory was distorted and remembered as having been in direct contact with the fire. Then it would be less shameful.

But unfortunately, such a miracle did not happen.

While I was desperately trying to think of other things to drive away this shame, a question I had from before suddenly came to mind.

“...By the way, Ben.”

“yes.”

“Isn’t there a considerable distance between the room Ben is staying in and the west garden?”

“Yes, it is.”

“But how did you get to where I am in such a short amount of time?”

It’s strange if you think about it.

After the day I submitted my resignation letter to the devil, whenever I felt strange or injured, Ben knew like a ghost and immediately came to me.

At the time, I thought it was an illusion, but seeing it appear in the garden this time, I guess it wasn’t an illusion.

I looked at Ben with blatant suspicion. Ben blinked a few times as if my gaze was burdensome, but then smiled as if it was no big deal and took off the necklace hanging around his neck and held it out.

“Thanks to this.”

It was a necklace with a coin-sized stone that gave off a strange light.

At first glance, it looks like a simple necklace decoration, but there is something strangely eye-catching about it that makes it difficult to dismiss it as just a piece of jewelry.

Where did you see this? It's definitely something I remember.

...ah.

"Magic stone?"

"Yes, here are a few drops of Demon's blood and the Demon Lord's magic. If the quality or speed of blood flowing through the demon's body appears to be abnormal, a signal will be sent immediately. "We tried in many ways to prevent something like the last time from happening again."

If it's the same as last time, is it when I vomited blood in front of the Demon King? You don't really have to...

They even tell you the location. He pretended not to, but I could see that he was so proud that I couldn't even say anything and just muttered timidly to myself.

'You crazy bastard. 'When did you take my blood?'

As I keep my mouth shut, silence naturally fills the room. The atmosphere, which could have been awkward, soon became softer as Ben changed the topic.

"Are you planning on eating in your room again today?"

"Well... it's always been that way..."

"I never told Demon to just lie in bed."

Yes. For three days now, I have been confined to my room and have not gone out even once.

Originally, most of the daily life in the Demon King's Castle was like that, but Ben didn't seem to like it. He spoke in a somewhat stern voice as he diligently finished the end of the bandage.

“I checked the menu at the corps commander’s restaurant today and it wasn’t bad.”

“I am a patient...”

“It was a minor burn to begin with. Moreover, I asked the Demon King directly to use medicine made from the best ingredients, so I was almost completely cured. “Your eyes will also have recovered, and your ankles, which were chafed by the stems, will no longer be painful when you run.”

“....”

I have nothing to say because I only say the right things.

Only then did I know Ben’s switch. That switch that made him, who was normally moderate, open his mouth and spit out harsh words without hesitation.

health.

This is truly a strong professional spirit. I’m angry about my health being damaged rather than anything else.

Of course, it’s not that I’m happy or worried, it’s just that I’m faithfully following the devil’s orders, but it’s still touching in its own way.

Aside from that, annoying things are annoying.

I pursed my lips and stood up.

“I’m going to change, so please leave.”

“Thank you for accepting my presumptuous request.”

He is clearly polite until the end and walks away.

If that's the case, I can't hate you. It's clear that he knows that and does it that way. I grumbled inwardly and opened the closet.

The clothes hanging on hangers come into view at a glance. These are all filled in by the Demon King and the 2nd Corps Commander.

Even if the devil is like that, why is the commander of the 2nd corps trying to do something to me like that?

They definitely bring only clothes that suit them well, but they don't intend to obediently wear them. It's obvious that if they try them on once, they'll keep holding on to them for a while, offering to pick out new clothes for them.

Trembling, he pushed aside the clothes the 2nd Corps commander had bought him and took out the clothes the devil king had given him.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 7

7. 0 Corps Commander Deon Hardt (5)

Dressed in neat black clothes, I walked towards the corps commander's dining room without hesitation.

Every time I pass through the hallway, the soldiers who spot me startle and bow down as if they are seeing a monster that turns to stone when our eyes meet.

It was burdensome and scary at first, but now I'm grateful. You guys look so scary. I once encountered it head-on by chance, and at that time, I thought it really turned into a stone. Of course, not you, but me.

Ignoring the pouring gaze, I stopped in front of a huge door. Then, the people guarding the door trembled and took a straight posture.

"Are you here for dinner?"

"Yes, it is."

"Okay then, I'll open the door."

The large door opened smoothly without a single 'squeak' sound.

As you enter, silence falls over the once bustling restaurant. I screamed inwardly as I felt all eyes on me.

This is why I don't want to come to the restaurant!

The owner of all those gazes is the 'corps commander.' The corps commander who can control the atmosphere of the battlefield with just one force!

"...."

"...."

What should I do?

Stay calm, stay calm. First, let's get the food.

I tried to pretend like nothing was wrong and walked forward. Every time I took a step, persistent gazes followed me, but I pretended not to notice and only focused my eyes on the chefs.

Somehow it seems like the chefs are moving faster.

'Yes, please hurry if you can.'

Right now, standing there with the attention of the corps commanders like this is in itself no different from torture.

"This dish has been served. "Mamamasit, enjoy your meal."

Rattling rattling.

I looked down at the tray, which was shaking loudly, and then looked up at the cook.

You seem quite nervous too. Well... how many corps commanders are gathered here, so who could not be nervous?

The rattling sound becomes louder as I smile with the intention of cheering me up out of joy and sadness.

I thought it was going to spill at this rate, so I raised my hand to quickly catch it... but oh no.

Sigh!

...It was raised too much.

I thought it would be less tense than the chef in front of me, but it seems I was just as nervous.

I raised my hand too high and too quickly, and the tray was lifted up in a spectacular way. The tray, which had been thrown into the sky by my hand, writhed in the air, scattering food, and then flopped loudly on the floor.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

An even colder silence fell than before.

I let out a short scream inside and wiped my face.

Damn it was ruined.

***

Wicked. It's also evil.

This was the thought that came to everyone's mind at the same time in this restaurant at this moment.

Demon Arut.

The one who killed the last hero and the commander of the 0th Corps of the Demon King's army, known to have a force so strong that even the Demon King brought by the Demon King himself could not touch it.

The corps commanders here right now can assure you that he is a scary man.

His usual sane self? If you only believe in that and feel safe, you will be in big trouble. It's just that his point of anger is different from others.

Look at it now. In contrast to how he saved the life of the man in charge of a man-eating plant that attacked him because he failed to properly care for the plant, this time he threw away the tray that the cook held out for the sole reason that he 'trembled'.

'Still, this is more extreme than usual...'

1st Corps Commander Jaykar quietly flicked his knife as he watched the scene unfold before his eyes.

...Now that I think about it, I set the garden on fire. If he started a fire, he must have been very angry.

My mind, which had been making several assumptions, suddenly stopped as if it had found the most suitable one.

'What if I didn't forgive you back then?'

What if you just endured it to the point of complaining in the garden because you felt uncomfortable reducing the Demon King's manpower?

So what if the anger from back then still remains?

'I feel sorry for the cook.'

He was unlucky enough to become the target of his anger.

The demon's black clothes came into view later. That was probably an unspoken warning, 'I'm not in a good mood today, so don't touch me.'

Jaykar kept his eyes focused on them and slowly cut up the meat and put it in his mouth.

I feel sorry for the chef, but apart from feeling sorry for him, I have no intention of protecting him. Risking your life to confront the commander of the 0 Corps just to save one cook would be a huge loss.

Jaykar simply remained silent because he did not want to suffer an honorable death on the battlefield and die at the hands of his own side.

That's probably the same for other corps commanders as well. That's probably why everyone is silent.

Demon's face had hardened from the beginning. Blood-red eyes sink deeply and look at the chef.

That thing is clearly angry. If I don't kneel down and pray right away...

"I'm sorry, sorry, sorry!!"

After all, he is a chef who has dealt with corps commanders. You're quick-witted.

Jaykar took a quick look at Demon's expression while eating the salad with a fork. The sunken eyes were fluttering.

"You seem to be worried."

3rd Corps Commander Ashild, who was sitting nearby, muttered softly. Jaykar nodded his head in agreement and observed the situation in silence.

What are you going to do?

I won't kill you. Usually, he is extremely reluctant to take someone's life.

Are you going to set it on fire again, or are you going to simply make him paralyzed?

Because the Demon is an unpredictable being, Jaykar's eyes were persistent as if he would not miss his every move.

***

Deon Hardt This life is doomed. Just that short sentence floats around in my head.

My mind went blank and I stared blankly at the chef who was shaking in front of me.

The cook's complexion was paler than mine.

Yes, you must have been upset and angry because the dish you put so much effort into ended up being the topping on the bottom. But the other person is a corps commander, so I can't even be angry... It looks like he's trying to relieve his anger somehow, but I still have to apologize. Otherwise, you never know when and where you might get stabbed in the back.

So, when I was about to apologize, the chef suddenly fell flat on his face.

"I'm so sorry!!"

“!?”

What kind of situation is this again?

I was momentarily shaken by the sudden attack. His pupils were probably shaking greatly.

I quickly calmed down and looked down at the chef with an uneasy expression.

“...Let’s get up first.”

“sorry! Please have mercy!”

No, no matter who sees this situation, it was my fault. Why on earth are you doing that?

“There is nothing to show mercy. wake up.”

“Hi!”

I tried to gently tell him it wasn’t your fault, but it wasn’t the reaction I expected.

In fact, I’m falling flat on my face even more... How do I fix this?

“As expected, it’s a demon...”

“It’s worthy of the name...”

Everyone is even whispering something.

Do you think I am arrogant when it comes to human subjects? As I suppress my trembling heart and turn around, everyone closes their mouths and avoids eye contact. It was clear that he was talking about me.

My image must be at a complete low right now.

Yes, it's a ruined image anyway. Even if I mess up further and recover, it's still there.

When I think about it like that, I feel more at ease.

I sighed lightly with a relieved expression and looked at the chef who was still face down.

"At a time like this, I think it would be better to start cooking again."

I'm fine with it, but I wonder if other corps commanders will be angry. I heard that all the corps commanders have a twisted corner somewhere.

In particular, there is no mercy for those below you....

"Yes, yes! "I'll do it again right away!"

The chef suddenly stands up as if he had just fallen down and runs towards the kitchen.

I leaned against the wall, closed my eyes, and waited for my meal to come again.

Why did you close your eyes? Otherwise, I felt like tears would come out.

Ah life....

The food came out faster than expected. Even handing it out was quick.

The chef, who quickly and quickly delivered the dish, bowed at a right angle and quickly disappeared into the kitchen.

It was so fast that if it weren't for the food in my hand, I would have thought it was the wind coming and going.

Anyway, after many twists and turns, I finally accepted the food and started walking.

The restaurant was so spacious and had so many seats that it was hard to believe that it was serving meals for only thirteen corps commanders.

There are as many as thirteen rectangular tables that can seat twenty people!

However, if you think about the situation a little, it is not completely incomprehensible.

Each corps commander has a strong personality. There were frequent cases where they clashed with each other.

I heard this from the devil, but when there was only one table for 20 people in the restaurant, the two corps commanders who were fighting with each other upset the restaurant, saying they did not want to sit at the same table with that guy.

From then on, he prepared a table for 20 people according to the number of corps commanders so that no problems would arise even if all the corps commanders fought... ‘

So no one will come near me.’

There are plenty of seats, so why would you come near me?

I came this far because I was able to make that assurance. Otherwise, no matter how much I pushed his back, he would have just lied down on the floor and said he would die.

Anyway, I quietly sat down at the table at the far end. A place where I wouldn't necessarily look or step unless I had something to do.

From now on, the moment you raise your fork to eat comfortably...

"Can I sit here?"

"...?!"

A demon approached.

Dark skin color and long, pointed ears as if to prove that they are not human. From situations where everyone uses honorifics to me, to the ability to speak informally to me skillfully.

The moment I confirmed all of this, I closed my mouth and swallowed the sigh that was about to burst out.

The power of all corps commanders. Unlike me, who is nothing more than a scarecrow, he is a person of real power who can officially act as the devil's agent.

Jaykar, the 1st Corps commander, was holding a tray full of dishes and asking permission to sit next to me. Even while I was eating, I glanced to see if there was only half of the food left in the bowl.

Why bother when you can just eat it all in one sitting.

I wanted to refuse, but since I had no real reason to do so, I lifted the corners of my mouth and nodded with difficulty.

"It is a place without an owner. "There is no need to ask for permission."

Well, the answer is this is probably okay.

“He is like that too.”

He chuckled, put down the tray, pulled out a chair, and sat down.

I never thought I would actually sit down. What on earth do I have to do?

My appetite, which had been faint from the beginning, completely disappeared. I was just tossing the salad, suppressing the sigh that kept coming out, when suddenly a voice that was unfamiliar but one I had heard before fell over my head.

“Can I sit down too?”

I almost lost my fork. Talking behind your back, where have you sold your manners?

I could feel my startled heart slowly subsiding and turning into anger. I then looked at the other person and froze.

Because a demon with horns on its temples and an unreasonable level of muscles that a human could never have had was looking at me with an indecipherable expression.

3rd Corps Commander Ashild. Like Jaykar, he looks like he moved while eating, holding a tray with half of the food left on it, and makes eye contact with me as if urging me to answer.

The answer to be given in this situation was predetermined.

“...what you take for granted.”

It is impossible to tell the 1st Corps commander that he is free to sit or not and then refuse the 3rd Corps commander.

Since the front seat was already occupied by Jaykar, Ashild naturally sat next to me.

Suddenly, my front and sides were blocked, so I couldn't find a place to focus, so I lowered my head to hide my trembling eyes and focused only on the food. Of course, it didn't fall over, so all I had to do was stir it around with a fork.

'Ashild, commander of the 3rd Corps, was probably the Demon King's personal guard.'

I pulled out from the back of my mind the information I had memorized after coming here to survive.

The 3rd Corps is a corps where all corps members, including the corps commander, use great swords and annihilate enemies with overwhelming power. When a powerful army is needed, the 3rd legion is the corps that the Demon King mainly uses.

It may be possible to move the 1st Corps, but in reality, the movement of the 1st Corps itself was given great meaning, so it was rare for the 1st Corps to move.

It's not for nothing that Jaykar acts as the Demon King's agent.

"...."

"...."

Oh no. I've been thinking about other things for too long.

Suddenly, an awkward silence touched my skin, so I slightly raised my head.

The intention was to check his expression to see if he was displeased or angry, but unfortunately, he made eye contact with Jaykar, who was looking in this direction.

I couldn't avoid eye contact and was wondering how to react, but he also looked at the plate for a moment, probably feeling awkward, and then lifted his head straight up and slowly opened his mouth.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 8

8. 0 Corps Commander Deon Hardt (6)

“...Are there any inconveniences in staying here?”

“Nothing in particular.”

It is a situation that should exist or not exist.

Recalling the Demon King's words that all the corps commanders were off somewhere, I gave a simple answer, and Jaykar carefully examined my expression with a slightly stiff face.

“If I were to say anything specifically... I guess it exists.”

“yes?”

“After all, you are a human being, so there cannot be any inconveniences. So don't hold back and speak up. “I will accommodate you as much as I can.”

What is this? Consideration...is it? I'm a human resource brought directly by the devil, so I take care of it personally?

While I thought it couldn't possibly happen, at the same time I was thinking 'what if', Jaykar's voice continued.

In a more cautious voice, as if he was watching.

“Don’t upset the castle or anything like that for no reason...”

“...Thank you just for your words.”

That can’t be possible either. Ugh, I want to die.

That’s clearly a reversal of work in the garden. It’s clear that he’s scolding me for needlessly setting fire to the garden.

At the same time, this is a warning. A warning that if you do such a useless thing one more time, I will not let you go.

He cleared his throat that was clogged with fear and forced out an answer, and only then did he focus on the food again. Then Ashild, who had been silently waiting for the conversation to end, quietly opened his mouth.

No, I tried to do that.

“Oh, Demon. “It’s been a while since I saw you?”

If it weren’t for the 4th Corps commander who suddenly intervened.

Ashild’s eyebrows furrowed. A furrow almost broke between my eyebrows, but fortunately I was able to control my expression just before that.

‘I shouldn’t have come here after all.’

Starting from the 1st corps commander to the 3rd and 4th corps commanders. As unexpected people keep getting in my way, my otherwise resilient spirit is crumbling to dust and scattering.

As I was deeply regretting that I should have endured whatever Ben said, a low voice from next to me slowly penetrated my eardrums.

“You did that because you knew about Idelia, right?”

A voice that sounds like gritted teeth even just hearing it.

Although it was enough to make me startle even though I knew that the target was not me, Idelia, the commander of the 4th corps, smiled softly as if nothing had happened and covered her mouth with a fan.

“What am I? “I don’t know why you’re angry?”

“gibberish.”

Ashild growls.

That’s right, those two originally didn’t get along well. I tried to ignore the situation unfolding in front of me as I stabbed the salad, which was already full of holes, with my fork again.

Of course, it wasn’t a lie. It makes me want to beat up my food... Oh, I already did that once.

I feel nauseous even though I haven’t eaten anything.

I thought it was going to get really bad, so I quietly put down my fork, and Jaykar, who had been watching the situation, turned his head and quietly called out to the two.

“Stop both of you. “I think I forgot who is in front of me right now.”

“...ah.”

“sorry.”

Their eyes turned towards me as if they were planning something.

Out of embarrassment, I quickly shook my head to express that it was okay, and Idelia sat down next to me and quietly spoke.

“I heard you burned down the garden?”

“Idelia.”

“Oh, I’m sorry if I was rude. “I was just curious as to what made Demon so angry...”

If it weren’t for Jaykar, I would have been completely suffocated without even eating anything.

I wish we could stop talking about the garden now. I wasn’t involved in it, and I didn’t witness it myself, so why am I so interested?

...Now that I think about it, you said the 4th Corps handles information.

‘There might be a lot of interest in this area.’

Due to the nature of the job, it has to be that way.

The 4th Corps, including Idelia, is in charge of information processing. Of course, the 2nd corps mainly collects information, and the 4th corps processes it, filters it out, and extracts only the extracts, but that doesn’t mean they don’t collect information at all.

So...

‘To me, he is the most dangerous corps commander among them.’

It’s an unexpected conclusion that comes from a stream of consciousness, but it’s not wrong.

I am the only human in the Demon City. Of course, most people hate me.

I don't know when and where Idelia will find out my weakness and sell me out.

I woke up to a new reality. I quickly gathered my distracted mind, made up my mind, and made eye contact.

Idelia, who immediately made eye contact as if she had been looking this way the whole time, smiled brightly and said.

"The rumor going around is that it was because of the gardener..."

"...."

"If the reason you kept him alive was because you were reluctant to use your own hands, then I am willing to get rid of him for you."

"...That's it."

I'm afraid that someone might be a demon, so when a problem arises, I immediately think about killing the cause. I wonder if there is any mercy for these people...

After thinking about that, I paused for a moment.

Doesn't that mean that, if I think the other way around, I would have no mercy?

'No, it's dangerous.'

My future self is in danger.

Otherwise, I am walking on thin ice, but now that I know this fact, a cold sweat runs down my back.

The hand holding the fork takes strength. He applied so much force that the veins on the back of his hand stood out.

I felt like I felt a flinch next to me, but that wasn't important right now. For my own sake in the future, I must instill something called 'mercy' in the people here in the Demon King's Castle.

With that promise, I raised my head, which had been down for a moment, and looked at Idelia. Unlike before, her eyes were shaking violently, as if she was in pain.

Did you chew your tongue wrong? If you look closely, your hands seem to be shaking too. I feel a little sad looking at that, but I still have to say something for my future self.

"It wasn't a big deal to begin with. "It's not enough to kill me."

"Yes, yes..."

"Do you understand? "It's not enough to kill you."

"Yes, I'm sorry."

"Idelia, what are you sorry about? Just think before you say kill it. "Did the other person really make a mistake that led to his death?"

Oh, I almost forgot the most important thing.

"And sometimes it doesn't hurt to show mercy."

"Yes, I will definitely remember it. really sorry."

I don't know why I keep saying sorry, but for now, it's not that bad.

If I keep slowly learning it like this, even if I make a mistake someday, they will at least once look at me.

The problem is that after Idelia kept quiet, silence came. Looking at the stiff expressions of the other corps commanders with sullen expressions, it seemed as if I had scolded her. Come to think of it, Idelia, who had done nothing wrong, even apologized again and again.

Only then did I realize that I had become the scum of the earth.

“....”

“....”

The silence becomes longer. As time passed, my expression, unable to withstand the pressure, gradually got out of control and became arbitrarily stiff.

It was only natural that the expressions of the corps commanders changed even more unfavorably. How can they not be indifferent when humans dare to harden their expressions in front of them?

As I was contemplating how to resolve the increasingly worsening situation, Idelia, who was desperately thinking about something while exchanging glances with the corps commanders as if I was not the only one who was uncomfortable with this silence, took one look at me and slowly opened her mouth.

“...Daemon.”

Oh yeah!

The awkward atmosphere is relieved. Glad to see her, I faced Idelia with a generous heart that would listen to anything.

Okay, tell me anything. This time, no matter what I say, he will listen to everything....

"I heard you are going to check on the army."

Listen....

"Oh, I also have something to tell you about that."

shit.

I quietly pushed my chair back with the intention of running away if I had to.

There was definitely a time when I said I would keep an eye on the corps.

As for when that was... it was probably when the devil came to visit me after I said I wanted to drink.

[Anyway, no drinking. Is there anything you can do to overthrow the Demon King's Castle? If you're really bored, take a look around your corps or at least look around the garden. Hien said he was happy that he brought in new flowers this time.]

[Let's look at the corps.]

Rather than dealing with that terrible gardener, he chose to deal with the corps members.

It is unfair. I chose the corps because I didn't want to deal with the gardener, but I had to meet Hien as Hien and look at the corps as corps.

These words were even spoken in front of the devil, so now I can't forgive them.

"Daemon...? Are you okay?"

"it's okay."

Was his expression strange? Fortunately, he doesn't seem to be particularly bothered by the fact that he pushed his chair back. If you just watch the timing right and run away like this...

'...it won't work.'

When I thought about it, I realized that I was completely surrounded.

Idelia is on the left and Ashil is on the right. Even Jaykar in the front. Even all of them are corps commanders. The moment you try to run away, it will grab you by the back of your head.

Resignation was quick.

As I relaxed my body, which had been tense without being noticeable, Ashild, who had no way of knowing that I had tried to run away just a moment ago, looked into my eyes and slowly began to speak.

"I understand that you raise your sword when inspecting the corps members."

I heard it. Although I didn't swing it. Moreover, it is a wooden sword, not a real sword.

The wooden sword was so heavy that my arms were shaking. It's a shame, but honestly, with my strength, I can't even dream of holding a regular iron sword and can barely hold a wooden sword.

But why?

"Is it okay if I request a sparring match after teaching all the corps members?"

"...."

I barely stopped my hand from going to my ear.

I guess I'm feeling really low these days. When you see all the bullshit you hear.

My efforts to deny reality were completely destroyed by Jaykar's sudden words.

"Good idea. "Can I observe?"

I told you to tell me if there's anything uncomfortable, but I guess you can't see the look on my face asking you to save me.

To begin with, this is a nonsensical sparring. Right now, there is a ridiculous difference in weight between him and me, so what kind of sparring is this? This is evident just by looking at Ashild's hands. If I were to get hit by that hand instead of a sword, my neck would definitely snap and break.

"...Um..."

I couldn't just put off answering, so I squeezed my voice out.

All eyes focused on one another as if they had been waiting.

Amid the overwhelming gaze, I desperately tried to think of an excuse to come up with an excuse.

—I tried to find it.

“...That's troublesome.”

Although it ultimately failed.

I slowly lowered my head.

Does this end here? Since there is no valid reason, they will just keep pushing it. Then my skills will be revealed and I will pay a heavy price for deceiving them.

No, I don't think you need to worry after being found out. Because I will show off my skills to the world by showing off my ability to die with one hit.

I could see food that had become cold without much time to eat. I should have eaten my fill of warm food before I died.

I wait for an answer like a criminal waiting for a death sentence, but Ashild's reaction is unexpectedly calm.

He was silent for a moment, then slowly nodded and spoke.

“I guess so.”

“...?”

“Daemon, you tend to stand out more in actual battles than in sparring. “It must have been difficult because if you weren't careful, you might end up killing me during the sparring."

"?"

"sorry. "It was careless."

"No, well..."

Well... Has it been released?

I felt like I heard some ominous words, but anyway, I avoided sparring, so let's say it was a good thing.

"Later, when I have developed enough skills to not die so easily, then I will ask you again."

Thinking about it again, I don't think it worked out well at all.

I was in big trouble.

"I won't make you wait that long."

"...."

"Still, can I come along today just to have a look around?"

I heard the declaration of war from the commander of the 3rd Corps.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 9

9. 0 Corps Commander Deon Hardt (7)

I am so touched that they will not make me wait that long, I feel like crying. You don't have to go that far. You can wait a long time. At least until I die.

But Ashild is the type of person who always keeps what I say. I will never forget this promise. In other words, no matter when, the moment when I cross swords with that fearsome guy will definitely come.

"Daemon?"

"ah."

Now that I think about it, I think I said something at the end... I asked if I could go take a look.

I suppressed and swallowed the sigh that was trying to escape.

There is no justification for rejecting this.

Still, it's better than sparring, so should I take some comfort from that?

He had no choice but to shake his head, and a faint smile appeared on his hard face.

“thank you.”

“I can’t thank you enough...” Seeing a guy who goes crazy cutting up people on the battlefield come out so politely, it’s rather burdensome and I don’t know what to do.

It would be better if you spoke informally. I would have felt at ease if it had come out at least a little shamelessly.

“Uh, then can I go too? “I wonder what the 0 Corps’ training method is like.”

Why does Idelia want to come if she and Ashilde are not on good terms? Oh, is that perhaps spying?

It seems like they’re trying to spy on me to see if there’s any useful information, so what should I do?

“I don’t mind coming, but...”

I feel sorry for Idelia, who is looking forward to it, but my training method is ‘neglect’.

You literally just leave it alone and stop by every now and then to watch it train. That’s all... I guess I’ll be disappointed.

Still, I couldn’t tell in my conscience that I was leaving it unattended, so I quietly cleaned up the dishes.

He put all the dishes still full of food on the tray and stood up holding them. Then Jaykar and Ashild, who had already finished eating, stood up holding their empty bowls.

Idelia, who came this way after putting all the dishes away, looked at my plate and tilted her head.

“Have you eaten everything?”

“yes.”

“Are you feeling unwell...”

“Yes, a little.”

Because of you guys.

I swallowed the words that rose up in my throat and answered calmly. Then Jaykar looked at my complexion with a worried expression and said.

“Then shouldn’t you first find your doctor?”

“it’s okay.”

No matter how nice Ben is, I can’t guarantee what will happen if he continues to bother me over trivial things. In the end, isn’t he also a ‘demon’?

Thinking back to the man who seemed to claim to be a demon because part of his face was covered in snake scales, I shook my head and handed the tray over to the worker.

As I come out, the rest of the corps commanders come rushing out after me. In addition to the unexpected situation, there seemed to be someone’s image overlapping here, so I was startled and stopped reflexively.

It’s like...

‘Am I like the devil?’

Thanks to this, it feels like the constant gaze has become even more intense. I was planning to just eat quietly and leave, as if nothing was there, but somehow it ended up like this.

Because of the atmosphere, I felt like I should head straight to the military base like this, so I stopped awkwardly and looked around, but someone came running urgently from far away.

“Jaycar!”

What is that again? Since something has happened to me, I start to be wary.

It was easy to judge whether it was an enemy or an ally.

“Jaykar’s paperwork is behind, so I ask Jaykar’s deputy to come quickly...”

You are an ally.

“...Now that I think about it, there are documents piled up on my desk. Is that all there is?”

“Yeah, probably... I guess so.”

A heavy sigh was heard.

Jaykar, who was wiping his face with one hand, clearly showing his irritation and frustration, soon lost his emotions and turned to me.

“You heard, but I don’t think I can go today.”

“Yes, that’s a shame.”

I don’t regret it at all.

I internally praised the demon who delivered the good news and looked back on the past when I had drawn the line on paperwork from the beginning.

At the time, I was nervous that my voice would blow off while speaking, but now that I think about it, I think I did really well. Thanks to that, I don't have to worry about being harassed by my lieutenant.

For your information, the adjutant who has no work to do thanks to me is now out in the human world. I was so bored that I went out to find a new puzzle or cube. As expected, he is a demon, so you have to be careful, but in his own way, he is just as kind and grateful as Ben.

"Well... now that I think about it, I'm at a risk too."

Ashild, who was standing next to him, let out something that I couldn't tell whether it was a lament or a groan.

He shook his head nervously, sighed and looked at me with an apologetic expression, as if there was nothing he could do.

"I guess I'll have to postpone the sightseeing until later. "I'm really sorry for asking you first."

"No, thanks."

It's really okay, so I hope you don't apologize.

He did his best to show that he was okay and sent a look full of affection to the demon who delivered the good news. Then the guy flinched like a petty thief facing a security guard.

I didn't find it particularly strange. In the first place, it's strange that you don't feel anything in front of the corps commanders. Moreover, it's scary to tell them that they have to hurry up because they have a backlog of paperwork.

"Well...and Idelia...huh? Edelia?! "Where have you been, Idelia?"

The attendant, who had been looking for Idelia while keeping an eye on her, opened his eyes and looked around.

'Idelia? If it's Idelia, it's right here...huh? 'Where has he gone?'

Am I the only one who didn't know it was gone?

No, that doesn't seem to be the case. Both Ashild and Jaykar were looking around with expressions of subtle admiration and irritation.

The transaction suddenly went somewhere. I guess you didn't run away because you didn't want to do the paperwork. No matter what, he is a corps commander in name.

"It looks like he ran away again."

"It seems like my skills are improving day by day."

really?!

I forgot. The corps commanders were not normal.

The servant seemed to have realized that he had also run away, and he was very tearful. Rather than crying, he was almost crying and was lamenting one after another as if he had forgotten who the other person was.

“Did you see the lieutenant’s face, Idelia? It’s almost like an invoice. If that were all, I could just say it was a pity and move on, but the problem is that the deputy is now making a fuss about submitting a resignation letter...” “

...Thanks for your hard work.”

“No... I was sorry. Then I’ll just leave. If you happen to find Idelia....”

“I will catch you and throw you in front of the adjutant.”

“Yes, please do.”

The attendant bowed and walked away, as if he wanted to search more.

And when the figure faded from sight, Jaykar and Ashild simultaneously turned to look at me.

“See you later then.”

“See you next time.”

“Yes, good luck with the paperwork...”

Oh, I guess that wasn’t it.

The two of them sigh as if they were having fun hearing what they said was a bit of encouragement.

I was nervous that they might get angry, but fortunately, the two turned around without saying anything and walked slowly and unwillingly.

‘And I...’

I guess I’ll have to go and see the Legion.

There is no set deadline and it could be postponed as long as you want, but if you do that, the corps commanders who have completed the paperwork may stick around.

Now that everyone is busy disappearing is the best time that will never come again.

That’s why I kept forcing myself to keep walking towards my room and turned towards the 0 Corps’ exclusive training ground.

Oh, I don’t want to go.

***

Perhaps because lunch time had just ended, the gymnasium was empty.

After all, who would run right after eating? Only my side hurts.

The thought of going back like this slowly crossed my mind, but if I go back without seeing a single member of the corps, that means I wasn’t looking after the corps.

So, with the intention of waiting, I grabbed a wooden sword from the stand, trudged over to a corner of the training hall, and sat down with my legs crossed.

As I touch the wooden sword with the discolored handle, I feel it again.

Maybe it’s because it’s from the demon world, or maybe I’m just weak, but it’s still heavy. If I wanted to swing it, I could swing it, but it would be the wooden sword swinging me instead of me swinging the wooden sword.

Cursed strength that cannot control even a wooden sword, let alone an iron sword.

Because of that, when I was first taken to the battlefield, I remember being in a hurry to avoid and run away without being able to hold any weapons of any kind. It wasn't until later that the weapon I chose was a small, light dagger.

“omg.”

Suddenly, a small sound woke me up from my thoughts and I raised my head. At the entrance to the training hall, I saw a guy who looked like a corps member staring at me with a blue face.

This is a training ground exclusively for the 0th Corps, so they are probably our corps members. Are you here for training? You are diligent.

... As soon as I could think about it, the guy rushed out of the training ground.

“ .... ”

What is it? If you were going to go back, why did you come?

Or is it because you hate me? Are you trying to conspire so that no one will come back until I return because you hate me?

“ha.”

Yes, how dare a mere human being act as a corps commander.

Let's go back. I've done enough.

Actually, I can't say I've done enough, but my conscience is screaming that this is enough, so I guess it's enough.

I stood up to return the wooden sword. As I was just starting to walk, I felt a vibration in the ground.

At first, I thought it was just my mood, but...

doo doo doo doo doo doo.

I was convinced when I saw a cloud of dust gathering in the distance.

'What is that crazy thing? Is it a monster? Were there monsters in the Demon King's Castle?'

Ah, a figure resembling a human is revealed through the dust cloud.

Only then did I know. Those guys are corps members. That's on our side too.

"...."

Let's run away.

I don't know what it is, but I have a bad feeling. We can postpone examining the corps until later. No, at this level, heaven is giving a revelation that it must be postponed.

While I was hesitating and retreating, the guys who had come right in front of me were standing in line with me. It was a surprisingly quick and well-thought-out action.

"...."

“....”

A quiet silence fell in the vast training hall.

Unlike the quiet space, my mind was very complicated.

What is this. Since you treated me like a corps commander, does that mean I should get out of the way quickly? When will I go back? Should I go back now? Looking at those eyes... I think I should probably go now.

I nodded once to show my intention to go back and was about to turn when the person who seemed to be the representative among them cautiously called me out.

“That Demon.”

“yes?”

“I wonder why you came here...”

Why do those words sound to me like, ‘Why did you come when you have nothing to do?’

However, even if my interpretation is correct, it is not particularly wrong and I cannot say anything about it.

My hands, unable to overcome my anxiety, try to move as they please. I’m trying to grab the collar, but it would look much better to touch the wooden sword instead.

I said, strengthening the hand holding the wooden sword.

“I’m curious.”

The skills of our corps members.

Since I've been training almost every time I've come, I believe I'll do above average, but other than that, I want to see it with my own eyes at least once.

Well, judging by his attitude, it would be difficult to see him in person unless something happened.

Unable to resist the unspoken pressure to return quickly, I headed to the wooden sword stand to put the sword back in its place.

I tried to move as naturally as possible without showing signs of nervousness, but I think I was too nervous.

My feet and toes got twisted!

Even today, my poor lower body is doing its job well!

'You fall!'

If you fall like this, you're in trouble. I'm glad it just ends on the dog's side.

Even if you're not, you're human, and the way you look at me isn't good, so listen to the rumor that I tripped over my own feet. It's obvious what will happen without even looking at it.

Thinking that I would die if I fell, I took a big step forward desperately trying to keep my balance.

Then, as I was lowering my upper body and establishing a stable posture, something passed over my head!

"Daemon!!"

When I slightly raise my head to see something, something falls gently in front of me.

It's like white fur... This is my hair, right?

I was scared and raised my upper body while twisting my body and looking back. Then something blunt hit my elbow.

And then the moaning that followed.

"Wow!"

"...?"

When the field of vision became fully clear later, the other person was already trembling, clutching his solar plexus and bending his back.

My eyes widened at the familiar appearance.

"human?"

It has no tail, horns, or scales. Unlike demons that have some parts that are different from humans, this guy looks like a human no matter how you look at it.

The question of how humans ended up in the Demon King's Castle briefly caught my eye as I saw the sword he was holding.

You're an intruder. Could it be that this guy's solar plexus was what hit my elbow?

I was lucky. If I hadn't been careful, I would have suffered the consequences.

After comforting his shocked heart, he held the wooden sword with both hands and lifted it up.

Whether he was a human or something else, it didn't change the fact that he was an intruder and attacked me.

That's why I had no hesitation in my actions.

Rather, I thought that if I left it like this, I could be in danger, so I put my weight on it and struck the wooden sword with all my might.

Bah!

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 10

10. Heroes, meetings, and... (1)

Watching the unconscious intruder being dragged away with grim eyes, the corps members were frantically repeating 'I Died Today' in their minds.

I thought it was a joke until I was taking a short break after eating when a guy came in from outside and shouted for us to gather quickly.

Of course, the commander of the corps has come. He only visits occasionally.

However, the guy's face, which was as blue as a blueberry, did not contain a single lie, and the moment we found out that what he said was true, we panicked and ran like crazy towards the training ground.

And I was able to meet our corps commander.

"I'm curious."

The answer I received when I had the courage to ask the question about what brought me here was meaningful.

What are you curious about?

The doubts didn't last long.

Demon walks leisurely somewhere as if he were taking a walk.

Then, in an instant, with incredible speed, he bent down to avoid the sword aimed at his neck, then turned his upper body and struck the enemy's solar plexus with his elbow. All of them were quick, flowing, natural movements.

Only then did we know. The meaning of the word 'curious'.

'I'm curious.'

—I guess I really didn't know.

Did they really not know that they had allowed intruders into the training hall?

I wonder if he was so relaxed about such a topic.

Without even looking at us, who were frozen in shock, Demon-sama leisurely raised his wooden sword as if to stun the opponent.

And then a cheerful sound echoed throughout the training hall.

Bah!

***

After barely stopping the corps members who kept bowing their heads in apology and beating themselves up, I locked myself in my room again.

All work to be done has been completed.

I took a walk in the garden and looked at the army. Since we ate at the restaurant that Ben requested, we won't have to go out for a while.

I was rolling around on my bed, happy about my long-awaited peaceful daily life, when I heard a knock on the door.

“This is Demon Ed.”

Ed is my lieutenant, right? He went all the way to the human world to find a different puzzle or cube for me, who was bored to death, but he finally came back.

I jumped up from my seat with a heart full of anticipation.

“Come on in.”

Ed’s expression, which I hadn’t seen in a long time, was somewhat stiff.

Did something bad happen outside? No, but the devil said that the position of adjutant to the commander of Corps 0 should be filled by a suitable person, so he chose the guy who was mentioned as a candidate for commander of the corps? So, if you have Ed skills, you can easily put most guys in trouble...

“I brought a new cube. “It’s a slightly unique cube called the Mirror Cube.”

“oh.”

“And...”

He glances to the side, breaking into a cold sweat.

Since he was still standing in the hallway with the door open, I had no idea what he was looking at.

Eventually, Ed swallowed dry saliva and slowly opened his mouth.

“...The Demon King has come to visit.”

“oh.”

...oh?

“If you’re not busy, would it be okay for a moment?”

Jerk. With the sound of heavy footsteps, someone familiar entered the room.

After taking a quick look around the room, the sight turns to me sitting on the bed, and then curves brightly like a half moon.

After a moment of silence, after understanding the situation, I threw down the pillow I was hugging and stood up.

Why is the Demon King here? I didn’t get into an accident this time...

...but there is one thing that bothers me.

“Are you sure it’s about that intruder?”

“that’s right.”

As expected, he smiled happily and gestured towards the door, as if he had not disappointed his expectations.

“I have something to say about that. “If it’s okay, let’s go see the prisoner together for a while.”

Doesn’t that mean we should go to the dungeon together?

What's going on? Could it be that the intruder said something strange about me? Since they were the same person, they must have had some credibility.

I don't know what it is, but I don't want to die in vain like this. I glanced back at Ed with the intention of asking him to save me.

And I could clearly see him avoiding my eyes.

Damn you.

There was not a single ray of light in the dungeon. It was even wet.

Yes, I ended up getting dragged in.

"open it."

With one word from the Demon King, the iron bars that seemed sturdy opened at once.

The soldier who opened the door bows and disappears when told to leave.

The Demon King, who was looking at the back, turned his gaze and looked at the 'human' in the prison.

The intruder, who was now covered in blood, glared at him with harsh eyes, but the Demon King paid him no heed and strode in and knelt down in front of him.

"Deon."

The real name came about because I was bitten by those around me.

At the same time, the intruder's gaze turned towards me.

The look in their eyes is that they want to chew me up if they can. Maybe it's because of my mood that his eyes look more murderous when he looks at me than when he looks at the devil.

Either way, the Demon King roughly pulled up the intruder's hair and turned his head to look at me.

"Take a good look at this guy. Doesn't something feel familiar?"

I don't know much about it, except that I'm a human...

When I answered in silence, the Demon King began to explain step by step as if he was trying to give me a hint.

"Even though I am a human, it is a power that becomes particularly strong against me, a powerless 'demon lord' who can defeat most demons alone."

I heard that the guy's body was in a mess, but it looks like he was playing with it.

But that's not important now. After hearing the Demon King's explanation, my expression hardened without realizing it.

"No way..."

"Yes."

The Demon King, who let go of his hair as if tossing it, laughed, shaking off his bloody hands.

"The dregs of a hero. In the empire, they are called fragments of heroes and praised—"

"...Heroes."

“It’s not even funny.”

***

A warrior has two choices when he dies.

If I were to give priority to just one of them, it would be to spread the ‘power of the hero’, which will crumble away upon death, across the entire continent to create, even if only slightly, someone who can take on the Demon King.

It would be nice if the power itself could be completely transferred to one person, but it cannot be transferred during life, and the hero’s power begins to crumble upon death, so in the end, all that can be done is to scatter the fragments and retain some of the hero’s power at the cost of dying anyway. All we have to do is create those who have it.

The empire tried to gather those with such fragments, calling them ‘heroes’.

Of course, the title ‘Hero’ was not given to just anyone. Unofficially, all those with ‘Fragments of Heroes’ are called heroes, but officially, only those with outstanding abilities and outstanding achievements are given the title ‘Hero’, giving them a different level of glory.

Unfortunately, the person covered in blood in front of me was an ‘electron’.

‘Fragments of a hero who did not become an official hero.’

Even though he couldn’t be called a ‘hero’, he was called a ‘hero candidate’. It would be a waste to use it carelessly and throw it away.

That kind of guy broke into the Demon King's Castle.

'Why on earth?'

The bright red eyes shine with a creepy light.

The emotions reflected at first glance are none other than confusion and doubt.

It is not a simple curiosity such as why or how they came here. It was a question about something incomprehensible.

There is no reason for a hero candidate to come here. He did not contain any message, seemed to have no particular purpose other than eliminating demons, including the Demon King, and decisively attacked Deon himself.

'Why did you attack me? 'What reason is contained here?'

—What on earth is 'he' thinking?

"...Therefore, there will be a corps commander meeting this afternoon. "I'll go out to meet you in person, so I'll see you later."

"...."

In response to no response, the Demon King stood up and looked at Deon.

He doesn't even blink his eyes.

It looks like he's deep in thought. His usually stern expression became even more stern and stood still.

'I don't think I have any intention of going up together.'

He shook his head inwardly and spoke vaguely with the intention of confirming.

“Are you planning on staying a little longer?”

“yes.”

“Okay then, let’s wait outside.”

The demon king who left the cage slowly disappeared.

...The worries are over.

Deon, who had been assessing the distance by the sound of receding footsteps, lowered his gaze and looked at the intruder.

Dry eyes with no clear meaning. Red eyes, shining as if soaked in blood, look at the intruder.

However, the intruder did not avoid his gaze. Instead, he raised his head stiffly and glared at Deon.

Those eyes were full of obvious hatred and anger, based on a feeling of betrayal.

Eventually, the blood-covered lips slowly opened.

“Deon Hardt.”

It’s been a while since I heard your full name.

A strange look appeared in Deon’s eyes.

The intruder gritted his teeth and spit out the words as if chewing them with boiling anger, hatred, and cold resentment.

“You traitorous bastard.”

“....”

Aha.

This is the answer.

The eyes, which had been narrowed and strained, relax as if steam had escaped. In the same way, the voice, with all the tension gone, uttered the words in a flowing voice.

“You are a loser.”

“what?”

He wasn’t worth worrying about. I just wasted my time.

As if there was no value in answering the stupid question, Deon asked the question without hiding the pitiful look in his eyes.

“What crime did you commit?”

“What nonsense from earlier! Discarded card? “What a sin!”

“What did you do to offend the emperor?”

“gibberish! Your Majesty has given me an important mission! “If I was out of sight, you wouldn’t have given me the mission!”

Even as he said that, his eyes began to tremble slightly as if something was stabbing him somewhere.

In a space where the only light is a candle that seems ready to go out at any moment, Deon quickly catches the trembling and climbs over the iron bars and enters the prison.

Like the devil, he knelt down in front of the intruder and unlike the devil, he did nothing.

I just quietly looked at him and said.

“No, the fact that you called me a ‘traitor’ is proof of that. “You fell out of favor with the emperor and are now abandoned like this.”

“That can’t be possible...”

Deon, who pointed out the reality in a quiet voice as if teaching, decided that there was no need to waste any more time here and stood up.

A conclusion has been reached.

There is no need to save this guy. No, it would definitely be better to kill him.

However, knowing that he did not have the authority to decide this, Deon looked down at him and raised the corners of his mouth.

Next, a powerful voice with the intention of being heard by someone rang through the basement.

“Your Majesty knows everything.”

“!”

After seeing the guy’s eyes widen, Deon turned around without looking any further.

A fierce struggle followed behind my back.

“This emperor bastard!!”

This is truly shallow loyalty.

Deon, who was walking with a sneer on his lips, stopped when he saw the Demon Lord waiting for him at the entrance to the dungeon.

The Demon King, who was looking at his expressionless face as if asking when he had laughed, slowly opened his mouth.

“I heard.”

He then says with a helpless laugh.

“It’s too much. If you say that, I have no choice but to kill him. Still, if I do it well, I might be able to use it somewhere. “You did that on purpose, right?”

“....”

“That’s enough. I said it inside, but you didn’t seem to hear it, so I’ll say it again. There is a corps commander meeting scheduled for this afternoon. “I plan to pick you up myself, so please wait in your room.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 11

11. Hero, meeting, and... (2)

I thought he was just one of those guys trained as assassins abandoned by the empire, but he's actually a hero candidate.

Honestly, I was shocked.

'Yes, it was a shock...'

I never thought I would be so distracted.

When I came to my senses, I had already arrived in my room.

Maybe it's because I'm in a state of ecstasy, but my memories seem foggy and I remember very little clearly. What was your clearest memory?

Are you sure he will die?

'....'

It would be better not to think about that any more. Whether that guy dies or not, whether I sympathize with him or not, there's nothing I can do anyway.

I lay down on the bed holding the cube that Ed brought me.

While I was shuffling the cubes and erasing random thoughts one by one, I heard a knock.

“it’s me.”

“...Demon King?!”

I suddenly got up. I hurriedly checked my clothes, straightened my disheveled hair, and opened the door.

“Why is the Demon King here again...?”

“I told you. “I will come get you.”

“yes?”

when?

The Demon King must have read my questioning expression as he raised one eyebrow. He leaned against the door with his arms crossed and looked at my face with an uncomfortable expression.

“Corps Commander’s Meeting. “Even after this, you don’t remember?”

I don’t remember, but somehow I feel like I shouldn’t say that.

I nodded with as calm a look as possible.

“Ah, I remember.”

It was a performance that put all my effort into it.

The Demon King, who passed without any doubt, nodded and straightened up.

“Then let’s go.”

“yes.”

I didn’t think I should take any more time, so I hurried after him.

Because of that, I left the room without even having time to put the cube down, forgetting that I was even holding it in my hand.

***

At the time of the battle with the warrior, the commander of the 7th Legion was an ogre.

Even if I put aside the reason that it is one of the core forces of the Demon King’s army, I remember it clearly. Because he was a great groomsman for Deon Hardt.

In other words, when Deon Hardt first appeared, he appeared by killing the commander of the 7th Legion.

The Demon King smiled as he recalled that day.

When he won the battle against the hero and raised his sword to take the hero’s life, which would have been cut short if left unattended, the hero chose to commit suicide.

I was so embarrassed when I saw the warrior’s body radiating bright light.

“...This hero seems quite aggressive.”

A hollow laugh came out.

A warrior has two choices when he dies.

One is to spread fragments of power across the continent to create beings that can even slightly oppose the Demon King, and the other is mainly used when the Demon King is nearby, so-called self-destruction.

Gathering the strength of the warrior and exploding it.

Usually, warriors choose to scatter fragments of power for later use.

‘I won’t die anyway.’

It is not for nothing that he is called the strongest demon king in history. Although it was a bit of a waste, I was confident that if I used my magic power generously, I would survive the aftermath of that explosion without major damage.

The problem is the other demons surrounding them.

All the demons of the Demon Castle came out to watch the historic battle, which could safely be said to be a battle that depended on the fate of the race.

The power of the warrior was given to eliminate the Demon King, and the Demons are a race born from the Demon King.

In the end, the warrior’s power had no choice but to indirectly affect the demons.

So, if the hero’s power bursts out here...

‘Roughly half.’

About half of this large army will evaporate in an instant.

Considering that the size of the Demon King's Castle is that of a small city in the empire and that all the demons there are here, the level of damage is unbelievable.

"Everyone get back...!"

Therefore, the moment you give an order in a hurry.

Kwaaaang!!

...A man fell from the sky.

Also with the 7th Corps commander.

He appeared after crushing the 7th Corps commander and did not even cast a glance at the Demon King.

As if to double-check whether the 7th Corps commander under me was dead, I stabbed him in the neck with the dagger and slowly got up using it as support. It was a ridiculously relaxed attitude.

White hair and red eyes.

Blood-red eyes go back and forth between the demon king and the hero, then quickly fixate on the hero. Then he began to slowly approach this direction at a leisurely pace.

There was no sign of nervousness in the middle of the battlefield surrounded by countless demons.

It was a very defenseless attitude.

However, perhaps because of his confident attitude, his unwavering expression showed a spirit that could not be ignored, so the soldiers had no choice but to watch him frozen, rather than stopping him.

‘Pathetic bastards.’

Still, the Demon King could not bear to openly criticize him for being pitiful, so he quietly narrowed his eyes.

Although it was only for a moment, he too was overwhelmed.

Since the distance wasn’t that far to begin with, he quickly arrived in front of the warrior.

Without even looking at the Demon King, he placed his hand on the hero’s shoulder and brought his face close to the guy’s ear.

And a miracle happened.

The light emanating from the warrior’s body poured down towards that human.

“...You’re crazy.”

A groan broke out.

Since we know better than anyone else about heroes, demon kings, and the empire’s system of sending heroes, speculation about this situation continued quickly.

That white-haired human probably followed to see the outcome of this battle for himself and inform the empire. Maybe that’s the main mission.

And as a side mission, even if the hero dies, you will find out the state of the Demon King and if you think you can kill him, you will kill him.

So, when the hero chose to commit suicide, he would have calculated the probability.

[The probability of causing damage to the Demon King through the hero's self-destruction and the amount of damage the Demon King will suffer from this.] [The number of surrounding Demons that can be reduced by self-destruction.]

[The probability of killing the injured Demon King through the reduced number of Demons.]

[Final There is a possibility of accomplishing the main mission of 'return to life' by carrying out this.]

It would have been judged that self-destruction was irrational.

So he would have put his hand on the warrior's shoulder and stopped him. It's a bit surprising that he jumped in the middle of enemy lines, but it may be because he's confident he can escape alive.

'Smart, loyal to the mission, and combat ability...'

The corners of his eyes were bent, filled with amusement.

I feel sorry for the empire that sent this guy to this dangerous place. If it were me, even if I had to use it, I wouldn't have sent him to his death without any respect.

In any case, the warrior read his intentions and quickly turned around to pour into him for the purpose of transfer. Of course, it did not happen that the power stayed in the opponent's body as the hero intended.

'of course.'

The hero's power was given directly by the world for a purpose. Originally, when a hero dies, it is a power that should be scattered to pieces and returned to the world.

Just leaving it on this earth, even as a fragment, would have to cost the hero himself, so there is no way that an intentional transfer would be possible.

The warrior himself would know better. He probably had to suffer a great deal of pain due to his actions.

Nevertheless, upon seeing the hero lying limp after death after a meaningless struggle, the Demon King raised his gaze slightly and looked at the man holding his body.

He is directly involved in an absurd attempt that violated the will of the world. There's no way he would be fine either.

Sure enough,

"Cough."

With a resolute expression that did not show any weakness, he coughed blood.

Even though more blood is flowing out of the mouth than expected, the expression on the face remains the same. Joy flashed through the Demon King's eyes at that strange sense of discomfort.

The Demon King, suppressing his excitement, said with a kind smile.

"What's your name?"

"...Deon Hart."

Deon Hardt. I rolled that name over and over again in my mouth.

In fact, there was no need to think about it. The devil already knew him.

Looking at the external situation, he stopped the hero from self-destructing and suffered hemoptysis in return.

Even other demons would recognize this much.

Even the situation is on his side, so there is no reason to hesitate any longer. The Demon King revealed his desires without hesitation.

“Are you planning on becoming the Demon King’s army?”

It doesn’t matter whether the other person is human or not.

The Demon King liked this smart and loyal being, and more than anything, the human in front of him drew interest from himself, who was mired in boredom.

There was enough reason to bring him into the Demon King’s Castle.

***

“Hey, get out of the way. “You can’t see it!”

“So is that person an enemy or friend?”

“You stopped the hero from self-destructing! At least it’s not an enemy.”

“But you killed the 7th Corps commander?”

“Huh? “The Demon King is asking for your name!”

“Noisy! “I can’t hear anything!!”

“You are louder!”

“So what’s your name?”

Because the street was so noisy and the human’s voice was low, the demon soldier narrowed his eyes and focused on the shape of his mouth instead of listening.

“Demon... a... root?”

“Demon Arut?”

“I think so?”

“Demon Arutra....”

It’s a name that sounds more like a demon than a demon.

In this way, Deon Hart’s name was transformed into the name Demon Arut and spread throughout the demon military camp.

***

The human achievement of stopping the hero from self-destructing and preventing great damage is such a great merit that even other corps commanders acknowledge it.

Even after the battle with the hero, at the victory banquet for the new talent, ‘Demon Arut’ drank a lot and turned the Demon King’s castle upside down. After that, there was no backstory about his skills. This was even more so because the victim of that incident was another corps commander.

Therefore, all the demons in the Demon Castle rarely said a bad word about the human who suddenly came in and took over the position of commander of the 0th Corps.

Of course, this is only 'to a large extent'.

"You're late."

Belitan, commander of the 6th Corps, tapped the conference room table and muttered. His eyebrows were narrowed as if he was feeling uncomfortable.

I know very well how great the merits he achieved at that time were. I also acknowledge his strong inaction. But even so, isn't this true?

0 Corps Commander Daemon Arut.

He was late every time he had a meeting.

It still is. Everyone is gathered in the conference room except for the corps commanders who are out for work, but he is the only one who is absent.

In the end, Belitan couldn't stand the wait and slammed the table.

"Isn't this something we really need to say?!"

"noisy."

"Jaykar! How long are you going to tolerate that arrogant behavior? He..."

"Belitan."

Jaykar, who was leaning on a chair with his eyes closed, slowly opens his eyes and looks at Belitan.

When he flinched and stopped talking at the cold gaze staring directly at me, Idelia, the commander of the 4th Corps, suddenly intervened, as if she had been waiting.

"I think you are the one who is arrogant, Belitan. "Do you know who you are making such rude remarks about?"

"...what?"

"It was a really boring joke to be arrogant towards someone who speaks highly of even mere servants."

"Just because you use polite language doesn't mean you're arrogant! "Then how do you intend to explain being late for the meeting?"

"There must be something going on."

It was a statement without any hesitation.

Even Ashild, who is not on good terms with her, nods his head, so it's a momentary thought, 'Is that really true?' It was to the point where I wanted to.

Belitan, who quickly shook his head to come to his senses, opened his mouth in bewilderment.

"How can you guarantee that?"

Just as Idelia was about to respond, there was a bang from one side of the table! And a crash sound was heard.

At the unusual sound, all the corps commanders' heads turned to one place.

Some of them sighed and shook their heads as if they had no idea who they were talking about, while others shook their heads as if they knew they would do that. Some even had embarrassed looks on their faces.

Belitan belonged to the third category.

Seat at the end of the table. There, a small girl stood up with both hands on the table.

“Enough of the blasphemy, Belitan! “It’s blasphemous!”

“...Lirinel?”

“It’s blasphemous!”

“Lee...”

“Breathless!”

11th Corps Commander Ririnel.

Normally calm and gentle, she goes crazy when she gets involved in just one thing, but unfortunately for Belitan, it was about Demon Arut.

Yes, she is a huge fan of Daemon Arut.

It was a fact that most people staying in the Demon King’s Castle knew, but there was no way that Belitan, who was often absent from the Demon King’s Castle due to hunting monsters, would know that fact.

That’s why he stared blankly at the kid who was pointing at him.

“Apologize! You’re ugly!”

“omg.”

“Li Lirinel...?”

He looks frail and cute, but even though he looks like this, he is a corps commander.

Belitan is a typical warrior who wields a large axe, and Ririnel is an excellent witch who is a demon with the highest amount of magic power among the corps commanders.

It is obvious that the day the two of them fight, this conference hall will be blown up.

Even if not, the Demon King or the Commander of the 0th Corps will come in soon and blow up the conference hall?

On that day, the devil’s castle will be overturned.

Perhaps there will be a large-scale replacement of corps commanders.

Therefore, while the other corps commanders were watching and fidgeting, a servant outside the door of the conference hall announced the appearance of the Demon King.

“The Demon King and Commander 0 Corps eat it.”

...with news from the corps commander.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 12

12. Heroes, meetings, and...(3)

The confusion was short-lived. The corps commanders quickly consoled themselves and stood up all at once.

Soon the door opened and the Demon King and the 0 Corps Commander Demon entered.

Idelia took a quick look at Belitan's expression.

As expected, the expression is rotten. I honestly complained. So who dared to mess with the demon? He is the most respected person in the Demon Castle, next to the Demon King.

The Demon King, sitting leisurely in the luxurious chair at the head of the table with his legs crossed, lightly waved his hand.

"Everyone sit down."

Once again, random movements occurred.

The Demon King looked around at all those seated, then looked at Deon, who was sitting closest, and raised the corners of his mouth faintly.

“As you may know, there was an intruder. “The Commander of Corps 0 here did a great job catching it.”

Everyone’s eyes turned to Deon.

It was understandable that the gaze of everyone here was burdensome, but he just kept his eyes down and played with the cube.

...Cube?

Eyes began to exchange busily between the corps commanders.

‘Hey, that...’

‘Yes, it looks like he’s very interested in this matter.’

‘Instead, the results will be more certain...’

‘It can be dangerous, so it’s better to be careful.’

When there were meetings during the war, he always turned the cube around and listened to the opinions of everyone involved.

If they liked the idea, the cube would turn smoothly to fit, but if they didn’t like it, it would turn so roughly that a clicking sound would fill the barracks.

Whether it was running rough or smooth, the best conclusion always came with the completion of the cube. The problem is that if something goes wrong, it always explodes.

The Demon King continued speaking while a subtle tension hovered in the air.

“The investigation revealed that it was not a simple intruder. Of course, it can’t be simple since the Demon King Castle has even entered my resistance, but this case is particularly special.”

Eyes filled with slight hostility scan the people sitting in their seats.

Even though his eyes were looking at the corps commanders, he was not looking at them. The Demon King spoke with a faint hint of life as if he was looking at someone beyond them.

“Because it was the dregs of a hero.”

“...Are you saying you’re a hero?”

“Yeah, it wasn’t that many. The Empire turned on the lights and sent one of the people it was collecting here as a sacrifice.”

thud!

A heavy sound was heard. The corps commanders did not bother to look up to find the cause of the noise.

Because it was obvious who did it without even looking.

The Demon King leans forward, placing his clenched fist on the handle.

A heavy pressure poured down on the entire conference room.

“What is the purpose?”

“....”

“The empire’s movements are unusual. We even lost contact with the commander of the 9th Corps, who was recently on the front line. “There must be some problem.”

The devil is strong.

Because he was strong enough to not need to use his brain, his choices were always simple and weighty.

It was like that this time too.

“Commander of the 1st Corps.”

“yes.”

“You go.”

He was thinking of starting an all-out war.

Jaykar is the devil’s agent. There was no idiot present here who would not know what it meant for him to step forward in person.

After pausing for a moment, Jaykar lowers his head and looks at the Demon King with his eyes slightly raised.

For a moment, he calmly answered, lowering his gaze again without any question.

“yes.”

A slight war cloud began to hover throughout the conference room.

Although war was not about to break out right away, the tension seemed as if it would break out at any moment, and the Demon King clapped his hands as if to change the mood.

The silence was broken and a lighter voice followed.

“Okay, I think this is roughly the end of the story, and there’s something I need to address before discussing the next issue.”

“...?”

“What kind of reward should we give to the commander of Corps 0, who single-handedly took down the dregs of the warrior?”

The hand that was constantly turning the cube stopped.

The red eyes that had not been on the desk for even a single moment during the entire meeting slowly rose to face him.

The Demon King smiled while looking at me with his red eyes.

“It wouldn’t be a bad idea for the parties involved to decide.”

***

I hate corps commander meetings. I hate it so much. Needless to say the reason.

Because I’m scared!

The corps commander-only cafeteria is tolerable as there are some people who do not eat, but the conference hall is a place where most people can participate. So how scary can it be?

‘I don’t want to go...’

Every time I'm late for a meeting, I keep saying I don't want to go and end up being late. If it weren't for the demon king who came to pick me up, I would have been late again this time.

Oh, is it already too late?

I was about to rub my sweaty hands on the hem of my clothes, but stopped. What's this?

'Cube?'

Cube. Of course, I carry the Cube with me when I have meetings, but only when the meeting is centered around me.

Anyway, the meeting is going well even if I leave it out. If I make eye contact and someone asks for my opinion, it's embarrassing, so I avoid eye contact and play with cubes to kill time... This means that the meeting I'm going to attend right now is a meeting centered around the devil

!

Why didn't the devil point this out?

I want to go back now and put it back where it belongs, but it's too late for that.

"The Demon King and Commander 0 Corps eat it."

The door to the conference room opened with a rather loud and solemn voice.

I hesitantly entered the conference hall, feeling like a cow being dragged to the slaughterhouse.

And soon after the meeting started, my thoughts on Cube changed 180 degrees.

‘I’m glad I brought it.’

It would have been embarrassing if I hadn’t brought it.

The atmosphere is scary and no one is looking at me, so it’s the perfect environment for spinning the cube.

As I was repeating the process of mixing new cubes, half-matching them, and shuffling them again, the Demon King suddenly made an unexpected noise.

“Okay, I think this is roughly the end of the story, and there’s something I need to address before discussing the next issue.”

Until then, I thought it had nothing to do with me.

“What kind of reward should we give to the commander of Corps 0, who single-handedly took down the dregs of the warrior?”

I raised my head in surprise.

The Demon King’s gaze was too obviously directed in this direction to be dismissed as a mishearing.

He even added as if nailing it.

“It wouldn’t be a bad idea for the parties involved to decide.”

A silence with a different meaning than before fell.

As I did not open my mouth easily, the corps commanders who kept their mouths shut came out and watched the devil. The Demon King looked at me with his chin up as if telling me to speak quickly.

In silence, I rolled my eyes back and forth.

‘So... tell me what you want, right?’

If it’s what you want, it’s not much. Even from the Demon King’s point of view, there are only things that can be easily accepted....

“Resignation...”

“No.”

“Then alcohol...”

“Are you serious?”

“....”

“....”

...I thought there wasn’t one.

As he cuts off things resolutely, his facial expression remains the same.

Still with a gentle smile on his face, the Demon King waits for his next words.

I felt burdened by the eyes that followed me without leaving for a moment, so I tried to quickly say something and get it over with... but other than that, I don’t really want anything...?

“...I don't have it right now, so can we postpone it until later?”

“What are you asking? “Is it scary already?”

He laughed, removed the hand that was resting on his chin, and straightened his upper body.

After scanning the corps commanders, the eyes quickly roll to capture Belitan.

The corps commanders, who instinctively sensed that he was going to move on to the next item, stiffened their bodies, and as the air became taut again, I could not bring myself to look up or lower my gaze, so I just turned the cube under the desk, relying on my senses.

Whatever the agenda is, it has nothing to do with me.

“I heard you had something to say about the 6th Corps Commander's monster?”

“Yes I would like to request assistance.”

“Hmm...”

The Demon King looked through the report and took out a document. The expression on his face, which was calm at first, becomes more and more distorted as he reads the document.

Finally, after reading the last line, he let out a soft groan.

“The matter is definitely serious. “Are you and the commander of the 12th Corps not enough?”

“The 12th Legion currently does not have the strength to go hunting for monsters.”

For a moment, the Demon King's actions stopped. The eyes that were looking at the documents rose vertically and looked at Belitan.

I nodded my head inwardly as I looked at the station, which was motionless, or, better, frozen.

You must have been surprised. It's natural to be surprised. Because I was surprised too.

What does that word mean? Doesn't this mean that the army has suffered so much damage that it can no longer hunt monsters? The cause is definitely a monster.

"Then the position of commander of the 12th Corps is vacant..."

"I heard he is recuperating due to an injury."

"Just like monsters?"

"Be careful what you say. "If even small things come together, they can become a threatening enemy."

Small voices are being exchanged among the corps commanders.

There is nothing that cannot be understood. The 12th Legion suffered only from monsters and such.

It is 'at best' a monster. In the Empire, they are so-called 'monsters', which are failures.

The power of the Demon King gives birth to numerous demons even without the Demon King's intention. This is why the Demon King is a threat, and it is the decisive reason why the Empire—and by extension, all humans—are working hard to get rid of him.

However, creating life is not that easy.

Among the demons born, only 40% were truly rational beings who could be called 'demons'. The remaining 60% are small creatures that are only faithful to their own desires and it is shameful to even call them demons.

Since it was a complete failure that tried to eat the demons rather than control them, the demon king called them 'monsters' and cleaned them regularly for the safety of the demons.

'It just comes to mind. 'Have I stayed here too long?'

How long has it been since I haven't seen sunlight?

Feeling a surge of sadness, I glared at the desk.

In the meantime, the Demon King's voice, which had paused for a moment, continued again. I thought he would be a little agitated, but perhaps because he was the devil, his voice was calmer and calmer than usual.

"Documents have limitations. "Explain it yourself."

"At some point, the number of monsters increased significantly. "By the time I realized it too late and tried to deal with it, half of the small villages had already been trampled."

"'Half'... Then what about the remaining half?"

"We evacuated to a large city with walls."

I thought Belitan was ignorant, but he has surprisingly good judgment...?

I'm sorry. I guess I ignored you too much. I silently listened to his explanation, apologizing in my mind that would never reach me.

"The problem is that there are so many monsters that they even try to climb over the walls. "Every day feels like a war."

"...From now on, we will have to place corps commanders in large cities as well."

"Why have the numbers suddenly increased so much?..."

The Demon King's words following his self-talk were closer to lamentation.

The Demon King clasped his hands together, placed his chin on top of them, and spoke indifferently.

"It's because the hero died. "Because the balance is broken."

While saying that, the Demon King looked at me once.

No, why are you looking at me? It's not my fault? You were the one who drove the hero to death in the first place, right?

Nevertheless, I was not confident to look directly into his eyes, so I secretly avoided my gaze, and the devil said as if he was shuffling through an unknown document when I looked away.

"There are four big cities... Moreover, if the 12th Legion is incapable of combat, it will definitely be difficult to defend."

“Yes, I am requesting assistance.”

“where... “The remaining manpower...”

An ominous feeling runs down my spine. I quickly lowered my gaze to hide my trembling pupils.

I realized it too late, but the cube was spinning like crazy under the desk.

It was my first time knowing that my hands could move so magically.

Click, click, click.

Why are you so anxious? Isn't that natural?

When you think of surplus manpower, who comes to mind? It's me. A surplus of surplus that doesn't even do the paperwork that all corps commanders are responsible for! All they do is burn down the garden and knock over the food trays...

“Damon, you'd better go.”

...snap.

My hand stopped. My breathing also stopped.

‘No way! ‘You need to take a break!’

At first glance, I thought I saw someone beckoning from across the river.

As I hurriedly supplied oxygen to my lungs, my head began to spin again. And this time, I became resentful of my racing head.

Before I knew it, I was holding the completed cube tightly with both hands and screaming inwardly.

I knew it would be like this!

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 13

13. The subordinates are so talented that it's driving me crazy (1)

The cube has been completed.

That means it's the best conclusion.

However...

everyone in the conference room, including the Demon King, held their breath.

'It took a rough turn.'

It means that you feel uncomfortable.

The Demon King carefully examined Deon's expression.

Expressionless as usual. That's why I'm more concerned. I don't know what you're thinking.

However, he seemed to know for sure that he was not in a good mood, so he opened his mouth as if being chased.

"Of course, I know very well what type of combat you specialize in."

"...."

“But monsters also have emotions. Rather, they are more faithful to their emotions than those with intellect. So I’m sure your fighting style will work well.”

“....”

Still no answer.

The Demon King, who became anxious at this, looked at Deon’s eyes and added slowly.

“Besides, you’ve been looking for alcohol before, right?”

I flinch.

The fingertips holding the cube moved slightly.

At the same time, Deon’s expression cracked slightly. And what was revealed was an expression that seemed to indicate slight embarrassment and denial.

In contrast, the Demon King’s face became brighter after checking that expression, confident that he had guessed correctly.

“Doesn’t that mean a lot has accumulated? Wouldn’t it be better to use this opportunity to let it go?”

“....”

Was it too explicit?

The cool silence stands as close as a knife, aiming in all directions.

The source is, of course, Deon.

Judging by the mood, I feel like I should say something more, but I've already said everything I want to say.

In a tense atmosphere, the Demon King quietly waited for his answer.

How much time passed? Deon's head, which seemed to never move for the rest of his life, slowly shook up and down.

***

I calmly and slowly rolled my head. It was intended to interpret the words of the devil, who only said things that were incomprehensible, but even though it was interpreted from multiple angles, the conclusion was narrowed down to one.

'So you're saying it's because I'm looking for alcohol?'

I barely stopped my hand from touching my forehead.

One excuse is flimsy. Are you telling me to be deceived or not?

The Demon King is not foolish enough to criticize something like this, so he probably made a flimsy excuse on purpose.

So, this must be an expression of my will to send it unconditionally at any cost, even if I refuse.

'Ha... really.'

There is no choice. I forced my head to nod and felt remorse, but that didn't last long.

As soon as I could express my affirmation, someone stood up from one corner of the table and raised their hand.

“Then I’ll apply too!”

“...Lirinel?”

I was a little surprised when a hand suddenly rose from a place I thought wasn’t there, but I relaxed a little when I saw the familiar appearance that was revealed next.

11th Corps Commander Ririnel. He had the most reassuring appearance, so every time I met him, I would give him various things out of joy.

Of course, I know that that guy has the second highest magical power after the Demon King. I also know very well that they are called little devils on the battlefield.

However, humans are always caught in a narrow-minded way of thinking. Unfortunately, I was also one of those people.

What’s so dangerous about such a small kid? Well, I treated him comfortably with that kind of mentality... but he said he was applying? That kid?

“There are four big cities. “I heard that the number of monsters surging in is increasing by the day.”

Belitan nodded quietly.

Lirinel seemed to have gained strength from the silent affirmation and said, clenching her small hands.

“So what we need is a corps commander who can most efficiently protect the four cities that are separated from each other.”

“Do you want to say that’s you?”

“yes! Belitan is your typical ignorant martial artist who wields an axe. “Daemon uses a dagger.”

I just said I was ignorant...

I’m not the only one who heard this, right?

I glance at Belitan’s face and see that he too must have heard me, unable to say anything in bewilderment, just opening his mouth.

Was there something between the two? For some reason, it seems like Lirinel is setting an edge against Belitan...

“No matter how good your fighting style is with a weapon, all you have to do is protect the castle you are staying in.”

“So, you, who use magic, are going to step forward?”

“yes!”

“Are you selfless?”

“Of course there is!”

“....”

“....”

A groaning sound emerged from among the corps commanders. No, it wasn’t a ‘keuhum’, but I think it was closer to a ‘keuhum’.

Lirinel fidgeted, glanced at me, and spread her shoulders wide as if she had made up her mind.

“I’ll tell you again, there are four cities. So, if Belitan and Demon take charge of one piece each, and I take care of two, I will thank Demon for his hard work... no, not like this.”

“Lirinel.”

“yes?”

The Demon King changed his posture. He tilts his body, rests his chin, and gently folds the corners of his eyes towards Lirinel. It was a smile so bright that it would captivate anyone.

But I know. That’s a bad-tempered smile made to torture the other person with hope before rejecting them.

The moment when I often said words of comfort in advance to Lirinel, who was about to start crying.

The Demon King uttered one word while maintaining his bright smile. Words so short that you might not believe your ears.

“sun.”

“yes?”

“Do it. “I will allow it.”

***

The Demon King showed a benevolent expression towards Lirinel, who had a puzzled expression on her face.

Strangely enough, he volunteered to help, but how can I say something to his face?

Of course, I know that it wasn’t a pure intention. Because she likes Deon.

But that's just idol worship. He readily accepted because he knew that he had absolutely no feelings as a member of the opposite sex, and because he applied for his own rational reasons.

He didn't insist on protecting the same city, but simply offered to take charge of two cities by himself to save Deon the trouble, so why would he refuse?

If she had been overcome by emotion and made an irrational proposal to keep the same castle, she would never have allowed it.

Rather, he would have been angry.

"You want to save the devil some trouble, right? Do whatever you feel like."

In the first place, Deon was sent to relieve stress, but it would be difficult to worry about multiple cities at once and become stressed again.

There is nothing more dangerous than a stressed Deon, at least in this Demon Castle, so in that sense, Lirinel's positive attitude was indeed welcome.

Therefore, the Demon King willingly allowed the 11th Corps Commander, who was originally responsible for the Demon King's Castle's barrier, to go out.

You can deal with attacks from the outside with peace of mind, but there is nothing more difficult to deal with than an ally running rampant inside.

"Instead, before you leave, let's fix the Demon King's barrier."

“yes! “I will make sure it lasts for 100 years!”

...To stay there for 100 years?

The Demon King just laughed.

***

After the meeting, everything went smoothly.

What that means is....

“Daemon, everything is ready.”

“Are you sure you really prepared everything?”

“Yes, it’s perfect.”

“Still, just in case, think about it carefully. “Have you forgotten anything?”

“doesn’t exist.”

“Because that memory isn’t something you can trust...”

“Just in case, I asked people who have connections with Demon to tell me more about what he needs. Nothing was missing.”

Perfect. It’s so perfect I feel like crying.

In the end, a voice close to a moan came out of my mouth.

“Isn’t that too fast?...”

“That’s too much praise. “It’s been a while since Demon is going out, so shouldn’t we prepare as quickly as possible?”

it's not that. No.

Why is my lieutenant so capable...!

The 6th and 11th corps are still in full swing, but only our corps has already completed preparations and is waiting outside.

This brings the day of death closer.

As I was lying on the bed in frustration, Ed came from somewhere holding a black robe.

"We're going to the same demon world, so there's no need to wear bandages."

Well, I guess so. There is no harm, it is all the same.

When I go out to the human world, where the sun is, I wrap bandages all over my bare skin and put a robe on top of it.

There is no need to explain how meticulous they are, as they even wear bandages or masks to their faces and put on the hood of their robes.

'It's a little frustrating, but... I can't help it.'

What can I do with my weak body?

Even if your eyes or skin are exposed to sunlight for even a short period of time, problems can occur, so you have no choice but to cover up even if it is uncomfortable.

You might ask, isn't just wearing a robe enough?

However, because the robe could flutter around and expose bare skin such as the hands, arms, or face, it was safest to wrap a bandage in advance and then wear a robe over it.

‘Actually, there is no need for a robe in the demon world, but it is a symbol of sorts.’

It was like that because the ‘0 Corps Commander’ always wore black robes on the battlefield.

To put it mildly, he was even given the nickname ‘Reaper’.

Actually, there was a modifier called ‘crazy’ in front of it, but I will arbitrarily remove that. Other things are different, but especially since it must have originated from a solid misunderstanding.

“Daemon?”

“ah.”

I pressed my cheek to the bed sheet, blinked, and stretched out my hand to grab the robe. Then Rob takes a step away.

“...?”

Despite the annoyance, I raised my head with difficulty. Ed is still seen holding the robe.

He stretched out his arms again and showed his intention to open his palms, but all he got in return was silence. Even after waiting for a long time, the robe was not placed on my hand.

I was very annoyed, but I didn’t have the courage to get angry at Ed, who was a candidate for corps commander, so in the end, I suppressed my frustration and muttered.

“...Give it to me.”

“I’ll put it on for you.”

“Ed, I say this all the time, but it’s not necessary....”

“It’s because I want to do it.”

“....”

I feel burdened. Go away, okay?

Ed is the most capable lieutenant out of all the other lieutenants.

Since he was a candidate for corps commander in the first place, his value can be easily understood without having to elaborate.

How would I feel about having to hire such a talented person?

I like that he is competent and has a kind personality, but somehow I feel like my blood is drying up every day. Especially when ordering something.

It’s roughly like this.

‘What if they try to kill me for making me work too much?’

Or, in the distant future, when you find out that you are a useless person.

‘He might even try to kill me for pandering to such a bastard.’

So, as much as possible, I try not to make him work... but if this guy doesn’t work, I wonder if he has a disease that causes thorns to grow, and he just looks for work day after day.

From going to the human world just to buy a new puzzle or cube, to something as trivial as buying outerwear.

‘Please get some rest, you bastard!’

My conscience and survival instincts are ringing alarm bells like crazy, thinking that this talented person would only serve as a servant.

But Ed persuaded me faster than I could open my mouth to say no.

“If you look at the adjutants of other corps commanders, they are all half-corpse, walking around holding documents. Even while eating, I can’t let go of the documents. But I am watching all of this with a clean face without a single dark circle, holding a silverware with my hand that is not holding a single document. “How do you think I feel?”

“....”

Do you think you’ll be happy?

But this isn’t the answer he wants.

As I quietly close my mouth, Ed lets out a faint sigh. Then, he lightly lifted the robe he was holding to make it easier to wear and said.

“I’m asking this because I feel like if I don’t do this, I really will have no reason to exist. “Will you allow me to put it on you?”

“...as you please.”

The word is permission, but I have no choice.

Just as I was about to take a sigh and obediently receive Ed's attention, I heard a knock on the door.

Not missing the opportunity, I quickly pulled away and nodded toward the door as if I had been waiting.

"It looks like someone came."

"I will go."

Ed puts his robe down on the bed and heads towards the door.

Meanwhile, I quickly picked up my robe and put it on. It was a quick and perfect workmanship that made me proud.

But I guess that wasn't the case with Ed.

"Daemon, the commander of the 12th Corps visited... Did you put it on yourself?"

"yes."

"It's a mess, isn't it?"

Was I wearing this too hastily?

When I looked again, my robe was disheveled here and there. Still, I don't think it's to the point where I can't watch it completely... Sigh?! Was it enough to make you sigh?

Ed, sighing inaudibly, approaches me again and straightens up the crumpled and disheveled hem of his robe.

As he knotted the straps that held the loose robe in place to prevent it from falling off, he resumed what he had meant to say a moment ago.

“The commander of the 12th Corps has visited. Would you like to meet him?”

“12th Corps Commander...?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 14

14. The subordinates are so talented that it's driving me crazy (2)

Oh, I remembered.

A corps commander who was in charge of hunting monsters together with the 6th corps commander Belitan. His name was probably 'Myers'.

I heard you're recuperating from an injury... is it okay to move like this?

Why did I come here before that?

'Oh, no way...'

Are you trying to get angry at me for taking away your job?

It is not an unfounded thought.

Jobs like paperwork may be frowned upon, but jobs related to combat are quite popular among corps commanders.

So, the moment I decided that it was a very promising idea, I quickly responded.

"no."

“yes? Are you...rejecting it?”

“yes.”

Since ancient times, it has been said that safety comes first.

When I nodded with a stern expression, Ed looked at me quizzically for a moment and then walked toward the door as if to express his refusal.

Then he opened the door slightly and said,

“Sorry Myers, but...?”

Stop.

“Why are you here...”

“Daemon...”

“ ... ”

“ ... ”

What is it, who else is here?

The room is large, and out of consideration for me, he whispers softly so I can't hear him.

The good news is that the conversation ended sooner than expected.

“...I get it.”

With a short answer, Ed closes the door again to block sound and sight, and turns to look at me.

His face showed a hint of undesirable emotion that he seemed to be trying to hide, but could not.

“Daemon.”

“yes.”

“Gardener Hien came to visit....”

“The 12th Corps commander hasn’t gone yet, right?”

“yes? yes.”

“I will meet the commander of the 12th Corps.”

Ed, who had a puzzled expression on his face at the immediate answer, soon nodded with a smile on his face. For some reason, he had a cheerful expression on his face, but even so, I had such a complicated mind that I didn’t pay any attention to it.

What day is today? Why do you keep coming back?

‘...What day is it? The day I go to die.’

I don’t know why Hien came, but at least it won’t be a good thing. Because it’s always been like that.

It’s not that Ah Hien’s intentions are evil. He always treated me with pure intentions.

However... with that guy, even if he came back without any problems, it felt like his lifespan had been drastically shortened.

So wouldn’t the commander of the 12th Corps be much better than that crazy gardener?

Moreover, since he was injured, even if he tried to harm me, he would at least be able to avoid it.

I don't know anything else, but I'm confident in one thing: avoiding it.

While I was lost in thought, Myers entered the room and stood in front of me, bowing with a somewhat stiff look on his face.

"It's been a while, Demon."

It's a very stiff face. My face also hardened as it seemed like it was announcing the end.

'This... is dangerous, right?'

Myers, commander of the 12th Corps. The main weapon is a spear. His characteristic is that he is very quiet.

Of course, when he needs to, he says what he wants to say, but he usually keeps his mouth shut to the point where one wonders if he can't speak, so there are rumors going around among his attendants that he had his tongue cut out in some kind of incident in the past.

Of course, I have heard that precious voice a few times during meetings...

'Isn't now the time to speak up? 'Why don't you talk?'

I didn't come here just to say hello between us. After saying hello, let's get to the point.

The silence gets longer. I felt like I was suffocating in the suffocating atmosphere and tried to speak, but I ran into an unexpected difficulty.

‘What should I say?’

And what kind of expression should I make?

Smile? No, if you laugh, they might punch you and ask you if you want to get sick. Then expressionless? Even though I just said hello, people might ask what kind of expression I had on my face.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

As time passes, Myers’ expression becomes more determined.

Sensing that my life was in danger, I sent a look to the competent adjutant, pleading for help, but Ed took a step back, as if he was truly oblivious or just pretending not to notice.

He was a truly capable but useless lieutenant.

I’d rather bleed, but the blood that normally flows out like an open faucet seems to have become completely clogged at this time and doesn’t show any signs of coming out.

In the awkward atmosphere, I secretly regretted it.

‘If this is going to be the case, Hien might have been better...’ As

I looked back at myself, who seemed to have forgotten my past experiences, or rather, was glorifying even those past experiences, and was once again realizing how treacherous the human heart is, I heard a coughing sound.

“Ed?”

“Hmm, 12th Corps Commander. “If you come, I’ll tell you...”

Thank you for saying what I wanted to say, but what if this offends me even more?

I carefully raised my head and made eye contact with Myers. When our eyes meet, his pupils tremble slightly.

He clearly looks angry. Should he apologize...?

But I didn’t really do anything wrong? To be honest, this is the one I want to be angry about.

Now, because of who I am, I am entrusted with a dangerous mission.

Of course, I didn’t have the courage to say my thoughts out loud, so as I was trying to decide what to say, Myers bowed low. It was a disciplined and sharp action.

“I’m sorry for the inconvenience.”

“...yes?”

“I felt like I had to tell you this.”

I stared blankly at the top of his head.

Next is his shoulders, which are clearly visible through his clothes due to the angle. The white bandages that started from his shoulders and went down to his upper body clearly showed that he had suffered quite a few injuries.

Uh... then that posture wouldn’t be very good for the wound.

“Stretch your back.”

“yes!”

I was just worried about getting injured, so I told him to straighten his back, but he straightened his back as if he were flipping it like a rapier that had been forcibly bent.

I wonder if it was as if I heard an auditory hallucination of a ‘popping sound’.

For a moment, I was worried that if I did that, the wound would get wider, but Myers frowned slightly as if there was a problem with the wound.

I turned my head, trying hard to pretend not to see the pained eyebrows and the white bandages turning red again.

‘Anyway, you’re not angry, right?’

On the contrary, since he is apologizing to me, I don’t think he will get hit even if I don’t know what it is. That means there’s no need to be so nervous.

Now that you’ve put your mind to rest, it’s time to listen to the explanation.

I invited him to sit on the chair at the table in the middle of the room, and I sat across from him.

“What should I do if you apologize so quickly without any further explanation?”

“What should I do... uh... I think you should receive an apology.”

“...I wasn’t asking how to do it just now....”

“I’m sorry.”

“No... First, straighten your back...”

“Yes.”

Ttuduk.

I looked at him blankly, then quietly turned my gaze to Ed, who was standing to one side.

I can't handle him. How can you not do it for me?

‘...What if even you are shocked?’

A look of astonishment appeared on his clean-cut face. Probably me too. Who would have thought that the famously quiet commander of the 12th Corps would have this kind of personality?

‘I think it's a good thing you just kept your mouth shut.’

That concept is very good. Just push on like this.

If you open your mouth carelessly, you'll get in big trouble later.

I quickly adjusted my expression and remembered the purpose of the conversation before I got caught up in his words and actions.

“I asked why you apologized.”

“Ah...”

I laid the board down, so now all I have to do is explain it.

But why is this kid falling like this?

The table shakes violently due to the distance between the legs. If there had been a teacup on top of this, the tea wouldn't have overflowed and spilled and made a mess.

It was the moment I, who couldn't wait, wanted to say something. Before I could even open my mouth, the guy jumped up from his seat.

"Look at that deputy...!"

"...?"

Hwiik.

A strong wind blew.

When I came to, Myers was already gone.

As I looked around to see if I was hiding somewhere, Ed quietly approached me and said,

"I went out."

"...huh?!"

"I think I went to call my adjutant, but I don't know when he will return, so why don't you go down first?"

I nodded and headed for the door.

I'm curious as to why he apologized, but my life isn't at stake and I don't mind hearing an explanation.

And more than anything, I don't want to wait. It's uncomfortable to face it again.

Without thinking, I put my hand on the handle. Soon the door opened and

“....”

Boom.

closed.

“Demon! “I have a plant to give you before you leave...!”

“Demon?! “I came out to meet you, but aren’t you treating the devil too harshly?”

“I am the adjutant of the 12th Corps Commander Myers! Regarding Mr. Myers’ rudeness...”

The knocking sound doesn’t seem to stop.

Fortunately, it didn’t turn into a banging sound, but it was still so loud that I covered my ears.

Ah, another voice was added to the voice heard from outside.

“This is Myers...”

“Make it louder! Bigger! “Daemon, if you get angry, will I really quit being your lieutenant?”

“It’s Myers!”

This is a dream. It must be a dream.

The world was going crazy.

Eventually the door opened. In the first place, it was impossible to hold out forever when the devil was standing outside the door.

What does it mean that the door is open?

Yes. I am now surrounded by these terrible demons.

The first person to step forward was Myers' lieutenant.

He pushed aside the people who were fighting with each other and took Myers' hand. He politely politely opened his mouth with a voice that was as neat as his actions.

"Hello, Demon. I am Dahar, the adjutant of the 12th Corps Commander Myers. I'm sure you must have been quite uncomfortable with the sudden visit, but thank you very much for being so lenient. And I apologize for this rudeness. I'm really sorry."

Dahar bowed deeply and stabbed Myers' waist with his finger.

Then Myers, who was standing restlessly next to me, lowered his head.

"sorry."

"Oh yeah..."

What is this?

"Despite my rudeness, there is a reason why I came to visit so suddenly. It is none other than the injury of my boss Myers, and I heard that Mr. Demon has taken on that role."

"Well, that's right."

I was just about to leave.

I quietly glanced at those surrounding me.

Starting with Hien, who is holding a seed of an unknown plant, the demon king looks grumpy as if he is dissatisfied with the fact that the door was not opened for him. And even the 12th Corps commander Myers and his lieutenant Dahar are in front of us.

“You must have felt uncomfortable and bothered since you took on an unexpected task. To apologize for that, I kicked Myers out... No, Myers came to visit...”

Dahar glared at Myers.

“...You made a huge mistake...”

Oh, the words come out in a blur.

The low voice that sounds like gritted teeth is quite eerie. I remained silent, and Myers bowed his head in shock every time he stopped speaking.

Today, I seem to be seeing a lot of new aspects of the commander of the 12th Corps that I wasn't even curious about.

I made a subtle expression for a moment, but then I hurriedly shook my head because I felt like I was really going to see the 12th Corps commander getting ripped off by his adjutant in front of me.

It would be difficult and insignificant to make such a fuss in front of me... I think it would be better to protect the honor of the taciturn 12th Corps commander.

“If you'll excuse me... I think I'm referring to his outrageous remark, but it really wasn't a big deal...”

“Yes?!”

Oh, I guess I guessed wrong.

I felt a bit sorry and was looking at Myers's thoughts, but Dahar suddenly raised his head and said as if he was shocked.

"Oh my god, not only did you run away, but you also said something outrageous?! What on earth did you say?"

...also?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 15

15. The subordinates are so talented that it's driving me crazy (3) As expected, the 12th Corps commander tends to cause accidents whenever he opens his mouth.

Some people may think it is not a big deal, but it is a problem that can become serious depending on the situation.

For example, let's say you said something like this when you had an audience with the emperor of the empire.

'...It's scary to even imagine.'

Especially since this emperor is a tyrant, I guarantee that if Myers had been there, he would have been beheaded before he could last even a week.

And, absurdly, the demons of this demon kingdom see me as a person with similar tendencies to that tyrant emperor.

How can you be so sure? Because the way they looked at me was very similar to the way the subjects looked at the emperor.

That's why the adjutant was so shocked.

“Um... that.”

I felt too sorry for Myers to say yes, so I postponed my answer. It already feels like I’m being tempted, so should I deny it now?...

Dahar’s eyes narrow as he hesitates, unable to confirm or deny.

He glared at Myers once and bowed politely to me again.

“I’m sorry, Demon. “Please excuse me for a moment, Mr. Myers.”

Dahar strides out the door.

Myers, who was confused, said, ‘Myers, you’re not going to come out?’ I ran after him as if I had been burned by an angry voice disguised as kindness.

And beyond the closed door, I began to hear Dahar’s nagging, starting with the lament, ‘I really can’t survive...’

“Didn’t I tell you to keep your mouth shut? Mr. Myers is the type of person who will get beaten up if he opens his mouth! Why did you open your mouth in front of Demon when you could have just apologized? Did you want to die like that? Wouldn’t you rather just ask the devil to kill you? “If it were the Demon King, he would send it to me more graciously than if it were Demon King.”

The reticent concept was decided by the adjutant. Honestly, I think it was a very good choice.

It seems that the adjutant there is just as capable as this one.

Still, if you compare it to Ed, I think Ed is much better. At least Ed doesn't use such painful verbal violence towards me.

'...huh? Now that I think about it, I see that this room is soundproofed? And that too with the devil's soundproofing magic that can never be broken through...'

Suspensions about the soundproofing problem did not last long. Because it was more fun to focus on the conversation coming from outside than to worry about that problem.

Before I knew it, the room was engulfed in silence, as if it wasn't just my thoughts.

Dahar didn't stop talking as if there was some kind of magic on his mouth, and Myers just listened in silence. Even though it was invisible, it was still sad.

Oh, sometimes Myers also protested, but...

"But Demon, you are asking a question..."

"At least before you answer, think about whether that is a normal answer... Ah, I see. I made a mistake. Because you can't distinguish between them, you end up having an accident like this. Just keep your mouth shut. Answer with gestures. "I didn't correct your behavior for no reason."

The more I hear about him, the more amazing he is.

That disciplined, sharp, and serious behavior was all corrected by him.

Myers' voice disappeared, as if he had shrunk again. Tsk tsk, poor bastard.

At that time, the Demon King, who was listening to the other side just like me, changed his posture and waved his hand in the air as if he had lost interest. Then the outside sounds were blocked.

“I forgot to leave it alone for a moment.”

“...?”

“Because you didn’t open the door, I temporarily canceled the soundproofing spell.”

“yes...?”

Originally, soundproofing magic was applied to many important places, including the Demon King’s room and the corps commander’s room.

The only sound that gets through is the knocking sound and the few seconds that follow – that is, just enough time to exchange business and permission.

“If you arbitrarily remove it....”

“Huh?”

“no.”

But the opponent is the devil. There’s nothing I can say.

I turned my head shakily and looked at the Demon King. Next to me, Hien was giving me a sad look, but the seed of an unknown plant in my hand looked so ominous that I looked away.

“What brings you here?”

“What’s going on? “It’s been a long time since you went out, so shouldn’t I at least see you off?”

“Ah... there’s no need for that...”

“That’s right. There was no need for that. “I never thought I would be shut out at the door.”

Was the Demon King really this mean?

Even if I answered something, it would be like digging my own grave, so I couldn’t answer and just rolled my eyes with a clumsy expression.

Is there any way to get out of this situation?

...does not exist.

At best, all we can do is leave it to luck.

I became desperate for blood once again. I’m sure they wouldn’t show their backs towards a sick person.

How did I get the blood to come out? I think it came out even if my blood pressure went up just a little bit. So, with this boiling feeling inside....

“Daemon...”

“Hmm?”

Oh no. I was so distracted that I answered without thinking.

Needless to say, my face turned pale as I belatedly recognized the owner of the voice.

I froze for a moment because I thought I was screwed, then slowly rolled my eyes and checked where the voice came from.

As expected, Hien was there with a bright smile on his face, as if he was happy that his voice had finally reached him.

With a smile on his face, he held out 'something that didn't look pleasant at all' in his hand.

"Demon said he was going out, so I brought seeds of plants that can be used for self-defense."

"...is this a man-eating plant?"

"Yes, not only that, but it is also very powerful and can eat demons..."

Oh, it rises. My blood pressure is rising.

I can feel a fishy scent from deep inside my body. I knew from past experience that this was a symptom before vomiting blood. I quietly covered my mouth.

Sure enough, something hot rises up my throat. The moment my lips parted and I was about to spit it out.

"Woo...."

Quang!

"Daemon!"

"...Yuck?!"

Ben appeared carrying a visiting bag.

What's happening so fast?!

Oh right. My doctor said he had some kind of magical device. Was it a magic stone?

How can he be so capable?

‘What if he comes before I can get out of this situation?...’

He was so capable that I almost wanted to cry.

***

Thanks to the competent doctor, the situation was brought under control before it even broke out.

Still, I don’t think it was a real loss since they were able to use the excuse of not being well to drive Hien away and send back the 12th Corps Commander Myers and his adjutant who were having a fight outside the door.

However, if there is one thing I regret, I tried to use this as an excuse to cancel this mission...

“This mission...”

“Huh? Ah... Even at this point, I’m obsessed with my mission...”

What kind of bullshit are you talking about obsession...

I frowned without realizing it.

It was an expression that clearly revealed ‘What kind of nonsense is that?’, but the Demon King sighed and shook his head as if he couldn’t stop it, as he didn’t know how to accept it.

“don’t worry. Because there will be no cancellation of the mission. Instead, make sure you carry your van with you wherever you go.”

“....”

“I know there’s no way you could die from something like that. But you still don’t know, right? “I’m weakened from the aftereffects, and it might be a little dangerous if someone attacks me while I’m off guard.”

Even if you’re not careful, it’s dangerous if someone attacks you. Even the strong demons wouldn’t know that I’m dangerous.

Ah, it’s a pain in the ass.

“Huh?! Demon! “What is your blood pressure status?”

“...It’s no big deal. “Let’s go.”

Ignoring Ben’s worried look, I took a deep breath and headed for the door.

Actually, this wasn’t my move. My capable and loyal lieutenant was standing firmly in one place, waiting for me to come out, and his eyes were so stinging.

“This way.”

Edgar opened the door as if he had been waiting and led the way to the place where the corps members would be waiting.

It seems like there has been a long delay due to unexpected events, but I’m sure they won’t cause me any harm by making me wait that long...?

Ah, I just thought about it. You don’t want to go anymore.

I tried to move at least slowly, but as I chased after Ed, who was moving forward with great strides, I soon arrived in front of the first floor entrance.

There are corps members waiting behind that door. You must be angry because it's late. They are vicious even when they are still, so how cruel can their angry eyes be?

I felt like I would die of a heart attack if I opened the door unprepared, so I hurriedly called Ed who was trying to open the door.

"for a moment."

"yes?"

"...I will open it."

Ed tilted his head and then retreated without saying anything.

I walked slowly, stood in front of the door, and took a slow, deep breath.

"Daemon, your heart is beating strangely fast. Are you okay?"

"...Is something like that even measurable?"

"yes. "Isn't it natural that Demon's health depends on it?"

"...."

I glared at the strange jewel hanging around Ben's neck.

I want to take that thing away and destroy it right away, but I don't know why I can't.

But what can you do since you don't have the strength to do so and you also don't have enough strength to break the jewel in the first place? I was helpless, as usual, and resigned myself to putting my hand on the door.

"Are you sure you're okay? The speed at which your heart beats...."

"...."

"Aren't you looking at Ben Demon too weakly? "There's no way Demon could have suffered a blow like that."

Yes, that's exactly what I want to say. No matter how weak I am, there's no way I could be that dangerous.

Also Ed. How can you know exactly how I feel and represent me like this?

I was cheering hard on the inside, but Ben, who I thought would calm down by this point, instead started going wild, saying, 'How can a guy called my lieutenant be so indifferent?'

It was truly a terrifying force.

"That's ridiculous! If you're not careful, it could be really dangerous! Do you know what Demon's current physical condition is?"

"How is it?"

I was pushed by the momentum!

"It's like a cracked glass that might break at any moment! In fact, the aftereffects are so bad that it can be seen that they are eating away at Demon's body!"

“That can’t be possible!”

Umm... was my physical condition that bad...?

Once again, I felt fortunate that I had a great excuse for the aftereffects.

Once again, I want to make it clear that I have no aftereffects. In other words, my current physical condition is something I was born with...

I should not let this fact be discovered even if I die. It’s dangerous, but it’s also too embarrassing.

While I was making a promise to myself, Ed came towards me with a white face and started examining my complexion.

“Are you sure you’re okay? “Your face looks pale.”

“It was originally like this...”

“Your lips seem to be redder than usual too... I wonder if you were biting your lips to endure the pain.”

“It was like this originally.”

I feel embarrassed. stop.

I turned my back to him, telling him not to say any more. And without giving the two of them a chance to say anything more, they opened the door.

Cold air passes by my cheek, and the three half-overlapping moons shine brightly on the ground as if telling me to come out.

And there.

The corps members lined up motionless—

‘...the minister.’

If only their eyes weren’t on me.

When the door opened, he didn’t make any movement and just rolled his eyes and looked at me. It was a sight that would have been enough to scare an ordinary person like me.

I stopped in place to hide my shaking legs.

Ben said from behind, ‘Oh, another heartbeat!’ I heard a low muttering, but did I hear it? Ah, I don’t know. I feel like my mind is going blank.

“....”

“....”

Cold sweat was running down my spine. Sweat was also running down their foreheads.

Perhaps the sweat on their foreheads means something different from my sweat.

Yes, if you stayed in that position until I came out, I can completely understand why you were sweating.

However, there is a possibility that it was sweat coming out of anger...

Thinking that if I was not careful, I could be killed as soon as I left the castle, I began to desperately think about what I should say to survive.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 16

16. The subordinates are so talented that it's driving me crazy (4)

This is the first demon I've seen since the '0 Corps training ground intrusion incident'.

The corps members were as nervous as ever in their lives as they waited for Demon to come out.

After 'that day', Demon did not visit the training ground again.

Of course, he was a person who visited extremely infrequently, but since there was a not-so-small incident, I thought he might visit at least once more. However, as if to ridicule the thoughts of such corps members, he did not visit corps 0 until today.

Naturally, the corps members could not help but be overcome with anxiety.

"Are you still angry?"

"But you certainly seemed fine at the time."

"You idiot, do you believe what you see?"

“You must be tired of our inability to notice even that intruder...” “

....”

A silence fell that was closer to gloom rather than coldness.

I want to deny it, but I can't. Because he is someone who can have a greater impact on the battlefield when he directly jumps into battle and swings a dagger than when he commands an army.

It was obvious that for such a person, even if he had a corps member, he would be just fine without it.

So I trained harder. Even though I couldn't help, I tried and tried not to be a hindrance.

In the end, it spun around and was back in place.

Our corps commander's skills were beyond our imagination, and they still couldn't even keep up with his toes.

I was proud that I had improved my skills on that topic...

On that day when things were a little relaxed, Demon came to visit and caught an intruder who had sneaked into the training center without anyone noticing. It was also proof that our skills, which we believed had grown, were completely useless.

So it's natural for you to get tired of it.

Because I'm incompetent. Because it would be more comfortable and advantageous to be alone.

“...Let's do some training.”

“Okay, I’m leaving in a few days, so I need to improve my skills a little more so I don’t get in trouble.”

“Because there’s nothing we can do anyway.”

You have to see Demon’s face to know anything, but all the corps members could do because they couldn’t see him face to face was to wait for the day to go out and make all kinds of guesses.

And today.

Now that everything is ready and waiting.

‘...Why aren’t you coming out?’

Even though a considerable amount of time has passed, Daemon does not appear. How long has it been since your adjutant, Ed, went to pick you up?

Anxiety began to spread throughout the corps through the cold dawn wind.

I couldn’t move because I didn’t know when Demon would come out, so I just rolled my eyes here and there, and finally the door that had been firmly closed burst open.

Demon, who had a more stern expression than usual, seemed to be calmly walking out, but when he saw us, he stopped in place.

And as they looked at his face becoming increasingly colder, the corps members were convinced.

‘It looks like he still doesn’t want to see us.’

There is silence.

The early morning breeze was cold, but sweat was dripping from my forehead like rain.

My mouth feels dry. I guess it was the same for everyone, but I heard the sound of someone wiping dry needles.

‘We won’t be abandoned as soon as we go outside.’

The corps members were desperately exchanging glances with each other as they tried to quickly think of a way to relieve Demon’s anger.

***

I am a quiet person. Is it surprising that someone who was born with a different appearance than others and has lived a life of discrimination would be good at talking to others?

Giving an appropriate answer to someone else’s words itself consumes a lot of my heart and brain, and it is that tiring.

To twist this a bit, it’s hard to give an appropriate answer, but you can never speak up first when there’s such awkward silence.

So now I am.

‘...’

I was waiting for someone among them to open their mouth first.

Fortunately, the silence wasn’t that long compared to what I had experienced so far.

“What are you all doing? “Daemon, you’re angry!”

“?!”

The intervention of someone completely different, not a corps member, nor Ben or Ed.

That alone was surprising, but the content contained in the voice was enough to make me cringe.

‘I’m not angry?’

It’s not my situation to be angry in the first place. This is obviously my fault for being late...

No, no, that’s not the important thing...

“Lirinel?”

why are you here

I slightly raised my head towards the place where the voice came from and saw a small figure floating in the sky.

The sight of her with her back to the moon is quite dreamy, but unfortunately her small and petite body does not capture anything more than cuteness.

I think he wanted to look cool... Maybe I should buy him some milk later. It’s too bad I can’t watch it.

“sorry!”

Oh please...!

While they were momentarily distracted from the sky, the corps members bowed as a group as if some wind had blown.

A loud voice dispersed like an echo in the sky.

‘What’s wrong with you too? Really... there’s nothing you need to apologize for... could it be because of Ririnel?’

The commander of the 11th Legion and the owner of a magical power second only to the Demon King.

I often forget about it because of its cute appearance, but that doesn’t mean its fame is going anywhere.

So, for mere corps members, it would be like heaven.

Such a heavenly being shouts out with the nuance that you should quickly apologize? Even if you didn’t do anything wrong, you have no choice but to apologize.

‘And I will take the blame...’

Lirinel, who had no way of knowing what was burning inside me, landed in my line of fire.

He pretends to be shy and polite and says, ‘I did a good job, right?’ He looks at me with that expression on his face... Damn, I can’t even be angry if he looks like that.

I feel like if I get angry, I will become an unscrupulous adult who gets angry at a child.

Of course, I don’t have the courage to do that.

First, we need to resolve this situation. What should I do first? Legion member? Lyrinel?

Okay, first of all, the corps members who are maintaining a posture that looks like their backs are hurting.

“First of all, everyone raise their heads...”

Persuasion was quite difficult.

The corps members were so persistent. It was only after saying it was okay several times that I was able to straighten my back and look at their faces.

I had to think seriously for a while about why I had to persuade them, but once I got over this uncomfortable atmosphere, if I was satisfied, it could be said to be a satisfactory result.

The reason for the apology was also quite absurd.

That incident when I was lucky enough to catch an intruder.

They say they bothered me because their skills aren't good enough or something like that.

When did that ever happen?

"...By the way, Lirinel?"

"Yes, Demon!"

"Why are you here...?"

"Ah, that's right! So... I want to give you this."

Lirinel, who was looking this way with a somewhat bewildered expression, hurriedly rummaged through her pockets.

What finally appeared was a necklace similar to the one hanging around Ben's neck.

For a moment, I had a terrible thought that I had stolen something from Ben, but then I remembered that the thing on the string was a magic stone and nodded.

Demons usually use magic stones by attaching them to necklaces.

But why do I do this to me?

“This will save you from instant death at least once.”

“thank you.”

Let's not ask why. They say they will give it to me, but I have to take it. How dare you ask why a gift is given? Rudely.

As soon as I put it on my neck, Lirinel smiles brightly.

It's cute too. What makes me think this is a corps commander? Just a kid.

I stroked my head without realizing it. Then, the muffler around Lirinel's neck moves energetically.

‘Ah... that was a tentacle.’

Two tentacles camouflaged around my neck like a muffler to reduce as much resistance as possible from me as a human.

I watched it writhing excitedly with an indescribable expression, and then slowly withdrew my hand.

I turned around as if nothing had happened as best as I could, but the sight I saw when I turned around made my efforts go to waste.

‘...What are you guys doing...?’

Before we knew it, the corps members were splitting on both sides and creating a road.

And at the end, there is a horse traipsing with black air flowing in the air, and Ed, a capable adjutant, waiting holding the reins.

I froze in place again at this shocking scene.

A curse lingers in my mouth as if it's about to burst out at any moment.

'That's right, there was that... damn it.'

That's one of the reasons why I don't want to go out of the Demon King's Castle.

A horse that looks cool, but has an appearance that you would never want to ride if you were asked to ride it.

The horses of the demon world are different from the horses of the human world, so they look scary from the start. It looks like someone would avoid it and look at it if they entered the war riding it.

His temper is even dirtier!

If I get on top of that, I will definitely die.

Fall to death, step on to death, or get bitten to death.

[illegible]

No matter what, that isn't right.

It's been about a year and a half since I survived all kinds of dangers in the Demon King's Castle.

The greatest challenge of all time was at hand.

***

“What is that?”

The Demon King, who was watching Deon through the window, frowned.

What a horse. These are not the words of the human world, but the words of the demon world. The guy who was coughing up blood just a moment ago is riding something like that?

“Demon King? Is there a problem?”

“Nothing.”

In response to Belitan’s puzzled question, I shook my head left and right and looked out the window again.

I would like to see him off from the beginning until he leaves the Demon King’s Castle, but the 0th Legion is not the only corps that is going on a campaign, and a man whose name is the Demon King cannot show his favoritism openly even in an official setting such as a campaign, so I am preparing for the campaign. I had no choice but to look for other legions as well.

But then you try to ride something so ignorant with a body that could break at any moment.

That’s what happens if you take your eyes off me even for a moment.

“Belitan.”

“yes.”

“Do you have a communication seat?”

“Yes that’s right.”

“Is Ed’s communication stone also engraved?”

“yes.”

“Okay, let’s borrow it for a while.”

I took Belitan’s communication seat and connected it to Ed’s communication seat.

I could have contacted Deon, but there was a reason why I didn’t.

Even if I contact them, they won’t answer.

It’s not like I’m ignoring it on purpose. If he carried the communication stone with him, it would be broken in no time, so he gave a direct order to keep it only in the room. So even if you contact them, they won’t answer.

There is no particular inconvenience.

He was usually confined to his room, and when he went out like now, his deputy, Ed, was always with him.

As a competent adjutant, Ed always carried a communication box with him.

It’s still like that now.

-Yes, I am Ed, the commander of the 0th Corps.

“It’s a caber.”

-Ah, yes, Demon King. What’s going on?

“Are you out of your mind?”

-...yes?

Perhaps taken aback by the sudden reprimand, the answer came back a beat slower.

However, the Demon King seemed to have no intention of stopping his reprimand and began to push forward without hesitation.

“You want to ride a human who doesn’t know when he might vomit blood? And the words of the demon world? “Isn’t it crazy to try to force a person in poor physical condition to travel such a long distance on horseback?”

-...sorry.

When it comes out like that, there is nothing more to say. The Demon King was silent for a moment, feeling completely chilled as if cold water had been poured on his head.

In fact, it would be unfair from Ed’s perspective.

Because Deon likes the words of the demon world. Perhaps because there were no horses like that in the human world, I would often stare at someone riding a horse.

So far, he hasn’t said anything about wanting to ride or see a horse, but if he was so indifferent to everything and stared at him, he must have liked horses quite a bit.

There’s no way Ed, his lieutenant, wouldn’t know that... He probably thought it would be difficult to break Deon’s stubbornness by making a guess, and immediately prepared to speak.

It's a long-awaited outing for a person who rarely goes out to the outside world and is confined to the inside. It would be natural to want to go riding a horse.

"...I understand."

-no. Didn't even try to convince me. sorry.

Convincing Deon couldn't be that easy.

The act of breaking stubbornness itself is not difficult. Even trying to persuade him was a difficult task that required great determination.

He is like a time bomb that does not know when it will explode.

As docile as it was normally, it was quite dangerous once it exploded, so I had no choice but to be careful.

Even because they are humans, the timing of their anger is different from that of demons, making it more difficult.

Of course, it would have been easier to prepare quietly than to persuade.

"Anyway, that doesn't work. Get the carriage ready right now."

-yes.

"I take care of persuasion."

-...yes.

It seemed like the answer was somewhat late, but the Demon King pretended not to notice and looked away.

In the end, he had no wish to incur Deon's anger or hatred.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 17

17. The subordinates are so talented that it drives me crazy
(5)

The problem of horses, which I thought was the crisis of a lifetime, was solved more easily than expected.

Ed made contact with someone, put away his horse, and prepared a carriage.

Then, he approached me and carefully asked for my understanding in an extremely polite manner... I honestly wondered why he was so reserved.

I like it though.

Anyway, after receiving Ed's repeated apologies, I got into the carriage and was now leaving the castle and heading towards the city.

Of course, because the road wasn't paved at all, my butt hurt every time the carriage ran... but what can I do? It's much better than riding that horse.

And even if you don't want to endure it, you have no choice but to endure it. There's Ed in front of me.

He sat across from me, saying he had something to explain, and was calmly flipping through documents and reading the fine print in this rough, shaking carriage.

It was truly an amazing ability.

“The reason why monsters are targeting the city is simple. Because there is plenty of food. Originally, they would have targeted small villages that could not offer any resistance, but now that all that is left is the city, it is natural for them to flock there.”

“If you think about it that way, the Demon King Castle is also the size of a small city...”

“Isn’t there a Demon King in the Demon King Castle? In addition, there are corps commanders.”

“ah.”

“On the other hand, the city has nothing but easy-going people. A city that seems like it can do anything if it pushes against the Demon King’s Castle, which is full of powerful people whose end is unknown. “If you had to choose between the two, you would definitely choose the city.”

Monsters have no reason. Just be faithful to your instincts.

There was no way these guys, who had developed instincts as much as they lacked reason, could not feel the energy emanating from the Demon King’s Castle. Even if you couldn’t feel it, you could have at least sensed the danger.

It’s just that there’s no reason, but that doesn’t mean there’s no emotion.

As long as the feeling of fear was not lost, it was natural to avoid the Demon King Castle.

“And the city is often visited by people from other regions for exchanges. So, just by guarding the road and attacking them, you could have had enough to eat.”

“It’s not there now, so they’re probably targeting the castle itself.”

“Yes, that’s right....”

Quang!

Wow!!

The carriage shook violently. My paper-like body also shook.

Ed, who naturally caught me when he was running at me with the intention of headbutting me, checked my body to see if there was anything wrong with it, and then sat me down and continued talking as if nothing had happened.

“...That’s right. So, in the castle we...”

-Kill!!

“Be on guard...”

-Don’t let them get near the carriage!

“...I plan to do it.”

-You damn monsters!! die! Die ooooo!!

...It’s truly amazing in many ways.

There were several attacks by monsters on the way here. How could I, who was so shocked at first, sit so calmly now?

But Ed’s calmness went beyond common sense.

Unable to bear it any longer, I slowly opened the window, looked outside, and made a vague comment.

It was chaos outside.

“Ed, aren’t you going to help me?”

“The corps members will take care of it. “Don’t worry, we’re not in the 0 Corps for nothing.”

“Uh... well....”

It sure looks like that. The corps members were steadily killing monsters.

There don’t seem to be any serious injuries, and no matter how bad they are, everyone can take care of at least one animal...

But... Why is Ben there?

“die! “Die!”

Sigh!

Blood splattered. I quickly leaned back and closed the window.

I thought it moved pretty quickly, but it seems it was already too late. There was warm liquid on my cheek.

Well, I know one thing for sure. Ben is out of his mind right now.

When I roughly stole it with the back of my hand, Ed, who was shocked for some reason, hurriedly took out a handkerchief and wiped it with a white face, and spoke in a stern voice.

“I think it would be best to open the window after the battle is over.”

“Uh, yes. All right. But Ben...”

I thought back to the image of Ben I saw a little while ago.

The sight of him swinging his visitation bag and smashing the monster’s head, letting out an even louder scream.

To the point where there was confusion about his occupation.

Wasn’t he his doctor? Where did the doctor go and what kind of berserker seems to have been there?

“Ah, Ben, once he feels the touch, he has a hard time controlling himself. “Even if they look like that, they are demons.”

That’s right, they’re demons. I forgot about it for a while.

He’s not only a doctor, but he’s also good at fighting. Isn’t this enough to take just one person with you?

However, they say he can’t control himself once he goes on a rampage, so I never want to be alone with him.

As I remembered the past times when we were alone together for purposes such as treatment, I slowly massaged my stomach in shock.

‘Oh, I feel sick.’

Somehow, it feels like the more capable people around me, the shorter my lifespan.

-Hahahaha! Die you bastards!!

“Haa...”

I leaned my head helplessly against the wall of the carriage, listening to Ben’s frantic voice coming from outside.

Ah, it’s a monster and I hope it ends quickly.

“short break!”

“rest!”

Ed’s loud voice came through the crack in the door and into the carriage. In addition, the voices of the corps members repeating the song.

I sat there for a while, stretching out my soggy body and thinking to myself.

‘Looking at him like that, it looks like he’s a lieutenant.’

As I tried to wait on him so much and did little errands, I got confused with the servant.

From the Empire’s point of view, that is what the vice-corps commander should do, but in the Demon King’s Castle, the corps commanders’ adjutants also serve as the vice-corps commander, so Ed is currently performing his role very well.

It was frustrating to stay in the carriage all day, so I got out of the carriage to rest my sore butt and get some air.

When I opened the door and got out, what looked scary was a group of black horses with a black air. They showed off their overwhelming majesty just by themselves, and were gathered in one place, tearing at something.

I was momentarily startled by the seemingly peaceful atmosphere, but was able to relax, albeit slightly.

‘Still, it seems like words are words. I saw that they were grazing in a way that did not match their appearance... Hmm?’

...Something is a little strange.

Isn't that... a monster corpse?

right. It really is a monster corpse. So, right now, those guys are peacefully huddled together and eating monster corpses...

As soon as I realized the fact, I reflexively retreated.

I came to my senses when I felt the hard, cold carriage door on my back.

“Daemon.”

“ .... ”

“Daemon?”

“ .... ”

Damn scary things! There are even many.

There are as many corps members as there are, so it's natural that there are a lot of them... but it's also scary. It won't suddenly go crazy or something, right?

Maybe it's because of its terrifying appearance that can't be seen in the human world, but my eyes keep going there against my will.

It's definitely not because I'm interested. No, if it's interest, it's interest. Keeping something in sight for vigilance is also a form of interest.

As I was staring blankly at the group of horses, a water bottle was suddenly thrust in front of my nose.

“Daemon, would you like some water?”

For something that was brought up out of the blue, the attitude was quite polite.

The owner of this action, which seemed more like offering rather than offering, was none other than Ed, his loyal lieutenant.

Actually, I expected it.

‘How many people can be so devoted to me?’

How can he fulfill his duty like this even though the other person is just a human being?

“Thank you.”

Gratitude for water and gratitude for me as a human being doing my duty without showing any signs of it.

Ed, who had no way of knowing that this greeting had two meanings, smiled and said that it was only natural.

Then, he glanced at me at the group of horses I had been staring at blankly a moment ago, and then spoke carefully, as if he had decided on something.

“I saw you a little while ago... I thought you were looking at a horse...”

“Oh yes.”

Damn, I almost forgot.

Yes, I was watching. I'm afraid they might go crazy.

The strong demons might not know, but if I, who am particularly weak among humans, hit something like that, my body and soul would be separated. So we have no choice but to be on guard.

Anyway, it seems like he's watching me quite a bit for noticing that. Did the devil give an order?

'No, maybe because of the resignation letter?'

Because you think I might jump?

It is a somewhat plausible guess.

Ed, who was a little hesitant and appalled by the Demon King's persistent attitude, slowly spoke. The words that came out of his hesitantly opened lips contained something that was completely unexpected.

"Do you... perhaps want to ride a horse?"

"yes?"

"As expected, you still had some regrets..."

I was doing well and then suddenly what does this mean?
You want me to ride that horrible thing?

I gaped at the absurdity and belatedly waved my hand away.

But it seems to have appeared differently to him.

"No, absolutely not. That's not it..."

“I’m sorry. It may be frustrating, but could you at least use the carriage until you feel better? “You can ride the horse as much as you like after that, so please.”

“....”

He stopped his mouth as he was about to deny it again.

Wait a minute, doesn’t that mean I’ll never ride again in my life?

My physical condition is not an aftereffect, it is congenital, so it will never get any better in my lifetime.

So, is there any need to deny it?

“...All right.”

There is no need to show weakness to the demons, and it would be better than embarrassing each other.

My throat burns, perhaps because of the sense of crisis that I almost rode the horse.

I happened to be holding a water bottle in my hand, so I took a sip from my mouth while watching carefully...

“You newbie, you know how to ride a horse quite well now, right?”

“no! “It’s still not enough!”

“What is humility? Okay, that’s enough. So now only the final procedure remains, I guess?”

“Okay, there is one most important thing left. Should we say it is a special tradition unique to our corps? “Actually, it hasn’t been that long.”

It's a special tradition. Was there something like that in 0 Corps?

Even though I knew it was rude to hear this story for the first time in my life, I unconsciously listened.

What is the final procedure?

Before that, it is questionable whether there was anything called tradition in Corps 0.

Legion 0 is a corps created by me. In other words, it is a new corps that was created only about 2 years ago... A tradition?

I was worried that the sound of swallowing water would interfere with what they were saying, so I held it in my mouth and focused on their conversation.

And I had to regret not swallowing the water.

"There is one story that every member of Legion 0 must know. "A story about our corps commander, Daemon."

"Oh, no way..."

"Yes, the name is 0 Corps. "You need to know clearly about the situation when Demon killed the hero so you don't end up being embarrassed."

Puheap-!!

"Cough!" "Kkkkkkkkk."

"Daemon?!"

Fortunately, because Ed immediately lowered his head, the unfortunate incident of water spewing on Ed's face did not occur. I hurriedly wiped the corners of my mouth and coughed repeatedly to get rid of the water that had accidentally spilled over.

Thanks to this, it was Ed who was embarrassed.

He hurriedly took out a new handkerchief and held it close to my mouth. He gently removed the handkerchief to check the inside and stuttered with an expression of astonishment.

“Blood blood....”

Huh? Did you bleed again?

Looking at that pale complexion, it looks like blood has come out again.

Well, it’s not like this happened once or twice. I was so embarrassed....

“There was no blood! “The attending physician, the attending physician!!”

“...?”

“Ben! Where are you! BEEEEENN!! “

Hey? Doesn’t something feel strange right now?

Why are you even more embarrassed that no blood came out? Shouldn’t it be the other way around?

His handkerchief was clean.

At least it didn’t have any red stains on it.

of course. I’m just confused.

“What’s going on!”

oh my god. Even came to Ben.

Seeing that person running in such a hurry makes my conscience prick.

I tried to control the situation even now, but the adjutant, who was so loyal that I wanted to throw him away, was one step ahead of me, grabbed him by the collar, and shouted loudly.

“Daemon suddenly coughed violently, but no blood came out!”

“oh my god!”

At this point I gave up thinking.

Wrong. These guys have no common sense at all.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 18

18. The Veil Lifted (1)

“So, wasn’t there poison in the water bottle?”

“That’s a possibility! First of all, keep your water bottle separate. “Find out who prepared that water bottle!”

“Sure... huh? “After thinking about it for a moment, I prepared that water bottle myself.”

“Ed, you... you couldn’t do that...!”

“No, wait a minute. Why do accidents happen in that direction?!”

Ah, now that I think about it, Ben has not yet recovered from the effects of the battle.

So, that means you are not sane.

‘Did you plan on killing me for calling that guy?’

When I looked at Ed with slightly cooled eyes, he was thinking of me for a moment and he seemed quite embarrassed, so I decided to take that into account.

It was absolutely not because I was afraid that the next adjutant would be someone like Dahar, the adjutant of the 12th Corps commander.

At this rate, it seemed like those two were going to have a life-or-death duel, so I hurriedly coughed and called them over.

“I’m fine, so you two just stop... Keluk.”

“Daemon!”

“What on earth...! There was no blood and there was no reaction to the magic stone... What on earth was it? Is the magic stone defective? “I have to change it as soon as I get back!”

No, that’s not it.

Oh damn...

it burned white.

What? my mental strength.

I never thought it would take so much mental energy to prove that it wasn’t just poison.

Still, they didn’t believe me until the end.

It’s just that ‘our strong Demon overcomes the poison alone and lies to avoid causing worry. So, I just had to convince myself, ‘Let’s fool you just this once.’

I’m really grateful that they stopped at that point... but why am I so shocked?

“At that time, Master Demon crushes the former commander of the 7th Corps and falls in between...!”

An excited, exaggerated voice was heard.

Exhausted as I was, I sat on the cloak that Ed had laid out for me, leaned against the wall of the carriage, and listened to the voice in a daze.

A cool breeze blows and messes with my white hair. The wind that blew through my hair caressed my scalp coolly, as if telling me to quickly come to my senses.

Thanks to this, my mind cooled down to some extent and the truth about 'my saga' began to fill the empty space in my mind.

'Yeah, that one. That's why my stomach hurts again. I'm really going to be amazed.'

I didn't kill the warrior.

I did not stop the hero who was about to destroy himself, nor did I accept his suicide.

The story about the former 7th Corps commander was actually a bit distorted.

Now, let me summarize about myself again.

My name is Deon Hardt.

Currently, due to unavoidable circumstances, he is living in the Demon King's Castle under the name 'Demon Arut'— and was the 'last companion' of the 'last hero'.

'The last hero...'

He tilted his head back and leaned against the carriage wall.

Three moons and a black sky studded with stars fill the field of view.

‘...It’s not even funny.’

‘The last warrior’ ‘The last comrade’.

This is what they call it in the empire. There is no particular reason.

Because the empire likes things that look like they have something. Rather than just referring to him as ‘the hero’ and ‘his companion’, adding the modifier ‘last’ seems to have more weight.

I don’t think the modifier ‘last’ has any meaning. Especially if it’s attached to a hero.

‘Because there is no such thing as an eternal end.’

Let’s say there is a house here with two children. Here, the second child would be the youngest.

But what if you have another child? The nickname ‘youngest’, which was given to the second child, was passed on to the third child.

The same goes for warriors.

The world values balance. The power of the Demon King is so strong that it can destroy the balance, so as long as the Demon King lives, the world will send another hero at any time.

At that time, the word ‘last’ attached to my dead comrade will be transferred to the new hero.

In that case, I would not be the 'last comrade' of the 'last hero', but the 'last comrade' of 'one of the many warriors who have ever existed'.

In short, it means that there is no need to pay too much attention to the word 'last'.

Because it's like a kind of bravado just to appear present.

"Punch the shoulder of the hero who is about to self-destruct! "They caught me!"

Oh, were we still talking?

That's because it's not like that. It was just that I couldn't hear the hero's voice clearly, so I put my ear closer.

So... where should I start explaining...

Okay, starting with the story of being selected as a hero's companion and heading to the Demon King's Castle.

'...Now that I think about it again, it's a good thing I'm alive.'

When I think back about that time, I feel a shudder.

The road to the Demon King's Castle was quite rough. No, it was not at a level that could be expressed with the word 'considerably.'

In addition to me, many of the people who had been selected as colleagues all died, so how can I express it so simply as 'it was rough'?

In the end, by the time the Demon Castle came into view in the distance, I was the only one alive, and the hero trusted me so much that I became his only companion.

In reality, I was just lucky.

‘Yeah, I was lucky.’

I smiled bitterly as I looked at the corps members talking excitedly about me.

***

“From here on, I will go alone.”

“...Are you serious?”

A rebuttal suddenly came out.

Are you saying that the warrior can’t see them now?

No, that can’t be possible. Is ‘the hero’ a warrior for nothing? A hero is a being born with overwhelming talent and a body that is superior to anyone else in order to deal with the Demon King.

Currently, he is probably seeing that army more clearly than I am seeing it.

I turned my head once again and looked at the huge Demon Castle.

It is also magnificent. The devil lives right there.

Then they’ll just be stuck there and continue to live. Why...

‘Why did you have to come out and meet me like this?’

A huge and magnificent Demon King’s Castle.

Normally, my eyes would be taken by its size and majesty, but now there was something that caught my attention even more.

Black things crowded in front of it.

Yes, they are 'demons'. It's probably a legion that came along to watch the Demon King's fight.

Did you understand what I said? He said, 'It came along.'

So, in short, it means that the devil is now in front of the devil's castle.

Isn't the final boss usually supposed to be located at the very back? Why am I here?

"In the first place, the role of a 'comrade' is to pave the way for the hero to reach the Demon King. Battle is solely the responsibility of the warrior. So, Mr. Hart, your role ends here. Thanks for your efforts."

"...."

"But... if I win, I will come back here, so can you just wait here until the battle is over?"

"...You are stating the obvious."

Looking down at the enormous army again, I was convinced.

The warrior loses. There is no way we can win.

The Demon Lord alone is too much, but you have to deal with all those troops as well? No matter how much of a hero you are, that is impossible.

There's one thing he didn't say.

The role of a 'companion' is to pave the way to the devil. Therefore, it is also the role of a colleague to stop those troops and ensure that the hero can fully fight against the devil.

Still, the reason I didn't mention it was probably to avoid death.

Because it would be better to die while saving at least one person who was about to die.

It is truly a heroic idea.

"Uh..."

The words I was about to say got stuck in my throat. I was suffocating as if someone was strangling my neck.

What am I trying to do by calling him now? Something that cannot or should not be held on anyway.

Even if I call him, there is nothing to say. I couldn't even dare to go back.

In the first place, heroes were born to kill the devil. The fact that he leaves the devil in front of him means that he is throwing away the value of his own existence.

That didn't mean I wanted to go with them either.

I tried so hard to live like that, but I barely made it this far, so there was no way I could easily say that I would go to a place where I was almost certain to die.

Damn it, I wanted to live.

"...."

I closed my mouth and cleared my mind.

There was nothing I could say in this situation....

...there was nothing.

nothing.

“Then I’ll just leave.”

“...yes.”

By the time I could barely reply, he had already gone down the cliff where we were hiding and was walking towards the Demon Lord.

A gait without the slightest hesitation.

His confident gait, as if he was not thinking about defeat at all, only stops when he reaches in front of the Demon King.

A short conversation takes place and the Demon King gestures to the surroundings. Then the corps that were in position retreated and formed a huge circle.

‘Still, he seems to have a conscience.’

Honestly, I didn’t think we would fight one-on-one.

Isn’t he the devil in name and appearance? This is a place where people nod their heads even if they do something cowardly.

But soon after the battle began, my thoughts changed.

‘Crazy what is that?’

He didn't bite those around him because he had a conscience.

I bit because I was confident I would win.

Only then did I realize why he was called the strongest demon king in history.

It's overwhelming.

The opponent is a 'hero'.

The Demon King was receiving all his attacks with a bored and bored expression, as if an adult was playing with a child.

The result was, of course, the victory of the Demon King.

It burrowed into the warrior's stomach and even pierced his back, dripping red blood. The Demon King looked down at him as if he was bored, and then grabbed the handle of the sword stuck in his body as if he wanted to kill him.

It was then.

"Who are you?"

"I"

I froze for a moment. I got goosebumps all over my body.

A creepy voice that sounds like it's scratching the vocal cords. It was clearly coming from behind.

I reflexively pulled out my dagger first.

And after checking the other person, I soon relaxed my hands.

‘...Ogre.’

You can never beat that.

He even speaks. This means that they are ‘demons’ who have been influenced by the power of the Demon King, and as such, they must have abilities that are far superior to those of ordinary ogres.

You have to run away.

The good news is that I am better than anyone else at running away.

‘I’ve survived so far with 80% luck and 20% agility, so I’ve said it all.’

To be exact, ‘fleeing ability’ would be more appropriate than agile movements.

‘Still, out of pride, I call myself ‘agile’...’

Boom!

“Ugh crazy!”

Really, I barely escaped it. Since you were swinging your sword first, wasn’t it basic to try to talk before attacking?

I took a couple of steps back from him, thankful for my judgment in reflexively leaning my upper body to avoid it and my flexible waist for holding it.

And I realized it too late.

‘That’s right, this is a cliff.’

Fighting. The floor supporting my heels crumbles and falls down.

The only escape route is the one blocked by that guy.

After seeing the ridiculously long sword he was holding, the bulging muscles on his upper body, and his relaxed attitude as if he knew the current situation very well, I nodded quietly.

‘Unfortunately, it seems my luck ends here.’

If he was ignorant, I would have somehow lured him into falling off the cliff, but judging by his attitude, it seems like he is at least not stupid.

If I die, it will probably be because of that guy right in front of me.

But life was too precious to give up.

‘How did I survive until now!’

In the first place, being selected as a warrior’s companion was not something I wanted.

So, I can’t die of injustice like this!

It’s unfair to die together. You die, I will live.

Holding a dagger in both hands, I jumped straight at him. Of course, I didn’t do something stupid like shouting my spirit and alerting the enemies below to my presence.

I just kept my mouth shut, my eyes wide open, and ran in silently.

The guy, who opened his eyes wide in surprise, immediately laughed as if it was ridiculous and raised his sword again.

When the guy took a big step forward and the raised sword cut through the space and came down towards me, I, who had been watching it without blinking even once, counted the timing in my head.

‘now!’

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 19

19. The lifted veil (2)

rolled on the floor as if falling and landed on the guy's back.

Normally I would stab or cut the ogre in the back, but I knew that it would be difficult to pierce the ogre's hide with my weak strength, so I didn't get greedy and threw myself with all my strength and pushed the ogre away.

Considering the size and strength of the ogre, I really did my best. How could it be that my body bounced in the opposite direction? Honestly, I thought my shoulder was going to crumble.

As if my earnestness had reached the sky, his body leaned forward.

I got up from rolling on the floor and stood a step away to check on him.

A cliff is ahead. If it falls like this, it will be my victory.

The upper body has already completely fallen off the cliff. If things continue like that, my head will fall off. If you fall from the bridge first, it is impossible to climb up no matter what you do in that state.

...I thought so, but you damn ogre.

In that situation, he turned around and grabbed my ankle!

‘Fuck!’

Damn it, I couldn’t take into account the length of the ogre’s arms.

My body suddenly shuts down and my vision changes quickly.

The receding sky was felt in real time through the shrinking clouds.

And soon.

Kwaaaang!!

A heavy shock was felt throughout my body.

‘Ouch.’

I feel like my stomach is upset.

I swallowed the rising nausea and pressed my feet to the floor to get up.

Deep.

...Hook?

Oh, I was holding a dagger. But did the land originally feel like this?

I gathered my shaking vision and looked around.

Demons surrounding everywhere. And the hero and the demon king not far away.

...huh? No wait, what is this?!

Even the guy under me was the ogre from before. The place where my dagger pierced while trying to hit the floor was none other than my neck.

‘Even if it’s an ogre, if you put your weight on it and stab it, it will stab you... no!’

Am I now in the middle of enemy territory? Besides, they killed their colleague right in front of their eyes, right? Is that it?

Perhaps because of the sudden intrusion, everything is quiet.

With even the Demon King remaining silent, I began to walk blindly, thinking that I had to get away quickly before they came to their senses.

The place my survival instinct pointed to was none other than the hero.

The light emanating from the body is a bit ominous, as if it is trying to self-destruct, but there is no other place to go.

Since demons are surrounding us on all sides, it is obvious that we will die no matter where we go, but we cannot go to the demon king.

A hero who is already half-dead and about to explode himself is my only lifeline. Feeling an indescribable feeling, I walked with a stiff expression on my face, being careful not to shake my legs.

It took no time to reach the warrior.

The hero, who had already been looking at me with his eyes wide open since I fell, made eye contact with me and immediately smiled helplessly.

And he moves his lips as if he wants to say something... but I can't hear him at all.

'I guess I don't even have the energy to talk.'

It wasn't necessary, but I was curious about what he was saying, so I kindly grabbed his shoulder and put my ear close to him.

Then, a faint voice mixed with the wheezing sound flowed into my ear.

"Are you...really..."

"...?"

There were no more words.

What is the end? What on earth did you want to say...

'!?'

It was then that I felt something strange.

The light emanating from the warrior's body poured down towards me.

I was confused at first, but it wasn't long before I figured out what he was thinking.

'Did you want to transfer power?'

—Giving up self-destruction, which was the only opportunity to kill the Demon King.

Rather than joy or gratitude, I felt sad.

A warrior's power cannot be intentionally transferred.

The closest option is to scatter fragments of power across the continent.

It is unknown who will be the owner of the fragment, so the hero's will is literally useless....

Sure enough, I felt the hero's power pass through my body.

Let alone settling down, it could not stay for a moment and passed leisurely like water through a net. It lost its light, crumbled into pieces like burnt ashes, and soon disappeared into the distance.

It will probably spread across the continent like this.

'I feel like I've become a lightning rod.'

Even though he receives the power of a warrior in one body, he cannot store it and just lets it flow away.

'...It's foolish.'

The hero must be feeling this clearly, so I don't know why he doesn't give up.

The force that was pushing him in gradually weakens, and the warrior's body also collapses, as if leaning on me.

His end was approaching.

'Ah, we made eye contact.'

He smiles faintly, as if to comfort me.

At that moment, the compulsion to say something took hold of me, but I was unable to say anything until the force that was rushing in was cut off, all light disappeared, and his body went limp.

I was caught up in an indescribable feeling, and for a moment, my expression hardened due to the sense of discomfort I felt from the hero.

‘...dead.’

My only lifeline.

I checked again, but I couldn’t hear any breathing. My pulse didn’t beat at all.

In my dazed mind from shock, a forgotten fact came to mind.

The silence that fell when I fell. That silence...

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

...still continued.

As soon as I realized that fact, I began to worry endlessly about the gazes pouring in from all directions.

As I hesitantly stand up, the eyes of those looking at me slowly rise.

Ah, it would have been better if I hadn’t known until the end.

As those countless eyes move along with me, my body suddenly becomes stiff with tension. It was even more so because among those gazes were those of the devil.

I guess the reason my legs are shaking is because of my mood. No, I think my hands are shaking too.

‘It’s not my fault!’

It is dangerous in this state.

Having studied hard before coming here, I knew very well that if I showed weakness in front of demons who specialized in fighting against flesh and blood, I would be eaten.

That’s why I want to leave as soon as possible.

“Cough.”

Grumble.

Blood poured out of my mouth.

It was something I had been enduring ever since I fell here.

‘Damn it, why now...!’

I gently bit into the delicate flesh inside my mouth.

I knew that when I fell, my entire body received quite a big shock, but I thought it would be a little better because I was able to hold on surprisingly well, but I never thought I would spit it out now.

To put it to the extreme, I wanted to grind this damn body to pieces.

In the meantime, the warrior’s limp body was so heavy.

'I have to run away, but if I do this, I'll just become a burden. Just throw it away and jump out?'

As he was seriously thinking, the Demon King's lips, which had been tightly closed, slowly opened.

"What's your name?"

What is the intention of this?

They'll find you and kill you if you run, so does that mean you shouldn't even think about running away? Perhaps the intention was to find out the family members by listening to the castle and kill or threaten them.

The chances of escaping and surviving are extremely low anyway, so it doesn't matter whether you say your name or not.

Rather, they are family...

"...Deon Hart."

White hair blowing in the cool wind tickles my cheek. I swept it up, touched the corners of my red eyes, and smiled.

Now that I've told you my name, just do whatever you want.

Although I was so prepared, the words I received in return were unexpected.

Words that I couldn't even imagine and thought were impossible.

"Are you planning on becoming the Demon King's army?"

For the first time in my life, I received a scouting offer from the Demon King.

I'm not happy. It's like saying it's an offer, but in reality, there's no room for choice.

It is obvious what will happen if you refuse here.

But I am not swayed by threats like this!

As I held the hero's body, which kept slipping, I dared to confidently express my refusal in front of the demon king.

"I hate paperwork!"

...I may have said it in a bit of a twist, but for now, my intention to refuse is correct.

Surprisingly, I heard that corps commanders are burdened with paperwork. I have no intention of being caught here and having to worry about paperwork.

"Then don't do it."

"...?"

"Hmm, what high-ranking official doesn't do paperwork?..."

Yes? hey?

"If you don't have something, just make one. 0How about the corps commander? "Do you like it?"

Ah no wait a minute. Are you crazy?

The commander of the 1st corps takes on the role of the devil's agent, but they ask him to become the commander of the 0th corps? My skills haven't been proven yet?

"You don't have to worry about backlash. Anyone who has seen this scene would never dream of opposing it."

Only then did I feel it.

Even if something goes wrong, it's definitely going wrong.

As a result, I had no choice but to accept the position of Commander 0 Corps that was first offered to me, as I was weighed down by the higher treatment I received the more I refused.

***

Kwaaaang!!

When Deonhardt fell with a heavy sound, the warrior was so surprised that he could not express it in words.

If it hadn't been for the sword stuck in his stomach, he might have jumped up.

That's because the outcome has already been decided.

The hero was unable to kill the Demon King, and all that remained was death at the hands of the Demon King.

A hero who cannot kill the Demon King has no value in existence.

All the treatment and honor the hero receives comes from the fact that he is 'almost the only human who can kill the Demon King,' so it was also natural that if he could not kill the Demon King, everything would be taken back.

Simply put, it means that the current hero who was defeated by the Demon King has become a human being who is not worth saving.

'But why?'

Why can't I just run away like this?

Why did I come to this place of death?

Deon Hardt. He not only has a duty as a 'comrade', but also a duty to report the results of the battle to the empire.

So, it would have been much more beneficial to quietly leave than to storm into this place where it was obvious that I would die.

Nevertheless, he had entered the middle of the enemy lines and was now walking confidently this way.

'ha ha ha.'

A hollow laugh escaped out mixed with the sound of heavy breathing.

Could it be that a camaraderie developed in that short period of time? Is that why you came here to collect the corpse?

—Even as you face the devil?

Perhaps because of the sword stuck in my stomach, a subtle sensation bubbles up from my lower abdomen and circles around my heart.

I couldn't open my mouth due to the indescribable sensation, so I just kept my lips licked for a long time. Perhaps out of frustration, he grabbed my shoulder and brought his ear close to me as if urging me on.

Thanks to that, the warrior was able to make a reckless choice.

"You...really..."

Contrary to the image known to the public, he is a kind and loyal person to the point of recklessness.

If the next 'hero' is born, it would be nice if it were you.

I began to pour out all the strength I had gathered for self-destruction with the intention of transferring it to him.

There was no way he, a warrior, did not know that the power of a warrior cannot be intentionally transferred.

Nevertheless, it is as clear as day what will happen after he dies, and this is the only way for this person to live.

The hero, who had easily crossed the acceptable line set by the world, called out to the world, which was currently watching this situation.

'World, are you watching?'

I will be watching. A 'hero' is a being chosen by the world and given power.

So you're watching and you know.

'This is my arbitrary action after all.'

therefore.

Because he doesn't know anything.

I will bear all the consequences for violating the will of the world.

'May the anger over this action be directed only at me.'

The world that measured the weight of sin made its decision.

At that moment, the warrior chewed the tip of his tongue in terrible pain. A scream that could not come out trembled deep in my throat.

Pain that feels as if your muscles are being torn apart and your bones are being stabbed with a sharp object. In that state, when I push too hard, even my head hurts as if it will break.

It was probably a warning and punishment from the world, but it was ignored. I swallowed the blood welling up inside me and pushed harder despite the pain that shattered my soul.

‘please. At the very least, just one piece of debris....’

We can’t let a person like this be killed by the devil. So please give us the strength to resist him.

But his earnestness never came to fruition.

All the forces that poured toward Deon came out and spread to the continent, losing only their light.

They passed through his body leisurely, like a bird passing through clouds, and without a single piece missing, they disappeared into thin air, riding the wind and sunlight.

‘...Is it not possible as expected?’

If you look at the situation broadly, there is nothing to lose.

Although he crossed the acceptable line, the hero chose to ‘transfer’ his power in exchange for his ‘life’, and since he received the price of ‘life’, the world must achieve his goal of ‘transfer’.

Therefore, the power that has disappeared like that will not belong to the world, but will stay on the continent and create another 'hero', like the power of other warriors who chose to 'transfer'.

But then Deon Hardt.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 20

20. The veil lifted (3)

‘....’

I gently lowered my eyes at the gloomy future that kept coming to mind.

If there is a world or a god who decides and watches over all of this, it may take some form, but it will probably never take the form of a ‘human’.

Humans are beings with the richest emotions among all other living creatures.

If they had presented themselves as beings who, no matter how hard they tried to make rational judgments, could not help but be swayed by their emotions, they could not have been so cold-hearted and merciless.

‘iced coffee.’

Death is just around the corner. Unable to control his slowly collapsing body, he leaned on Deonhardt.

Now I can't even keep my head up, so I tilt my head back and a complex expression fills my field of vision against the black night sky with three round moons in the background.

An expression that doesn't know what to say.

The warrior just smiled helplessly.

You don't have to say anything. All you have to do is live.

But if I had to choose what I wanted to hear...

'name.'

My name, not the title of warrior.

But you never know. There is no way for you to know my name, which even I have forgotten.

No matter what kind of life you have lived before becoming a warrior, the value of your existence comes down to 'killing the devil.'

No one calls me by my name and I am so absorbed in my purpose that I cannot even repeat my name to myself...

'...I will correct this. I don't want to see you lose your name.'

I hope the next great hero will be someone other than Deon Hart.

The warrior slowly closed his eyes as he saw death slowly reaching out his hand.

In any case, the result has come out, so I am relieved regardless of whether it was successful or not. On the contrary, he was even happy to die.

Because it means I can rest now.

'My name will probably be mentioned at least once at the funeral.'

if.

If only I lived to see my funeral.

Will you remember my name?

—My vision turned black.

***

The administrator in charge of the 'First City', one of the four main cities with the approval of the Demon King, came to the gates of the castle, rarely shaking.

Originally, a 'manager' is a being that can be compared to a 'lord' in the human world.

It goes without saying that this was the reason why the manager, who was at least like the king of the city, was so nervous.

The visit of the '0th Corps Commander', whom I had only heard about through rumors.

At a time when even other corps commanders would have to bow down and throw up their hands, a giant among giants whose tendencies are not even known are known.

If you were to ask me how I feel, I would say 'I'm in trouble.'

Think about it.

Since you don't know their tendencies, you can't flatter them easily, and you can't be too stiff either.

What if I can't get into the mood for such a topic? You may be parting ways with your loved one who has been with you for a long time.

'If you make a mistake, you die. If you make a mistake, you die...'

I can't help but sigh. My back was already wet.

Likewise, rubbing his clammy hands on his trousers, the manager waited for the door of the carriage that had stopped in front of him to open.

In the end, there is only one way.

Behave as little as possible against your will and understand your tendencies as quickly as possible.

So, you need to stay alert. The commander of Corps 0, who is rumored to not be able to treat even the devil king carelessly. It was obvious what would happen if I offended him.

'I want to live a long time and enjoy this power!'

Soon the carriage door opens and a tall man jumps out from inside.

Neatly combed hair and neat look. A ferocious magical power that does not seem to match his aristocratic appearance.

Is the author the commander of Corps 0? No, there is magic. The Commander of the 0 Corps clearly said he was a 'human', so he would not have any magical power.

As expected, the man must have been the right-hand man of Commander 0 Corps, and with an extremely polite gesture, he held the carriage door as if waiting for someone to come out.

Then, a black-robed being slowly stepped down the steps of the carriage.

‘It’s him.’

I felt like I knew it without even having to say it.

Those leisurely gestures, that calm attitude, even the feeling of intimidation that emanates even though he is wearing a robe.

In the first place, he is wearing a robe that is the symbol of the 0 Corps commander, but who else would be the 0 Corps commander if not him?

His size was not as big as expected. On the contrary, he was so insignificant that if he had met me on the street while I was too drunk and couldn’t understand the atmosphere, I would have started a fight.

But right now, he wasn’t drinking, he was sober, and because of that, he could read the mood better than anyone else.

Who is this tall man with great magical power treating so kindly? Who is the man carrying a visitation bag with blood all over his body taking care of so much?

Likewise, who is paying attention to those who have blood all over their bodies, as if they had battled a monster?

And finally....

‘Who is the most relaxed?’

gulp.

I wiped the dry needle again, cleared my throat quietly, and took a step forward.

Then, he bowed politely towards the man in the robe and opened his mouth.

“Welcome to the First City.”

***

Time was delayed a bit due to the successive attacks of monsters, but I didn't think it was going to stop there forever and I thought it would arrive someday.

Yes, I was just thinking about it.

So, in other words, I am not mentally ready yet.

“....”

I sat down and looked blankly at the open carriage door.

‘I don't want to get off.’

It's already late anyway, but if I get off here, won't I really have to do anything to protect this city from terrible monsters?

The probability of my skills being revealed will increase accordingly. Oh, when I think about it like that, I don't want to get off even more.

As I hesitated, pulling on the hood of the robe that Ed had put on me before getting off, Ed, who was holding the door from outside the carriage, called to me as if he was puzzled.

“Daemon?”

“...going.”

I reluctantly stood up.

As I slowly stepped down the stairs of the carriage, I made eye contact with a chunky demon who seemed to be the city manager.

I don't know if he always had that kind of expression, but his expression was stiff.

‘...It couldn't have been that kind of expression. ‘It's clear I don't like that.’

I had high hopes that they would send a corps commander to protect the city, but how could I smile comfortably when such an unprecedented small child came.

You're probably frustrated by now, saying ‘Our city is ruined!’ or ‘You damn devil!’ He may be exploding with anger.

I am not a person who is tactless enough to say hello cheerfully in a situation like this.

Because of this, I kept my mouth shut and remained silent, but perhaps he had just sorted out his emotions, as he took a step forward and bowed politely.

“Welcome to the First City.”

And the words that followed were one after another of praise.

They said that it was an honor that would never happen twice, and that everyone in the city would feel relieved that the commander of the 0 Corps was visiting.

In some ways, praise is praise, but it is a natural praise that does not seem to be flattering.

I could guarantee that.

This kid is a pro! As for quick emotional control, this is not a skill that comes from flattery once or twice.

I didn't have the courage to hang up, so I was just exclaiming to myself. Ed took a quick look at me and took a step forward with a stern expression.

"Enough about flattery."

"!"

Aren't you being too extreme?

I already feel like I'm not in a good mood when a small child comes, but how will I feel if that small child even abuses me?

Usually, in these cases, the superior who stands still behind gets criticized rather than the subordinate who acts in front.

As expected, the manager's eyes widened as if he was surprised.

But soon, like a professional, he nodded, hiding his expression with a cheeky smile.

"okay. I was so excited about the unprecedented visit of Commander 0 Corps that I committed rudeness. "I apologize."

"I am Ed, the lieutenant of Commander 0 Corps, Demon Arut. "If the goal was simply sightseeing, I could have listened to you until the end, but unfortunately, our goal is to protect the city, so let's get to the point."

"Thank you for your generous treatment."

When the manager, who had bowed deeply again, looked up again, Ed had become a superior who was receiving thorough reports.

Holding a pen, he began to look through the documents he was holding inside the carriage and ask questions.

"The monsters have been attacking exactly how many days apart, right?"

"Ah... there was no particular regularity. Still, if there's one thing we can be sure of, it's that they will attack again within at least a week."

"How big was the offensive and what were the numbers? Was it to the point where you could see that almost all the monsters around you had come?"

"Yes that's right. They also had to eat to survive, so it seemed like all the monsters around them had gathered because their survival was at stake. The offense was just as fearsome. "In fact, the battle is a battle, but it would be more accurate to say that we were greatly pushed back in terms of momentum."

"It's momentum... I guess they were that desperate... Well, if momentum was a big problem, it's almost like it's been solved now."

'It's almost like it's been resolved.' I like it because it seems like a positive thing to say, but... what is it that you are looking at me while saying that?

I thought it might have been an illusion, but when our eyes met, I could sense an ominousness in his natural look away.

There's definitely something there!

Over there? Wait a minute....

"Anything special?"

Ignored!

"Rather than thinking of the opponent as a monster, it seems better to think of the battle as a water-based battle."

"I say so, Demon."

"...yes?"

Until now, he has been talking without me, but only calls me at times like this. What do you want from me?

So I kept my mouth shut, wondering what to do, and Ed, who had been quietly waiting for an answer, spoke again as if urging me on.

"What do you want to do?"

"...."

There is nothing to say.

I don't plan on going out to look for monsters and getting into trouble, so I'll just stay here and wait patiently until they come.

But I can't say this.

"Daemon?"

“...They said they would invade within a week, so we have to wait. “There’s no need to go outside to meet them.”

“Then, in the meantime, the corps members....”

“You are free until the monsters attack. It’s great for drinking and shopping. However, if there is an attack, we must be able to respond immediately.”

The words seemed so good that the faces of the corps members became brighter.

Confirming with my own eyes that my choice was right, I opened my heart with pride for the first time in a while.

They said it might take up to a week, but you can’t just wait and see, so it was a natural choice.

Of course, I would have done so even if I had told him to wait since I was the superior, but it would not have been a very good decision since his level of resentment towards me would have continued to rise.

So, it would be better to show some condescension at this time and build up some goodwill toward me.

That way, my chances of survival will increase even a little.

‘got it? So, if a monster attacks, you have to protect me first?’

While I was smiling happily to myself, the manager who had been watching for a while seemed to think it was time to sneak in.

“We prepared a place to sleep. Would you like to go?”

“oh.”

From words to actions, he is very good at not offending others. As expected, he's professional.

I nodded and looked back at the corps members whose eyes were shining brightly.

"Then just find out the location of the accommodation and after that you are free. "Do whatever you want."

"Waaaa!!"

"Long live Demon!!"

As I listened to the cheers of the corps members, I nodded happily.

Yes, yes, have fun.

Because I will do whatever I want.

'It's been a while since I had a drink.'

It is a city that has been a long time coming. In fact, another nickname for the first city here is 'City of Entertainment'.

Things related to pleasure, such as alcohol, gambling, and prostitution, are the representative symbols of this city!

Of course, the thing that caught my eye was alcohol.

I was so excited at the thought of drinking that I couldn't show it outwardly for the sake of respect, but hummed to myself and followed behind the manager who was leading the way.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 21

21. The veil lifted (4)

The room was great.

It may not be comparable to the Demon King's Castle, but since it was outside the standard in the first place, I decided to exclude it and walked to the window with a sigh of admiration.

There were three moons lined up in the sky outside the window.

'It's still daytime.'

That too in broad daylight.

Of course, there is no sun in the demon world, but that does not mean that there is no distinction between day and night.

You can clearly see this by looking at the three moons that occupy the sky.

If the three moons are stretched horizontally, it is day. If they overlap and appear as one, it is night.

Now that they are lined up in a row, it is daytime.

‘How about during the day? Daytime drinking also has its own charm.’

I took off my stuffy robe and took a quick look at the clothes I was wearing. Very ordinary looking clothes that just look convenient for movement.

I don’t mind if I leave like this.

Up until this point, I had been so excited that I had forgotten one very important thing.

“It’s not possible.”

“This is a city that ‘must be protected’. Are you planning to mess up the city?”

That I have two fucking stalkers.

...Shit!

***

“Is this the commander of the 9th Corps?”

“Yes, it is.”

Jaykar looked down at the corpse with cold eyes.

Where he is currently is on the front line.

They came here as reinforcements dispatched by the Demon King, who felt suspicious that contact with the 9th Corps commander had been lost, but it was already too late.

The commander of the 9th Corps died.

‘This is the commander of the 9th Corps.’

Still, there was a reason why the body of someone who was once a living being and colleague was called 'this'.

A body so tattered that its original condition is difficult to recognize.

It was more like a piece of meat than a corpse and was 'contained' in a crude coffin that appeared to have been hastily made.

"He was decapitated from the first blow, or rather from the second blow, and was later crushed by a horse's hoof."

"...."

"What did you guys do when you couldn't even retrieve your superior's body?"

"sorry."

Jaykar's expression was not very good when he saw that he was the commander of the 9th Corps.

It's not because it's cruel. There were many times when he personally committed more cruel acts.

It is not because the great power of the 9th Corps commander is missing. Of course, it didn't have any impact, but there was a bigger problem than that.

"Commander of the 1st Corps! "The enemy!"

"...again?"

The enemy's powerful offensive exceeded expectations.

A sigh came out of my mouth.

There was nothing to prepare, so Jaykar tied the sword he was holding tightly to his waist and left the tent.

His appearance under the sunlight was a mess.

Blood splattered all over the body and pieces of flesh sticking together.

As soon as we arrived, we had to jump into battle without even having time to unpack.

Even though he swung his sword frantically, he barely managed to extinguish an urgent complaint. The situation was so dire that another battle had to be fought.

This is all because of one person.

One of the Empire's proud cards that appeared on the battlefield without any warning.

Probably, if other corps commanders other than himself, specifically corps commander 0, had come here, they would have been helplessly pushed out.

Quickly.

"...A request to the Demon King for support."

A clearly low voice came out gloomily, as if he had been suppressing his emotions.

I hate to admit it, but I have to admit it.

I can't lose my soldiers because of pointless stubbornness.

"A 'real hero' has appeared and the 9th Corps commander is dead."

There is only one thing you have to do from now on. Waiting for help to arrive.

...Until our side's 'Joker' comes and wipes them out.

Thinking of Daemon Arut, the commander of the 0th Legion, who would be in the city by now, Jaykar glared at the strange, wolf-like being running rampant among the flock of sheep as if he were going to kill him.

***

It's been two days since I came here and I can't even drink alcohol.

There is no particular reason. Because there are not one, but two of them who are making a fuss about a battle, and are watching the whole day!

Rotten guys.

I was sick and tired of Ed and Ben's persistent stalking, so I glanced at the cards in my hands with dry eyes and spoke softly.

"I would have definitely told you to stay free."

"Yes, I heard you clearly."

"The corps members were happy."

"So, that 'freedom' includes you too."

"There was a commandment to never fall."

"I am for escort...."

Damn it!

I nervously put down the card and swiped the gold coins piled up in front of me and said irritably.

The guy sitting across from me was holding his head, but it had been a long time since he had any generosity to care about such things.

“Then can I have some Ed too?”

“The escort...”

“One van is enough.”

Please turn it off.

I’m suffocating and going crazy. I don’t even have a private life?!

I feel hot inside. This is probably something he’s upset about. I quickly shifted my gaze to the mountain of gold coins piled up next to me.

‘Huh...’

My mind becomes peaceful.

That means it’s all mine. I guess I won’t have to worry about money for a while.

‘Actually, money isn’t that tight...’

Still, there’s something called feeling.

He fondly stroked the gold coins piled up next to him, leaned against the back of the chair, and crossed his legs.

As you may have noticed by now, I am now at a gambling den.

Originally, I tried to let go of my anxiety about monsters with alcohol, but now that I'm restrained like this, there's not much I can do, so I came to the gambling house for the first time in my life as a small act of defiance... "You won again.

"

"As expected, you are amazing."

Why am I so good at picking?

If you just quit everything you're doing and just go back to this game, don't you think you'll eat well and live well?

'...Are you really going to quit your job?'

It looks like I won really well. The eyes of the people at the gambling hall who looked at me changed subtly compared to the first time.

Especially the look in the eyes of the guy sitting across from me.

"Why don't we just pretend I lost and end it here?"

How are you? You have to say it right away.

It's not like I lost, it's just that I lost.

But there was no need to fight over something like that, so I smiled and nodded.

The game was over, so I was putting the gold coins into my pocket that Ed had quietly handed me from behind, when the guy who had quietly moved to the seat next to me held out the glass he was holding.

“Are you really amazing? Didn’t they use some kind of trick? Oh, of course, don’t take it unpleasantly. “I was just impressed because he was so good.”

“I didn’t really use any tricks, but... this is...”

“Oh, I was originally planning to drink it, but I lost, right? “I guess I’ve lost my appetite. Just ask for a drink for your hard work.”

“It’s not possible.”

That’s not what I just said.

You damn stalker bastards...!

Now that I think about it, Ed hasn’t gone yet. Why are you here? Didn’t I tell you to go?

As I tied the bag of gold coins I had collected on my belt, I raised my head and glared at Ed.

...Well, as soon as our eyes met, I relaxed my eyes, but anyway.

“Didn’t you tell me to go to Ed?”

“But... for your safety...”

“Safety? “When I came here, I saw that Ben was fighting very well.”

It was almost like a berserker.

So I didn’t want to be alone, but now that I’ve been tormented by these two for two days, I’ve changed my mind.

If this continues, I will become a berserker. I need to send at least one guy away quickly.

“...That...”

Ed hesitates, lowering his head.

I glanced at Ben and saw that he was looking at Ed triumphantly with the expression of a winner.

Now is your chance!

Very naturally, I held the glass as if I were holding a glass of water. And before Edna Ben could pay attention to this, he continued speaking quickly.

“Even if Ben can’t help it, Ed can rest, right? You must have suffered a lot during this time, so why not take a break here? “Isn’t this an opportunity that never comes again?”

“....”

“Yes?”

“...All right.”

He becomes sullen and turns his back.

It may seem a little pitiful to see a tall man become so sullen, but...

‘It’s pitiful.’

It feels cool inside.

How much inspiration would it be if a person of the same sex, not of the opposite sex, was sullen?

I smiled a winner and lifted the glass in my hand to my mouth.

‘...?’

And then stop.

I paused for a moment before the liquid flowed into my mouth.

At the same time, Ed turned his head and looked this way, as if there were eyes in the back of his head. Suddenly our eyes met and I froze in the same position I was holding the glass.

“....”

“...Ha haha.”

The eyes cooled down as if they were disappointed.

At the same time, Ben’s gaze, which had been directed at Ed, also returned here.

I had no choice but to quietly put down the glass I was holding in an awkward posture as both of their stinging gazes passed between the glass in my hand and my face.

“...I was just trying to smell it.”

“Yes, I believe it.”

“....”

“Still, I’m telling you this over and over just in case, but we’re here for the safety of the city. “Please refrain from drinking alcohol as much as possible.”

“Yeah...”

Okay, so get out of the way quickly.

I waved my hand roughly with that intention.

As if my meaning had been conveyed well, Ed, who had become sullen again, trudged out of his seat and Ben, who had been silent, said again the words he had been hearing so many times.

“Did you hear? So please put the glass away.”

“Yes, I understand. “I was already thinking of doing that.”

As he sits crookedly and pushes the glass away with his fingertips, his expression subtly changes.

It’s as if he’s saying, ‘What’s going on?’... What was my usual image like?

I felt offended.

I jerked my head, looked away from Ben, and looked at the guy who offered me a drink.

This guy is looking at me with a face full of question marks. I looked straight into his harmless-looking face and spoke slowly with a sullen expression.

“I like alcohol, but I don’t really like drugs.”

“...!”

You thought it would be masked by the smell of alcohol, right?

Even though it looks like this, the smell of medicine is amazingly distinguishable.

Why? I've experienced it horribly.

So I guarantee it. This cup contains two types of narcotic drugs.

Probably a sleeping pill or paralyzing drug. It probably has narcotic properties because it focuses only on performance.

It is a drink full of aftereffects that is not at all considerate of the person drinking it. You were holding this to drink yourself?

"You brought it to use it when you lost in the first place?"

"...."

His face turned white.

Silence fell over the noisy gambling hall.

'Drugs' is a sensitive issue that can cause people to stop visiting the gambling place itself. Everyone's eyes turned in this direction.

"That..."

The silence weighs heavily on him.

The choice made by the guy who was breaking out in a cold sweat while countless eyes were paying attention.

"What are you talking about? "Do you mean medicine?"

In a word, it was a handshake.

It's stupid to deny it when the evidence is right in front of you.

Sure enough, Ben, who was shaking with anger next to him, mercilessly announced checkmate in a heavily suppressed voice.

"Then you can try it yourself."

"...."

The game is over. I clicked my tongue as I looked at the guy who couldn't say anything and just bit his lip. Fool.

Well, if he was that stupid, he would have tried to feed something like that to someone who had a colleague.

If Ben had been caught carrying me while I was stretched out and stolen the money bag, I would have tried to attack Jim and achieve my goal, but the other person was the devil's doctor.

Oh, it doesn't really make sense when you say he's a doctor, but I'll correct that and say he's a berserker.

A berserker from the Demon King's Castle. Doesn't he look like a shrewd person even when he pretends to be? Using such a shallow trick against him is ridiculous from this perspective.

I pushed the chair and slowly stood up.

Anyway, I made a lot of money and I didn't drink any alcohol, so I didn't really lose anything.

I didn't want to make the problem any bigger, so I was about to leave without saying a word...

but it was a mess!

The incident happened even faster than that.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 22

22. The veil lifted (5)

“You guy!!”

At first I thought Ben had had an accident.

I thought it was well deserved since he was very thorough when it came to my ‘health’ and had the aspect of a berserker, but what I heard next instilled doubt in my thoughts.

“mile! “I told you never to do such a dirty thing again!”

hmm? Did Ben even know that guy’s name?

Now that I think about it, the voice seems to be quite different.

There’s no way the transformation would have arrived just then...

I glanced back.

‘...Ben is here, right?’

Although he is still fuming with anger, the person standing calmly behind me is clearly Ben.

That means that the person who grabbed the druggie named 'Miles' by the collar was a completely different person.

Craddangtangtang!

Wow, it seems like we already know each other, but they are really merciless.

'To throw it into the world?!'

The man who had been excitedly holding and shaking the collar seemed to catch his breath, then turned his head and looked this way.

I was inwardly shocked as I looked pitifully at the druggie who was stuck in the corner with his face distorted like that of a demon, but that only lasted for a moment.

The guy immediately softened his expression and spoke carefully with an expression of regret on his face.

"My friend made a big mistake. "I apologize."

"No, well... it's okay."

"no. I almost got in real trouble. I thought it would never happen again after it happened to me once. sorry. "I need to make some kind of compensation..."

I'm really fine.

I just want to quickly go back and rest while counting the gold coins I won today.

So, no matter what was offered, I quickly rejected it and tried to go back, but...

“Oh, you said you like alcohol, right? Coincidentally, there is a bar on the second floor here. “I’ll buy some alcohol there.”

“!”

“You can drink as much as you want.”

Stand tall.

All action stopped. Can not help it. Because this is like an instinct.

“As much as you want?”

“Yes, as much as you want.”

“....”

This is force majeure.

“Daemon...?”

As if sensing something ominous, Ben cautiously calls me.

Hot Only then did I barely come to my senses.

no. Ed said so much, but I have to endure it.

I have to endure it for the sake of Ben, who is following me so diligently. You have to be patient. Don’t be deceived by the devil’s whispers like that....

“It’s a pure apology, so there’s no need to feel burdened. “If you feel burdened, it would be good if you could at least give me some know-how on how to get it.”

“I don’t have the know-how.”

“Ah, wasn’t it too much to dig up know-how from the first meeting?”

no. It’s not because it’s my first time meeting, it’s really not like that.

“Then let’s start by getting to know each other first.”

A voice with a strange sense of playfulness that makes you feel more friendly.

I thought as I watched his eyes twinkle playfully.

This kid is a player.

It is obvious that he is good at attracting people.

A normal person would naturally like it, but it doesn’t work for me, who knows everything!

‘I thought...’

When I came to my senses, I found myself on the second floor, holding hands with him.

I got hit! why?!

What on earth is a bastard like me doing to suffer this even though he knows it?

The overwhelming sense of shame made me want to rip my hair out. Of course, my head is precious, so I replaced execution with clenching and unclenching my fist.

“What are you thinking about?”

“...nothing.”

no. When I think about it carefully, it makes sense. Because it's been a long time since I drank alcohol.

Especially for someone who likes alcohol like me, it was worth skipping.

So, I guess I should drink some alcohol so I don't fall for this trick again...

"Daemon..."

"Ugh."

I was so blinded by alcohol that I forgot the existence of the disruptor.

I broke into a cold sweat as I looked at Ben with his earnest expression.

If he had been more forceful and fussed with me, at least I wouldn't have felt any remorse, but seeing him look at me with such a docile expression makes my conscience prick.

In fact, it's even scarier.

Therefore, I tried to compromise as carefully as I could, keeping an eye on his feelings for fear that his feelings would be greatly hurt.

"I'll just have one drink."

"...."

"I won't get drunk."

"It's up to you..."

“Yes! Isn’t it okay as long as you don’t get drunk? “Why don’t you have a drink there too?”

“...That’s it.”

A heavy sigh fell on the table.

Although he didn’t show it, I secretly flinched.

Is it still not possible? Judging by Ben’s reaction, he seems rather offended.

I gained nothing and lost favor. It’s the worst.

A sigh escaped me. Ben, who must have heard that again, trembles and stares at me.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

The one who should sigh is this side, but the look in his eyes seems to be asking why you are sighing.

I felt out of breath for some reason and took a deep breath again without realizing it, and he slowly spoke in a slightly trembling voice.

“Just... one drink.”

“yes?”

“It may be disappointing, but it would be better to plan for the next time. sorry.”

It took some time to understand what he said.

Did I hear correctly that the guy who I thought would never give permission is giving me permission? Could it be that my ears heard what they wanted to hear?

After going through several procedures in my head to confirm that what he said was true, I answered with joy in my mind, barely able to hide my excitement.

“yes.”

at las!

I sat down at the table, humming a song in my head.

As I was about to check the menu, the guy who looked at me and Ben back and forth as if he was interested raised his hand and called for someone.

“Everything on the menu, one by one.”

I fucking love you.

When I asked if this was too much of a waste, he said that if there were any leftovers, he would give them to his friends.

Where else in the world can there be an angel like this?

The drinks came out quickly.

I ignored Ben’s concerned gaze and excitedly looked through the bottles. And I suddenly became depressed.

‘I can’t believe I can only taste one of these many things.’

And that’s not just one bottle, it’s one glass.

You can take the extreme approach of mixing them together, but then it is difficult to feel the unique taste of the alcohol.

I couldn't end a long-awaited drink in an ambiguous way like that, so I grabbed this and then that again, feeling like I was going to cry.

That must have been frustrating.

"Hmm... If it's hard to choose, should I make a recommendation?"

"yes?"

"If you like bitter taste, this is it. If you like a clean aftertaste, this is it. If you like sweet things, this is it. If you like something that feels soft on your neck, this is it. And..."

The explanation continued endlessly.

'Hey... you bastard...'

Isn't that amazing?!

This guy also seems to like drinking quite a bit.

Somehow, feeling glad to see him, I listened to his long words in silence until the end with a satisfied expression.

Next to me, Ben looked tired, but whatever.

For me now, this choice is like the choice of a lifetime. The opportunity I was given after such a long time was too precious to make a hasty choice because of his insight.

After much deliberation, I finally chose one and finally held the glass in my hand. How was the liquid flowing inside so bright?

Since I couldn't promise when I would be able to drink it again, I was sipping it with tears in my eyes, when the guy who was drinking with me suddenly opened his mouth.

"Is it a little noisy?"

"hmm?"

"There are a lot of rough guys, so they get into fights whenever they drink."

"...ah."

People punching each other on one side.

But aren't fights normal in bars? When I tilt my head and look at him again, he narrows one eye and points somewhere with his finger.

There were two people there, grappling with their brutality.

"Do you want to bet on which of the two will win? Oh, of course, my brother is next to me."

"I'm done."

"Don't take it out."

He smiles slyly and gently gives Ben a shoulder hug.

Only then did I know what his intention was.

A drink that refills a half-empty glass.

He narrowed his gaze by crossing his shoulders and poured me another drink.

It might be an insult to demons, but I couldn't help but feel this way.

'It's impossible for there to be such angelic demons in the world.'

As I hurriedly emptied my glass, it was filled again.

Drink again, refill again, drink again, refill.

How many times did that repeat?

—My memory was interrupted.

***

The smile is innocent, but the red eyes are clear.

The expression was relaxed, but the movements were as tight as ever.

Dangerous.

My instincts sound the alarm. I felt like I was frozen for a moment due to the fear that overtook my whole body and I couldn't even lift a finger.

Ben barely came to his senses when he emptied three bottles of alcohol and drank half more.

As if the frozen time had been broken, I finally came to my senses and lowered my gaze.

He must have been shaking. The hands under the table were still shaking intermittently.

'I couldn't stop it.'

Even though I was able to stop him the first time he seemed drunk, I just watched him until he downed three and a half bottles of alcohol.

Because at that time, my strongest instinct was warning me of danger.

It's definitely the most easy-going moment on the outside, but why?

However, Ben, who had been fighting with the Demon King for a long time, knew well that trusting your senses rather than your eyes was more helpful in extending your lifespan.

That's why I couldn't say anything while watching my patient pour a new drink.

"Ha haha...."

Because I drank alcohol without any snacks, the red eyes that were clear at first became a little blurry.

He rubs his face against the table and laughs brightly. As a result, one of the bottles lined up next to me fell over.

'...I think the number of empty bottles has increased recently?'

As expected, there are four bottles lined up in a row.

A total of five, including those who fell and rolled on the table.

I can't believe I just emptied more bottles. Even if this is fast, isn't it too fast?

The stiff feel has softened a little. It means that the most dangerous moment has passed.

Still, Ben didn't relax. It's only eased a little, but it hasn't completely disappeared.

His touch, which was still aimed at the person in front of him, was now telling him that he needed to be nervous in a different way.

just as expected.

"Are you the enemy?"

"no."

"Then you are the enemy?"

"Not even him."

"Who is the enemy?"

"Not here now."

"Are you an enemy?"

"no."

The drinking began.

He said he wouldn't get drunk....

Ben quietly covered his face. Meanwhile, the demon's questions were being repeated again and again, making it even more miserable.

I gave permission for no reason. An overwhelming feeling of regret came over me. The way he was sighing made me feel like he was going to do something if I wasn't careful, so I just closed my eyes and allowed him to have a drink.

‘It shouldn’t have been allowed.’

The Devil’s Joker. Demon Arut, the proud commander of the 0th Corps of the Demon King’s Army, who killed the last warrior.

The same questions and answers had been repeated endlessly for 20 minutes already.

Some people may ask why we pay so much attention to this person who is so drunk that he is wandering around.

But I can only say that because I don’t know anything about him.

Yes, it looks easy. It might seem pointless. Then, why don’t you try to answer that question in the affirmative?

The question ‘Are you the enemy?’

If you can’t answer or say yes, the Commander of Corps 0 suddenly changes as if he’s never laughed and starts running at you with a dagger.

In such cases, if the injuries were at least severe, the body would be so tattered that it would be unrecognizable.

So how can you not be nervous?

In particular, if such a situation occurs here, it is difficult to handle it.

‘Fortunately, it’s still at level 1...’

His drunkenness is divided into three stages.

Step 1: Question, Step 2: Suspicion, Step 3: Investigation.

If you deny the question 'Are you an enemy?' in step 1, it will just be skipped.

In the second stage, this is followed by the question 'Why?' If you don't answer correctly at that time, the attack will begin.

Stage 3 can be seen as just the beginning of the massacre.

To give an easy example, the question 'Why?' is answered with 'Daemon is the Demon Lord. So do I. So let's say you express the opinion that 'we are not enemies'.

In step 2, we just skip it, but in step 3, we ask ourselves, 'Why is that? 'He could be a betrayer or a spy, right?' And I ask again.

How can you answer that other than simply denying it? If you become speechless due to the absurdity or repeat simple denials, they will attack you and say, 'You are the enemy after all,' and it will drive you crazy.

'It will never go as far as level 3.'

With that in mind, I made up my mind and stopped Demon's hand from reaching for a new bottle.

The cloudy red eyes roll over and take in me.

What is contained there is clear dissatisfaction.

It's not life or anger, it's just dissatisfaction. Nevertheless, Ben, who froze for a moment like a mouse in front of a cat, swallowed his saliva and barely opened his mouth.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 23

23. The veil lifted (6)

"Stop eating."

"Are you an enemy?"

"no."

"Can't I drink it?"

"Yes no. "You've had enough."

"Not even one sip?"

"It's not possible."

He resolutely removed all the liquor bottles from the table and stood up.

The man, who had been bombarded with repeated questions, awkwardly scratched his head and looked at his thoughts.

"Uh... I didn't know it would be like this, but I'm sorry..."

"I'm glad you know that."

"Haha..."

He couldn't help but look at Ben's eyes.

In fact, isn't the problem caused by him offering alcohol?

Ben knew that too, so he glared at him, but it had already happened. I let out a deep sigh, as if resigned, and racked my brain over how to resolve this.

'Should I call Ed too?'

No matter how you think about it, that's the best. I need to bring some corps members as well so that we can quickly prevent any unexpected accidents. "

There is no

communication seat..."

When I thought about it, I didn't bring it with me.

Ben, the attending physician, rarely left his room in the Demon King's Castle.

The only thing that happens is when Demon's condition worsens and he rushes out. In that case, there was no time to take the communication seat, so for Ben, the presence of the communication seat was almost like air.

You just have to be conscious to know its existence.

Of course, I took it with me as part of my cheap luggage when I left the castle, but it would still be buried somewhere in my luggage, just as I had packed it with me.

It was a mistake that Ben made not only because he did not take care of the communication seat well, but also because he did not think that he would be separated from his deputy, Edgar Daemon.

“...Do you have a communication seat?”

“Yes? no?”

“....”

“But the owner here probably still has it.”

“...is it.”

Ben looked back and forth between the man, who was laughing awkwardly, and the demon, who was still rubbing his cheek against the table.

I couldn't drag around the commander of the 0th Corps who had become incompetent, and I was anxious about leaving him behind... Regardless of my concerns, I had decided what to do in the end.

Wow.

I grabbed the man by the collar.

The guy's embarrassed face filled my field of vision.

“Brother tongue? “Why is this happening all of a sudden?”

“Take care. “I knew that if I did something foolish, I would die.”

“Oh, well, if you're going to do that, you can say it kindly... Oh!”

“The reason I respected you was because this person showed favor to you. But if you can't even repay that, why should I respect you?”

“Who says they don’t?”

The man looked at Ben with a bewildered expression as he walked away as if he had heard the answer and that was enough.

I had no intention of touching it anyway. I just saw an opportunity and tried to sneak into the money bag.

Isn’t this also included as a ‘foolish trick’?

Isn’t it cute compared to taking drugs?

If Miles’ plan had been successful in the first place, he wouldn’t have had to come forward.

‘It’s definitely my job to clean up after the damn bastard.’

If you get angry before someone else gets angry, your anger will subside.

In particular, the stronger the intensity, the more the anger disappears and its place is replaced by embarrassment, and the man saved his friend from danger several times using this method.

The other person, who has no way of knowing that he is going to hit and throw it painlessly, is embarrassed, and he approaches the other person with the excuse of apologizing on his behalf and steals their money.

Anyway, considering that he is going to eat it instead of the one who saved him from a failed food crisis, and Miles has nothing to say, it is not a bad deal considering that it is annoying.

But something is a little strange about this opponent.

Did you feel a sense of discomfort?

Originally, I didn't plan on drinking this much.

Just then, when we were going up to the second floor with our arms around each other's shoulders, I tried to sneak some money, but...

'I felt bad.'

So I gave him alcohol until he got drunk.

The money was a little broken, but as long as I could get my hands on the money pouch on his waist, it wouldn't be that much of a loss, so he spoke and acted without hesitation.

And now.

A man with white hair and red eyes is putting his head down on the table.

It seems completely defenseless to anyone, but why?

'Why do I still feel out of place?'

But we can't put it off any longer.

In order to separate the guards, he deliberately pretended that there was no communication seat, but if he still couldn't steal it, his reputation in this world would be damaged.

Now is the perfect moment as the parties involved are lying around like a piece of cake and the unlucky escort has gone to borrow a communication seat.

Because this was an opportunity that would never happen again, the man became more alert than ever and secretly and quickly moved his hand to his waist. and.

Wow.

“!”

Caught.

The man looked down at his captured wrist with an expression of not understanding what had happened.

Wrists held securely.

As I move my gaze along the white hand holding my wrist, I see a face standing up and smiling brightly.

“Are you the enemy?”

“...no.”

I barely licked my lips.

My mind had already been in chaos for a long time.

how? Even if it looks like this, I can confidently say that my manual skills are excellent.

How did they know and catch it because they did something illegal? Should I take it away by force?

As I was thinking that, it seemed like it was suddenly getting noisy outside.

Deeng- Deeng- Deeng-

The bells signaling the attack began to ring.

“Is it a monster?”

“It’s time to strike.”

There was no agitation.

After all, there are different people who are tasked with protecting the castle.

But the problem is there. His escort rushed over as if he had finished communicating.

Seeing him getting closer in an instant, the man narrowed his eyebrows.

Damn the money was gone.

“Daemon, wake up! “It’s a monster!”

“Hmm, are you an enemy?”

“Your monsters are enemies.”

As Ben answered, he inwardly breathed a sigh of relief.

I probably shouldn’t say this, but the timing was good.

Even though he was very drunk, if he did not see satisfactory blood flow, the Commander of Corps 0 would move on to the next level of drunkenness without having to drink any more.

In such a situation, it was a monster attack at the right time.

“Ed and the others will be waiting outside. “Let’s go down.”

Ben, who referred to the 0 Corps members as ‘the rest’, hurriedly helped Demon.

I wanted to go down to the first floor as soon as possible, but the atmosphere was strange.

People in the bar got up from their seats one by one.

Ben's expression slowly hardened as anyone could see that their actions of secretly blocking the stairs did not have very good intentions.

In the meantime, our 0 Corps Commander Demon was still smiling.

"Are you the enemy?"

"It looks like both medicine and pickpocketing failed. "So these guys are our prey, right?"

"...."

The man frowns but closes his mouth as if he has nothing to say.

When no one answered his question, Deon slowly tilted his head and opened his mouth again.

"Are you the enemy?"

"Kick then, I'll take it as a positive, so don't say anything else later."

"...."

"Enemy?"

When there is still no answer, the laughter deepens. At the same time, the voice also gained strength.

Anyway, he's a drunk guy. There is only one colleague.

A sneer remained on their lips.

“Well, if you give me the money from your waist, I can just be a customer in the bar.”

Everyone clearly saw how much they had won at the gambling house.

Unfortunately, most of the people inside the gambling hall are familiar with each other.

They sometimes rob the pockets of popular customers as if competing with each other, and sometimes work together to steal money.

There was no way they would just let someone who had swept away a mountain of gold coins go.

There are only two of them and they are very easy prey.

But has reason been paralyzed by fear?

“Puh huh....”

“?”

“Hahahaha! Ahahahahahaha! Hehehehe....”

The white-haired man started laughing like crazy.

He threw his head back and burst into laughter, but at some point he stopped laughing and said with a straight face.

The dagger was spinning in his hand, not knowing when he had taken it out.

“It’s the enemy.”

***

Jeopuk. Jerk.

The sound of old wooden stairs being crushed is heard overlapping with the sound of heavy footsteps.

A man with white hair, or rather red-haired now, with a money pouch on his waist was leisurely coming down to the first floor.

Even though the money bag was so openly visible, everyone on the first and second floors could not stop him. No, I couldn't even get close.

Those who saw his cruelty in front of their eyes were terrified, and those who could not see it were driven mad by the sight of the demon smiling while covered in blood.

Among them, the man who had witnessed all of this before his eyes and who had even been drinking was standing there shaking as if he had been nailed to death.

It is not because there was a massacre.

He only killed one person.

but.

'For killing so cruelly.'

Everything happened in an instant.

Just when I thought the white-haired man who was laughing vainly was moving his body, almost at the same time, a dagger was dug into the shoulder of the guy who was giggling first.

fast.

Before that thought occurred to me, the man lowered his dagger. Blood splattered across his face, accompanied by a horrifying sound like “Schak!”, but he didn’t care.

Rather, he severed the muscles in both arms, rendering them unable to resist, and then began chopping up the opponent with a maniacal smile as if he was thirsting for blood.

Regardless of the face, stomach, arms or legs, he just smiled and slashed down without hesitation, as if he were cutting a knife into the ground. The sight was so cruel.

When he stopped, his once pure white hair had turned red.

And the man could see why he had stopped.

‘Because I couldn’t get any more tattered.’

A corpse that has been torn to shreds and its original state is unrecognizable.

I couldn’t even tell when the person stopped breathing, but I instinctively knew it the moment I saw it.

‘Oh, if I attack, I’ll end up like that too.’

Those blocking the stairs seemed to have sensed this as well and began to retreat. The man nodded, looking at the path that naturally exploded.

I guess so. I died after feeling all the pain that can be felt while alive.

Since we are living beings, it is natural to prefer to die as painlessly as possible. At least no one would want to die that way.

In suffocating silence, a man walks down the stairs holding a dagger dripping with blood. A person who appeared to be an escort was following behind him, but it didn't bother him much anymore.

Because he is just a formal escort.

Or perhaps it was playing a role in controlling the sleeping beast so that it would not wake up.

I walked after him as if I was possessed.

Of course, I didn't follow closely. I followed him as far as I could, just enough to keep him in sight.

And what caught my eye were the people on the first floor who were desperately trying to avoid the situation even though they probably didn't see the situation on the second floor.

Of course, there will be people who secretly stole it. However, it is clear that such people are very few. Look at this atmosphere.

'It's completely taken over.'

A suffocating silence enveloped the entire building.

I got goosebumps.

By killing just one person, that man overturned the numerical difference and brought the momentum to his side.

Was it instinct or intention?

Well, either way, it's the same thing, but what does it matter now?

The atmosphere was quieter than ever, but it felt like the eve of a storm, and the man couldn't move any further and just closed his eyes.

"I sobered up."

"So...is that so?"

Ben answered with a shocked expression.

If anyone were to witness something like that or do it themselves, it would be sobering. Rather, it would be amazing to see that much blood and still be drunk and half-asleep.

I didn't mind the shortened words. Because this doesn't happen once or twice.

The Commander of Corps 0 used to speak informally whenever he was drinking or seriously entering a battle.

Deon runs his finger over the blood on the dagger and heads for the door. Then, as if he had discovered something, he stopped for a moment and looked somewhere.

"Hi!"

Mile, who was hiding in the corner, hurriedly retreated.

Our eyes met!

I wish it was just my mood, but the man covered in blood was clearly looking at me with his shiny red eyes.

As soon as I felt my life threatened, regret washed over me like a tidal wave.

‘I’m crazy. Even if you get caught, why do it to a guy like that!’

There was no way Ben couldn’t have seen the 0 Corps commander’s gaze directed at him.

The crazy guy who dared offer Demon a drugged drink.

If I didn’t know, I wouldn’t know, but I have no intention of forgiving it since it caught my eye.

However...

Ben narrowed his eyebrows and said.

“There is no need to waste your time on a guy like that. If you just tell me, I will...”

“No.”

“....”

Deon cut off Ben’s words at once and slowly turned around and approached Miles.

Although he was clearly walking slowly, he arrived right in front of us in an instant, slowly bent down on his knees in front of him, looked at him, and smiled.

“You weakling.”

“yes yes!”

“If you don’t want to die...”

“....”

“Give me all the remaining medicine.”

“...yes?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 24

24. The Veil Lifted (7)

Ed, who was waiting for his boss to come out outside the building, was momentarily speechless at the situation unfolding before his eyes.

Because what on earth happened inside?

I looked blankly at him casually brushing up his blood-soaked hair, then quickly turned my gaze to check inside the building.

The intention was to check how many people had been killed, but what caught my eye was an unexpected scene.

‘There’s no body...?’

Obviously, if that amount of blood was spilled, it would have been a massacre.

Although there is a strange silence, at least there are no corpses visible on the first floor through the window.

In the end, Ed had no choice but to ask directly, so he stuttered and opened his mouth.

“What happened... No, the blood on my body before that...”

“It’s not Demon’s blood.”

Ben gave the answer. Ed got angry for a moment.

Do you think I’m asking because I don’t know that?

If you couldn’t even tell whether the blood on your body was yours or someone else’s, you wouldn’t have come up here in the first place.

Therefore, the moment I gritted my teeth and was about to speak again, Ben’s expression caught my eye.

A tired expression.

This is the expression seen mainly by those who have seen Daemon’s battle in person.

Because I often made that expression myself, I was able to quickly figure out what it meant.

‘ah.’

‘Yes, that. ‘I don’t know.’

I was so absorbed in the peace that I forgot about it for a while.

0The combat style of the corps commander.

Is there any way to come up with an answer since we have compared it to an ordinary battle without taking into account his fighting style, which is significantly different from that of other corps commanders?

How could you forget that?

Deon, ignoring Ed's dumbfounded expression, wipes the blood splattered on his cheek with his palm and sticks out his tongue to gently lick it.

And Ed was frightened by the abnormal smile on his face and the red eyes that were starting to show madness again, so he took out his handkerchief and held it out.

"Wipe with this."

"There's no need to do that. 'Weren't you going to fight anyway?'"

"Isn't the blood blocking your vision? 'Please at least wipe your face.'"

"Hmm."

Fortunately, there were no further rejections.

Ed, who looked anxiously at his superior who obediently took a handkerchief and wiped his face, straightened his posture, thinking that he had to get to the battlefield quickly before something happened.

"...I think we should hurry and get to the wall. 'They say the scale itself is different this time.'"

"I guess that doesn't matter. 'The important thing is, 'Do monsters have emotions?'"

"There definitely is."

"I know."

No, it's here.

A laughing comment flowed out, asking if I was being too stubborn.

Although the words were clearly filled with laughter and playfulness, Ed immediately bowed his waist instead of lowering his stern expression, as if he had not been told to be stubborn for no reason.

—When he first became the adjutant of Commander 0 Corps and when he first showed himself like this, Ed was extremely confused.

It's definitely the same thing. But it's different.

He pondered for a while, not knowing what attitude to take and how to deal with his superior, whose personality was completely opposite to what he had shown so far. He came to such a simple conclusion that it was a waste of time to worry.

There was no need to worry in the first place.

All I had to do was match his attitude.

Changing your personality does not change you as a person. Since the memories are still intact, you can just think of yourself as dealing with an extremely capricious being.

And it was right to treat the current 0 Corps commander with a more thorough attitude than ever.

If you treat him loosely and go against his will, 'he' won't forgive you.

“sorry.”

“it's okay. So what about my weapon?”

“Here it is.”

He held out several daggers and sheaths that could be worn on the body.

Deon accepted them as if he was used to them and began to wear them one by one.

Wearing a total of six daggers, crossed on both thighs and two daggers on his back, he looked at the robe and cloak in Ed’s hands one last time, then picked up the cloak.

“The opponent is not human, so there is no need for a robe.”

fluttering.

A black cloak flutters loudly.

Deon, who was walking while checking to see if anything was missing, stopped for a moment and glanced back.

The demons inside the building are looking at us with dumbfounded faces.

I can hear a voice vaguely mentioning the Commander of Corps 0, so it seems like they have figured out their identity.

‘Well, it doesn’t really matter.’

As he watched them each dodge away as soon as they made eye contact, he immediately smiled and turned around.

Before I knew it, there was a madness in the red eyes that made me feel like I could smell something fishy just by looking at them.

In contrast, Deon, with a cheerful smile on his face, pulled out the dagger from his waist and put it away.

“let’s go.”

***

I opened my closed eyes.

Although it is clumsy, you can see the soldiers lined up in their own rows.

When I expanded my view a little further, what I saw was the endless sky stretching out behind me.

In a moment, I stared at the clear sky, unbecoming a battlefield where a feast of slaughter would take place, and then lowered my gaze again.

‘I’ was standing on the podium.

‘I’ said, looking at the soldiers who were hiding their fear, tension, anxiety and dissatisfaction with a sour expression.

“The vanguard is largely divided into two categories.”

He extended two fingers towards those who silently raised their heads.

“One is a true vanguard that breaks through traps with great power, tramples on enemies, and raises the morale of allies. The other is the so-called meat shield, which detects traps with its body and offsets the attacks of powerful enemies. If I had to guess, we’d say it’s the latter.”

The guys gritting their teeth are reflected in the field of vision.

You might want to refute it. You might want to shout no and throw a bunch of curses. But I'm sure you know it well.

'I' have just become a commander from an ordinary soldier. And the soldiers improvised for that commander.

There was no one here who knew this clearly but was shameless enough to deny it.

Therefore, 'I' calmly opened my mouth to those who were silent.

"Everyone here has participated in battles, so they probably know the atmosphere of the battlefield well. I don't think anyone has forgotten. Shouts and screams heard from all over the place, the sound of weapons constantly echoing through the battlefield, the muddy ground soaked in blood and stained red. And the 'madness' that flows through all of this."

"...."

"There will be people who resisted the madness that tried to devour their minds, and there will also be people who were devoured. So, I will tell you now."

Looking at the eyes, it seems like he knows what to say.

You're probably expecting something boring like 'don't let the madness feed you'.

That's a funny thought.

'I' have survived in this crazy place so far with this absurdly weak body.

There's no way you'd get sick of words coming out of the mouth of someone like that.

"Feed the madness."

A cool silence fell.

'I' spoke, clearly showing my seething madness towards those people with surprised expressions as if they couldn't believe their ears.

Some people are shocked by the madness revealed in their eyes and facial expressions. Some people barely stopped retreating.

"But it shouldn't be eaten sloppily. Eat completely. Reason is enough to distinguish between enemy and enemy."

The phrase "don't let madness eat you" applies only to knights or higher who have proper swordsmanship.

What help would it be if we maintained our senses when we couldn't even master the meager swordsmanship?

Since ancient times, wild animals must be calm to successfully hunt them, and sheep that run wild are harder to catch than gentle ones.

We were just sheep, and in my opinion, there was only one way to survive in this place full of wild beasts.

"Do not create a whole corpse. Even if you judge it to be dead, do not stop chopping it up; cut open its abdomen and scoop out its internal organs. "It stops when you decide it can't get any more tattered."

The look in your eyes says you're fed up.

It's not funny that it's just words, but it makes me think.

If you stand on the battlefield with this clumsy mentality, a hundred people will die.

I didn't become the leader because I wanted to, but since I was in this position, I had no intention of letting the soldiers under me die.

It's not about responsibility. 'I' lost all my troops and was worried about the disadvantages that would result.

What is left for a commander who has lost all his troops?

If you're a guy like me who doesn't have a back, your head will definitely be blown off.

How did you survive this far? I just have to die because of those bastards?

"You guys seem to have forgotten where you are. Come to your senses!"

I can't admit it because it's unfair.

Eyes wide in surprise turn to me.

'I' stared straight into each of those eyes and shouted in an evil voice.

"Do you think the enemies will swing their swords while considering the opponent? If you shout out that you were forcibly taken there, do you think they will think that's right? If there's anyone who wants to come here and question morality, come out right away. "I will personally throw you in front of your enemies so that you can discuss morality with them!"

A cool wind blew.

I can hear the sound of sand being swept away by the wind. I could hear fallen leaves rolling around and tree branches shaking.

Silence fell on the open plain so that all these sounds could be heard.

“We are weak. And this is a battlefield where the weak are eliminated. “How many ways do you think we can do to survive in a place like this?”

Haven’t you realized yet that you’re in no position to call hot or cold?

It was a reprimand in that sense.

‘I’ continued speaking slowly, with no answer coming back, not sure if I understood or not.

“As far as I know, there is only one method that can be used by those of us who cannot fight or leave the battle.

— 「Psychological Warfare」 .”

It’s about instilling ‘fear’ in your enemies.

Don’t let them attack you carelessly. So that you cannot aim your sword carelessly.

So how should we instill fear?

“A feeling of foreignness. Make me feel different. The sense of heterogeneity on the battlefield will eventually lead to fear, no matter what process it takes. Fear will dull the enemy’s hands and feet, ultimately preventing him from using his skills properly. “We’re going to slit that guy’s head.”

Yes, we become hyenas on the battlefield.

Don’t think I’m a coward. Is cowardice a big part of what we do to survive?

Now, I think it’s time to discuss how to make people feel different, but if that happens, the story goes back to the beginning.

“There are only a few ways to create a sense of heterogeneity in this limited space called a battlefield. In fact, there is only one thing we can do. First, let me tell you everything—”

He held up his arm, which was carefully wrapped in white bandages all the way to the fingertips.

“On a battlefield full of people covered in blood and dust, you can stay clean without a single speck of dust or blood.”

This time, he fluttered the white cloak he had been specially given.

“Or covered in enough blood to stand out among the bloody and dusty crowd.”

Since we have to roll around on the floor to avoid the sword right now, there is no way we can keep it clean, so there is only one method that can be used in the end.

‘I’ laughed as I looked at the silent soldiers with even darker faces, probably realizing that they had no choice.

It was a laugh that, even thinking about it, gave off the fishy smell of blood.

“We are covered in blood. It shows a brutal hand that even those who are accustomed to war can compete with. He smiles and swings his sword in a way that sends shivers down my spine just by looking at him. Also, it would be good to show that you are delighted with the enemy.”

In one word, be consumed by madness.

Anyone who runs away becomes a target.

However, a crazy person who attacks with his eyes closed becomes an object of avoidance.

“I’ll say it again. We cannot be the ‘true vanguard.’”

“....”

“But I don’t want to be a meat shield either. So we’re similar but we take different paths.”

Did I mention that a true vanguard raises the spirit of our troops?

Then we...

“We bring down the enemy’s momentum.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 25

25. The Veil Lifted (8)

“We bring down the strength of our enemies.”

Only then did the soldiers' expressions change to faces of understanding.

‘I’ laughed, revealing the madness that had subsided for a while.

A requiem for our enemies who will leave no intact corpse behind.

If you roll on the floor and get dirty in a fight, you will wash it off with blood.

Obsess over your enemies and go crazy for blood.

Because that will be the only way for us to live.

“Fear your enemies.”

The cruel hands evoke fear in those who see them.

Anxiety that something like that might happen to me and fear of the pain to come. And the fear I feel as I imagine myself in the future, unable to maintain an intact body.

These emotions will lead to hesitation, and hesitation will hold you back from moving forward.

“Of course it will be difficult at first. “It’s not like you can escape from madness at will, and you might go crazy.”

“....”

“If you’re having a hard time staying sober, you can rely on alcohol and drugs. “As long as you don’t get caught, survival in the present is more important than punishment later.”

Ah, that’s the look in your eyes that says, ‘Are you still a commander?’

I don’t really care.

Because I didn’t want to be a commander or something.

Therefore, he was able to say things without hesitation that a normal commander would not have said.

“It is the empire that has put us in such a dangerous situation, so we will not shout slogans such as ‘Glory to the Empire’.”

Unless the superiors are directly watching, this is the slogan of our unit from now on.

Magical words that make you feel less guilty no matter what you do.

A dirty but most useful statement that shows the end of the rationalization that will justify our future actions.

“Everything for survival.”

***

I blinked blankly.

A ceiling that was unfamiliar but somehow felt like I had seen it before caught my eye.

Only then did I realize that this was a city and that the room I was lying in was the room given by the manager, so I slowly got up.

‘...dream?’

I had a dream.

I think it was a dream with some incredible content, but ironically, I don’t remember it very well.

In fact, I didn’t even have time to think about the dream again.

As soon as I opened my eyes, I felt that my mouth was wet and that someone was wiping my mouth with a handkerchief. As soon as I realized that it was blood, I started shaking my body and spitting out the blood that had accumulated inside me.

“Uweeeeeek!” Wow! “Kuhhhhhhh.”

It was truly close to a seizure.

Ed, who was wiping away the blood next to him, panicked and quickly held up the bucket.

And then, perhaps because she was so embarrassed, she forgot that Ben had a magic stone necklace and ran out of the room, saying she would call him. As expected, they ran into each other right away, and not long after, she and Ben came in side by side, holding each other's collars.

It's not an illusion. It wasn't because I was in pain that I saw something in vain.

They really came in holding each other by the collar.

'What are you doing?'

I am speechless due to the absurdity.

In fact, the correct answer is that even if I wanted to say it, I couldn't.

"Keuheuk weeeeeek!"

How can one speak when blood is pouring out at the rate of filling a bucket?

Anyway, the two of them let go of my collar and approached me, as if they had made a promise, as if seeing me like that was so unusual.

"Excuse me, Demon."

Ed wipes the blood running down my chin and Ben examines my body.

When Ben said he would check for blood, Ed showed good sense by tipping the bucket.

When they came in with their hands and feet clashing like that, why did they come in holding each other by the collar?

Ben, who looked at the magic stone and checked the soggy lump of blood while pressing various parts of my body, stood up and said,

“The treatment was all completed while you were lying down. What is coming out now is the blood that had accumulated inside. “You don’t have to worry too much because you are just spitting out useless bad blood.”

What do you mean by treatment?

What on earth happened while I was drunk?!

It was Ed who opened his mouth on behalf of me, who was coughing up blood without even knowing why.

“Now that I think about it, you hit it pretty hard. “You were thrown 2 meters, so it’s natural that the internal bleeding was severe.”

“Yes, it was a whopping 2m.”

As expected, Ben gave the answer.

He spoke with a lot of sarcasm, as if he still had the bad feelings from when he grabbed me by the collar when he came in.

“What on earth was the adjutant doing until Demon-sama did that?”

“...Ha, you, Demon-sama, is coughing up blood like this, so why didn’t you come quickly to prepare something?”

“I remember saying that the treatment was already over! Are you suspicious of me, the Demon Lord’s personal doctor?!”

“But you didn’t rush over to me when you were vomiting so much blood like never before! Oh, is it really because you are not the Demon King that you are so negligent?”

“You!”

Ben grabs Ed by the collar. Not to be outdone, Ed also grabbed Ben by the collar.

Feeling the vomiting slowly subside, I looked at the two with a confused expression.

‘I don’t care if you two fight or not, so why don’t you explain what that ‘jumped 2m’ incident is?’

What on earth did I do after drinking to make you say things like internal bleeding and all that?

Ah, the bleeding has finally stopped.

I spat out the last of the blood that had accumulated in my mouth and raised my head. The two people who read the sight with astonishment turned their heads at the same time and looked at me.

I barely stopped myself from pulling back under that burdensome gaze and spoke firmly in my own way.

“Let me explain first. “Everything since I got drunk.”

How would you feel if the absurd thing of getting drunk and losing your mind and waking up to find that everything was over came true?

There is no feeling at all.

It’s just ridiculous.

“...So you’re saying that I drank a lot of alcohol and happily ran out and fought against the monsters that attacked at the right time?”

“That’s right.”

“In the process, I hit a monster and fell 2 meters.”

“Exactly.”

“ .... ”

So, to put it in one word....

‘You’re crazy.’

Yeah, it’s crazy.

Where on earth did you put your mind, a bastard like me?
You ran out when hiding behind wasn’t enough?

It would be better if I heard it wrong, but looking at their expressions, the possibility of that converges to zero.

Look at those bright eyes.

In fact, the explanation was almost entirely about my saga.
It felt so burdensome to praise it so highly and say it was truly amazing.

Of course, such sagas were arbitrarily filtered out. Because there must have been some misunderstanding.

The important thing is that while I was drunk, I almost got hit by a monster and went to hell.

Nevertheless, I thought there was no problem at the time because I got up and fought just fine, but they say I collapsed as soon as the battle was over.

‘No, then. ‘I got hit by a monster with the intention of attacking me and was sent flying 2 meters. Do you think I’ll be okay?’

Anyway, Ben hurriedly checked and saw that my insides were all messed up, so he gave me first aid on the spot and then moved me to the room to completely treat me... I wonder how Ed must have felt since I started bleeding as soon as I woke up.

If my immediate superior dies, the responsibility will fall on me, so it was worth running out while shouting in my head, ‘You quack!’

As a result, as soon as he encountered Ben in the hallway, Ed grabbed him by the collar, saying, ‘What on earth are you doing, procrastinating?’ and Ben, in his own way, grabbed Ed by the collar, saying, ‘How dare you leave a patient alone?’

Of course, my condition came first, so they ran side by side into my room without letting go of each other’s collars, and that was the most absurd scene I saw as they were vomiting blood.

“Anyway, the monster hunt ended successfully. Afterwards, the guys got scared and ran away. “The corps members eliminated those guys as much as possible.”

“Ah yes.”

It’s nice and fortunate to hear that it’s all over... but from now on, I’ll have to stick to my drinking limit.

If I’m not careful, I’ll die without even realizing it.

‘...Now that I think about it, wasn’t my drinking limit five bottles?’

I remember it clearly because it was such a sharp drink.

A popular drink in the human world. I lost my memory after drinking exactly the last of five bottles of that quite strong alcohol.

But this time, the point at which my memory stopped was when I had less than one bottle.

‘No matter what, I don’t drink so it looks like my immunity is gone.’

Even so, it is a very extreme change, but it is not a very serious problem. There’s no need to waste your heart and brain on something that doesn’t matter.

Thinking about that, I erased any remaining doubts and fell into silence as I looked at Ed’s communication desk that had suddenly appeared in front of me.

However, after a while, I accepted the damn thing with a faint sigh.

Of course, instead of using it right away, I held it tightly in my hand and watched Ed’s thoughts first.

“...Can’t I just rest for a little while and report back?”

“It’s not possible.”

“Even 10 minutes?”

“sorry. But reporting comes first. Even so, the report has been delayed due to Demon’s injury, so it is impossible to delay further. “It will be enough to rest afterward.”

So, I don’t think I can rest now. I feel like something new will happen if I use this.

But with what power can I overcome them?

In the end, I powerlessly activated the communication seat.

I found the demon king's communication stone engraving on the list and connected it, and soon I heard the demon king's voice through the communication stone.

-uh. why.

Is your voice so different from usual? I think I got the timing wrong.

A clear voice.

I almost turned off the communication at the sound of a voice that seemed to reveal that I was uncomfortable for anyone to hear. In fact, I still had the urge to do that in real time.

But if I do that, my life will also end. There is no way to avoid it since communication is already connected.

In the end, I opened my mouth very carefully so as not to offend as much as possible.

"I am the commander of Corps 0."

-Ah oh! Demon! what's the matter? No, you've already finished your work?

Fortunately, it didn't seem to be that bad.

The voice did not resolve quickly, but rather it became brighter. As the tension eased, I also answered in a slightly relaxed voice.

"yes. "It just so happened."

-What does 'it just so happen' mean? Humility must also be appropriate. You're so fast, after all...

The devil's chatter continued with the unfamiliar Gongchisa.

And I, who was caught up in the storm of chatter and just answered 'yes, yes'...

"I was waiting."

"...Yes..."

—When I came to my senses, I found myself at the forefront of a battle with the empire.

The 1st Corps commander, wearing blood-splattered clothes, shakes hands with a faint smile.

I clasped my hands together, trying to calm my expression that had become so stiff that it would not straighten up.

Of course, the inside was a mess.

'Damn you devil bastard. 'You're so determined to kill me!'

In order to explain this situation, we must first go back to the time when we communicated with the Demon King.

The Demon King, who was chatting a lot as if relieving the stress he had accumulated so far, naturally got to the point at some point.

It was a fluid change of topic without any discomfort.

-I feel sorry for the person who just finished work, but there is one thing I would like you to do.

There was a bit of hesitation in the voice, but there was also a firm determination that he wanted it to be done.

If you're sorry, don't say it.

I swallowed the words welling up in my throat and nodded slowly.

Ah, the nod here did not mean acceptance, but was a nod towards oneself.

See, my guess is right. I can rest after the report? It sounds like a dog eating grass.

"What is?"

-I want you to go to the 1st Corps Commander to apply.

"As for the 1st Corps Commander... the front line?"

-okay. A request for emergency assistance has been received. It was said that 'real heroes', not hero candidates, participated in the war. I feel like sending other guys, but as you know, heroes and demons don't get along well, right?

My memory ended there.

I'm sure he would have accepted it. I accepted it, so I guess you're here.

Just like other times, he may have been forced to come by his position as the Demon King, but this time, I remember that it included bait that he could never refuse. So, part of my decision must have been involved in that choice.

Fearing that someone might be the devil, their tactics became more clever.

‘But a ‘new hero’. Honestly, I have no choice but to accept it.’

I can’t help but come.

A new hero I don’t even know about.

‘Of course, I came to my senses later and regretted it after I arrived, but...’

I was so distracted by the lure of a new hero that I forgot about the situation on the battlefield for a moment.

But what can I do when I’m already here? It’s less unfair to see the hero’s face while I’m already here.

When I think about it, I feel like my half-gone soul is coming back.

I gave a moderate amount of strength to the hands I was holding and smiled at 1st Corps Commander Jaykar in the same way.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 26

26. New Hero (1)

The border where the demon world and the human world meet. As such, this place where there is constant conflict with the empire is an unsafe place, commonly called the 'front line'.

1st Corps Commander Jaykar looked at 0th Corps Commander Demon Arut, who was holding his hand.

As the human world where the sun is located is right in front of us, he was wearing black robes, and the corners of his mouth were slightly raised as if he was smiling, which was rare.

'As expected, your expression becomes richer now that you're outside the Demon King's Castle.'

It must have been frustrating because you couldn't see blood in the Demon King's Castle. So, he must have always had a stiff expression on his face.

Jaykar thought to himself as he looked at his brightened face, as if he thought that he would have quenched his thirst by hunting monsters and could now enjoy a proper battle. Since I have such high expectations, I have to make sure that he participates in the battle no matter what happens.

And the thought soon became words and came out of my mouth.

“You must have heard the news that the 9th Corps commander died.”

“yes.”

“Because of that, the situation is not going well. “I would like you to join the battle as soon as it breaks out, is that okay?”

***

My name is Deonhardt.

First of all, he is an unremarkable human being who holds the undeserved position of commander of the 0th Corps of the Demon King’s army.

Honestly, this situation was burdensome. Thinking about when all the facts were revealed, I was already scared. That’s why I saved myself so much.

However, even though I was worried about the burden and repercussions, I never resented this position.

—It was like that until a little while ago.

‘Shit...’

Has there ever been a time when I resented this position as much as I did today?

I stared blankly at the black cloth wrapped around my arm with rotten eyes. This is a very familiar item to me. An enchanted cloth used when dealing with humans or when exposed to sunlight.

They said it was made by the Demon King himself using magic. What kind of magic did you say was there?

“...Was it a magic that not only blocks light but also maintains an appropriate temperature?”

“Yes, and the Demon King recently added one more feature.”

“It’s a surprise... No, yes? “What...”

“It’s an automatic repair function. He said that it would be difficult to completely tear or cause major tears, but minor scratches that occurred during the battle would be easily repaired.”

“Oh....”

I’m not happy at all.

Ed is absorbed in winding the cloth without knowing my true feelings. It was more like a black bandage than a black cloth, and it was being rolled up so damn fast.

‘You can take it a little slower...’

The words that lingered in my head and tried to come out of my mouth over and over again soon turned into a sigh filled with resignation and quietly dispersed into the air.

Okay, let’s stop.

What can I say to a guy who is so tactless? Even if I say it, my mouth only hurts. Rather, it is fortunate if it does not have an adverse effect.

This guy, if you tell him to slow down, he'll say 'What are you saying!' and start wrapping the cloth even more passionately.

"Would you like to try moving your hand?"

Before I knew it, I looked down for a moment at the black cloth that was carefully wrapped around each finger, and then clenched and unclenched my fist. The elastic fabric expands and contracts accordingly.

The moderate pressure was annoyingly good, so I nodded slowly, muttering a curse under my breath.

"It's comfortable."

"Fortunately, the. Then please hold out your other hand."

When I held out my other hand, Ed politely held my hand again and began to wrap the black cloth.

As a man obsessed with his duties as an adjutant, he was concentrating on wrapping the black cloth meticulously without leaving any gaps, instead of complaining about the weakness of his superiors who increased the workload.

When I saw that, a question suddenly occurred to me.

'Bare skin is weak enough to cause problems even if exposed to sunlight for just a short period of time. 'Isn't he annoyed?'

Annoying boss. A weak human, not even a demon.
Nevertheless, he was a fool who came all the way to the front line and put himself in danger.

I don't know what value I have for quietly following along without a single complaint.

I don't think this is something that can be overlooked simply because he has a good personality...

'Isn't this a demon?'

No, that's definitely not the case. I shook my head, recalling Ed's bare forearms that I had seen once.

Both arms were full of strange patterns. Should I call it a tattoo? In any case, it was absolutely not something humans could imitate.

"Could you please refrain from moving a little?"

"ah."

It stopped moving immediately. If the fabric is wrapped incorrectly and there is a gap, only I will lose.

At this borderline, where each other invades each other's territory several times a day, is it really possible that we will never be exposed to sunlight?

Yes, as you may have noticed, I also participated in the battlefield.

'Shit.'

Why would a guy like me be taken by such bait when he would naturally find out later anyway?...

I cursed in my mind at the cunning demon lord and remembered the conversation I had with Jaykar a little while ago.

[You must have heard the news that the 9th Corps commander died.]

Until then, I had no thoughts. I just thought, 'I heard that.' All I could think was a dull thought like, 'Maybe that's why I came to apply.'

I planned to leave the battle to Ed and the corps members and safely watch the situation from the rear.

Even the Demon King always said to fight when you wanted to, so there was no problem.

It was definitely like that...

[Because of that, the situation wasn't going well. I would like you to participate as soon as the battle breaks out, is that okay?]

I froze with my smile on my face.

I don't think this is it. Something is going wrong.

I tried to deny the ominous premonition that washed over me like a wave, and stiffly raised the corners of my mouth and asked back.

[Only the corps members, right?]

[No, you too.]

Shit.

Denying reality failed and retreating failed. How can you not curse at something like this?

I laughed out loud as I watched Ed's quick hand movements as he finished tying the knot.

This brings me closer to the day I die today. It's so rewarding that I feel like I'm going crazy.

...Shit.

"It's done. And the face..."

"Yes."

Ed picks up another cloth that was lying next to him.

The face was gone in no time.

He wrapped his nose in black cloth and then put on a robe. The robe that completely covered the eyes seemed like it would interfere with visibility, but thanks to the magic the Demon King himself placed here, there was no problem with vision.

Moreover, the hood couldn't come off unless he took it off himself, so it made me think that the devil king had nothing better to do.

'Anyway, the amount of magic power is like a monster...'

This is something he can do because he is a demon lord. If it were other demons, they wouldn't have even thought of wasting their magical power in a place like this.

The magic power of demons is limited, and the magic power consumed by magic is not recovered.

Magic is breaking the rules of the world.

It may seem like a trivial magic, but the magic that does not remove the hood defies gravity, and the magic that secures vision violates the rules set by the world that are taken for granted, allowing one to see beyond opaque objects.

As such, the price was certain. Regardless of the permanent consumption of magical power, it is said that the hero's appearance date is getting closer.

'Even though the Demon King knows this, he does this.'

How could I, who am neither a hero nor a demon lord, connect the use of magic and the appearance of a hero?

The Demon King spoke with his own mouth.

Well, the fact that they are using so much magic means that they are confident that they will win even if a hero appears.

'Well... it's none of my business.'

I stood up, fiddling with the hood that covered my eyes.

"I will take a look at the military tent to check on the body of the 9th Corps commander."

Of course it's an excuse. My original intention was to find a place to hide to pass the time.

If the battle starts, there won't be time to find me, so all you have to do is get the timing right and hide before then.

I went out with such useless hopes—

"Wow...." "

...He is the real Commander of the 0 Corps....” “....”
“Wow....” “...He is the real
Commander of the 0 Corps....”

“ ....”

—The eyes of everyone outside turned to me at the same time. I could see it clearly.

Heat blooms in the eyes of the soldiers who see me.

With morale rising steadily in real time, I quietly resigned myself to the fact that I was glad I was wearing a hood.

...It's not good to hide.

***

“Commander of Corps 0?”

The commander's military tent where all kinds of reports are piled up.

Cruel, the Empire's newly recognized hero, raised his head without realizing it. The dry, sunken eyes were aimed squarely at the soldier.

The cold and hard eyes did not match the soft yet strong title of 'Hero', but they were enough to bring victory in the war, so the soldier straightened his posture without a single doubt.

“Yes that's right. According to the scout, the morale of the Demon King's army is increasing because of this. On the other hand, our morale is...”

“...It's a pain in the ass.”

Even though he slurred the ending of his words, it doesn't mean he couldn't predict what was going on. Cruel quietly touched his forehead with an exasperated sigh.

Isn't the commander of the 0 Corps a very famous person?

The Devil's Joker. A being known to be stronger than the commander of the 1st Corps, the devil's agent.

Although it is unusually well-known, when you try to find out more about it, nothing comes out, making it even more suspicious.

If such a being were to join, the situation of the war would change in an instant.

"If the existence of Commander 0 is true, the situation will be different. "We should not think of victory, but of defeat."

"...."

"It is dangerous to fight head on."

So, is there any way to deal with him other than direct confrontation?

Actually, the answer has already been found.

Someone might have a better answer, but at least his head was screaming that this was the best way.

Nevertheless, the reason for this hesitation is because the trivial title of 'hero' is holding him back.

Without realizing it, your index finger taps the desk at regular intervals.

For a moment, only silence and a slight noise lingered in the tent. He neatly organized the documents on his desk, stacked them on one side, took out something, wrote it down, and spoke.

“I’m sending an assassin.”

“It’s very unlikely.”

The answer came from a man standing like a folding screen in a corner.

Despite the firm rebuttal, Cruel responded immediately without a change in expression, as if he had expected it.

“If the skills of Commander 0 Corps are real, then yes.”

“....”

“But what if Commander 0’s skills were inflated? Or, he may be letting his guard down because there are so many demon lords around, or maybe the presence of the 0th corps commander was created by the demon lord army to boost their morale.”

If even one of these can be saved with just one assassin, it will be a great harvest.

Instead of reprimanding his quick-witted subordinate who had been silent from the moment he mentioned the 0 Corps commander’s skills, Cruel ordered again in a cold voice.

“Send an assassin.”

***

The battle entered a lull.

The reason is that the fourth hero of the Empire, Cruel, who had been pushing hard, stopped fighting for a while after hearing the news of the commander of the 0th Corps entering the war.

The intention behind this was to check whether the 0 Corps commander's skills were real or fake, and the assassin in charge of this important task was now entering the Demon King's army tent, very nervous.

[Keep this in mind. The priority is not the head of Corps Commander 0. Make it a top priority to make sure your skills are real.]

When I heard that, I snorted inwardly.

It can't be real. It may be true that it is a bit strong, but what is known to the public is too much to even pretend to hear.

He's stronger than the commander of the 1st Corps and even the devil can't do anything about it?

If that were true, the Demon King's army would have already swallowed up the empire.

'I'll burst that bubble today.'

This was the confidence of someone who was more skilled than any other assassin. The fact that we have arrived here now with such an important task on our shoulders is proof of that.

Even if he couldn't take the head, the assassin was confident that he could at least inflict a fatal wound and run away, so he went straight to the commander of the 0 Corps and started his work... '

This is crazy.'

I started to panic within 30 minutes.

0 Finding the corps commander was not difficult. All you have to do is find where all the soldiers' eyes are directed.

The problem was his ability to avoid assassination.

At first, he waited for the 0th corps commander, who went in to inspect the body of the 9th corps commander, to come out, and then threw his dagger just in time.

Of course, I expected that it would not be easy. It was just an attack to determine capabilities in case the capabilities were false.

Even so, since it was a sincere attack, if his skills were mediocre, he would have passed away without even knowing when or how he was attacked.

however.

"ah."

Isn't he bending down very naturally at the right time, as if he had expected it?

Thanks to this, the dagger passed through the air and stuck in the trunk of an innocent tree.

If I had just bowed silently, I would have thought it was my skill.

The problem was what he said after dodging the dagger.

"What kind of stone is there...."

Was it caught on a stone?!

No no. It's difficult to be deceived by words like that. Even though you say things like that, aren't you looking at every corner of the military camp?

He was probably looking for me by talking like that out of fear of surprising his subordinates.

So, from now on, it's a battle of wits.

Find it or kill it before it happens.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 27

27. New Hero (2)

Of course, I had experienced this situation before, so my mind was calm and undisturbed.

'If the dagger doesn't work, use a trap.'

He took out a silver thread pulled from the monster's skin. A sharp thread that, if installed tightly, will cut you just by touching it.

I reached the place where his steps were heading, set up the silver wire, and waited for him to arrive quickly, but he, who had been walking along, suddenly stopped. And then a sigh of annoyance comes out.

I could tell without having to say it out loud.

'I noticed it.'

It couldn't have been a coincidence that he stopped right in front of Eunsa.

It's definitely something that's hard to see with the naked eye, but it's hard to believe that you can find it like that even though your entire body is completely covered with a robe and black cloth. After all, this is not an easy skill, is it?

As I watched nervously to see what the reaction would be, he stood there annoyed for a moment, then turned around and grabbed a random soldier.

“Do you know where Ed is?”

“He’s probably in the barracks. Would you like me to call you?”

“No, I will go myself.”

Are you trying to reveal the existence of this intruder?

I have to get out of here.

Now that I know that his skills are not a complete lie, it doesn’t mean that I won’t gain anything if I continue like this.

‘But...’

I feel so embarrassed.

Groundless confidence that you can do just a little more.

Even though he knew that this confidence was the most dangerous, the assassin could not bear to give up due to the overwhelming regret and chased after him.

“Ed.”

“Daemon?”

As the Commander of Corps 0 walked through the tent that covered the entrance and entered, the sleek-looking man sitting in front of the table stood up with a surprised expression on his face.

I was able to quickly recognize who he was because I had seen his face in documents about the main figures of the Demon King's Army.

'Ed, Adjutant General of Corps 0.'

A man who was mentioned as a candidate for corps commander.

Two dangerous people gathered in an enclosed space. The risk of being caught doubled or even tripled, so the assassin became even more nervous and held his breath.

Fortunately, as if he hadn't noticed, the Commander of Corps 0 sat in front of him and opened his mouth casually.

"Do you know anything about the new hero?"

I thought you were going to talk about intruders, but why about Cruel?

'What are you planning?'

Did you realize that Cruel personally ordered the dispatch of assassins?

So why? It could have been ordered by His Majesty, or it could have come by the arbitrary judgment of one of Cruel's subordinates.

Cold sweat flows down my back. The assassin exhaled slowly and focused on their conversation.

"no. I heard that the 2nd Corps commander is currently investigating. Because he is wearing a helmet, we cannot see his face, and the only thing known is that his swordsmanship is excellent..." "

....”

“I’m sorry.”

“No, thanks. But what about that?”

Although I couldn’t see my eyes because they were covered by my robe, I could tell that the 0 Corps commander’s eyes were focused on the bottle on the table.

Ed probably felt the same way as he stood up with a short exclamation of ‘Ah’. Then he took out another glass from the bag that was lying on one side, put it down in front of him, and said.

“It’s alcohol. Would you like to eat it?”

“...Is that okay?”

“Yes, this is a war zone. Light drinking to relax is okay.”

“If that’s the case.”

0The corps commander picks up the bottle.

The moment the glass was filled with alcohol and the moment it was lifted, the assassin threw a small stone he was wearing in his pocket into the corner of the barracks.

Just right.

A small but clear sound echoed inside the barracks. Both heads turned to one side at the same time.

Yes, right now.

He snapped his fingers and threw poison into the glass that the Commander of the 0th Corps had set down. As a bonus,

Ed's glass was on the table.

"What was that noise..."

"It seems to have been the sound of things in the bag hitting each other. "I just took out a glass."

"Is that so."

Corps Commander 0 also seemed to think it was no big deal as he lifted his glass and brought it to his mouth.

Then he tilted it slightly and put it back down before the liquid reached the end of the glass.

"Ed."

"Yes, Demon."

"Who has been here?"

"no. "There was no one else but Demon."

"Is that so..."

My heart sank.

I really need to go away. If I stayed here any longer...

I quietly retreated due to the strong urging of something I don't know if it was reason or instinct.

As if he had expected that, a delicate voice touched the back of my neck.

A calm voice that seems to say that someone like you can be caught at any time.

“The flies are very entangled.”

There was no fool here who could not understand the meaning of those words.

Ed stiffens his expression and stands up. Almost at the same time, the assassin also hurriedly withdrew.

If you fight here, you will inevitably lose.

He had a reason to return alive.

‘I have to report.’

0The corps commander’s skills are not a bubble.

‘Rather dangerous, playing with assassins...’

***

“This... is the commander of the 9th Corps?”

That was what I reflexively said when I saw the body of the 9th Corps commander.

I looked down at it with a face that must have turned white.

The 9th Corps commander I knew was clearly a female demon with straight black hair. His personality was quite cheerful, so I found him rather positive.

Where in ‘this’ is the straight black hair?

Where does the face with a cheerful smile rest?

A piece of minced meat.

I was speechless for a moment while looking at it, nothing more or less.

At first, I was confused, shocked, and the overwhelming emotion was worry.

‘Isn’t this happening to me too?’

No. If I participate in the battle like this, this will definitely happen.

I’m a hero and all, but I just want to go back.

I really desperately want to go back.

As if running away, he left the tent where the body was placed. I came out in such a hurry that I almost tripped over a rock.

“What kind of rocks are there here...”

Don’t these kids even clean the roads?

At least the roads inside the military camp need to be cleaned up.

Even as my frustration rose, I was looking around every corner of the camp to find a place to hide.

Then, for a moment, he stood still, as if waking up from hypnosis.

‘It can’t be possible.’

A faint sigh escaped.

Actually, I know that too. How could it be possible to hide in a situation where so many eyes are gathered?

‘But I can’t stay still.’

The decision was quick.

If there is no best, then the next best, the worst and the lesser of the lesser evils.

If you can’t run or hide, there aren’t many options left.

I grabbed a random soldier nearby and asked.

“Do you know where Ed is?”

“He’s probably in the barracks. Would you like me to call you?”

“No, I will go myself.”

I left the guy who said he would follow me at best, but it’s not like training a mutt and I can’t call him back.

Ed’s barracks were not far away.

When I got inside, Ed, who was sitting at the table, stood up and called out to me as if he was surprised.

When he called me questioning what kind of business he had come for, I threw out the business as he wanted.

“Do you know anything about the new hero?”

“I heard that the 2nd Corps commander is currently investigating. Because he’s wearing a helmet, you can’t even see his face, and all he knows is that his swordsmanship is excellent...”

Damn it. How on earth can you survive without information?

I was racking my brain to find another way, but I guess he thought I was angry. Ed, who was carefully examining me, slowly lowered his head.

“sorry.”

“No, thanks.”

People around me seem to be good at apologizing when it isn't their fault. I didn't even know that it was putting more pressure on me.

Anyway, I thought the atmosphere would get awkward, so I rolled my eyes and found another topic to talk about.

Then what came into view was a bottle on the table. In addition, the half-full glass, which seemed to have been drinking just a moment ago, was showing off its presence as if asking me to look at it.

‘...alcohol? Wow....’

You didn't let me drink it and only you drank it, right?

“But what about that?”

“ah.”

He let out a short exclamation, turned to the direction where his bag was placed, and immediately took out a glass.

And he kindly set the glass down in front of me and said,

“It's alcohol. Would you like to eat it?”

It seems like things have changed back and forth? Shouldn't you ask first if you want to drink and then bring the glass?

But Ed knew me too well.

Otherwise, what fool would refuse alcohol that is difficult to drink freely?

Of course, it seemed a bit too obvious to say yes so quickly, so I opened my mouth as if hesitating.

“...Is that okay?”

“Yes, this is a war zone. Light drinking to relax is okay.”

“If that’s the case.”

His face must have been covered, but he smiled without hiding it and grabbed his drink, pretending not to be able to resist.

The moment Ed pours you a drink and picks it up.

Just right.

A small but clear sound of unknown origin struck my ears.

I reflexively turned my head to find the source of the sound. I see a space that doesn’t seem to be anything special.

“What was that noise...”

“It seems to have been the sound of things in the bag hitting each other. “I just took out a glass.”

“Is that so.”

You didn’t hear wrong. For a moment, I thought I was hallucinating.

I felt relieved and lifted the glass to my mouth. But before I could tilt it all the way, I stopped my hand. The back of my hand felt like it was burning as I put down the glass.

I stupidly almost drank it without even taking off the cloth that covered my lower tube.

‘It’s embarrassing.’

I wonder if Ed would have looked at me like an idiot. It’s difficult to think pathetically.

...Let’s change the subject.

I hid my embarrassment and called Ed as calmly as I could.

“Ed.”

“Yes, Demon.”

“Who has been here?”

You will have your own life and meet someone.

So, to change the topic, let’s take this opportunity to talk about you. There was a former colleague among the soldiers here, or something like that.

But unfortunately, Ed had a very clean private life.

It is so clean that no one is even close friends here.

“no. “There was no one else but Demon.”

“Is that so....”

What a pitiful guy.

I clicked my tongue inwardly and frowned as I looked at him with a pitiful gaze.

The flies that have been buzzing ever since I came here are so annoying that it drives me crazy.

Of course, this is a war zone, so it's natural for crows and flies to be attracted to it, but maybe it's because it's been so long that I can't get used to it.

I felt like I couldn't let this frustration out loud, so I ended up saying it in a casual tone.

"The flies are very entangled."

"!"

Ed seemed to be bothered by something in my words and jumped up from his seat. When I saw the hardened expression, I was inwardly shocked.

Why are you doing that? I wasn't that annoyed, right? I used the proper honorifics and there was no problem with the tone of voice, right?

He strides around the barracks and looks at every nook and cranny. And finally, he picked up his glass on the table, concentrated for a moment as if he was using magic, and then called out to those outside with a cold, stern expression.

He spoke softly, crushing the glass with his grip.

"There was an intruder."

Alcohol and broken pieces were dripping from his hands.

After that, there was an uproar.

Ben, who came running after hearing the news, saw the broken shards and the alcohol on the floor, and scolded Ed for what he should do if the evidence was destroyed. He took the glass still in my hand and checked the poison.

And as soon as it was discovered that it contained a deadly poison, the military camp was turned upside down under the command of 1st Corps Commander Jaykar.

All soldiers have their identities checked, and the confirmed soldiers run around looking for intruders.

In addition, I received an apology from Ed who said he was sorry for not noticing it in advance...

"Because I was stupid, I didn't realize it quickly even though you gave me a signal. sorry."

No, I didn't know either? What signal did I give you...? How did you even notice that? Anyway, you strange guy.

Well, anyway, there is only one thing I can say in this situation.

"it's okay."

These are words that I keep repeating in my mouth while staying in the Demon King's Castle.

If I had really known in advance, I would have accepted the apology with peace of mind, but my conscience is pricking me so I can't accept it.

Anyway, Ed also went out to participate in the search and I, alone again, sat blankly in front of the table and looked at the bottle of alcohol.

There was an intruder, but in the end, no damage occurred, so my mind was very peaceful.

It's to the extent that I'm thinking that if someone had known, they would have looked at me with disdain.

'Is that bottle poisoned or not?'

Yes, I still haven't been able to give up my addiction to alcohol.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 28

28. New Hero (3)

Ben only examined what was in my glass and was unable to examine the liquor bottle as there was a huge fuss as soon as he received confirmation that it was poisonous, so there is some hope.

Personally, I don't think I would have heard it.

Ed was drinking when I just came into this barracks.

That means there was no poison in his glass up to that point, which means that the intruder poisoned our glasses while Ed and I were talking.

Now that I think about it again, it was really dangerous to hide at a level that even Ed wouldn't notice, right?

...anyway.

'From what I remember, there was only one time when the table was out of sight of me and Ed at the same time.'

When you hear a click.

I reflexively turned my head to find the place where the sound came from.

However, that was a very short moment, and it was an absurdly short amount of time for the assassin to come directly and poison him.

So how did you get poisoned?

‘It must have been thrown in.’

The assassin had outstanding skills that could not be caught by Ed’s spirit. In other words, he must have had enough skill to ‘throw’ the poison.

But even so, there is not enough time and the risk is high to throw it into a bottle with a narrow spout.

Assassins have a strong tendency to refrain from taking risks, so they would not have taken the risk of trying to poison a bottle.

... is my opinion.

‘Then let’s check.’

I quietly picked up the bottle of alcohol.

My conscience pricks me for trying to drink it alone when the owner is not around, but I guess he was trying to offer it to me anyway.

With that shameless thought in mind, I continued to smell it.

As expected, there is none.

It made me smile.

‘I think I prepared a medicine that is said to be colorless and odorless in its own way.’

Solid medicines that are easy to carry require specific ingredients to maintain their shape, whether they are made from purified liquid or powder.

Usually, even this is said to be colorless and odorless, but I don't know.

'If you've been exposed to a lot of medicine or have an incredibly good sense of smell, you'll notice.'

That could be said to be the unique smell of the medicine.

In any case, this liquor does not have any subtle medicinal smell at all. That means...

I grinned.

'This drink is mine now.'

There is no glass, but that is not a problem.

Afraid that someone might come and disturb me, I slightly lowered the cloth covering my lower pipe and tipped the bottle without hesitation.

***

"He is dangerous."

"Hmm..."

the assassin spoke passionately.

Cruel silently listened to the assassin's words without any particular expression.

In contrast to his expressionless face, his fingers were tapping the desk as if revealing his complex thoughts.

After listening to the entire explanation after a long period of silence, he slowly opened his mouth.

“Okay, let’s go out and see.”

“yes.”

After the assassin left, Cruel’s thoughtful expression did not look very good. It was worth it.

In the end, isn’t the skill of Commander 0 Corps at least as good as that assassin’s?

The assassin he sent was by no means an easy person.

Due to the nature of the job, he may be weak in head-to-head combat, but hiding and assassination are enough to make even Cruel himself nervous.

‘That’s a pain in the ass.’

0The corps commander is real, and his skills are not a lie. What could be more painful than this?

I slowly closed my eyes and leaned back in the chair.

‘The judgment...’

has already been made. It’s just a bit of a waste.

He was tilting his head with a slight frown, then opened his eyes and slowly stood up.

Sensing that the atmosphere had changed, the subordinate cautiously asked about his decision.

“What do you want to do?”

“...The order given to me is to ‘protect the territory of the empire.’”

In this way, Cruel participated in a battle that was being pushed back, and as a result, he went beyond protecting his territory and pushed into the realm of the demon world.

The higher-ups seemed to like it, but unless the order was something like ‘Expand the territory to the Demon World’, there was no need to force a confrontation.

“I tried to expand the area as much as possible in preparation for when the demons attack again later, but there is no choice.”

The ‘time when you can’ is over.

Greed brings anger. Cruel was more cool-headed and rational than anyone else to be swayed by greed.

If this side’s morale was high, we might be able to see how they would stick together, but unfortunately, while that side’s morale is the best, this side’s morale is at its lowest.

“What does Commander 0 mean?”

If the only issue was his combat ability, I would have had less to worry about.

Perhaps this was unlucky, but the Commander of Corps 0 was a being who could influence morale with his mere presence.

If we fight against them in this situation and this atmosphere, we will be defeated horribly.

It is not that there is no one in the Empire who can overcome this situation, but since they are not here right now, Cruel's options are extremely limited.

"We need 'that guy' to defeat the Demon Lord's army with Commander 0."

"Ah..."

"But not right now. "The request for support is also late."

Likewise, another hero of the Empire.

Thinking of someone who had become a hero before him, Cruel closed his mouth for a moment and then slowly spoke.

"In the current situation, it is best to stop the fighting. That's the only way to stop the Commander of the 0 Corps from participating in the war. However, it is impossible to make an open agreement with the demons, and there is no way they will just sit back and watch as they barely get a chance to counterattack..."

Tuk.tuk.tuk.tuk.

My index finger taps the desk.

This too is the hesitation given by the title 'hero'.

Although it was a title he earned because he had to protect it, it seemed to often hold him back, so he frowned but eventually revealed the plan in his head.

"We withdraw ourselves."

"yes?"

“However, those who come after us will be killed unconditionally. We have to kill him with such certainty that it cannot be compared to anything we have done so far. “You should never look like you are being pushed around.”

He slowly backs away without showing his weak side.

They must retreat to their original territory, the human world, and show that they will not fight unless they invade the human world first.

“If I step back now, wouldn’t it be too obvious? Even the demons will notice.”

“That’s what I said. “Make sure to kill those who are chasing you.”

“ ....”

“You will find out when they attack us as we retreat and are crushed horribly.”

They are not retreating after hearing the news from Commander 0.

It’s not like I’m being pushed around, and I’m not rushing back because something’s wrong.

“Even if I just had it, there was no point in raising my sword for this useless land that doesn’t get a single ray of sunlight.”

“ ....”

“You have to imply that.”

Although formal agreements cannot be made, implicit agreements are possible.

It was something a hero of the Empire should not do, but Cruel did not dwell on such things.

Rather, it is more important not to ruin your first debut as a hero.

“Of course, this will only be possible if the Commander of Corps 0 does not go on a rampage in the process, but he is the support that came after the Demon King’s army was pushed back, so it will probably be okay. “There’s no reason to step up when things go back to their proper place without you having to do it yourself.”

“Well... I heard that it is very rare for the 0th Corps commander to go directly into battle.”

“okay.”

The higher-ups only look at the results. Rather than considering what process went through to arrive at these results, just the results.

In that sense, if the troops commanded by Cruel are pushed back by the Demon King’s army and are allowed to invade the human world again, the higher-ups will definitely start discussing his qualifications as a hero again.

‘That’s why it’s difficult.’

Why did you come here?

Cruel quietly chewed his lips and opened his mouth to give another command.

But no words came out.

“Commander Ji!”

Because of an uninvited guest who quickly entered the tent.

After seeing his pale face, heavy breathing, and dirt-covered clothes, Cruel stood up without a word.

While waiting for the soldier to catch his breath and report on his own, he put on the gauntlets he had temporarily removed and put the sword on his waist.

There was no reprimand for rushing in without any hesitation.

In order to deliver news effectively and quickly, he was the one who ordered that anyone could come in immediately if it was urgent or important.

Therefore, instead of reprimanding him, Cruel quietly prepared for battle and waited for his next words—

“The Demon King’s army is advancing!” The leader is the Commander of Corps 0....”

Rumble.

Before the soldier could even finish his report, he immediately grabbed his helmet and went outside.

The plan went awry.

The situation was miserable.

Cruel’s eyes, which had already figured out the entire situation on the battlefield before he could even look at it, sank coldly inside his helmet.

There was no need to look.

The pungent smell of blood stings the tip of my nose even though the battle has barely begun. The front line is pushed helplessly. In addition, a desperate scream and a sound of laughter were heard.

Whose scream is it and whose laughter is it?

“...under.”

A laugh came out.

Cruel grabbed his sword and glared at the battlefield.

At least among the soldiers under his command, there is no crazy person who laughs while killing the enemy.

Yes, they are demons. They were carrying out the massacre, laughing cheerfully as if to relieve their anger.

‘It’s completely gone.’

The atmosphere has gone over to the other side.

War is greatly influenced by morale.

Even in an unfavorable war, if your morale is high, you can fight off enemies like you’ve taken a drug, and even in a war that is advantageous, if your morale is low, you often struggle.

So, the empire is at a disadvantage in this fight right now.

‘no.’

The hand clenched into a fist gained strength.

It can't go on like this. How did I get this far, only to be pushed around in vain?

You have to use your hands.

—How?

‘In order to resolve this situation...’

With all of his senses becoming clearer, Cruel looked at a certain place.

It is the only place in the noisy battlefield that is so quiet, as if the space has been cut off.

There was a devil standing there.

***

“Hahahahaha!!”

The dagger turned freely in my hand.

The dagger, which was sometimes held straight as if performing a trick, sometimes held backwards, and sometimes even passed across the back of the hand, drew those who were mesmerized by it even for a moment, creating yet another victim.

How many people were sacrificed like that?

Blood spurts out from where the dagger was pulled out. The faint moans of a colleague who could no longer scream were heard by those around him.

The black devil in front of me never killed his opponent easily.

Whether it was severing a tendon, cutting off a hand, or stabbing an eye, he completely cut off any possibility of a counterattack and cut the person to pieces, smiling happily as he was unable to do anything.

Even if he accidentally killed the person right away, he tore the body into pieces, revealing his cruelty without hesitation.

“Oh, devil...”

A trembling voice came out from somewhere like a moan.

I probably said it without even realizing it.

A weak voice on the battlefield is not good for morale. Nevertheless, no one could blame him.

Even the soldier who was here right now felt the same way.

Because my barely suppressed emotions were struggling and I was expressing my strong agreement with those words.

‘Yes devil.’

If you can’t call him a devil, then who can call him a devil?

My hands are shaking. My legs feel like they’re stuck in the ground and I can’t move much.

The sight of the enemy chopping up his back was extremely defenseless, but the soldier could not bear to point his weapon carelessly.

Aiming itself is easy.

All you have to do is raise your weapon and point it at that defenseless back.

But if that happens.

‘I’ll be like that too.’

hate. afraid.

The soldier was not confident that he would face the consequences of his actions.

I want to run away, but I can’t.

Because my instincts were telling me that the devil in front of me would come after me as soon as I turned my back.

In a situation where he could neither run nor escape, the soldier closed his eyes tightly. His white lips were trembling.

‘Someone please.’

—Please save me.

A short cry rises up from the lungs, but is suppressed in the throat and swallowed.

It was at that time that something strange happened.

Clink!!

“...uh?”

A strong wind blew along with the sound of something breaking.

As I closed my eyes and opened them as the dust blew in, the armor I had once seen from afar filled my field of vision.

At the same time, the soldier lowered the arm holding the weapon.

“Ah ah....”

I lived.

Relief gently pats the frozen body.

The soldier stood with barely any strength on his legs, which seemed ready to give out at any moment, and clearly saw what was in front of him.

The Empire’s new hero. A star on the battlefield. A rational commander.

Cruel.

He arrived here.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 29

29. New Hero (4)

“!”

Lirinel, who was sitting on the wall of the third city and looking at the monsters pounding on the barrier with pitiful eyes, jumped up as if on fire.

Her eyes were wide open and shaking mercilessly.

“Lirinel? What’s going on? If there’s any problem in the fourth city....”

“I’m broken.”

“yes?! Are you saying the barrier has been broken?!”

“The necklace I gave to Demon is broken!”

“...yes?”

For a moment, the deputy’s thoughts stopped.

Daemon? If it’s you, Demon.... Yes, Demon Arut.
Commander of the 0th Corps of the Demon King’s Army.

It was late for me to think about it for a moment because it was like the sky that was too much for me to even think about.

So what did you give him? No, when? Also, is it broken? why?

“What do we do? “It really only reacts to attacks that are capable of causing ‘instant death’!”

“Ah... that’s really...”

...is it dangerous?

The adjutant’s expression turned awkward.

Even if you want to sympathize, it is difficult to fully sympathize.

0The corps commander is in danger? Are you in danger of dying? No matter how much I think about it, I can’t imagine it.

Moreover, if what she says is true, this becomes a serious matter.

The fact that it is capable of driving him to the brink of death means that it is also a threat to the Demon King!

“I guess I have to go!”

“yes? No, just calm down for a moment... oh please.”

Lirinel waved her hand towards somewhere.

Even so, you’re sending a signal to the army that is working hard to eliminate the monsters to hurry up!

As if that wasn’t enough, the adjutant quickly caught her as she was about to move somewhere and let out a deep, heartfelt sigh.

‘Really...’

Since the Demon King’s order has not been given and the legion has not been annihilated, we must complete our mission and go back according to the established procedures. That’s common sense.

Do you not know that or are you pretending not to know? I don’t know which one, but one thing I can be sure of is that either way is nonsense.

‘I want to quit being an adjutant...’

Someone’s sigh filled with agony was scattered silently in the air.

***

“I was planning on killing him at once.”

A cold voice came from inside the helmet.

Despite the obvious provocation, Deon just stood still and focused his eyes on the debris flying around him.

This is a scene that even he didn’t expect.

Deon was calm and quite intelligent when it came to matters related to survival.

Therefore, instead of running into what the other person said, he focused on understanding what was happening to him.

So, let’s think back to what happened a little while ago.

Suddenly, a transparent film appeared around the body and broke at the same time, and the magic stone necklace that Lirinel gave her crumbled and was now flying around like this.

This means one thing.

‘I did my best.’

This means that the magic contained in the magic stone was used.

In other words, the transparent membrane that had been created a moment ago was a kind of defensive magic that prevented a strong surprise attack, and the magic stone that had fulfilled its role was completely destroyed.

...Did you say this would allow me to avoid instant death at least once?

‘It means I almost died with one hit.’

The eyes that were looking down at the necklace rise to capture the main culprit of the attack.

You can’t see his face because it’s covered by a helmet, but he’s probably the ‘new hero’ the soldiers are talking about excitedly.

As I thought about that, the corners of my mouth hidden by the black cloth turned up.

“You are the new hero.”

“It’s undeservedly called that.”

“...Hmm.”

The dagger in my hand spins round and round.

Unlike before, Deon frowned slightly and pointed the dagger at him.

It was an attitude that clearly revealed his discomfort.

“Your voice sounds strangely familiar. “It’s annoying.”

“I really find it annoying. “I have never met a demon before.”

“Take off your helmet.”

“Are you telling me to take off my helmet in front of the enemy?”

A clear refusal.

Kaang! Sparks flew before Cruel’s eyes.

Each and every one.

The dagger and long sword are intertwined, making an annoying sound.

In that state, Deon brought his face close to Cruel and spoke in a voice filled with laughter.

The laugh, which was extremely abnormal, contained deep and vivid madness.

“You said the title ‘hero’ was undeserved, right?”

“....”

“I’ll check to see if it’s really too much or not.”

Storm-like attacks began pouring down on Cruel.

Kaang kang! Kaaaang!!

A quick attack and defense goes back and forth.

In the midst of the barrage of attacks with no time to catch their breath, Cruel was calmly blocking all the attacks one by one.

I was just blocking it.

The Commander of Corps 0 did not give him any chance to counterattack.

However, Cruel was not blindly disadvantaged.

‘The attack is light.’

I don’t know if it’s because they only focused on speed or if that’s the original attack level, but it’s a very light attack.

It was thought that the attacks of ordinary soldiers were heavier, so even though the speed was difficult, blocking them was not a big problem.

Kaaaang!

When he hit the flying dagger hard at the right time, the dagger helplessly escaped the 0 Corps commander’s grasp and fell far away.

However, despite losing his weapon, the commander of Corps 0 was not embarrassed at all. Instead, he swung the dagger in his other hand to widen the distance, hid his free hand inside his robe, and then took out another dagger that looked the same.

It was a familiar and natural behavior, as if he knew his own weaknesses.

‘I think what will happen if I push with my strength and stamina.’

When Cruel made that decision, Deon did not stay still either.

‘We have to retreat slowly.’

That voice was so annoying that I took longer than expected. Anyone with a sharp mind would have already noticed the weakness.

I had no intention of winning anyway.

Deon knows his body very well. As weak as it was, I had to know it well. Only then will you be able to use this body efficiently.

As far as he was concerned, his current physical condition was not that good.

Breathing is starting to become increasingly difficult. My hands are trembling due to loss of strength due to having already collided with the opponent several times.

He could have done so if he wanted to fight a little longer, but since there was no reason to take chances on something useless like this, he kicked Cruel’s stomach without any hesitation, widened the distance, and retreated.

“Unfortunately, that’s it for today.”

“...Anyone wants.”

“If you want, I can see you tomorrow. is not it?”

“....”

The loss is too great to do that.

No matter what the actual skills of the corps commander are, it is the value of his name that ultimately determines the morale on the battlefield.

Even though he was badly burned this time, if he fights again, our morale will probably be even lower than it is now.

However, I did not have the confidence to finish the battle by chasing after the commander of the 0th Corps, who had already opened up such a distance.

Cruel has already experienced his speed through one battle. I knew it would be faster for him to run away than for me to reach him.

Deon seemed to have read Cruel's hesitation and smiled cheerfully.

He hid the dagger inside his robe and muttered as if he was talking to himself in a voice just loud enough to reach Cruel.

“Well, actually, I came here because we were pushed back so much that I plan to return once we get the land of the demon world back. Would I want to stay in a place like this for a long time? “I don't like cruel things that much.”

Wow.

Cruel's brows narrowed.

“Didn't your side raise the dispute first in the first place? This fight would not have occurred even if the demon who was said to be the leader of the 9th Corps had not crossed the border. "I would never have come here."

"Ah..."

I heard the 9th Corps commander was making a fuss about being bored, but I never thought he would have crossed the border.

At the very least, they probably provoked him by entering and exiting the human world with a boundary line in sight. Even so, the empire, which is sensitive to the movements of the demon world, could not have stayed quiet after hearing the news.

Deon hesitated for a moment and spoke as he predicted what had happened before the hero in front of him arrived.

"If you return the land of the Demon World, I will specially prevent our children from going after it."

"...an apology is enough. It was beneficial to me anyway. Instead, let's accept that favor gladly."

"Okay then."

The conversation is over.

Cruel looked at the black-robed man who disappeared out of sight in an instant, then turned around and spoke.

"We are also stepping down."

To the borderline.

***

The imperial army retreats.

It was truly a refreshing scene.

How much hardship have you had since coming here?
Considering the hardships I've gone through so far, I'm not satisfied with this.

The same seemed to apply to the soldiers as well, as they chased after the imperial army, shouting with joy on their faces.

Instead of trying to stop it, 1st Corps Commander Jaykar, who was trying to chase the imperial army with this momentum, soon confirmed something and quickly changed his orders.

"All troops, please come back."

There is one reason.

0 Corps Commander Daemon Arut. Because he was sending hand signals containing negativity from afar.

The person who made this situation, which was a series of crises, easier to breathe is that person. It was natural to respect opinions.

In addition, the fact that he, who had been pushing the hero so hard, quit midway and came back must have had a good reason.

Above all,

'There is no need to go against his wishes and cause trouble.'

I turned my head and caught sight of the commander of the 0th Corps approaching quickly.

“Good work.”

“....”

There was no reply.

The moment Jaykar, who had raised his eyebrows in puzzlement, opened his mouth again, the 0 Corps Commander’s lips slowly parted.

“Ah...”

...Ah?

Before he could express his doubts, Commander 0’s legs snapped and he fell forward.

When Jaykar, who was embarrassed, tried to hurriedly catch him, there was a hand that helped him one step faster.

A hand that naturally accepted him, as if he had prepared it in advance.

Was it Ed, the adjutant of the 0 Corps commander? As if this had happened more than once, he skillfully accepted the commander of Corps 0, who was collapsing like a sand castle, and spoke carefully.

“Are you okay?”

“...Damn...your body....”

A shallow vibration is transmitted from the bodies touching each other. Proof that almost all of his strength has been exhausted.

Ed looked at him blankly, then adjusted his posture to become more comfortable and whispered sweetly.

“I’m not feeling well, but it looks like you’re overdoing it. Please rest.”

Only then did the tension seem to ease. The body of the Corps Commander went limp.

Ed, who was almost carrying him, nods his head at someone. Naturally, the attending physician Ben came over and began the examination.

This entire series of processes was so natural that Jaykar could only watch in a daze, forgetting to clean up the mess of his troops.

“It appears that fatigue has accumulated due to overexertion with a weakened body. “It’s just a simple faint.”

It was only after about three seconds that he realized that Ben’s report was directed at him.

Jaykar let out a short sigh and rubbed the back of his neck. That action contained a sense of shame that he had been distracted for a moment.

“Make sure you serve the Commander of Corps 0 properly.”

“yes.”

There was a question I originally wanted to ask, but not only was it not worth holding onto the fallen person and asking, but I had already found the answer myself, so I didn’t bother to wake up the Commander of Corps 0.

The reason he sent a hand signal telling him not to chase.

He probably did it because he knew that his physical condition was not good.

If you fight too hard and collapse in front of the enemy, the situation will change again as if it had never happened before.

That's all. How would the thoughts of the imperial army change after seeing that?

The thought that being the Commander of the 0 Corps may not be as big of a deal as you think will slowly arise.

In that case, Commander 0's participation in the war will no longer shake them.

The opinion not to pursue was indeed an understandable one, and following his words was also an excellent choice.

What would have happened if you hadn't followed?

Jaykar shook his head at the assumption he didn't want to even think about and looked at Demon Arut, who was falling limply into Ed's arms.

'I think it was an excellent choice to respect it.'

The commander of Corps 0 suddenly came in and took his place.

Many corps commanders were concerned about this.

[Should I acknowledge and respect him or push him away?]

Although he didn't show it, Jaykar was the same way.

In particular, he had no choice but to think more deeply because he was the commander of the 1st Corps, the highest-ranking corps commander ever.

Thus the conclusion reached.

[Let's admit it.]

There was no choice from the beginning.

Even leaving aside the fact that he prevented the hero's self-destruction or killed the former commander of the 7th Corps, he was brought in by the Demon King himself. What if I don't admit it?

And the choice was indeed right.

0The corps commander was not a general who blindly chased the enemy. He was a commander who judged the situation appropriately and knew how to suppress his own desires.

'I would have wanted to fight more.'

Perhaps, if I had overexerted myself a little, I could have fought a little more.

Nevertheless, the reason it stopped was probably because the risk burden increased.

Because the defeat of Commander 0 Corps is not just a single defeat, it is directly related to the morale of the entire Demon King's army.

Jaykar, who was looking at the demon with new eyes, soon smiled slightly and turned his head.

There was still work to be done.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 30

30. To the Empire (1)

“Daemon, is there anything uncomfortable about you?”

“doesn’t exist.”

“Maybe you have a headache...”

“I’m fine.”

“Would you like some water?”

“it’s okay.”

“My... it’s my heart!”

“...?”

Is this a murder notice?

I looked at the bizarre flower in front of me with a bewildered expression.

Then, the guy who held out the flowers was dragged through the crowd of people, and soon there was a dull sound and a commotion.

“Are you crazy!”

“How dare you give flowers to Demon? “What is the mind again?!”

“evil! Ugh! Demon, do you like flowers?! “It’s an expression of my respect. Why!”

“Demon likes flowers...?”

“okay! I saw you enjoying your walk in the garden! How much would you love it if you walked with an incubus next to you just because he was a gardener? “Things you don’t know anything about!”

“Then you paid a bribe!”

“Aaaah!”

I don’t know what it is, but you’re having a hard time...

I shook my head.

Currently, I am sitting quietly in the carriage. When I woke up, I was so surprised to realize that I was in a carriage.

It even made me wonder if the damn devil had taken advantage of my drunkenness to sell me to the empire.

It wasn’t until I opened the window to understand the situation that I realized that wasn’t the case, but I was surprised in a different way.

‘Why do you guys look at me like that?’

As soon as the window was opened, numerous eyes were focused on it.

Those eyes turned towards me with a strange heat in them, and I froze, unable to do anything.

Maybe it would have stayed that way if Ed hadn't approached me.

Ed looked at my complexion through the window and asked if I was okay, and I just nodded without knowing what was going on.

Due to the atmosphere, I couldn't even ask what was going on.

Later, I found out that I had done something while drunk...

Seeing that I had done a great job in the war, it seemed like I had jumped into the battlefield...

'What on earth did I do? 'In what spirit...'

I wondered why he just went back.

It's not just about going back, it's about going back because it's already over.

I thought I definitely drank it in moderation. Has drinking volume really decreased? That doesn't really cause any problems, but it's still a bit disappointing.

Anyway, I think it was quite impressive.

All the way back, corps members were snooping through the open window and talking to me.

Those guys who always kept their distance from me with a stiff expression...!

"Are you not hungry?"

"I'm not sick."

At first I was dazed, then I was scared, and now...

'I'm exhausted.'

This should happen once or twice.

They may only talk to each other once in a while, but my mouth is watering as I receive them.

It's not possible to close the window because there are people who keep talking to you. If I just ignore it and close it, I might disappear without even a rat or a bird noticing... It's really driving me crazy.

At that time, Ed appeared, pushing through the corps members gathered in front of the window.

When I tilted my upper body toward the window to see a happy face, he bowed once and said,

"I'm here."

at last!

I quickly got up.

I'm not sure because my body is always tired, but my mind is so tired.

I felt like I was going to lose my mind if this continued, so I got out of the carriage with the intention of getting a quick rest.

And...

'...when did I come up to the room?'

I was so tired that even my memory seemed to have faded.

I don't know when or how it came up.

***

"Ah, are you here?"

The Demon King raised his head.

He narrowed his eyes as he looked at the white-haired man standing in front of him with an expressionless expression as usual.

"I heard you did a great job this time? Thank you for your hard work. How do you feel about meeting a new hero?"

"...I have something to tell you."

Even though there was no answer to the question, the Demon King put a smile on his face instead of pointing out the rudeness.

Because some very interesting information just came in.

Very important information that is also related to Deon Hart in front of us.

"okay? Before that, why don't you take a look at this? "The 2nd Corps commander brought information about a new hero."

Startle.

Deon's body trembled when he heard the words 2nd Corps Commander.

"...The commander of the 2nd Corps has arrived."

"okay. Why did you bring a lot of men's clothes?"

“....”

Deon shivered again, wondering what he was thinking, and unlike before, he hastily picked up the document.

His eyes moved left and right and he began to read the text.

Actually, there wasn't much to read.

but.

“The new hero's name is....”

That little text contains heavy information.

“Cruel Hart.”

“...under.”

Deonhardt could only smile, forgetting about the urgency from earlier.

Red eyes are shining. The corners of his mouth rose, revealing hostility and murderous intent.

A very familiar name.

He said, repeating the name of his older brother, who is difficult to forget even as his life goes by.

“I should have just killed you then.”

Even if it means overdoing it.

I put down my documents and raised my head. The Demon King's unique reversed eyes, with white and black inverted, were facing this way with a smile on their face, as if they knew what he was going to say.

“Are you planning on going to the empire?”

“ ....”

Sometimes silence becomes positivity.

After leisurely organizing his desk, the Demon King stood up and approached Deon.

He said as he tapped the border between Deon’s collarbone and neck, who was standing there without a hint of doubt, as if he already knew what he was going to do.

Even though there was a black mark on the spot where his finger touched, neither of them cared.

“Go ahead. Even on the Empire side, if you are away for too long, there will be people who become suspicious. Of course, if you have any useful information, let me know.”

The Demon King grinned.

Why he cares about Deon.

That’s because Deonhardt is taking on a task that even he cannot do.

This is something that demons, who have at least one outward appearance different from humans, can never do.

Acting as a spy.

“Then I’ll be back.”

Deon Hardt.

He is the commander of the Demon King’s army and a hero of the empire.

***

After much thought, I was finally able to recall a fragment of memory.

Yes, I met the devil. It is a natural obligation to report to your superiors as soon as you return.

And one of the conversations I vaguely remember.

‘The commander of the 2nd Corps has returned.’

So I thought about going to the empire, and the devil managed to give me permission to go...?

It somehow feels like a memory to my taste, but whatever.

As a result, it is clear that permission was given to visit the empire.

[Come back. Even on the Empire side, if you are away for too long, there will be people who become suspicious. Of course, if there is any useful information, let me know.]

These words of the Demon King remain clearly in my memory.

In that case, since we have permission, let's leave quickly before the 2nd Corps commander comes here. I'm sure as soon as they find me, they'll try to dress me up in various clothes.

I quickly got up from my seat and started packing my things.

Anyway, the luggage needed to go to the empire is not much. All you need to do is dress appropriately to avoid exposure to the sun, and bring some food to eat along the way.

‘Wow, it’s perfect.’

I was a little worried about whether I would be able to get food without running into the 2nd Corps commander... but

I trembled as I remembered the 2nd Corps commander who had brought a lot of clothes.

‘I won’t let you go until you try on all those clothes.’

He may not seem like a bad guy, but he is a terrifying demon who taught us that people can become exhausted just by putting on and taking off their clothes.

I put my hand on the door handle to quickly grab some food, but for a moment.

‘Where do I get food?’

It’s difficult because there will be army commanders in the restaurant.

...Let’s go out first.

The moment I turned the handle, I heard a knocking sound. I was startled and ran away from the door.

‘Is he already the commander of the 2nd Corps?’

My feet automatically take a step back.

As if to reassure me as I hesitated before asking who it was, I heard a very familiar voice through the door.

“This is Demon Ed.”

***

“If you came, please sit here.”

The Demon King, who was examining the documents, raised his head and lifted his chin. Unlike when dealing with Deon, his face is serious.

Ed obediently sat down and quietly rolled his head.

Demon must have reported it, but why did he call me?
Could it be that there was something unclear?

Meanwhile, the demon king, who had organized the documents and piled them on one side, softly called out to Ed.

“I don’t like procrastination, so tell me right away.”

“....”

“Aren’t you planning on becoming a corps commander?”

“!”

Regardless of all my assumptions and determination, my mind became a blank page.

Even though he was dazed by an unexpected topic, Ed was able to quickly understand the situation.

“Is it because the 9th Corps Commander’s position is vacant?”

“okay. “Until now, all the corps commander positions were filled, so he was the deputy to the 0th corps commander, but the situation is different now.”

The seat was empty.

It was natural that the choice for that position would be given to candidate Ed.

It’s something I’ve always been waiting for. How did I forget this?

However, even though it was something he had been waiting for, Ed could not easily open his mouth.

“When I become a corps commander, Demon’s lieutenant will be....”

“I guess I’ll have to pick a new one. “I’ll be the next guy after you.”

“So what happens if I refuse?”

“The guy who will be the new adjutant will be offered a corps commander.”

“Is that so.”

Ed, who had said that far, kept his mouth shut.

A look of distress is evident from the facial expression. The Demon King leisurely leaned back in his chair as if to give him time to think.

The air is released and a soft silence settles in the room, as if time has stopped.

Ed, who had been unable to open his mouth for a while even in that space, managed to speak only after the three moons lined up outside the window began to overlap again.

“I...”

After finishing the conversation with the Demon King, Ed headed to Deon’s room as if it were natural.

As always, I knock twice and say what I always say.

“This is Demon Ed.”

“Come on in.”

As I open the door and go in, I see my boss standing in the room. Ed stopped on the spot.

He looks fully armed as if he’s going out at any moment.

It was an unexpected appearance, but considering that he had previously met the Demon King, he could have predicted that he had received some kind of secret message, so he showed no signs of agitation and closed the door.

“Are you trying to leave?”

“Yes, it will take a bit longer.”

“Ah...”

Uncharacteristically, he hesitated and rolled his eyes.

Deon, who looked at Ed strangely, decided that there was no need to inquire for a moment, so instead of mentioning this, he added a slightly belated explanation.

“I’m going to visit the human world.”

“Is that so. “Then you will need food.”

Ed's actions were quick as expected.

Ed, who had stopped him from taking care of it on his own and carefully tied the small enchanted pouch to his waist, glanced at him and carefully opened his mouth.

"I..."

"Oh, thank you. "Then I guess I'll just have to go."

I didn't mean to say hello. Ed looked blankly at Deon, who stood up from his seat.

A traveler's hood covers his white hair and covers his red eyes.

And at some point, my back was turned towards the door as if I would never look back again.

"Ed."

"Yes, Demon."

"Is there anything you want?"

"...yes?"

"It's been a long time since I'm going to the empire, so there are things I need."

Eat. Ed smiled without realizing it.

Where else can you find a superior who takes care of his subordinates like this?

And nowhere else would a superior need so much help.

"Nothing in particular."

“Hmm... Then, I will take care of finding the right amount for you. I’m busy right now, so let’s talk about it.”

From there, Ed decided to keep quiet.

Instead of mentioning the suggestion I heard from the Demon Lord, I raised the corners of my mouth and slightly folded the corners of my eyes. Then, I bowed politely and spoke.

“Yes, I will wait.”

There would be no need to disturb the busy person by bringing out an offer that has already been rejected.

“Please come back safely.”

Even if he leaves the Empire, Ed will still greet him as his lieutenant.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 31

31. To the Empire (2)

A warm wind caresses my cheek. The flowers lining the roadside were waving their leaves as if welcoming the wind, and the sun was shining warmly as if it were a blessing.

Yes, it's spring.

It's late spring, close to summer.

The gatekeeper guarding the front of a huge mansion yawned lazily due to drowsiness and lifted one of his eyebrows as if he had discovered something.

In the distance, someone wearing a traveler's robe was walking straight towards us.

"...hey."

"huh?"

"Isn't that guy suspicious?"

"What is the prize... Oh, I see."

Even though it may seem like this, it is a job that takes pride in its own way. In an instant, my colleague, who revealed his sword-like prayer, adjusted his spear and grabbed it.

The gatekeeper also held his weapon tightly and clearly showed caution towards the stranger approaching.

And the moment he got close to me, I put out my window, signaled to stop, and said,

“This is Count Hart’s residence. The Count is currently out of town, and outsiders are not permitted to enter. “If you have something important to say, please leave a message.”

A phrase that has been repeated to guests over and over again.

Usually, there was no benefit to be gained by turning Count Hart into an enemy, so most people just returned, but this customer seemed to be different.

He just stood there proudly, without retreating even an inch, as if he hadn’t heard those words at all.

No, it actually went one step further.

“Open the door.”

“...under?”

Open the door. How can you be so shameless?

The moment I was about to say something out of embarrassment, he took off the hood of his robe.

And the doorkeeper was momentarily dazed by the exposed white hair, and was then frightened by the red eyes he met and put away the window.

“Isn’t it ridiculous that I can’t go into my mansion?”

“Count Bae!”

Honorary Count Deonhardt.

He left the mansion for the purpose of subjugating monsters and returned after a long 6 months.

***

“Deonhardt is back?”

The man who was leaning on a chair raised his upper body. Purple eyes sparkled with interest.

Purple eyes and purple hair. Just as gold is a symbol of the imperial family, purple is a symbol of a family in the empire.

Duke Illuster.

Starbe Illuster, who stood as the opposite of the emperor, the only duke in the empire and the head of the noble faction, raised his eyebrows at the news that had just arrived.

Who is Deon Hart? Wasn't it clearly the emperor's dog? As the head of the aristocratic faction, he is the very 'hero' who must be eliminated.

Even though it disappeared suddenly and came back suddenly, it is nothing new. If you think about it, it was almost time to come back.

“Okay then.”

I turned my gaze and looked at the person who had been standing next to me the whole time.

Green eyes that don't show any signs of agitation and a deadpan expression that leaves you unable to tell what's inside.

A strange look appears in Starve's eyes as he looks at Cruel Hart, who has claimed to be his subordinate, but then he bends as if trying to hide it.

Next, an incredibly kind voice came out.

"What should I do?"

I heard your brother is back.

This news may not have been widely known yet. Because the information network that the operatives are building is particularly tight.

At most, the only person who knows other than himself is the emperor.

In such a situation, what Cruel, the servant of the head of the noble faction, would say was decided.

"I will place a murder request."

"Wrong. "There must be a card that is more cost-effective."

The Duke looked away, waving his finger as if teaching a child.

As if responding to this, a woman who had been holding documents in the corner and waiting for her turn to report, as if she were there or not, raised her head and met his gaze.

"Saerin, you answer. "What should I do?"

"...Are you talking about the revolutionary army?"

"you're right."

There is no way they would refuse a request to kill the emperor's dog as they were hell-bent on getting rid of the emperor.

They will participate in this more passionately than those who murder for money.

Therefore, the Duke smiled and gave an order to Cruel.

"Contact the Revolutionary Army."

***

Patter. Hurry up.

I don't know what it is, but it looks quite busy.

Do I feel like I've become a huge uninvited guest? It looks like he was away for too long.

But they said there was nothing they could do because of the devil.

As I was scratching my head for no reason, an old man with gray hair came out from among the busy workers, walking at a pace that was neither fast nor slow.

"Are you here, Count?"

"Ah yes. "It's been a while, Remember."

Remember, the butler who has been with me since I received this mansion, welcomed me with a kind smile.

Seeing his unchanging and calm demeanor, I had the feeling that he had returned, so I tried to take a step closer, but the greeting that I thought was over continued.

“Did you finish subjugating the monster safely?”

“...yes?”

Subjugating monsters?

...That’s right, externally, I was away to subdue monsters under the emperor’s orders.

“Ah ah yes.”

After nodding roughly, Remember took a step to the side with a profound smile on his face.

He acted as if he was saying, ‘Please come in,’ so I naturally went inside and told him who was following me.

“I am going to see His Majesty. Please get ready.”

“You must have been tired from the long journey, so it would be best to get some rest...”

“No, I will wash and change clothes and then go right away.”

Wouldn’t I want to rest? There’s nothing we can do about it because it’s a bigger problem to be out of the emperor’s eyes.

The current emperor, Edoardo Desert, is a bloody emperor who ascended to the position of monarch with the sword.

The scene when he, the 9th prince, killed all of his older brothers and sisters, dragged his sword across the palace, picked up the crown with bloody hands, and put it on himself, is so terrifying that it is still talked about among his subjects even 10 years later. It was a scene.

What would happen if it got out of his sight?

Of course, he is not a tyrant who would kill someone just for not coming to report right away, but it would be safer to not do anything that would draw attention if possible... '...But why is the atmosphere like this?

,

Somehow, people who would have moved immediately before have stopped moving.

Looking at the workers who were fidgeting and just lowering their heads with puzzled faces, Remember naturally spoke.

"I will prepare right away."

And the action that followed was quick and quick enough to remind me of Ed.

Some of the employees prepare bath water while others wait with towels.

And after being dragged by the hands of several others, I came to my senses and found myself soaking in a warm bathtub.

It's been a while since I've been sober, but it's not the first time either, so I'm not that embarrassed.

As I began to droop down my tired body, which had become accustomed to it, the door opened and servants came in, cleaned my body, put me in a gown, and led me somewhere.

'Now wait... just a minute.'

Are you really crazy at this point? It's not because it's been a while, but I'm really out of it.

You guys didn't go this far. What on earth happened while I was away?

As if they couldn't see my expression, the maids sat me down on the sofa, took out my uniform, and started talking among themselves.

"If you're going to the imperial palace, wouldn't this uniform be a good idea? "It has appropriate decorations, so I think it will highlight the count's beauty."

"No, the trend is to be ascetic! In that sense, don't you think this uniform with only embroidery without any decorations would be good?"

"Considering the Count's well-known image, don't you think this would be better? It feels kind of elegant. I think this will soften the Count's image a bit... How about going with the concept of a sickly nobleman?"

I don't know why I'm worried about white uniforms and white uniforms and white uniforms.

The uniforms are all white. Even the uniforms hanging on the remaining hangers are all white.

What on earth are we going to do?

"What do you think, Count?"

"...."

To me, they all look the same.

Damn it, it just so happened that my symbol became a white uniform.

I sighed and buried my back on the sofa. After half-closing my eyes, I roughly point to something with my hand, and I hear two clicking sounds and a small scream of joy.

‘I can hear you clicking your tongue. Guys....’

My eyes opened at the absurdity, and when I glanced up to check what I had chosen, the maid who had shouted ‘sick nobleman’ was standing in front of me holding a uniform.

‘Uh... sick?’

I think I picked something wrong.

No, I think the intention of softening the image is good, but seeing that maid snoring makes me very uneasy.

Should I step down now?

With that in mind, I straightened my upper body, and the maid handed the uniform over to the servant waiting next to me and quickly walked away.

‘No, over there...!’

I’ll just choose something else...

Tak. The door was closed.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

“...Um... The Count.... The gown....”

“Ah.”

There is one thing I learned while living in the Demon King's Castle. A very useful thing to use in times like this.

Resignation.

That's right, you won't die just because of what you wear. The uniform doesn't look that strange, so there shouldn't be any problem.

The look in the maid's eyes bothers me a bit, but...

'Let's ignore it.'

I obediently took off my gown and handed it to the attendant.

He was bandaged from wrist to fingertips and wore white gloves. Once I put on my uniform, the rest was easy.

The maids who had left came rushing in again, straightening their clothes and casually combing their disheveled hair.

'Even if it were true, it would become disheveled again over time.'

I didn't have to say that thought out loud.

Even my eyes are bloodshot and I'm concentrating hard, so I can't even imagine what kind of criticism I'll get if I say something rude.

As she puts on the white cloak that was specially provided during the war and finally puts on a white mask to block out the sunlight, the maids let out a sigh of disappointment, but also touch each other's palms.

What is that behavior? Ah, seeing as there are people covering their mouths while looking at me, I don't think it means anything particularly good.

Doesn't covering your mouth mean you feel nauseous?

Do I look that bad? To the point of nausea?

"As expected, changing clothes..."

"No!"

"Absolutely not!"

"What are you saying?"

It's a surprise! I was just saying this to myself, but why are you being so sensitive...

...Are you sure they're trying to screw me over?

As I was looking at the fussing maids with suspicious eyes, I heard a knock on the door and Remember's voice.

"The carriage is waiting. "You can leave as soon as preparations are complete."

It seemed like there was nothing more to prepare, so I just grabbed a portable dagger and opened the door.

I made eye contact with Remember, who seemed to be standing right in front of the door, wearing a neat tailcoat.

From his perspective, the door may have been opened suddenly, but Remember did not show any signs of embarrassment as he stepped to the side and lowered his head.

He must have seen my clothes, but judging by the fact that he didn't say anything, it doesn't seem like there was any problem...

“Oh, just a moment before I leave...” I turned around to head to the first floor and headed towards my room.

After letting Remember wait outside, he looked around the room and saw the belongings he had brought with him when he arrived on the desk.

‘Luckily it’s still there.’

Taken to wash... It seems like he somehow listened to what I had barely told him to do before going in, telling me not to mess with it because I would take care of it myself.

I picked up a food bag from among the things that were lying there as if I had never even touched them.

‘Because magic is the exclusive property of the demons.’

I can’t just leave this alone.

Although there are few people who are well versed in magic, any idiot who opens it even once will immediately realize that this is an enchanted bag.

So we should burn it.

Because it was late spring, the fireplace was off, so I just lit a candle and burned the bag.

The food inside will also burn, but I have no regrets. Now I can eat delicious food freely.

I waved my hand to roughly blow away the ashes flying in the air and picked up another bag.

'If I just burn this, it'll be a big problem.'

A bag full of gold coins.

I searched the room, took out several regular leather pouches, moved the contents into them, and then I was able to burn them without any hesitation.

After organizing my bag of gold coins, I picked up two of them and opened the door.

"Please use the money you earned on this trip to add to the count's finances."

In fact, the count's family already has a lot of money, so there is no need to add more.

Remember took the bag, checked its contents, and then raised his head.

Unique silver-blue eyes that are difficult to see contained me with an unknown light.

"These days, monsters seem to spit out gold coins when you catch them."

"...ah."

That's right, I went to subdue monsters.

I was so distracted that I forgot about it for a while.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 32

32. To the Empire (3)

‘How do we fix this...?’

The nearby city of the area where the subjugation was carried out gave it to them as a token of gratitude... It is not to say that they went there under imperial orders, so they just did what they had to do.

I don't even believe the dream-like story that I accidentally found a cave during a subjugation, entered it, and found this. Damn it.

The only thing Remember can trust is ‘a token of gratitude’, but if this gets to the emperor's ears, it will be a big problem.

It's clear, ‘You did what Jim told you to do and even stole money from him? ‘I feel like I'm full of greed in my stomach, but can I help reduce it?’ And he will draw his sword.

How can you be sure? Because there was already a precedent!

For reference, it is said that the person involved in the ritual was dragged out of the imperial palace as a cold, bloody corpse. The family had to take care of retrieving the body, which was thrown on the side of the road like a piece of luggage.

‘Just be honest and say you won it by gambling?’

If I leave out the story about the Demon World and say I gambled a bit... then my image would plummet.

Still, that’s the best excuse. Oh, it’s not an excuse, it’s a fact.

In any case, gambling is not specifically prohibited by law, and the nobles of the empire often enjoy it in secret, so my image will only deteriorate a little and no other noise will be caused.

I was about to finish my thoughts and speak, but before that, Remember, who had been looking at me blankly, spoke with a faint smile.

“It’s a joke.”

“....”

“I will use this money well to add to my finances. I apologize if you were offended. “It looks like the old man was so happy that the Count was thinking about the finances of the mansion that he acted manipulative for a while.”

“Ah hahaha. It’s a main policy. Haha....”

Fortunately, they don’t ask about the source.

While I was feeling relieved, Remember suddenly changed the direction of the conversation, as if reading my thoughts.

He said with a serious expression as he put the money in.

“I won’t ask where the money came from.”

“....”

“Since the Count’s position is a position, there will be many people who want to line up.”

“yes?”

No, wait a minute. I think I completely misunderstood something.

“If you were in a position like the Count, you wouldn’t be able to say anything even if you took all the money you were given and kept your mouth shut. Given the Count’s personality, he wouldn’t have asked for a bribe first, so the big problem is...”

“What do you mean?! “It’s a bribe!”

There’s no way I could take a bribe! It’s not even a position you deserve in the first place!

“Who would bribe an honorary count! “What nonsense...!”

And even if someone had really tried to bribe me, I probably would have flatly refused.

Receive it and try to get the news to the emperor’s ears. Isn’t it obvious that the skin of my belly will crack?

So we need to quickly clear up this misunderstanding.

‘It’s not like a bribe!’

“Will my belly skin crack?”

“...yes?”

“yes?”

“...Didn't you just change your thoughts and words?”

“ah.”

This isn't it.

Remember, who was looking at me in confusion as I hurriedly corrected my words, had a calm smile on his face.

When I paused for a moment with a smile that somehow overlapped with the previous scene, he spoke with a kind face.

“It's a joke.”

“ ....”

I want to hit him.

“I'm sure you're not planning on hitting the old man.”

“You're quick to notice.”

“Isn't that what a deacon should do?”

“...Remember better not make jokes. “It's indistinguishable from seriousness.”

“Are you trying to take away this old man's only pastime? You are doing too much. “It's the old man's pleasure to see the count's embarrassment.”

“Was it intentional?!”

“The carriage is ready. Didn't you say you would go right away? “Please come down.”

Remember bows slyly.

I couldn't bear to argue with the old man, so instead of arguing further, I muttered to myself and took my steps away.

It wasn't a formal trip anyway, and since news of my return wasn't yet known, the number of escorts wasn't that large.

In addition, it was also a choice I made to improve mobility because I do not like to stay in the carriage for a long time.

Inside the shaking carriage, I took down my stuffy mask and leaned my back against the wall.

Maybe it's because it's quiet, but random thoughts keep coming to mind. Because we were on our way to meet the emperor, the story was especially about the emperor.

It's not particularly bad.

Since it's been a while since we've seen each other, it would be better to reflect on it to avoid making mistakes.

So what comes to mind when you think of an emperor?

'The emperor... is a complicated person.'

Is there a person in the world who is not complicated, but with my limited vocabulary, this is the best I can do to describe him.

A person who is arrogant but has the ability to back it up. A man with not only strength but also brains. A person who is even greedy and seeks to improve himself and spares no effort in gathering talent. And...

'tyrant.'

He ascended to the throne by rebellion.

Do you know what the 'King', the former 9th prince, said at the coronation ceremony, which started with the blood of his brothers instead of a carpet?

[Jim came to this place with blood. It would be funny to use the same name of the kingdom that was used before for such a topic. Therefore, I declare here and now that I will change the name of the kingdom.]

A statement that can never be taken lightly, started in place of a boring speech.

He abandoned the name of the kingdom he had used so far and came up with a new name.

It would have been better if it had been something like 'Edoardo Kingdom' named after himself.

The name of his kingdom created by the new king is—

[empire]

[Forget the name of the kingdom before. The name of this country is 'Empire'.]

The madness was extreme.

'Empire' itself is a name.

Naturally, there was no way other kingdoms would just ignore this.

There was a lot of backlash.

All the kingdoms on the continent came forward and criticized him, and the 'King' of the 'Empire' simply ignored their reaction, which was truly harsh. No, rather it was provocation.

That's how the war began.

The long '8 Year War' changed my life forever.

'Fuck, it felt like hell.'

It was so terrible that half of my memories of that time were gone.

The memories I don't particularly want to retrieve are probably the things my mind refuses to remember.

When the eight-year war ended, the 'Empire' in name only had become a true 'Empire' that no one could refute.

A true empire where the country is ruled by an 'emperor' rather than a 'king' who has swallowed up 1/3 of the continent.

'And me.'

He was made an honorary count in recognition of his contributions in the war.

Even before I could enjoy that position, I was selected as a warrior's companion and immediately set out.

I continued to think about how my nose had been pierced by the Demon King's Castle because of that, but at that moment, the carriage came to a screeching halt.

"What...."

—Waaaa!

“...cry?”

I quickly put on my mask and opened the window slightly. The guards were clashing weapons with some strangers.

Dressed in blue, with a white bird drawn on it.

...It's a revolutionary army.

A group that was created due to the actions of the emperor who conquered each kingdom during the Eight Years' War.

'Damn emperor. It's good not to leave any regrets behind, but you should have left at least some hostages.'

Not only the powerful and popular people, but also the royal bloodlines were searched and killed, so how can those who have nothing more to lose come out?

The country was lost, and the person who should have been the focal point was also lost. They literally rolled their eyes.

This is why they started going on a rampage to destroy the emperor and all upper class people and create a world where everyone is equal.

'It doesn't matter to me what ideology they have... but I'm not very happy about being the victim.'

Even the scale is considerable.

It is only natural that the people of each kingdom, who should rise up with their respective royal families (centres), have united as one under the name of the revolutionary army.

The coachman must have sensed that I had opened the window and shouted, brandishing his dagger.

“It’s an attack! Close the window!”

Isn’t it usually ‘Please help me!’? I’m not some noble lady. Even though it looks like this, I am a person who fell on the battlefield...

Of course, I really had no intention of getting caught in that gap, so I obediently closed the window and sat down. I heard the sound of something being struck, as if an arrow had come flying at me.

‘This seems a bit dangerous, but shouldn’t I fight too?’

Out of anxiety, I was seriously considering whether I should grab the dagger I had brought for emergency purposes and go out, but at some point, I heard a popping sound from the coach seat. It was a very familiar sound, so it was easy to understand.

‘He’s dead.’

A cold feeling goes up my spine. At the same time, a crackling noise began to be heard from the carriage door.

It’s like something is breaking...

Kwaang!!

“I’m so fucking broken.”

It’s not just broken. The carriage door was completely torn off.

Beyond where the door was, you can see guards fighting frantically. I didn’t know how many enemies there were, but they were all swinging their swords like crazy with expressions on their faces that showed no composure.

‘Okay, everything is good, but I’m about to die, you bastards...’

A huge body is blocking the only escape route.

The guy had a scary scar on his face and was holding a huge ax in one hand, as if to put pressure on his opponent.

Just looking at it makes my stomach tingle.

A guy who looked like I couldn’t tell whether he was a monster or a human was clearly looking at me with his eyes shining.

“It’s you. “The emperor’s dog.”

“Oh no.”

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

There was silence.

“...Excuse me, but what is your name?”

“Deon Hardt.”

“That’s right, the emperor’s dog!”

“No...”

I think it’s true that the person they’re targeting is me, but it’s not really the emperor’s dog.

But before I could even open my mouth, he looked at my white hair and red eyes and nodded and muttered to himself.

“I’m sure. “It looks dirty.”

“Bi....”

Biri Biri. Isn’t your house needlessly big?

Of course, I couldn’t say it out loud.

Not only did he not have the strength to do so, but he reached out his big hand and grabbed my neck.

“Wow! “Wow....”

“I was nervous because they said he was a hero, but I never thought he was such a servile person. “What a disappointment.”

“This... Michi...in....”

“Is it just the mouth? “Swearing in this situation is praiseworthy.”

What did I do?

“How on earth did you become a hero? “I’m not an emperor who would pour his heart and soul into someone who doesn’t deserve anything.”

I’m short of breath. To make matters worse, my damn body was racing and desperately needing oxygen.

I tried to hastily slam the dagger in my hand into the guy’s arm, but there was no way I could gain speed because I swung it clumsily while I was short of breath.

On the contrary, the ax he lightly swung collided with and flew out of his grasp. shit!

‘If it had been outside the carriage...’

There would have been a lot of space to avoid, so I wouldn’t have been caught like this.

I put that thought to the corner of my head.

Let’s talk about useless ‘what if’ assumptions later. For now I need to focus on getting out.

‘Damn my breath...’

These damned guards are preoccupied with dealing with the endless waves of enemies.

‘I have to do something...’

My head screams that I need to stay calm, but my body struggles against my will.

With both trembling hands, he was squeezing and scraping the strong forearm that was clutching my neck as if he wanted to live.

In the process, the gloves on his hands came off and the carefully wrapped bandage came loose, revealing his pale hands.

I heard him snort when he saw my thin and skinny hand.

“Please direct your grievances to the emperor. “If it weren’t for him, you wouldn’t have ended up like this.”

I guess so. If it weren’t for the current emperor, the revolutionary army would never have been born.

...But how?

‘The fact that I came back...?’

Before such questions can even take hold of my mind, I feel lost.

Even though the ignorant grip was strangling my neck, it was amazing that I had managed to come to my senses until now.

I want to praise myself, but I know that if I pass out now, I’ll be in big trouble...

‘That bastard just picked up an ax?!’

I opened my eyes wide.

You must never lose your mind! The moment you let go, you will die. You will definitely die!

However, against my will, my vision keeps getting blurry.

My trembling hands lost strength, and my last memory was of him lifting a huge axe.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 33

33. To the Empire (4)

Feeling the strength of his hands holding his arms weakening, the man who took on the role of leader of this group looked at Deon with pitiful eyes.

I'm so weak that it's embarrassing to be nervous. Is this really a 'hero'? Are you saying that all the rumors in the world were nonsense?

Although I was secretly disappointed, it wasn't a bad thing since I was able to complete the work easier and faster than I thought. No, objectively speaking, it is actually good.

"Goodbye, fake hero."

As I struck the guy's head with the ax I had raised, there was a commotion on one side.

A loud voice coming from far away. The man stopped and looked up to find the cause of the commotion.

"found! "It looks a little dangerous?"

"Oh, as expected, Your Majesty! "You foresaw this!"

"Great ego! "Are you safe?"

“No, wait a minute! “I think the captain fainted?”

“Isn’t that how you die?”

“What are you doing! “Let’s not get the captain right away!”

“It’s not the captain, it’s the count, you idiots!”

A conversation that flows along the stream of consciousness.

The man, who froze for a moment as the conversation took the listener’s soul away, hurriedly began to assess the situation.

Who are they? Since we are trying to rescue Deon Hardt, he is not an ally. What idiot group was there that could call Deon Hardt ‘captain’?

The answer came quickly.

“Stop them now! “We must stop it, even if it means using bombs!”

The man shouted urgently.

It’s a murderous knight order! The vanguard led by Deon Hardt during the Eight Years’ War!

The story of the vanguard being promoted to knighthood in recognition of its merits is well known as it is famous. They are also in charge of the revolutionary army among the empire’s security forces.

But why?

“How did you know here...!”

The plan went wrong. Now that this has happened, you must kill Deonhardt and retreat quickly.

If we collide with them head-on, this is the loss.

The scary thing about the Murderous Knights is not their skills...

“Huh? “Hey, it’s a bomb.”

“Wow, you have to shed blood against an enemy that uses bombs. “I think this might be difficult for a sober mind, right?”

“Can I take medicine?”

“Is there anyone we can accept? “The captain is passed out over there, and neither Sir Lien nor the leader is there right now.”

“Isn’t that true?”

The guy, giggling playfully, throws some medicine into his mouth that I don’t know when he took it out. Others also took out medicine here and there and put it in their mouths.

At first glance, I heard a voice like that.

“What can I do? “I have to live.”

The atmosphere changed in an instant.

The eyes become cloudy and madness takes their place. The red, bloodshot whites are particularly creepy. A creepy smile appeared on the corner of his mouth.

“Kill them all!”

“know? “Don’t kill me cleanly!”

“Haha! What do you know! For now, enjoy!”

“You crazy guy! Do what you learned, do what you learned! First, cut off the limbs first!”

...Yes, the scary thing about them is their cruel hands. A hand that looks just like its owner and is extremely cruel.

We need to kill Deonhardt first.

Thinking like that, I lifted the ax again, and at some point, strength came back to my once weak hands.

If it were just that, I wouldn’t have stopped, but...

it stings.

Because his nails were digging into my flesh.

As I look down, the red eyes revealed on the white mask smile.

A creepy eye smile that is different from before. Feeling eerie, I hurriedly tried to strike down the axe, but suddenly I felt a terrible pain in my arm.

“Ahh! “You crazy bastard!!”

I dug my nails deep into my arm and scraped them off.

The skin was not simply peeled off, but pieces of flesh were falling off as if they had been carved out with a carving knife.

It was so deep that the place where the long pieces of flesh had fallen off formed a hollow valley of blood.

Without even thinking about it, I reflexively threw him.

The man let go of the ax and held his forearm because of the pain that would surge regardless of whether he hit the carriage wall or not. Before I knew it, the blood that had flowed from my arm was condensing and dripping onto my fingertips.

Deon was not going to miss that opportunity.

“Cough.”

The white mask turns red. Even while coughing up blood, he quickly jumped up and picked up the ax that the guy had dropped.

Without any time to defend himself, the guy grabbed the handle with both hands, lifted it up, and brought his weight down towards his head.

Obviously, he was strangled to the point that the world turned white, and Deon himself had no strength, so he almost relied on the weight of the ax to hit him, but I wonder how heavy it was—one blow.

In one blow, the guy’s head was broken without even a chance to scream.

Still, Deon was not satisfied.

‘...You can’t stop here.’

The ax rises again. The target is the head that has already been broken.

‘You’re already dead. Should I do more?’

‘no. We need to do more. If you set an example, no one will dare attack you. ‘Because I’m weak.’

‘But...’

My arms are shaking. Red eyes, standing on the borderline between normal and abnormal, shake constantly.

The reason why his eyes became clear and then blurred repeatedly was none other than cloudy madness that pushed away the hesitation that had been in his eyes for a while and took its place.

“Oh, Captain!”

“Leader...?”

Deon lifted the ax as if possessed. No, it would be more correct to say that he was crazy rather than possessed.

Like a man who had lost his mind, he lifted the ax without stopping, as if chopping firewood, and then began to slash it down indiscriminately.

Kwasik. Sigh. Sigh. Phew.

I hear a creepy sound. Blood splatters and the bloody smell lingers.

Even as attention gradually gathered and the surrounding noise subsided, his actions remained unstoppable. On the contrary, he even smiled, rolling his eyes as if showing off.

“flaw.”

The ax is heavy. My arms are shaking.

Still, it didn’t stop.

Not only for the sake of setting an example, but also because I know how to turn this situation to my advantage.

He stopped when the ax became so heavy that he could no longer lift it.

I looked down and saw a tattered lump of blood the size of a person in front of me.

The hand holding the ax went limp, then he kicked it and pushed it out of the carriage.

thud!

“....”

“....”

The body fell and silence came.

Everyone's eyes turned towards this direction, both friends and enemies.

Deon closed his eyes gracefully as he felt the gaze going back and forth between something terrible whose original form he could not tell, himself covered in blood, and the bloody ax in his hand.

Bright red eyes were shining between eyes curved like a crescent moon.

“I guess I'm tired of my peaceful life.”

“What kind of person is that who went on a monster-slaying mission not too long ago...”

“Shh, be quiet. “Don't you even notice?”

A member of the Knights Templar, who was happily hacking away at the revolutionary army, was dragged away with his mouth shut by a colleague.

It was truly a funny scene, but no one dared laugh.

Oh, there was one person.

Deon laughed. A somewhat cheerful gaze was directed at those who had lived and died together.

“long time no see. “Did Your Majesty treat you well?”

“Oh, don’t say anything. “He was so rude, telling me to pay for the food.”

“Do you know how difficult it is to stop a revolutionary army trying to blow itself up?”

A member grumbled as he cut off the hand of a revolutionary soldier who was secretly pulling out a bomb.

Another member quickly picked up the bomb that was rolling around on the floor and looked around, sighing in his voice.

“Anyway, what on earth were you thinking, Captain, when you decided to move with only such poor bastards?”

“I thought there wouldn’t be an attack because I moved as soon as I got back. “How on earth did you know that you came here?”

“Your Majesty already knew everything. He ordered us to bring my master safely.”

“I must thank your Majesty. By the way...”

His red eyes looked at the murderous knights who were diligently decapitating the revolutionaries while their mouths were saying something else, and then turned to the guards.

The guards who have been stabbed a lot are startled and avoid eye contact.

As they wasted and hastily cleared out the revolutionary army, they were unable to stop the regret that washed over them.

“You’ll know without me having to say it. “This is the count’s article.”

It was a degrading remark, but I did not dare to refute it.

Because it has definitely become dull.

A whopping half a year. If it’s short, it’s short, but if it’s long, wasn’t it so peaceful during that long time? You can’t just train all day. It seems like he has become lazy because of that.

So I forgot about it for a while.

How many enemies does Honorary Count Deonhardt have?

“No matter how distracted I am, this big guy approaches me and no one notices. Can you call that an escort?”

“....”

“We need to change the escort first.”

The guards’ faces turned white.

Being kicked out of Count Hart's residence is not just about losing your job.

If you're lucky, it may end without incident, but that's just luck. The majority of people died.

It's not that Count Hart was doing anything or anything, but the problem was the emperor.

They wouldn't leave those who were kicked out of the count's mansion alone...

I heard it was for security reasons, but from the perspective of a former employee who knew nothing, it was like going crazy and jumping around.

"Count Bae..."

I tried to call out to Deon, but unfortunately, the current Deon Hart was different from the usual Deon Hardt.

Rather than having a moderate personality, he had an extreme appearance as a vanguard that I had only heard about through rumors.

Ignoring the pale guards, Deon crosses the quiet space and picks up a dagger lying nearby.

He pointed the blade of his dagger at his enemies and spoke in a cheerful voice.

"What are you doing? There are still enemies left. "I have to sort it out."

"...."

"Hurry and kill me."

[Cause fear in enemies]

Blood drips from red-stained hair.

He wiped away the fishy liquid that was flowing from his forehead down to his eyes, and with a cheerful smile, he grabbed a dagger and jumped among the enemies.

***

In front of the imperial palace lined with countless gorgeous carriages.

These were carriages that you wouldn't normally see, but right now, because he was tired of looking at them, the doorkeeper's eyes, which were looking at them without much emotion, turned somewhere and then widened enormously.

Is this a red-painted carriage trying a new style?

If the goal was to lead the trend, it was clearly a failure. That doesn't look like blood...

'...a fishy smell?'

Is it really blooming?!

The colleague standing next to him seemed to have noticed this as well and hurriedly aimed his spear.

Likewise, the gatekeeper who was aiming his spear barely spoke in a trembling voice.

"This place is the imperial palace. If you don't have an invitation, you can't go in..."

"Get out of the way."

A man whose presence I didn't even know was hidden by the red carriage came out.

...is it a protective color? Why is it the same color as the carriage?

Now I see there are a lot of other people there too. It was unclear whether they were guards or people doing something, but they were all dyed red from head to toe, and their eyes were shining brightly.

"Do you know who is in this carriage?"

"Who are you?..."

"He's our leader!"

"...?"

So who is your leader?

The doorkeeper's expression became blank.

I was too scared to ask again outright, but I couldn't just let such a suspicious group pass, so I just rolled my eyes nervously, when I heard a voice of salvation.

"If you say that, who will understand?"

"ah."

Everyone's eyes turned to the red-haired, red-eyed man in red clothing who got out of the doorless carriage.

And the gatekeeper froze with his mouth wide open.

'That person is the worst! Did you take a bath in blood?!'

I can never let them in. No one can do something like that!

Even heroes officially recognized by the Empire cannot enter unless His Majesty gives permission directly.

“It’s Deon Hardt.”

...Deon Hardt? It’s a familiar name. Who was it?

ah.

‘Vampire Count!’

In that case, those strange-looking groups must be the famous murderous knights.

The fact that he was a hero of the empire occurred to me late.

Because his performance during the Eight Years’ War was so great, the things that come to mind when thinking of ‘Deonhardt’ were consistently negative.

After receiving the status of honorary count, ‘blood-crazed vanguard’, ‘master of a murderous unit’, he even became ‘vampire count’.

But now that I look at it, I think it’s true that he’s a vampire.

Outside the carriage was a pharmacy. As if someone had eaten someone inside the carriage, the blood-filled interior was clearly visible through the gap where the door should have been.

Even the Count himself is soaked in blood!

‘Should I let him in?’

A hero whom His Majesty has personally given permission to visit in any form at any time. After all, that's the honorary Count Deonhardt right in front of you.

'But it still looks like this?'

Even today is the day of the banquet!

At that time, Deonhardt, who roughly brushed up his blood-soaked hair, let out a slow voice.

"Where is your Majesty?"

Perhaps due to survival instinct, the answer came out immediately.

"You are in the banquet hall."

"banquet hall?"

Could it be that I didn't know?

For a moment, the gatekeeper looked at me with red eyes and answered in horror.

"Yes! A banquet to celebrate the birth of a new hero and the success of his debut..." "

...Aha."

"...."

The words ended there.

The doorkeeper quickly shut his mouth at the unusual voice.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 34

34. The Emperor's Most Powerful Sword (1)

But I've already heard everything.

A drowsy voice continued in the suffocating silence.

"Yeah... Now that I think about it, you said you became a hero..." "

..."

"Ha hahaha! Ahahahaha!!"

What kind of luck is this? I laughed.

Deon remembers what the Demon King said when he announced the news that a new hero had appeared and told him to go to the border.

[As you know, heroes and demons don't get along well, right?]

"...."

The laughter stopped.

"To my dear brother."

“....”

“It looks like you have even obtained the fragments of this hero.”

He stepped into the door.

Due to the tremendous pressure he felt due to his position and His Majesty’s orders, the gatekeeper could not even think of stopping him and could only watch in a daze.

And the gatekeeper’s eyes met the eyes of the murderous knights who were whispering among themselves about what to do now.

“....”

“....”

There was an awkward silence.

***

Jeopuk.

With each step, red footprints are left in the once clean corridors of the imperial palace. Drops of blood were scattered around the footprints, as if decorating them.

The soldier guarding the door of the banquet hall was startled by the appearance of an absolutely normal person and tried to aim his spear, but when he realized his identity, he hurriedly retreated.

Honorary Count Deonhardt.

Why did I come on a day like this when the banquet was held?

He stopped in front of the door and spoke in an indifferent voice, wiping away the red liquid that kept blocking his vision.

“Open the door.”

“....”

Can I open it?

The worries did not last long, but Count Hart did not wait even for that short time.

He approaches the door and pushes the large door open with both hands.

The soldiers who saw the door open and Deon Hardt entering without the slightest hesitation immediately noticed the red handprint on the door and looked at it with dumbfounded expressions.

“Am I... dreaming...”

“I understand the feeling of wanting to escape reality, but this is reality, my friend...”

“... It’s really bloody, just like the rumors say. “But why do you look so upset?”

“Think about who the star of this banquet is.”

“ah.”

Cruel Hart.

After entering, Deon stopped for a moment and looked around.

A peaceful banquet hall, as if they hadn't noticed him come in yet. No, it seems like one or two people noticed because I heard a gasping sound nearby.

I didn't really care.

Anyway, they are just people who may or may not say a word even if their whole lives go by. Because there is only one person you have to worry about.

'The emperor...'

Over there.

A man sitting on a fancy chair on a podium, looking down with a bored expression, came into view.

Blonde hair and golden eyes. He is so young and beautiful that it is suspected that he is a blood emperor.

He was only twenty-eight years old.

While thinking about other things, I began to walk slowly.

In a straight line across the middle of the banquet hall to where the emperor is.

Red footprints are made straight without any wavering.

A young lady who discovered him let out a small scream, and the attention in the banquet hall gradually began to focus on him.

"oh."

"oh my god. "What is that..."

"How can you be so rude?"

Anger and unconcealable fear at being rude.

Among the gazes filled with all kinds of negative emotions pointed towards Deon, there were two eyes filled with interest.

‘In the end, you came back alive.’

Duke Stave Illuster looked at Deon Hardt, who clearly showed signs of battle, with a small smile and said,

‘It was a good thing you sent the knights to meet him.’

Emperor Edoardo Desserte. He was watching Deonhardt with a faint smile on his lips.

At some point, the emperor and the duke’s eyes met as if they had made a promise. However, the emperor passed by him and returned his gaze to his original place, his eyes focused on Deonhardt again.

The Duke’s gaze also disappeared as if nothing had happened.

Deon Hardt quickly reached this place, lowered his red mask, knelt down on one knee, and bowed his head.

At the same time, the blood that was hanging on the end of my hair dripped down.

“Blessing the empire. God Deonhardt behold the present Empire.”

Silence fell.

The only sound you can hear is the occasional drop of water or blood.

The Emperor, looking at the blood dripping from Deonhardt's hair, tilted his upper body forward with sharp eyes shining.

"Deon Hardt."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"What kind of rudeness is this?"

These are the words of the emperor, not anyone else. Everyone in the banquet hall held their breath.

In an atmosphere where even the air seemed to be freezing, Deon calmly opened his mouth.

"There was an attack on the way."

"It's an attack..."

This is a play.

Even though he knew everything, the emperor frowned as if it was his first time hearing the news.

He adjusts his posture and mutters slowly. The voice that flowed out slowly was filled with compressed life.

"It looks like there is a count at the count's residence."

"I'm sorry."

"If you want, Jim can handle it, but what can you do?"

"Your Majesty, there is no need to get your hands dirty."

"Hmm, if that's the case."

The Emperor slowly stands up.

He looked at Deon Hart, who was still lowering his head, and raised the corners of his mouth faintly.

“I’m sure there’s a lot you want to say to Jim.”

“....”

“Jim also has a lot to hear from you. “It’s going to be a long conversation, so let’s change seats.”

***

The emperor sat down in the recently prepared drawing room and looked at Deon sitting across from him.

He is a person who talks a lot and has many troubles. The only tinnitus I got right away is going from extreme to extreme.

‘Did you say he was a vampire count?’

It’s a very fitting nickname.

Pale skin and red eyes. They even show an attitude towards blood when they fight, so what else could they be if not a vampire?

That’s not all.

‘Blood-crazed vanguard’ and ‘Master of the murderous unit’, and even the opposite titles of ‘Hero of the Empire’ and ‘Companion of the Last Hero’.

In addition....

‘The one who stopped the devil and recovered the hero’s body.’

In fact, because of this, he was given the title of hero.

Heroes are not only those who have the fragments of a warrior.

Having a warrior’s fragment only serves as an additional point, but what is important is ‘how much skill and performance you have shown.’

In that sense, Deon Hardt was the best.

During the eight-year war, he achieved indescribable achievements as a vanguard.

When he set out on his journey as a warrior’s companion, he accomplished a task that no one else had been able to successfully: recover the warrior’s body.

A warrior who is defeated by the devil cannot even rest his body in peace.

The limbs are cut off, the body is thrown as food to monsters, and the head is forced to make a smiling face with a needle and thread before being thrown at the border between the empire and the demon world.

This would have probably happened to the hero of this generation as well if Deonhardt had not been able to save him.

‘It is indeed a great achievement... but in return, I was cursed by the Demon King and my body became weak.’

Having to deal with the devil while carrying the burden of a corpse was something that could not have been easy no matter how hard it was to lose one's body.

In the end, Deonhardt succeeded in recovering the warrior's body, but failed to protect his own body.

Because of the demon king's curse that eats away at his body, he vomits blood all the time and even minor shocks put a huge strain on his body.

For an emperor who cherished talented people, it was truly regrettable.

"...Have you found a way to break the curse?"

That's why he couldn't stop Deonhardt from entering the Demon King's Castle to find a way to lift the curse.

Rather, they wanted to use this as an opportunity to use him as a spy.

"I haven't found it yet."

"What is the Demon King's condition?"

"It's no different than usual."

The emperor smiled slowly as he lifted the teacup in front of him.

"Now then, tell me what you want to say. "Didn't you wait a long time?"

"Thank you for sending the knights to meet me..."

"Not like that."

“...There was an intruder in the Demon King’s Castle.”

The emperor’s brow furrowed slightly, as if this wasn’t the answer he was looking for.

“Are you talking about a hero candidate? It was no big deal. “He was a foolish person who went on a rampage, believing only that he possessed the fragments of a hero.”

“It looks like he also committed a sin. “Is that why you sent me to die?”

“okay. I thought I would die on the way, and even if I managed to get in alive, I would get caught. Plus, it didn’t seem like you would take the risk to save him. “Is what Jim said wrong?”

“...no.”

The intruder was imprisoned and the authority to dispose of it was transferred to the devil.

Deon had seen him only once and the last time he cared any more.

“Is there really nothing else to say other than that?”

“ ....”

“There was a story that the commander of Corps 0 appeared at the front line.”

“I’m sorry. “There was no way I could refuse.”

“No, not that one. “You must have seen something.”

“ ....”

Deonhardt's head rose. The full face is revealed, and red eyes look straight into the emperor's golden eyes.

The emperor leisurely accepted the gaze and waited for his words to come out.

Eventually, the topic I had been waiting for emerged.

"Cruel."

"...."

"Why did you put him in the position of a hero?"

There was rare anger in his red eyes.

Deon said in a suppressed voice, clenching his fists on his knees.

"Your Majesty knows."

Cruel Hart.

A name I will never forget as long as I live.

"For me, it was regret that I couldn't kill him."

He is the only survivor of the Hart family other than Deon.

...If I explain it this way, you won't understand, so I'll say it again.

—Cruel Hart is the only survivor of the Hart family who survived the hands of Deon Hart.

***

I was strangled by a monster-looking revolutionary and lost consciousness, and when I woke up... there was the emperor in front of me!

I was so surprised that I almost jumped up in panic.

And that too in front of the emperor!

‘What the hell happened?’

I barely managed to get my mind to escape and started rolling my eyes hard.

So now this is a banquet hall.

I am kneeling on one knee and bowing my head in front of the emperor, and for some reason, red liquid keeps dripping in front of my eyes. And the whole body is sticky and smells like fishy iron...

‘Wait a minute, what’s wrong with my body?!’

I felt like my whole body was throbbing for some reason, but it seems like something happened. The neat white uniform was stained red.

As if someone had poured blood from above the head, it wasn’t just splattering out, it was so wet that if you squeezed it out, blood would come out.

When I realized that the blood dripping before my eyes was hanging from the end of my hair, I thought of a maid who did not fit the situation.

A maid who attempted to change my public image by promoting the image of a ‘sick nobleman’.

‘...weakness?’

If there was a fair amount of blood, 'I guess he was sick and vomited blood hahaha.' I could have said this and moved on, but this is completely covered in blood. It looks like something out of a ghost story.

This is not a disease, it is a disease.

My appearance now was so terrible that I could almost believe I was a devil.

This is how I came to see the emperor. What on earth were the soldiers guarding the door doing instead of blocking it?

'Rotten bastards. 'I'll stop you.'

No, more than that, I feel a little sorry for that maid.

It seems like I put a lot of thought into choosing the clothes. Even my hair, which I had put so much effort into arranging, ended up being a mess.

I silently apologized to the unknown maid and maintained my kneeling position.

When you are not sure about the situation, it is best to stay still rather than take unnecessary action.

But what on earth have I done?

"Deon Hardt."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"What kind of rudeness is this?"

The emperor uttered terrifying words.

I don't remember what I did. There is no way to know what made the emperor angry. However, it is not as if he was given ample time to recall his memories.

In other words, it was ruined.

Even though it's just words, it feels like there's a knife in front of my throat.

Resisting the urge to touch my neck, I fiercely...

...lost my mind.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 35

35. The Emperor's Most Powerful Sword (2)

When I came to my senses again, I was alone with the Emperor.

No, fortunately, it seems to have already ended. The emperor put down his empty teacup and stood up.

I don't dare sit while the emperor is getting up. As I pushed the chair forward and stood up, he stood for a moment and looked at me.

"There must have been a lot of things to worry about over there, so why not participate in the banquet to relieve stress? Of course, I don't intend to force you, so you don't have to do it if you don't want to."

I don't know what it is, but fortunately, it seems like the crisis has been passed.

Otherwise, there would be no way for him to live like this and stand alone with the emperor.

He even made such a considerate offer! I said I had no intention of forcing it, but I had no choice as I didn't know how the matter was resolved and whether any lingering resentment was resolved or whether everything was resolved.

“no. “I will participate.”

Originally, the superiors’ ‘You don’t have to do it if you don’t like it’ meant ‘You must do it even if you don’t like it.’ If I refused without notice here, it would be obvious what would happen to my life.

As expected, he raised the corner of his mouth as if he had made the right choice, as if the emperor could not see it.

He looked me up and down and spoke with a faint smile in his voice.

“In that way?”

“...ah.”

“I can’t help it. I’ll prepare clothes for you, so you can wash them and participate in the banquet. “I will tell the head maid.”

“Thank you for your consideration.”

He roughly nods at my thanks and turns away as if he has nothing more to do.

Then, before he could take a few steps, he turned around again as if he remembered something.

“Are those clothes important?”

“...yes?”

Oh, it’s extremely rude to question the emperor’s words.

I quickly closed my mouth and lowered my head.

Fortunately, a voice with a steady tone, as if it wasn't unpleasant, kindly followed suit to explain.

"Are these clothes worth throwing away?"

"Ah..."

Well, I don't know anything about clothes, so...

I don't even know how much it costs, so it's pointless to talk about it carelessly.

So instead, I thought of the maids who worked hard to choose clothes for me before coming here.

In addition to the images of them holding on to their clothes while having a heated discussion, they also looked like they were concentrating on decorating with bloodshot eyes.

That topic was ruined before we even arrived at the banquet hall.

'Maybe they'll resent it?'

Even if you don't resent it, you'll probably be quite disappointed.

So at least it would be better not to throw away your clothes. Of course, looking at the way it is now, it seems impossible to get rid of it without throwing it away...

Still, the only thing the emperor asked was 'Are the clothes worth throwing away?' So I hesitated for a moment and then slowly opened my mouth.

"I think it would be a bit of a waste to throw it away."

"It's ambiguous. Anyway, I understand."

“yes.”

...But you understood for a moment? what?

The emperor turns around without regret and leaves the drawing room. Suddenly left alone, I sat back down on the chair in front of the table to gather my thoughts.

But no time was given to think.

“Nice to meet you, Count.”

Because the maids swarmed into the parlor.

The momentum is almost like that of a well-trained corps.

As I looked at them with a shocked and questioning expression, a maid took a step forward.

“My name is Bella, the head maid. “I heard you are participating in the banquet.”

“Yes, it is.”

The eyes looking at me are scary. Perhaps because of my mood, their gazes on the chair I was sitting on seemed cold for a moment.

I wonder what he might do to me, but...

“First... I think I should take a bath first. “Please come here.”

“yes.”

scared...!

His words are polite, but his actions are firm. Among the maids who surrounded me, I had no choice but to walk sloppily, matching their pace.

And the series of events that followed were so great that the previous occupants of the count's residence looked cute.

As soon as I arrived at the bathhouse, I was stripped of my clothes by the waiting attendants and forcibly washed... before a doctor came running.

It left scars all over my body. All kinds of wounds that I don't even know about, such as bruises and scabs.

Even upon examination, it was discovered that he had suffered internal injuries.

"What is urgent is internal injuries. "This is almost like crashing into a carriage. Did you fall off a cliff somewhere?"

I definitely didn't fall off the cliff, and there was no collision with a carriage...

I definitely don't remember it, but it feels uncomfortable.

what. Did I throw myself into the carriage? Or did someone throw me into the carriage?

Anyway, the people here who were in a hurry every minute didn't even give me time to think and started washing me again as soon as the treatment was over.

He was in such a hurry that he didn't even give me a chance to warm up, saying I didn't have time.

I immediately poured water on it to wash off the blood and rubbed it all over my body...

'It was an experience I would never want to go through twice...'

The next time the emperor asked again, it would be silent pressure and I would immediately refuse. I will!

With that promise, I was half-fazed and dragged by their hands into a room.

What I saw there were none other than my clothes, which I had decided would definitely be thrown away.

The moment I saw it neatly folded and neatly laid out, I couldn't help but be taken aback.

'Nonsense. how?'

It was obviously covered in blood. So much so that there is no other way than to throw it away.

Even if you somehow manage to wash it cleanly, it will take time to dry.

'Magic? Is it magic? It's not. Humans can't use magic... so what about witchcraft?'

Was it possible to dry clothes quickly through witchcraft?

Witchcraft is the exclusive property of humans, created to counter the magic of demons.

If magic breaks the rules of the world, witchcraft is about paying a price and slightly twisting the rules of the world to use it to your advantage.

I tilted my head inwardly because little was known about witchcraft as witchdoctors were rare.

The maids, not knowing how fast I was, just handed me clothes and pushed my back to tell me to quickly put them on and come out...

‘...Okay, whatever. ‘My clothes are much better than the clothes the emperor gives me.’

It’s not burdensome either.

At this time, I didn’t know. While I was washing, designers from all the clothing stores in the capital were brought to the imperial palace with their students.

And when they left, they all trudged out with blank faces, as if they had stayed up all night for a week.

At this time, I also did not hear the aside that someone screamed when they saw all the hundred or so people hurriedly leaving the imperial palace with blank faces.

[It’s 30 minutes. Make it exactly like this within 30 minutes.]

[Did you say it was impossible? Is it really impossible when there are so many people?]

If it can’t be done, make it happen.

I had forgotten for a moment that this was what the emperor said whenever he had the chance.

***

Although there was clearly a commotion, the banquet hall quickly regained peace as if something like that had never happened before.

The attendants quickly wiped away the red footprints and blood drops that were clearly on the floor, the music started playing again, and people gathered in groups of twos and threes and started chatting.

The scenery was no different from before the commotion.

However, one thing that was different was that the eyes of those chatting were all directed to a certain direction.

At the end of their gaze, a white-haired man wearing a neat white uniform was sitting on a nearby chair, resting his chin and drowsily lowering his eyes as if he was bored.

On the outside, he was just a nobleman from a certain family, but those who knew his true identity could not get close to him and could only glance at him.

“The dark circles are gone. “I remember the last time I saw you, there was a lot of shadow under your eyes.”

“I heard you went on a monster-slaying trip. Could it be because you saw blood?”

“Then, are the rumors about him being a vampire true?”

“I think it’s true that His Majesty is so protective of him. Otherwise, there would be no need to keep information about him secret...”

Honorary Count Deonhardt.

An unprecedented man who made a remarkable contribution as a leader in the 8-year war and collected the body of a warrior as a comrade.

In fact, he was a good topic of conversation in social circles, with all kinds of rumors rife, including the story that the emperor tried to give him a status higher than ‘honorary count’, which was the title of grand victor, but he himself refused.

In particular, one of the topics that is mentioned very often is....

“Then he is also the one responsible for the destruction of the Hart family...”

“Shhh, lower your voice.”

The Hart family extinction incident where no one knows the full story of the incident.

The incident in which the Hart family, who had been loyal to the imperial family for generations, disappeared one day without anyone noticing, caused a great shock to the aristocratic society.

I don't know the full story of the incident, but that doesn't mean I can't speculate. The nobles were putting together a fairly plausible hypothesis by summing up all the revealed information.

For example, 'There was some sort of deal between Deonhardt and the Emperor.'

The grounds were sufficient.

The emperor remained silent even though the dog, which had followed the blood of Desert for generations, died.

The Hart family is a loyal family. He was not even a baron or a viscount, but a count.

A family like that disappeared overnight, but you remain silent? This was suspicious to anyone.

“From the beginning, His Majesty, who cherishes talented people, only gave him the title of honorary count...” “

Yes, it was award-winning. “They even delayed recognizing him as an official hero.”

Deonhardt, who returned after the Eight Year War, was recognized for his contributions and met with the emperor alone.

No one knows what conversation took place there, but as a result, he was only awarded the title of 'honorary count', unlike other heroes who received the title of marquis. This did not fit the emperor's characteristic of caring for talented people.

In fact, it was not enough to receive a huge financial reward in addition to the title of 'Honorary Count', and from that time to the present, the Metallurgy fiefdom was transferred, so he currently has a fiefdom comparable in size to that of a marquess, but in the end, the most important 'title' Didn't this kind of unfortunate result come out?

So this speculation arose.

[Deon Hardt refused the high title offered by the emperor, but instead wanted the destruction of the Hart family.]

Deon Hardt is the family's mutant.

Pure white hair, red eyes, and pale skin. Maybe he really picked up a young vampire from somewhere and raised him.

The truth is unknown, but both mutants and vampires are equally repulsed, so the family must have been reluctant to him.

So he may have been abused.

Since he never stepped out of the mansion before participating in the Eight Year War, this assumption was not entirely unreasonable.

“So, for revenge, I went to the Hart family...”

“It’s amazing that we’re talking about this while knowing who the main character of this banquet is.”

“Go Duke!”

Starbe Illuster smiled softly as he waved his hand at those who greeted him in surprise.

The person standing behind him is none other than Cruel Hart, the protagonist of this banquet.

He silently bowed his head to those who were looking at him with a perplexed expression, and left without any change in his expression, as if he didn’t care.

Just as an awkward silence was about to arrive, Duke Stave, who clapped his hands a couple of times as if turning his gaze towards Cruel, smiled and opened his mouth.

“It’s a joke. Actually, it’s a famous story that everyone knows, right? So there is no need to be that surprised. Lord Cruel probably already knows everything.”

“....”

Yes, you probably know very well. Because the person who helped investigate the rumor was Cruel and no one else.

This is a story that anyone who has been in the social world for a while will know.

It was an uninteresting rumor to the Duke, who roughly understood the situation, but Cruel, his subordinate and a person directly involved in the incident, had doubts, so he used him to dig deeper into the case.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 36

36. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (1)

The natural act of conveying information gave rise to the same hypothesis as disentangling social rumors in more detail.

—Deon Hart, who had a grudge against the family for some reason, wanted the destruction of the Hart family in exchange for giving up all other interests, and the emperor, who wanted to give something to the talented person who had appeared after a long time, gave him the title of honorary earl and money, and half-accepted. did.

Of course, such an important decision could not be made solely on that basis, so the condition he put forward was to participate in the journey to defeat the Demon King as a companion of the warrior.

‘We also postponed recognizing him as an official hero.’

Although it is a meaningless action.

Deonhardt has already been called a hero for eight years of war. Whether the Emperor acknowledges it or not, he is already a hero.

Nevertheless, the reason he postponed it was because he was the only one among the war heroes who did not have the fragments of a warrior.

‘It’s not discrimination, but they probably tried to give it to you after accumulating more merit to prevent others from objecting by citing that reason.’

Whether the hero succeeds or fails, Deonhardt becomes a credit as long as he returns alive.

Perhaps because he knew the Emperor’s intentions, Deonhardt accepted this and set off again as a warrior’s companion as soon as he received the title.

It was the result of the emperor weighing the Hart family, who had been loyal to Desert for generations, and Deon Hart, who appeared like a comet and left a strong image in a relatively short period of time.

‘Normally, I would have chosen the former without even thinking about it, but since the current emperor rose to the position of monarch through rebellion, I guess I couldn’t trust their loyalty. That’s why the weights became somewhat the same.’

The emperor’s decision would also have changed depending on the outcome of the journey.

Even if he had just come back alive, the emperor would have cared for him enough, but as a result, Deonhardt performed better than expected by recovering the hero’s body, and the emperor willingly accepted his conditions. This means that he used Cruel to gather all kinds of rumors and information

. It is a hypothesis that was put together by scraping together.

The person who watched the process of coming up with that hypothesis from beginning to end was Cruel Hart.

‘What was his expression like at that time?’

Stave glanced around and saw Deon Hart sitting on one side and Cruel Hart approaching him. He turned his head again and smiled at those who were looking at him in silence.

“Still, I hope you watch your mouth here. “The main character of this banquet is not anyone else but the Hart family.”

“Yes yes! “Excuse me!”

***

Life was originally meant to be lived alone.

I came alone when I came and I will go alone when I leave, so is there really a need to make connections?

...Okay, actually, all of this is nonsense.

‘I want to talk to someone too! But no one is coming!’

Even when I approached it, it ran away...

At this point, even people who don’t notice will notice. Now I was clearly being ignored by everyone.

Oh, it’s not like I’m turning away. As soon as I entered the banquet hall, all eyes were on me. However, it doesn’t come closer and even when I approach it, it just runs away.

‘Let’s eat and see. There are a lot of things that look delicious....’

I sat casually on a nearby chair, rested my chin, and scanned the desserts nearby.

Starting with the most basic cookies, macaron cake pudding... Oh, that pudding looks delicious. Is it strawberry pudding?

The vivid and transparent red color makes you want to try it at least once.

‘...Can I eat it?’

Because it was probably meant to be eaten in the first place.

I slowly got up from my seat and headed towards that direction when I heard a voice calling me from somewhere.

At first glance, it seemed like he was calling me ‘Count Hart’... but I guess I was mistaken. It may be an illusion that the voice sounds familiar.

At least no one approaches me here.

“Count Hart!”

“...uh?”

It wasn’t an illusion! There was someone calling me!

As I turned my head, holding the pudding in my hand, I made eye contact with a knight walking quickly towards me from the other side.

She came in front of me in an instant with long strides, placed her fist on her chest and politely made a knight’s bow.

“Leen Reiner sends greetings to the Count.”

“Lord Lien!”

How could the world be so happy!

Sir Lien is the commander of the knights under my command.

There is one knightly order under my command, but in fact it cannot be called a knightly order. It’s just a gathering of mad dogs.

‘The conclusion is strange?’

...My consciousness went to a strange place, but in any case, under my command there exists an order of knights whose name is even a beggar, the Knights of Lofty.

It’s an order of knights, but it was originally promoted to the order of knights in recognition of the merits of the vanguard that fought with me during the Eight Years’ War, so it’s difficult to imagine it looking as straight as an ordinary order of knights.

Would you understand if they were previously called ‘murder squad’?

In fact, they are still called the ‘Knights of the Murderous Demons’ instead of the ‘Knights of Lofty’, so all is said and done.

Anyway, why do you welcome Lord Lien so much?

‘Because she’s a parachute!’

In other words, it means that they are a very normal race, different from those guys who laughed like crazy while tearing their enemies apart during the 8 Years War.

But I guess it was strange for me to greet them so warmly. Sir Lien tilted his head and spoke in a more cautious tone.

“You don’t look good. “Are you unwell?”

“...no.”

What was my expression like?

“Don’t do that, just sit over here. “It would be difficult if you fell down.”

There is no way to refuse since they even kindly pull out a chair for you.

I gently put down the spoon and strawberry pudding on the table and sat down on the chair.

And with the intention of changing the subject, I spoke to Sir Lien, who was still examining my complexion.

“But why is this a banquet all of a sudden?”

“yes? Are you pretending not to know?”

“...?”

“You’re kidding, right? Hahaha that was a great denial of reality.”

Sir Lien, who was smiling and clapping, looked at my face, which was still filled with doubts, and his expression gradually hardened.

“You really... didn’t know?”

“I don’t know what you’re talking about.”

She hesitated, looking at my eyes, and eventually spoke slowly with a sigh as if there was nothing she could do.

“Celebrating the birth and debut of a new hero....”

“Deon.”

Sir Lien was interrupted and a cool voice came in.

A voice that is unfamiliar yet terribly familiar.

I felt so bad that I turned my head and made eye contact with cold, hard green eyes.

...aha.

The situation has been assessed. I was able to get a glimpse of what Lord Lien said without having to listen to it all the way through.

The knight, who was always confident, was openly looking at me, and the unpleasant man in front of me was proudly showing off that he was the star of the banquet.

—How could you not know?

“...I asked who you were.”

Even with my words mixed with obvious hostility, his green eyes do not waver.

This made me even more annoyed, so I frowned and slowly stroked my hair in an attempt to hide my expression and suppress the rapidly rising emotions.

There's probably a murderous intent in my eyes right now that I can't hide.

I had no intention of revealing my dangerously shining eyes here, so I closed them brightly as if to show off.

"It's been a while, brother."

Green eyes and black hair that are different from mine.

A symbol of the Hart family that I thought I would never see again.

Indeed, the face I saw for the first time in a long time did not change at all from the one in my memory.

Cruel's face stiffened for a moment as if he was taken aback by the unexpected bright smile, but then he slowly nodded.

"okay. "It's been a while."

"You became a hero."

"I was lucky. "I got the warrior's fragment."

"I remember you were skilled with a sword before. Even if you are not a fragment of a hero, you will have become a hero someday. Congratulations."

"...I once faced the commander of Corps 0 on the battlefield."

Even though I flinched for a moment, a smile appeared on my lips again.

That's not because I'm pointing out something, I'm just diverting words.

It seems the pretentious praise and laughter were disgusting. Or maybe it was something that bothered me when they praised my sword skills.

“So?”

“It was more difficult because of the low morale of the soldiers rather than the problem itself.”

“Well. But it was resolved well, right?”

Otherwise, he wouldn't be here and this banquet wouldn't have been held in the first place.

“I heard that you are also good at dealing with fraud. If you were there...”

“Ahahaha brother!”

Cruel closes his mouth.

I could tell what he was trying to say without even having to listen.

I'm sure he was trying to say things like, if I had been there, he wouldn't have suffered so much.

Damn.

“There is no need to make that assumption. There's no way I could fight with you, right?”

I don't know if they pretend to fight together and then try to kill me.

There would be no way in the first place that the emperor, who knows our relationship well, would let us fight together.

“....”

Even during this time, those solid green eyes show no signs of breaking.

Not only did it not break, but it didn't even shake, so I smacked my lips inwardly and tried to scoop up the pudding on the table with a spoon, scooping up a large spoonful.

If you've done this, you'll be fine.

It's normal for both of us to get offended when we see each other's faces, so I hope it goes away quickly.

In fact, I'm already in a bad mood, but I can't make a fuss here. I have no choice but to eat pudding and stuff my stomach.

“...I heard you went on a monster-slaying mission.”

I don't know why you keep saying there's some benefit to this.

He tilted his spoon and dropped the pudding on top onto the plate, nodding with an annoyed expression.

Then Cruel looked me up and down and slowly kissed me.

“Are there any injuries?”

“...Phew—”

Oh my. It's so ridiculous, so stop.

Whenever you push me into a battlefield, you pretend to be worried now. Do you have any belated regrets?

It's ridiculous.

Who was the person who pushed me into the battlefield when I was only 14 years old? Who was it that sent me, a weak person, to the battlefield, leaving behind an older brother who was three years older than me, not only in good health, but also an excellent swordsman?

And who was the one who just stood by and watched them like that?

Cruel Hart.

My older brother, whom I once loved dearly.

It's you.

"What are you asking again? I know how to take good care of my body. There's no need to pretend you care now. At least in front of you, you will be completely fine."

Even if I get hurt in front of you, I won't show it.

Because you can't do something stupid that exposes your weakness to the enemy.

Cruel's expression darkened, as if he had roughly grasped the meaning of what I said, although not entirely.

That was quite pleasant, so I smiled and added.

"So, brother, as always, I would appreciate it if you could just take a look."

Just as I stood by when I was taken to the battlefield. like that.

"...."

"...."

There was no answer.

In the uncomfortable silence, Cruel looked at me with an unknown expression, and I also did not give up and glared into his eyes.

People nearby noticed the unusual atmosphere and immediately distanced themselves.

Only Sir Lien, who unintentionally witnessed his superior's family fight, could not avoid the situation or stop it, and just looked at me and Cruel in turns.

...What are you doing, Sir Lien? Without stopping quickly.

'My eyes hurt so bad I'm dying.'

I can't avoid it because of my pride, but my eyes feel stinging as if I'm already at my limit.

The moment I called out to Lord Lien once again, Cruel's eyes turned to look over my shoulder.

The face returns to its original expressionless expression, as if it had seen something.

Sir Lien also has his eyes set on something and has a very stiff expression. Now that I think about it, the eyes of everyone else around me were all focused in the same direction.

'...what?'

The doubts quickly disappeared.

I don't know what it is, but it probably has nothing to do with me.

If it was related to me, it would have seen me and there would be no need to look somewhere else.

I roughly turned off my nerves and took advantage of the distractions of those around me to shove a large piece of pudding into my mouth.

‘Oh, it wasn’t a strawberry, it was a cherry. I thought the color was a bit too red for some reason.’

The sour taste and aroma in your mouth are not particularly bad.

I was moving my mouth to crush the pudding and swallow it, but from somewhere... I heard an unfamiliar voice coming from where people were looking.

“That’s an impressive friendship.”

“...?”

The first thing I saw was purple hair tied loosely on one side.

An unusual color for hair. Which family was purple the symbol of?

Ah, it was the Duke of Illuster.

...huh? Duke?

“...?!”

You’re a real peacock, right? Duke Stabe Illuster!

I was so startled that I got up from my seat.

I pushed the pudding away and tried to hurriedly say hello...

'I haven't swallowed the pudding yet!'

I can't speak.

It was impossible to openly mumble in front of the duke and show that he was eating something, and it was too big to just swallow. Cold sweat broke out on his back.

'What do we do...?'

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 37

37. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (2)

First of all, I was careful to keep my cheeks from puffing up as much as possible, but in a situation where I would have normally turned away in anger, the Duke managed to greet me with a gentle smile.

"This is your first time meeting face to face like this, right? Nice to meet you, Count Hart. "I've heard a lot of rumors."

"...."

"Count?"

As soon as the duke arrived, Cruel took a step back and his gaze fell on me.

Lord Lien's face turned blue, and the complexions of the people around him also turned pale.

'I know, I know.'

I know that a mere honorary count is now daring to chew on the duke's words!

It won't work. If I continue like this, I'll just add one more enemy. Even if it hurts my throat, I have to get over this and answer.

I hurriedly stuffed my mouth full of pudding down my throat.

The moment I forced my neck to move.

“Count niiiiim!!”

“Kuhup!”

It was a great attack.

The half-eaten pudding popped out of my mouth again.

I looked in bewilderment at the red liquid and lumps that had ruined the floor of the banquet hall, and then carefully called out to the person who was clinging to my back.

“Cough.... Her Royal Highness Princess Hwa....”

***

“It’s been a while, Lord Illuster.”

“Yes, Your Highness... But...”

“There hasn’t been much traffic at the imperial palace these days, so it seems to be very busy.”

“I’m sorry. But Your Highness...”

“Or is something going on?”

“No, Your Highness. “That...”

“Ah, I apologize if it was for personal reasons. “Excuse me.”

The princess turns Count Hart’s gaze, and the crown prince turns the Duke’s gaze.

All of this was planned on the spot the moment the duke spoke to Count Hart.

The Duke of Illuster is the head of the noble faction. What good could there be in having a conversation with Count Hart, the emperor's great sword? There must be a sinister intention.

The crown prince and princess planned to steal Count Hart out of their dark plan.

But it seems like the princess is being overly forceful.

"Your Majesty the Emperor, but you are now Honorary Count Hart..."

"Hmm?"

At that moment, the princess's screams were heard.

"Aaaah, Count! Blood blood!"

"!?"

At first glance, Count Hart could be heard muttering, 'No, this is...', but that voice did not exert any influence and was buried in the commotion.

It's not just blood, it's blood in lumps. Who would overlook this?

"Palace! "Good luck!"

The crown prince hurriedly called for the royal doctor and glanced at the princess.

So, be careful when attacking with a direct attack from behind. It has been said repeatedly that Count Hart's body is like glass due to the Demon King's curse.

'I understand your desire to lure Count Hart, but... this was too much.'

With the promise that once this incident was resolved, he would have the princess sit down again and pay attention to her, the crown prince hurriedly approached Deonhardt.

***

"Aaaah, Count! Blood blood!"

"No, this is...."

"Don't say it."

It's not blood, it's pudding...

Before I could explain, Lord Lien covered my mouth with a handkerchief.

After struggling in embarrassment, I managed to pull her hand away, and with a bewildered expression, I looked at the incredibly refreshing sight seeping out of the handkerchief and then turned my head.

The banquet hall was in chaos.

"Palace! "Good luck!"

Starting with the crown prince calling the court.

"What's going on?"

Even the fucking emperor.

Even the person following him is clearly General Nemeseus, the commander-in-chief and my superior during the Eight Years' War. Even though I haven't seen it in a while, how could I forget that scar across my face?

So, including the damn hero Cruel and Duke Starbe, it was safe to say that I was now attracting the attention of all the big names in the empire.

'If I really vomited blood, it wouldn't be a big problem...'

The problem is that this isn't blood.

I think they think the smell of blood was masked by the perfume that filled the banquet hall, but I don't know what will happen if they find out the truth.

Even as my heart felt like it was about to stop, the emperor's mutterings became even worse.

"Is it because of the devil's curse?"

No, I was never cursed by the devil in the first place.

On the day I returned to the imperial palace carrying the hero's body, I was so weak that I vomited blood in front of the emperor. Somehow it became known as the devil's curse and it ended up like this...

'Oh my god, isn't that the palace?'

It was fucking ruined.

It really came to the palace.

***

The palace doctor was examining the other person with a rare serious expression.

In fact, it would be more accurate to say that his expression had hardened rather than that he was serious.

After all, His Majesty the Emperor, His Royal Highness the Crown Prince and the Princess, Duke Illuster, the head of the noble faction, General Nemeseus and even the hero Cruel Hart were obsessively watching his every move.

The other patient is even the famous hero Deon Hardt, who has a lot of scary tinnitus.

If something bothers you, your life will not be perfect.

That's why I'm very nervous and doing a thorough examination with all my might.

'Why...'

Is there anything wrong?

It's just that my body is too weak, but there's really no problem.

Even if blood was vomited, a fishy smell should have remained, but surprisingly, there was no smell of blood.

At first I thought it was covered in perfume. This is a banquet hall filled with the smell of all kinds of perfume.

I thought the strong cherry scent coming from him was also the scent of perfume buried somewhere.

'But there's no way your mouth can smell like cherries!'

When I slightly opened my mouth to check whether I had really vomited blood, I was struck by the strong smell of cherries instead of the smell of blood.

There, the palace doctor was confident that Count Hart had not vomited blood.

Then, the problem is the red liquid and lumps that come out of the mouth...

‘It has a cherry scent, so it must be cherry-related.’

Come to think of it, I remember there was cherry pudding among the desserts.

I think I got sick while eating this pudding... I looked at the red lumps being cleaned up by the attendants with salty eyes, then looked away again.

‘Should I tell you?’

It will only be a matter of time before others notice.

Even if you didn’t notice at first because you were so dazed and the smell of perfume was all around you, in the end, most of the people here had experienced blood.

The tyrant Edoardo Desert, who not only rose to power through rebellion, but also started the Eight Years’ War almost immediately after ascending to the throne; General Nemeseus, who was the commander-in-chief of the Eight Years’ War; and, of course, Cruel, a hero who cannot be separated from battle.

If you are given a little time, you will be able to quickly understand the situation as you have watched it so tiresomely.

That's why I was seriously thinking about it.

Gong Yi's eyes involuntarily raised his head and met bright red eyes staring down at him.

'...Hi!'

That's clearly a look in your eyes that will kill you if you say anything!

I reflexively took a breath. The expressions of those around him who took it seriously became even darker, but the palace doctor had no time to worry about such things.

Do you lie to His Majesty, or do you tell the truth at the risk of death?

After pondering for a while at the crossroads of life and death, he said, "You said there was an attack when you came here. "It seems like he was bleeding due to fatigue due to the internal injuries he suffered at that time."

I closed my eyes tightly and chose life right now.

***

"You said there was an attack when you came here. "It seems like he was bleeding due to fatigue due to the internal injuries he suffered at that time."

Lived! It seems that my earnest pleading eyes were conveyed.

Although I stuttered a bit, my doctor did a great job.

To be honest, when he closed his eyes tightly, my heart sank because I thought he was telling the truth.

Really, what would have happened if I had told the truth.

He must have felt embarrassed and incurred the wrath of others, but even before that, the emperor's reaction was unpredictable.

Maybe he tried to kill me for humiliation.

"There is no treatment other than rest, so it is best to rest well..."

"I see."

I answered calmly and got up from the chair I was sitting on.

It's finally happening. I thought it was too burdensome. He held out a chair for the patient, saying he should sit down, but who would be able to sit alone in a gathering of royal family members unless their heart was quite strong?

Even the emperor was standing there!

Perhaps, if the emperor had not said it was an order, I would have stood firm until the end and received the examination.

'Anyway, it seems like it's been roughly resolved.'

Now I can use this as an excuse to go home. Could it be that they are trying to capture the patient?

He turned towards the emperor. I was about to say that I would just bow down and go back, but unfortunately, my body was more tense than I expected.

It's so bad that your legs will give out!

Clearly, my heart was bowing to the emperor without any hesitation. Why is my body falling forward?

I cursed under my breath as I felt my body collapsing helplessly.

‘Oh shit.’

You show all sorts of things in front of the emperor. How funny would the people at the banquet look at me?

As I have never been in the social world, this incident will be firmly engraved in their minds.

As an honorary count who fell shamefully in front of the emperor.

‘My social life is ruined.’

With that thought in mind, I stared blankly at the floor getting closer.

—No.

‘It’s not getting closer?’

Did time always flow this slowly?

Oh, is that it? It’s not. The magic light should also bring back memories of the past.

As I was coming up with various nonsense thoughts, it was only after a few more seconds that I realized that someone was holding my arm.

Who is it? Among the people nearby, if there was anyone who could catch me... Is it Lord Lien?

I took my distracted focus, moved my gaze along the hand holding my arm, and opened my mouth.

“Go...”

...No thank you!

The words of gratitude that were coming out of my mouth disappeared the moment I saw the other person’s face.

My eyes, which had been filled with kindness as I had to say thank you, turned cold, and almost immediately, I showed extreme disgust and shook off the hand that was supporting my body.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

In cold silence, Cruel looks at my hand and me in silence, then takes a step back. I also bit my lip and took a couple of steps back.

I didn’t want to do something like this in front of the emperor, but I can’t help it. Because this was a reflex action.

I fought on the battlefield for eight years and pondered the hatred over and over again.

How could I calmly accept this guy’s touch when the disgust has remained so deeply rooted that it is at the level of an imprint?

—Even if it was for me.

Fortunately, the silence was broken quickly.

“...You seem to be quite unwell. “How about we just go back and rest?”

“I’m sorry.”

I bowed obediently and expressed my respect.

What the emperor said is often a congratulatory command given by the host to the other party at a banquet.

This word, which can be either insulting or considerate depending on how it is used, was considerate to me now.

No matter how I feel about Cruel, the star of this banquet is Cruel, and the host is the imperial family.

As such, my rudeness, which could have easily become a big problem, was disguised as ‘due to being unwell’ and the emperor took the initiative to lightly reprimand me, thereby preventing anyone from openly reprimanding me.

The emperor has definitely surrounded me.

‘Because he is generous to Injae.’

That’s why I feel even more burdened. I’m not the kind of talent you think I am.

I am already afraid of how the emperor will react the moment those expectations disappear like bubbles.

With renewed awareness, I felt like my legs were losing strength again, so I hurriedly walked out of the banquet hall without rejecting the hand of Lord Lien who was supporting me from my side.

I had intentionally forgotten about Cruel.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 38

38. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (3)

Honorary Count Deon Hardt left the banquet hall and the banquet was already coming to an end.

Among the nobles leaving the banquet hall one by one, Starbe Illuster and Cruel Hart were quietly strolling in the open garden of the nearby imperial palace.

Duke Starbe walked ahead and Cruel followed, and Starbe, who was silently walking towards a deserted place for a while, stopped at some point.

“When you asked me to be your sponsor and claimed to be on my side—” I turned and faced Cruel Hart.

Starbe also had an unknown smile on his face as he looked straight into the solid green eyes.

“I asked Sir why.”

“....”

“—Was it for protection?”

The only two survivors of an extinct family.

Cruel Hart is the only survivor, except for Deon Hart, who appears to be the main culprit.

When he lost everything and came to me and asked me to become his sponsor, instead of immediately kicking him out or accepting, Stave asked why.

The answer was rudely short.

Just for 'protection'.

"What?"

It was a short phrase with no subject or object, but Stave didn't ask any more questions.

People who have something to protect become more faithful than anyone else. He wasn't stupid enough to kick a faithful dog that came to his feet.

It may seem like you roughly know what the missing object is, but even if you don't, you will find out someday, so there's no need to ask and make them feel rejected.

And today, the moment he saw Deon Hardt's eyes, which went beyond hostility and were filled with murderous intent, he became convinced of what was included in the 'object'.

"Me."

"To protect myself."

Reason suppressed the instinctive cry that it didn't seem like that and that there must be something more.

"Was it to protect Cruelhart himself from Deonhart?"

"...."

All that comes back is silence.

Duke Stave chuckles as if that is enough. Cruel stared at him and quietly closed his eyes as if to chase away fatigue.

The duke's soft voice could be heard vaguely.

"It's not something I would say carelessly as I don't know other people's circumstances, but... it's foolish."

If the goal was purely to survive, there would have been countless ways.

'Still, it was a welcome choice from our perspective.'

Stave laughed.

He is a duke and the head of a noble faction. He has the power to overpower quite a few things, and there is also ample reason to eliminate Deon Hardt, the 'Emperor's Dog'.

No. 'The Emperor's Dog' is just an additional reason, even if you exclude that reason—

'Deonhart... is a person who must be killed.'

They are a cancerous being on this earth.

He touched the area around his heart and smiled lightly.

"...."

Cruel didn't bother to answer.

Before I knew it, the scene from that time was flashing back onto my black retina.

The entrance to the mansion that no one guards. A hallway full of blood. And inside the room, he pulls out the dagger stuck in his father's heart and looks back—

[Brother.]

...Deon.

My own younger brother.

Cruel glanced at the bodies of his mother and father, who were relatively intact compared to the others who had been torn to pieces, and raised his gaze again.

The blood that flowed from the red-stained hair down the forehead beaded at the corner of the eye for a moment and then flowed down the cheek again.

Unlike the tears that flowed down his face, Deon was smiling.

Blood drips from the dagger in both hands.

[...You.]

The moment Cruel was watching that and was about to say something, Deon threw the dagger he was holding.

***

As soon as I left the imperial palace, I refused Lord Lien, who offered to support me until the end, and crawled back to the mansion on my own feet. For a moment, I forgot my face and rubbed my eyes.

I see a lot of guys who shouldn't be in my house. Is this something strange with my eyes?

He is not even wearing ordinary clothes, but a pure white knight's uniform.

Let's put aside the fact that those clothes look familiar.

'Why is the front yard of my house, which was fine until I left, on fire?'

Is it still a hallucination? It must be a hallucination. I seem to be very stressed out these days. Or maybe he's old.

"...That can't be possible. "What the fuck is this!!"

Even the heat I felt on my skin couldn't be a hallucination.

At my shout, the guys who were huddled together on one side of the burning yard, surrounding something, turn around.

And I almost grabbed the back of my neck inadvertently as I saw their faces becoming brighter without understanding the situation.

"Captain!"

Oh, you damn bastards.

"Great ego! "Wow!"

"It's not the captain, it's the count!"

"Count!"

"Count niiiiim!!"

under.

My head hurt, so I placed my hand on my temple and scanned their faces with tired eyes.

Why are there rabid dogs in my house? Since when did my mansion become a dog kennel?

Knights of Lofty. No, the Murderous Knights.

All of those members were occupying my yard as if it was their natural responsibility.

The gatekeepers were watching, sweating profusely.

‘What on earth did you do to not stop it?...’

So there’s no reason to have a gatekeeper.

I wonder if this absurd situation is a dream, but the events that happened today are too realistic to say so, and the heat of the fire and the presence of Lord Lien standing one step behind are also too vivid.

She was even yelling at them who were going crazy.

“Full sort!”

“!”

Oh, look at how they line up in an instant.

Lord Lien captured them with such certainty that it was a pity that they were given the dishonorable title of parachute.

She shouted sharply, fluttering her neatly tied up hair.

Oh, I didn’t just shout. I clearly said that my hair was flying.

Pow!

“What are you doing now?!”

“Hehe, it’s all leader....”

“It’s not the leader, it’s the leader. And if you see your lord, you should say hello, but what kind of mentality is it to cry out as if you were looking for a wife who has run away from home? “Why is the Count’s yard on fire!”

Puk puk puk.

The members are shocked by the merciless hand and belatedly say hello to me.

I took turns looking at the burning yard and the members, and called out to Lord Lien in a sighing voice.

“Lord Lien.”

“Yes, Count.”

“Beat more.”

“All right.”

“yes? Oh no, just a moment! Count! Let’s talk for a moment!! “Keuuk!”

What is the story?

I feel like I want to come out and beat him up myself. I held back because I thought if I did that, my wrist would come off first.

Anyway, what is this?

I stared at them as they began to roll on the floor one by one under Lord Lien's merciless hands.

It's not like I'm complaining in particular. I was curious about what on earth they were surrounded by.

Because of the heat, I couldn't get closer, so I just strained my eyes, and something that wasn't visible when they were huddled together appeared among them.

So, clothes with white birds on a blue background...

'Revolutionary Army?'

Why are the revolutionary army in my front yard? Could it be that those mad dogs subdued him?

Now that I think about it, those guys were trying to explain something earlier, I guess?

"Lord Lien, wait a moment."

"yes."

I stopped her with the intention of hearing the whole story.

Sir Lien immediately stopped his actions like a knight, but because these damn bastards pretended to cry, he was able to hear the full story of the incident only after giving them a few more blows.

"This guy threw a bomb in my front yard?"

"yes! "We happened to see it and caught it right away!"

"Well... I understand for now. But..."

Confident eyes are focused on me as if there is nothing to be stung.

I met each of their gazes and expressed my doubts without hesitation.

“Why were you here at that exact time?”

“Uh...”

“Why did the revolutionary army attack my mansion without me? “There’s nothing in my mansion that would attract them.”

“That...” Everyone

turns their heads and looks the other way, wondering where those confident eyes from a moment ago have gone.

The guy who was unlucky enough to meet my gaze directly broke into a cold sweat and rolled his eyes back and forth.

“I can hear the head rolling.”

“!”

Thanks to this, I was able to infer the cause to some extent.

It’s a shame for these guys, but I’m not that dull.

“You were staying here before the revolutionary army came, right?”

“...!”

“How did you do that...!”

also.

These guys didn't come because of the revolutionary army, but the revolutionary army came because of these guys.

The revolutionary army wants to cause damage to the emperor, and to do so, inflicting damage on me would be the most effective way.

In order to cause damage to me, it would have been better to attack the Knights, who were my greatest force, and since the location was my mansion, there would have been no reason to hesitate.

I looked at the culprits of this incident with cold eyes.

I want to hit them in the back of the head right now and ask them why they came...

"...let's clean up after ourselves first."

Turn off that fire too.

Even though I kept my distance, my eyes feel a little sore.

I unconsciously raised my hand to rub my eyes, but I felt a foreign body in my hand, which should have been empty. And a desperate cry is heard at the same time.

"Count!!"

"...?"

The only time Lord Lien shouts like that is when something unusual happens.

I stopped acting based on my instincts.

It was at that moment that I realized that I was holding something in my hand that wasn't there just a moment ago.

“...what is this?”

The familiar shape is quite ominous. Where did you see this?

...Okay, that's what I remembered.

I threw it away almost immediately. Desperately, as if my only goal was to get this horrible thing out of my hands.

What I thought I had thrown upwards flew behind me, landed on the floor, rolled over, and came to a stop after hitting someone's feet.

Pow!!

“No Count!!”

“Are you okay?!”

Lord Lien and the members came rushing in to check on my well-being.

Anyway, I stared blankly at the place where the explosion occurred.

‘I almost died.’

Even if a bomb were to fly, I never thought it would fly right into my hand. I survived thanks to catching it by chance, but honestly, I'm not happy.

Sir Lien, who had somehow interpreted the meaning of my gaze, walked towards me, touched the charred corpse with his sword sheath, and said,

“You don't have to feel guilty. “This guy is a revolutionary army.”

And the way he looks at me... I think he's shouting, 'You have a warm heart, too!' with just his eyes.

It's not like that.

"I never thought I would have a friend. "It seems that while that guy threw the bomb and caused chaos, the other guy was planning to escape with his captured comrade... but you can see the result."

I followed with my eyes where Sir Lien's gaze was directed.

And at the end, I was able to see the old butler mercilessly overpowering the revolutionary soldier who was running away while carrying his comrade.

...No, Remember?!

'Is it okay for a grandfather to be like that?!'

"Anyway, I was impressed."

"...yes?"

"I was transfixed and thought something big had befallen the Count. But I never thought you would catch the bomb."

"ah.... "That's..."

"As expected, you are amazing."

That's a coincidence.

The bright eyes are quite burdensome.

Unable to look her in the eye, I ended up running away, leaving only a few commands to sort out the situation.

“I will take you there.”

“....”

Of course, she made even that difficult.

I think I need to start looking for stomach medicine as soon as I get to my room.

Shit.

***

“Damn it, even if I had to die, I should have killed the emperor’s dog...”

A voice full of regret flowed from the mouth of the revolutionary soldier who had been completely suppressed.

There are several major obstacles on the way to bringing down the emperor. If I were to pick just the most important ones, there would be around three.

Nemeseus was the commander-in-chief during the Eight Years’ War and is currently the emperor’s personal bodyguard.

Prime Minister Ardal stabilizes public sentiment toward the emperor through excellent policies and financial management methods, both during the war and now.

Honorary Count Deonhardt, who was the vanguard during the Eight Years’ War and is currently the emperor’s dog, accepting any order he gives without reservation.

The most annoying of these is Deon Hart.

The other two use sunny areas as their main stage, so their actions are limited, so they can be predicted to a certain extent and are easy to monitor, but Deonhardt's main stage is in the shadows.

In other words, it is difficult to predict where it will fly and difficult to monitor.

It started with the fact that I had no idea where I was going and what I was doing this time.

'Of course I didn't go there purely to subdue monsters...'

It would be difficult to keep losing track of things like this.

Therefore, the revolutionary army was working hard to eliminate Deon Hardt, a dangerous variable.

Aside from regret, the members of the Murderous Knights paused for a moment and looked around at the voice that did not contain a single trace of regret.

The Count and the leader entered the mansion, and the butler was leading the manpower to put out the fire in the yard.

In other words, there is no one to overhear this conversation or stop their actions.

"Who is the emperor's dog?"

Immediately the wild dogs showed their teeth.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 39

39. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (4)

"If they knew anything about the Count, they wouldn't have even said something like this."

"What is that..."

"You won't tell me. "If you're really curious, do your research."

"...."

I won't even be able to find out.

The emperor's dog? It's not even funny. Of those who participated in the Eight Year War, if they were to select the one with the least loyalty to the emperor, they and their captain would be chosen without a doubt.

Certain emotions were overlaid on the members' eyes.

Based on the madness, all kinds of negative emotions such as anger and hatred emerged and one member, who had managed to organize his emotions for a moment and waited for them to disappear, opened his mouth softly.

"So, stop harassing those who are having a hard time—"

The members quietly gathered together to block the attention of those around them.

It's enough to keep just one alive anyway, so it would be okay to kill at least one guy who spoke arrogantly.

The member who quietly drew his weapon spoke with a smile that could be seen as fake.

"die."

***

I managed to get to my room, enduring Lord Lien's burdensome gaze, and instead of going out, I avoided her gaze and pretended not to notice, keeping my eyes fixed outside the window.

'They're gathered together again. 'What are you doing all gathered together like that?'

I hope it won't cause another accident.

Why were those guys in my house before that? Shouldn't it be in the imperial palace?

"Lord Lien."

"Yes, Count."

"Do you know what kind of situation this is?"

"Are you talking about the revolutionary army's attack?"

"No, about why they are here."

"Ah, I understand that Your Majesty has returned the Order of Knights that he had temporarily taken charge of during the Count's absence."

It's a shame to leave it for a while. I guess they tried to eat it but couldn't handle it so they sent it back.

Of course, before the war ended and he left as a warrior's companion, the emperor had said that he would temporarily leave the Lofty Knights in charge of the imperial family during his absence.

But what naive person would believe that?

Cases where people say they will keep it in their hands and then quietly swallow it up are common facts that come up even if you look in any history book right now.

There is also some evidence that the emperor attempted to do so.

Although I haven't stayed here for a long time so far, I've had plenty of time to return it.

Nevertheless, the reason why it is being returned now is probably because the personalities of the members who tried to control it somehow cannot be handled.

Damn emperor.

'Did you think I could handle people that even the emperor couldn't handle?'

If you ate it, you would have just wiped your mouth. Why bother giving it back to me?

If it was consideration, if it was not at all grateful and was just trying to feed them, it is indeed an excellent choice.

While my expression was sour, Remember, who must have finished cleaning up, knocked and came in asking for permission.

Pure white gloves and a wrinkle-free tailcoat. It is a uniformly neat outfit.

—To the extent that it is inconceivable that the revolutionary army was defeated just a moment ago.

He reported, brushing aside my narrowed gaze with a solemn smile typical of an old man, as always.

“The fire in the yard was completely extinguished. “I would like to hire another competent gardener to revive the garden, but what do you think, Count?”

“...Remember takes care of it.”

Since you are a competent butler, you will be able to take care of it.

His unexpected abilities are quite outrageous, but thanks to that, my anger at the bombs (mad dogs) that the Emperor gave me has subsided, so let's just move on.

Even if you ask, you won't get anything anyway.

Rather than that, the priority is what to do with those who were forced to take charge.

“Remember.”

“Yes, Count.”

“I would like to provide separate lodgings for the knights, but is that possible?”

“Count Hart is big and spacious. “Let’s provide separate accommodation for the knights.”

After all, he is competent. Get the job done quickly without the slightest hint of embarrassment or hesitation!

It would be perfect if we just did something about his mysterious attitude.

While he was just gorging himself, Remember turned his gaze to look at Sir Lien.

“What will you do with Lord Lien? Since the genders are different, if you want to stay, you have to prepare a separate room...” “

Oh, I will commute here. So, you don’t have to prepare my accommodation.”

“Yes, I understand.”

Come to think of it, Lord Lien was a nobleman.

Rarely, a murderous group made up entirely of commoners... No, looking at the Knights of Lofty, I don’t think of any nobles, even if they are knights.

‘When I think about it, this is a big deal. When you think of ‘knight’, ‘rabid dog’ naturally comes to mind. If this is the case, even if I meet another knight, I will be blinded by prejudice...’

“Anyway, it seems that His Majesty cares for you a lot.”

“...yes?”

Who saves whom?

I suddenly raised my head in bewilderment.

While I was lost in thought, I guess I had finished sorting out the situation. The knights were nowhere to be found, and Sir Lien, who seemed to be the person who had finished sorting things out, was leaving with a silent bow.

And the person left in front of me was Remember, who spouted something absurd.

“What did you just say...”

“I said that His Majesty seems to care for you a lot.”

“...Don’t you think you need a Remember vacation?”

“If you give it to me, I will be grateful, but I am sorry that you are already treating me like a senile old man.”

But the emperor cares about me. It seems like they’re talking about the Knights Templar, but that doesn’t make sense.

Where on earth are you looking?

“Usually, because of the risk of treason, it is not easy to station knights from other families in the imperial palace or to give them up again, isn’t it? “Probably no monarch would do this except with ordinary faith and determination.”

“....”

I think he was trying to swallow it up but it didn’t work so he passed it on to me and gave it back?

But what can I say? Our deacon who likes to make fun of others will only hear what he wants to hear. Rather, they will find fault with this and try to make fun of it again.

Finally, I opened my mouth with a sigh.

“I will rest.”

“Yes, take a good rest. “It’ll probably get a lot busier starting tomorrow.”

“...?”

“While the Count was away, a lot of work got pushed back. “I processed what I could to the best of my ability, but there were more than one or two documents that required the Count’s approval.”

“Ugh.”

“For your information, this is not something that can be solved by avoiding it. In fact, the work will be pushed back further.”

“...I had no intention of avoiding it.”

I did a little bit... but I didn’t want to do it.

Ah, I miss the Demon World where I can just roll around.

‘I never thought I would want to go back to the demon world.’

Feeling the grandeur of the paperwork, I hurried to the bathroom, avoiding Remember’s gaze with a subtle smile.

I’m tired. Somehow, it seems that the fatigue accumulated here is greater than the fatigue accumulated in the banquet hall.

‘...It would be better to build a separate lodging for the knights.’

Go as far away from where I stay as possible.

This is all because of them. I'm not human if I don't feel tired after talking like that and putting everyone else on edge.

Now that I think about it, the forest behind the mansion seems quite large for being inside the count's mansion. Wouldn't it be a bit quieter if it were built in the middle of it?

'I'll have to have a serious discussion with Remember later.'

***

There are unspoken rules in the slums.

Rules created to somehow keep one's sanity and survive in a difficult life.

[Be friendly, but don't be affectionate.]

....

Contrary to appearances, the slums are sensitive to all kinds of rumors.

How can we not be sensitive to the atmosphere of the nobles as it is directly related to their livelihood?

If the nobles are in a bad mood, their children will starve.

When the nobles had no time to spare due to war preparations, those who sold their bodies went hungry.

For some reason, when nobles went out less often, people had to throw themselves in front of carriages to get money and chew on tree roots.

As such, in the slums where rumors spread quickly, 'the birth of a new hero' and 'the return of Deonhardt' were already outdated rumors.

And that empty space was quickly filled by other rumors.

A rumor that could be like salvation and provide hope to those living in the slums.

It's actually related to 'salvation'— such a rumor.

Shiia asked in a voice that had become faint after starving for several days.

"Salvation Church?"

"Yeah, I guess they give out free bread and water in the slums."

"For free?"

"For free."

"Nonsense. "Isn't there a drug in there?"

The voice was small, but the doubt contained therein was clear. In addition, a suspicious expression was clearly visible on Shiia's face.

A scraggly face with messy, messy hair.

Yes, Siia is from the slums.

As he was born in the slums and has lived in the slums, he is a child of the slums who has been left behind and unable to receive favors without question.

That's why she couldn't believe what the other person said.

Giving out free bread and water? There wouldn't be any benefit, right? Besides, isn't Salvation Church a religion? If it were a religion, it would need donations, but it's impossible for people in the slums to have money.

So this is a lie. There is no reason to believe it.

"no. The lame man next door tried it and said nothing happened. "They even said they just let me go without asking for anything."

"...lie."

If it's a lame man, Shiia knows it too.

A man who has no regrets about life, so he throws himself in front of the carriage without hesitation and collects money from nobles.

He probably would have just taken it without caring whether it contained medicine or not. At least to him, life and death have no meaning.

You probably thought that if you live, you live, and if you die, you die.

And lived. Shiia still couldn't believe it.

There's no way that guy would lie, so then is this boy in front of me lying?

So why? wherefore? What are the benefits?

"It's real?! I felt sorry for you because you were starving for a week, so I told you, but... if you don't want to believe it, don't believe it! I'll go alone! "If you don't go, you're the only one who loses."

Paul turned around with his face scrunched up.

Oh, I guess you're upset. If you walk hard like that, you will quickly lose strength and get hungry quickly.

Shiia blankly followed the receding figure with lifeless eyes.

By the way, you said you were going alone, right?

Considering that Paul said he was going, it doesn't seem to be a completely unreliable rumor.

"I said it was the Church of Salvation...."

My voice was cracked and came out as if the wind was leaking because I couldn't even drink water properly.

After failing to pickpocket and getting beat up, I couldn't eat anything properly for a week.

I broke my wrist when I was supposed to pickpocket, and now that I've recovered a bit, I don't have the strength to try again.

If this continues, you will die.

I could feel death, which had always been by my side, reaching out its hand.

People always die in slums.

The person I talked to yesterday becomes a corpse, and the person I shared the rumor with the day before commits suicide.

The corpses are not given any comfort and are simply burned to prevent epidemics. There was always no one mourning.

‘If I die, will that happen to me too?’

I guess so.

There was something that the drunkard man, who is no longer dead, always said as if he were lamenting.

[I didn’t cry when others died, so who will cry for me?]

And when that man committed suicide, as he said, no one cried for him. Shiia didn’t cry either.

This is a place that is unkind to children’s crying. Tears only encourage physical exhaustion.

So I didn’t cry.

So if Shiia dies, no one will cry like they always did.

When I thought about that, strangely enough, I became interested in Salvation Church.

‘How about adding something strange to bread and water?’

Even if you die of starvation, poison, or even disappear, the reaction of the people here will be the same.

And if you’re going to die, wouldn’t it be better to eat and die than to starve?

I raised my limp body.

She could feel her limbs shaking, but she began to walk with difficulty.

Now he had become a black dot, chasing after Paul as he walked away, and calling out to him in a dry voice.

'It doesn't matter if it's salvation or anything else.'

If you just give them bread and water like they say.

She returned before she knew it, surrendering herself to Paul, who supported her with his rough but careful hands, and closed her eyes helplessly.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 40

40. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (5)

A week has passed since the banquet.

The murderous knights who wanted to put them in the middle of the forest were fortunate enough to be able to stay in a decent lodging despite Remember's objection that they couldn't waste their budget, and I... "You're going to build another dam

? How much time and money does it take to make one? Even the territory is Hart territory?! it's crazy. "Who on earth posted this?"

"That's me."

"Ah... now that I think about it, having one more wouldn't be a bad idea. Even though it is a temporary territory, it will be difficult to neglect management, so if drought or floods can be prevented... I will approve it."

bang.

The seal was stamped.

...So, as you can see, I'm currently surrounded by a mountain of documents and I'm busy getting things done.

As I had half a year's worth of documents behind me, I couldn't rest properly for a week and was just working on documents. Naturally, dark shadows appeared under my eyes!

How long has it been since you came!

I feel like I just want to stamp it without reading it, but if I do that, Remember won't let me go.

What's really great about our butler is that he never raises his voice or frowns, but he has a knack for putting people off. Even now, look at me, I'm still opening my mouth to see what I'm trying to say.

He is probably trying to reprimand me for being negligent in managing Hart territory.

"It looks like you haven't heard the news yet."

"...yes?"

"A week ago, His Majesty temporarily entrusted the management of the Hart estate to the Count's ownership."

"What is that?!"

I barely accepted being put in temporary charge, but what did I do?

"This joke went a little too far, Remember."

"It's not a joke."

"I didn't receive an official letter or anything."

“It must be here somewhere.”

“....”

I looked at the pile of documents that occupied not only the top of the desk but also the floor.

Remember calmly spoke to me with a devastated expression.

“The Hart estate now belongs to the Count. “It would be difficult to neglect management.”

“...Isn’t this too much for an ‘honorary count’ in the first place? “I received not only one or two territories, but why do I have to look into the national defense area?...”

He waved a document containing a report that a group of monsters were wandering around the territory near the border.

“That’s because part of the Count’s territory borders the border.”

“That’s right! Why should a ‘count emeritus’ assume the role of margrave!”

Margrave Count Emeritus.

These three are all counts, but their treatment and privileges are different.

An honorary count is a rank that is equal to a count and is treated equally, but is a single title. The title cannot be passed on to someone else, and upon death, the territory belongs to the empire.

What about the Count? As you know, it is possible to pass down a title. You can proudly show off your own 'family'.

A margrave refers to a count who owns a territory bordering another kingdom.

In fact, he is a count in name only, but is treated almost equally as a marquis. Is this a benefit given to those responsible for part of national defense?

In that sense, it is shocking that it is not a count who has become a margrave, but an honorary count who has become a margrave.

"Ask your Majesty. "It is none other than His Majesty who has given you rights and duties greater than that of an honorary count."

"There's no way I can argue with you...."

I collapsed on my desk with a deep sigh.

There were more than one person who protested for no reason and lost their heads, so who would argue with the emperor?

Even though he gave me territory to manage in the imperial family.

'Yes, that territory.'

The territory that made me take on the role of Margrave is not actually located on the border. It's actually closer to the center.

In other words, it was originally a fiefdom that had to be managed by the imperial family.

The emperor gave the territory to me, who knew nothing.
Damn it.

I'm satisfied with being an honorary count, but I don't know why I'm anxious that I can't get something more.

"...Rather than that, we need to find a way to return Hart Territory."

I can easily pass over other fiefdoms, even the fiefdom that made me play the role of margrave, but I hate the Hart fiefdom.

I don't have very good memories of this territory since it was the territory of the 'former' Count Hart family.

To be precise, we can say that their betrayal transformed the good memories into the worst past.

It was annoying to have it temporarily taken care of, but who is going to hand over ownership at will?

I can never get over this.

"There is no way they will accept it obediently..."

The temporary entrustment itself was something the emperor forced upon him.

Should I meet him in person and ask him to take it back?

It may be painful, but it wouldn't be a bad idea to ask for a deal, saying that you will grant whatever the emperor wants as long as it is practicable, just once.

It's fortunate that the emperor isn't so crazy that he accepts interesting deals.

“I have to go see His Majesty soon...”

Knock.

I couldn't even finish my sentence.

Because there was news beyond the door that cannot be taken lightly.

“Count, General Nemeseus has come to visit.”

I jumped up from my seat. I could tell without even looking that my eyes were wide open.

‘General? why? Aren't you supposed to be by the emperor's side? Why did you come directly? Has something big happened?’

Surely you didn't come to catch me?

The door suddenly opened. I made eye contact with the servant standing in front of me.

It was only after seeing the attendant shaking and lowering his head in shock, as if he had been burned, that I was able to recall a fact I had forgotten for a while.

‘okay. It was an unpleasant sight for my eyes here.’

Mixed emotions came flooding back.

Although I was slowly adapting to the human world, my mind still seemed to be in the demon world. How can you forget, even for a moment, a fact that is like common sense?

I let my guard down.

Even though I know that other people, except those who have a close relationship with me, such as the royal family and the knights Remember, find it uncomfortable to look into my eyes.

“...What brings you here?”

My question was answered by a quick-witted butler.

“This old man thinks it might be related to the revolutionary army he caught this time.”

“I didn’t receive an official letter or anything.”

“It must be here somewhere.”

“....”

It feels like déjà vu. Isn’t that what you just said?

I looked around at the documents in the room once again and then walked away with a deep sigh.

Anyway, I can’t keep the general waiting.

Nemeseus was my immediate superior when I became the vanguard during the Eight Years’ War.

I don’t know why, but I clearly remember that he was secretly trying to distance himself from me. The fact that such a person came like this must mean that it was a situation that had no choice but to come.

Continuing my pointless speculation that it was probably due to the emperor’s orders or something like that, I opened the door to the living room and froze when I made eye contact with the people inside.

“It’s been a while, Count.”

“...Deonhardt meets the Empire of the future.”

***

“Honorary Count Hart captured the revolutionary army that attacked the mansion?”

“!”

“They said he caught the bomb with his bare hands.”

The crown prince, who was drinking tea across from the princess in the garden, put down the newspaper he was holding. The princess who was tipping the teacup in front of her flinched and trembled.

She calmly passes the liquid in her mouth and sets down the glass. At the same time, my head bowed.

“Honorary Count Hart...”

“Why are you sulking again?”

As if he could see dark clouds above her head, the crown prince quickly uncrossed his legs and a look of confusion appeared on his face.

The princess had been depressed for several days after the banquet.

“He doesn’t want to see me anymore, does he?”

“It wasn’t much different from before, but something new happened.”

“But you vomited blood!”

The princess raised her voice and buried her face in her hands. The prince, with his eyes wide open, seemed unable to see anything.

I admit it. Even when I was quiet, people around me were attracted to me. Due to my status and appearance, I was clumsy because I had never tried to seduce someone.

Even if there were other more advanced methods in the first place, I wouldn't have been able to use them... but I didn't intend to cause such a big accident.

"I'm ruined... all my efforts...!"

"I don't think it was a very effective tactic to begin with..."

"After all, I have to apologize, right?"

"directly?"

"yes!"

"no."

The crown prince's expression hardened.

In most cases, you will be allowed to do what you want without blocking it, but this is not the case.

"Whether you visit his mansion or he comes to the imperial palace at your summons, if you meet him in person, there will definitely be a scandal."

"Then it's good for me. If you make the scandal a fait accompli and get married as is...."

"Alethea."

There was a short silence.

He glanced at his younger brother and sighed.

“You don’t love him.”

“....”

“And an apology will also stain your performance.”

Because the ‘Princess’ is not smart enough to apologize for something like that.

Only then did a stir appear in the princess’s eyes.

To put it in a good way, she is pure, and in a bad way, she is a stupid princess. That’s the public opinion about Alethea.

“If you want to quit, I’m welcome.”

“...That’s Okay.”

The stigma that the princess incurred for the emperor and crown prince she intended to be.

From the crown prince’s point of view, it is a sorry evaluation that proves his brother’s sacrifice.

“Even if we stick together, it’s not enough, so we can’t split sides again over the issue of succession to the throne.”

“Yeah... I’m sick of the succession fight.”

“And if it’s a question of Honorary Count Hart, don’t worry.

“Even if I don’t love him, I like him.”

It’s not hard to guess what that little head is thinking about.

The crown prince stroked the princess's head.

"I tell you this many times, but if you want to quit, you can quit at any time. "No one has ever forced anything on you."

The princess, who was quietly looking at him, smiled brightly.

"i know. So, brother, please come and find out what Honorary Count Hart thinks of me."

"...what?"

"Come on. "I can't go, right?"

"No, there's something strange about the conclusion..."

She pushed her brother's back and burst into bright laughter.

The princess has a good sense.

Her senses indicated that Deonhardt was the Empire's most uneasy hero. If I could tie him perfectly to the imperial family through marriage, that would be enough.

"If you really want to lure Honorary Count Hart, you will have to change your method first."

"I'm sorry that the foolish princess only knows this way!"

"...."

It doesn't matter whether Deonhardt comes over or not.

What's important is that the 'princess' expressed interest in him and everyone knows it.

Of course, I would appreciate it if you would come over, but even if you don't, you have to choose Deon Hardt the moment you send the marriage proposal.

Should I reject it and live alone for the rest of my life or accept it?

'Of course, it's just a guess, so I've put the marriage proposal on hold for now.'

"Okay, let's go." "I was planning to meet Honorary Count Hart anyway, so I'll do my best to find out."

"As expected of you, brother!"

"But don't expect me to just check to see if he's offended by your rudeness."

***

I barely managed to come to my senses and lowered my head. A stiff, awkward voice came out as if representing my feelings.

The crown prince smiles gently and nods as if he understands my feelings.

The crown prince, not the general!

'Why is there no message...!'

No one even announced it.

With sharp eyes, he glared at the servant who only announced the 'visit of Nemeseus.' The moment the bastard's face turned white, the crown prince gently called to me.

“Don’t criticize the users. “I told you not to say it.”

“...Your Highness.”

It is in front of the crown prince. I immediately straightened my posture.

After I had some time to spare, General Nemeseus came into view. I was so distracted at the banquet hall that I just glanced at him and passed on.

Skin tanned by the sun from fighting the battlefield. A scar across the face.

His former superior looked the same as he did during the war, but his expression was stern, as if he didn’t like something.

Judging by his gaze, he seems to be dissatisfied with the fact that the crown prince followed him.

In other words, the crown prince followed him as he pleased...

Why?

“Your Majesty wants the handover of the revolutionary army you captured. Well, that’s what you said to the general, so it has nothing to do with me... but I’m personally interested.”

“What are you talking about...”

“I heard you caught the flying bomb with your bare hands?”

“....”

I almost made a rotten expression for a moment.

I'm glad I realized that the other person was the crown prince, but I almost got dragged in for my disrespectful attitude.

By the way, where did you hear that news?

The moment he thought of Lord Lien, who seemed particularly impressed at the time, the crown prince let out a soft laugh.

"There is no need to worry about where the news leaked out. Didn't many people witness it that day? "You can't stop everyone's mouths, and even if you did, someone who happened to pass by could have spread the word."

In addition, he kindly told me that there were already a lot of rumors in the capital... It made me feel sick to my stomach.

There is no benefit to having your skills inflated in this way other than increasing the emperor's expectations.

For your information, I am not at all happy with the emperor's expectations. Because you will be dragged into dangerous jobs more often. Additionally, the greater the expectations, the greater the disappointment.

My lifespan is getting shorter like this....

"It's a joke."

"yes?"

"That's why I came here. It's great that you caught the bomb, but it has nothing to do with me. "There is no reason for me to come here."

“Ah, then...”

“I came to apologize on behalf of the princess for her rudeness during the banquet.”

“Ah...”

Are you referring to the one that swooped in from behind? It's not just once or twice, but I'm used to it now and it's okay.

Moreover, it is not a sincere intention to attack, but is simply a sign of goodwill, so I cannot say anything about it.

Even though he knew that....

“The position of future emperor is so heavy that he can't even apologize casually. “If I go to you privately, it will attract the attention of others, so I followed you under the pretext of doing something public like this.”

“ ....”

“I gave the princess a hard scolding, so this won't happen for a while.”

...for now?

It's not that you don't understand the princess's personality, but aren't you being too honest? Still, he's the crown prince.

The crown prince looked away for a moment, as if the words 'for the time being' he had uttered pricked his conscience, and then he made eye contact again and opened his mouth.

“Would you accept my apology? count.”

“...of course. “There was no need to apologize in the first place.”

“That would have been the case under normal circumstances. “But didn’t you vomit blood?”

“....”

That wasn’t blood.

While he was unable to speak and was just rolling his eyes, the crown prince stood up and spoke softly.

Unlike the shocking content, it was a casual tone of voice.

“I’m glad you’re not offended. “Actually, I wanted to become friends with you, whom His Majesty trusts.”

“...yes?”

“Aren’t you too busy? Even though we have built up a friendship over time, our friendship will only end there.”

“....”

“So when Alethea was rude and you vomited blood, all I could think was that you were ruined.”

Damn...

what am I listening to...?

“That’s why I came here in person to apologize and build friendships, but do you feel uncomfortable with me like this?”

“Oh no.”

“Does that mean you are okay with my efforts to become friends with you?”

“That’s right.”

“Thank goodness. “Then, can you stop by me often whenever you come to the palace from now on?”

“...yes?”

I feel like I’m caught in something I can’t escape from.

As I blinked my eyes while thinking back on the situation and wondering why those words came out, the Crown Prince added with a warm smile on his face, as if to let me know that my feelings were correct.

“I don’t think you need to come and see me. “You can stop by while you’re at the imperial palace. Let’s have tea together, fight swords, and talk.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 41

41. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (6)

Wow. Wow.... the crown prince is the crown prince after all. To be honest, it's shit.

Now I see that there is a snake sitting in my stomach. From now on, you shouldn't even go near the imperial palace.

I was dazed, feeling like a caught fish, but then I felt the harsh gaze of General Nemeseus and quickly nodded.

'Oh, be scared of that loyalty.'

Who wouldn't be the first hero of the empire?

His loyalty to the emperor and the imperial family recognized by the emperor was very famous even within the empire.

"Then I guess I'll just go. Actually, I came out on impulse, so it would be difficult if I stayed away for longer than this.

"You don't have to come out to see me off."

"Ah yes. Goodbye..."

If the crown prince leaves now, won't he be left alone with that fearsome general?

I glanced at the man who had been standing like a folding screen while talking with the crown prince.

As expected, a scary expression.

I swallowed dryly for a moment, naturally imagining what the atmosphere would be like after the crown prince left.

It might be better for the crown prince to remain....

“...Go....”

But how dare I hold onto the crown prince of the empire. In the end, I saw him off with tears in my eyes.

The crown prince leaves his seat, and only then does the sturdy man who had been standing motionlessly sit down in the prepared seat.

The expected silence came.

“....”

“....”

I can't breathe.

Unable to do anything, I just broke into a cold sweat and secretly avoided his eyes that were looking directly at me. I couldn't help but feel that unpleasant feeling in his gaze.

I don't know why this person hates me so much.

No, rather than saying I hate it... I should say I loathe it. Anyway, it is clear that this person had negative feelings towards me.

This uncomfortable silence, which seemed to have gotten longer because I couldn't bring myself to speak out first, was barely broken after several minutes had passed.

"It's been a while since I said hello like this."

"Yes that's right. "General."

"Are you feeling okay?"

"yes. "I'm fine."

"then."

The air has changed. The general's eyes also changed, as if the trivial conversation was ending here.

He straightens his back. Due to the significant difference in height even when sitting, the height of the gaze naturally changed. A low voice was heard.

"Before I tell you why I came here, just a few questions. "I heard that there was only one captured revolutionary soldier."

"That's right."

"There were three people who attacked."

"That's also true."

"Two of them died."

I'm a little uneasy...

I feel like I'm being interrogated, but for now, it's true. I tried to ignore the faint warning from my intuition and nodded.

At that moment, the general's eyes shone sharply.

"One was reported to have died in an explosion, but the death of the other was ambiguous."

"...Uh...."

"So, I ask. "How did he die?"

***

Nemeseus looked at Deonhart with sharp eyes, as if he would not miss anything.

His eyes were closer to testing how the other person would respond rather than a pure question.

In fact, the cause is somewhat predictable. I'm just curious about his answer.

Deon Hardt hesitates, as if he is embarrassed. Even that was disgusting, so he narrowed his eyebrows slightly.

Nemeseus is not a narrow-minded person who hates people for no reason. There was good reason for his dislike of Deonhardt.

Who could have seen Deonhardt's changes in real time during the Eight Years' War?

Nemeseus has been watching Deonhart since he was not a vanguard.

As such, he was one of the few people who knew the truth about Deonhardt's extreme personality change

.

‘You can’t just say it at the level of ‘I don’t like it.’

His emotions were as heavy as the weight of the truth.

However, you can’t hate someone who has become a hero forever.

It’s been two years since the war ended, so I came here in person to see if things had gotten better.

“...Unfortunately, I wasn’t there at the time, so I don’t know the details. However, from what I heard, wild dogs bit it.”

—Nothing has changed.

“...is it.”

I got up without any regrets.

Deonhart’s time was still at war and Nemeseus was not one to give second chances.

I solidify the soft feelings I might have had and put an end to the judgments I had been holding off on.

Deon Hardt is a dangerous molecule.

‘You can’t let a guy like this be near your Majesty.’

Is it any wonder that wild dogs exist in the front yard of Count Hart’s residence? I have to say something that makes sense.

As expected, the person who killed him must have been Deon Hart himself.

He probably used his ‘personality’. He has a convenient personality that is always disgusting.

“I get it. “Then let’s go in for our purpose.”

I know he is not evil. I also know that weakness is not a sin.

But didn’t His Majesty also say that?

‘Even if it is the same sin, its weight changes depending on the location, and things that are not generally sins can become sins depending on the location.’

The weakness of those who sit in positions of power becomes a disaster for those below them.

The person who taught this is none other than His Majesty, but how could he keep this guy by his side?

As a knight who served the emperor as his lord, what he could do was extremely limited, so Nemeseus glared at Deonhart, determined to try to persuade him once again.

His eyes were shining coldly as he recited his purpose for coming here for business purposes.

***

Honestly, I was a little embarrassed.

Are you asking about the cause of death of the revolutionary army? From the empire’s point of view, weren’t the revolutionary forces not something that mattered even if they died?

Besides, I don’t know why he died. Later, when I went to the prison and found that there was only one person there, I asked out of curiosity and the only answer I got was, ‘The wild dogs bit me.’

The look in Remembert's eyes as he said those words was strange, but I didn't really pay much attention to it.

If there was only one person left to interrogate, such as the death of a revolutionary soldier, no one would care.

That's probably why Remember didn't say anything in detail.

The general's eyebrows furrowed slightly as he looked embarrassed.

With an expression clearly showing my annoyance, I eventually forced my lips to open.

"Unfortunately, I wasn't there at the time, so I don't know the details. However, from what I heard, wild dogs bit it."

"...is it."

After a short silence, what came back was a simple answer.

The general tilted his head for a moment, feeling as if all sorts of complicated emotions had been compressed, and then the general got up from his seat. I was able to see him as I got up and accidentally set my gaze on him.

His cold, sunken eyes.

...Why on earth?!

"i get it. "Then let's go in for our purpose."

I'm embarrassed by his incomprehensible attitude, but I can't ask because the topic has changed.

Once I closed my mouth, an extremely business-like voice followed.

“Your Majesty wants to take over the revolutionary army you captured. The goal is to identify the revolutionary army’s stronghold and completely eradicate it.”

“Yes...”

“Of course.”

I’m speechless!

“You said you were the one who caught him, so you don’t have to hand him over if you don’t want to. So, the message must have been delivered through a person rather than an edict.”

“...Is that so. It is an honour.”

However, those words were not so meaningful that I had to cut them off.

Since it was said that the emperor wanted to hand it over, I was planning on handing it over without much opposition.

Why would you object to taking a piece of luggage that would not be of much use even if kept locked up? With this, you will be able to buy the Emperor’s favor, so it is more beneficial to give it.

Additionally, whether it’s revenge or complete extermination, the chances of success will be higher if the emperor does it than if I do it myself.

Instead of saying something that hurt my mouth, I pulled the cord in the living room.

“Bring the revolutionary army.”

“no. “Take me to the entrance of the mansion, not here.”

“yes? all right. “Take them to the entrance of the mansion, not here.”

The general walks to the door without any hesitation.

I noticed that it looked like everyone was trying to leave, so I carefully spoke.

“Are you leaving?”

“Because there is no reason to be here anymore.”

“I will see you off to the front door.”

“I know you’re busy.”

A clear refusal. I inwardly shrugged my shoulders and stepped back.

Well, even if I followed, there would be no conversation and only cold air would flow throughout. Moreover, considering the backlog of documents I have to process, sending off is definitely inefficient.

It would be better to take care of one more document with Remember during that time.

Ah, the documents... I feel like the stress is piling up again when I think about it. I’m really going crazy.

“good bye.”

“okay.”

After a dry greeting, the general left the room.

After the door closed, I sank down into the soft sofa as if I had been waiting.

“finished...!”

I thought I was suffocating to death.

If these days repeat themselves every day, I might have a nervous breakdown. No, this is definitely going to happen. It's strange that it doesn't work.

After dazing for a while to recover my lost mental strength, I awkwardly got up.

‘I have to go and process all the documents...’

It's terrible, but there's no way to avoid it because you'll only end up with more documents.

Oh, I really don't want to do this. Should I just go to the devil world?

With a deep sigh, I forced myself to take steady steps.

***

The day passed again, not much different from before, except for the visit of the Crown Prince and General Nemeseus.

...Speak clearly. It 'was' flowing.

If it hadn't been for the knock on the door while I was processing the damn documents, I would have been able to finish today.

Uddangtangtang!

smart.

“Is the Count...”

“Ugh no!!”

“Can’t you let go of this hand?! “You are the ones who started first!”

“Is that all you can do with that? You’re such a petty knight!
“What kind of relationship are we having?”

“There’s nothing between us!”

What is this again?

Looking at Remember’s calm smile, I buried my face in my hands.

It looks like there will never be a smooth day in my life.

When I heard the voice, one side seemed to be one of the mad dogs, and the other side sounded like our count’s knight... It was obvious without even looking at which one was the problem.

‘If I go to the imperial palace, I have to first tell them to return those things. I’m really going to tell you.’

Those murderous knights.

If it weren’t for those guys, there’s no way the count’s knight, who was so quiet as if he wasn’t there, would come to my office.

“come in.”

“No way!”

“Excuse me.”

Suddenly.

The door opens and Kwaang!

closed.

There was a commotion again outside the door.

“What are you doing?!”

“Are you really trying to tell me?”

“Then you’re going to lie!”

“Miss, okay, we were wrong, so let’s move on just this once.”

“The attitude of apologizing was poor.”

Suddenly.

Suddenly the door opened and a knight came in. And the person being dragged around hanging from that leg... is, of course, a member of the Murderous Order of Knights.

Oh yeah. This situation was fully expected.

‘But I didn’t take this into account.’

I looked at the documents near the door that were being thrown around in a haphazard manner due to the rabid dog’s struggle, and said to Remember, my hand holding the pen trembling.

“...call Lord Lien.”

“All right.”

In the meantime, I think I heard the name Lord Lien.

The guy who was holding the knight’s leg got up and straightened out his white uniform.

But it was already too late. I coldly turned my head and called out to the driver who was watching with a puzzled expression.

“So, what happened...”

“Ah, on behalf of all the knights of the count’s residence, I dare to ask you that I cannot stay with those guys.”

“!?”

Isn’t that too blunt?

It seems like there’s a lot of emotion in what you said before that, don’t you think? Does that mean you hate them that much?

Well, I understand.

“I’m speaking on behalf of the murderous unit, not the knights, but I can’t stay with those sasanim!”

“Then get out.”

“That can’t be possible!”

These bastards can’t be pretty even if they try.

Is Lord Lien still there? I want to drag this guy out quickly.

Oh, I'm a bit curious about what he did before that makes the knights say he can't be with me. I looked at the article again.

His name was probably Cain. ...right?

"Lord Cain."

"Yes, Count."

Fortunately, it seems to be correct.

"What did they do?"

His face, which had been impressed by the fact that he remembered his name, suddenly became distorted.

When I was startled by his demon-like expression, he changed his expression and said in an angry voice that he was rude.

"They ate all of the Count's knights' share of the meal."

"...hmm?"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 42

42. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (7)

“Playing wood-matching games with the weapons in the training hall, he broke 11 weapons and knocked down four trees, which later turned into a game targeting our knights.”

I glared at the murderous knight in silence.

Then, the guy who was rolling his eyes in embarrassment suddenly decided to be shameless and puffed out his chest.

“Training is training.”

“Shut up! “You’re training by attacking even when you’re supposed to be resting?!”

“It’s not like the enemy chooses to attack during rest time. “You have to get used to it.”

“Then you stole our share of the meal!”

“Training for food shortage situations?”

“Ugh, stomach medicine....”

That sturdy knight was able to find stomach medicine...

and that only took a week. I couldn’t hide my sighs.

Sir Cain, who had found stomach medicine in his arms and ate it, desperately called to me.

“The number of drivers taking stomach medicine is increasing. “Please, do something about that bastard... the Knights.”

“You were just trying to say they were bastards, weren’t you?”

“no.”

“That’s terrible! 진짜 개새끼가 뭔지 보여 줘?”

It seems like the count’s knights had good complexions until a week ago.

After looking at Lord Cain’s haggard face, he turned his head and glared at the rampaging mad dog again.

The guy noticed my gaze with his animal-like senses and seemed to calm down on his own, then started scratching his head and making lame excuses.

Actually, that couldn’t be considered an excuse.

“Still, I did it more moderately than when I was at the imperial palace...”

“Was it like this even at the imperial palace?!”

Or rather, it added more? You crazy bastards!

Patter.

Blood dripped.

Well then. I was tired today due to various things, but I wonder if my body can handle it as my blood pressure rises.

“Count!”

“Captain, no Count!”

I quickly clutched my nose and leaned against the back of the chair.

For the first time in a while, I said I couldn’t see blood.

My vision is blurry. My eyelids seemed to get heavier, and soon darkness came.

The last glimpses were of those who appeared to be Remember and Lord Lien.

‘thank god. Hurry and hit this bastard right in front of me....’

There is a familiar smell of blankets. When I opened my eyes, a similarly familiar ceiling filled my vision.

I couldn’t understand the situation, so I blinked for a moment.

“Are you awake?”

A calm voice was heard.

There is only one person in my memory who speaks with such a calm voice.

“Remember.”

“Yes, Count.”

“How long have I been lying down?”

“It wasn’t that long ago. “It will be exactly 1 hour and 24 minutes.”

Doesn’t it seem like it’s been a long time since I just fainted from a nosebleed?

I must have called my doctor while I was falling down, but the doctor who was waiting nearby came over and started examining my body.

As if he didn’t care about the doctor, Remember stared at me clearly and spoke calmly.

“What do you want to do?”

“...yes?”

“The knight who offended the Count has now been taken into the hands of Lord Lien. “If you call me, I will come right away.”

Silver-blue eyes shine mysteriously.

I looked at him without blinking even once, then lowered my gaze and answered.

“Then would you like me to call you?”

“Yes, I will call you right away.”

“no. “Tell them to wait in the office, not here.”

“...I will do that.”

He looks surprised, but doesn’t ask.

Remember opens the door slightly and speaks to the servant waiting outside. Then, instead of leaving, he came back and stood one step away from the bed.

I wondered why he insisted on staying here, and it seemed like it was because of his doctor.

“The body itself is weak and there is a lot of fatigue, but there is no major problem. “I don’t have much to say other than to be careful of fatigue and stress.”

“Is that so. “There’s a lot of paperwork behind, so it’s difficult.”

I don’t think it’s because he was worried about me, but because he wanted to hear the results of the examination in order to somehow use them for paperwork...?

As goosebumps broke out and my body trembled, the surprised doctor came running back and began the examination.

I could barely get him off me after telling him it was okay several times.

By the way, he must have arrived at the office by now. I need to meet you soon.

When I get off the bed, Remember naturally follows me.

Since he is my butler, it is natural...

‘Why are you following me?’

For some reason, my doctor came with me. When I turned around, I was so surprised to see him.

He had been hesitating and keeping an eye on me since a while ago, but perhaps because he was a very short-tempered person, he missed the right time to go and ended up following me without realizing it.

I clicked my tongue, glanced at him, opened the office door, and couldn't help but praise the choice of the doctor who followed me.

"Whoosh-"

The member's face was swollen, as if he had been beaten quite a bit.

Because of that, I tried to suppress the laughter that was about to burst out, but my nose bleed again.

The doctor quickly hands me a handkerchief.

I obeyed his instructions to hold the middle of his nose with it and looked at him again with a serious expression.

'The face is familiar... but what was his name? wheat? word? Dry?'

"What was your name?"

"yes? Are you sure you forgot my name? This is Milan.

"There is nothing else in the world to forget, especially my name..."

"You!"

Sir Lien, who was in charge of Milan, was in tears as if he was going to throw a punch at any moment.

What can I do with a guy like that? It would be easier if you gave up to a certain extent like me.

I hurriedly stopped her and trudged over to sit on the desk chair in the office.

Despite the nosebleed, fortunately the documents were still intact.

...There were some red marks on the white paper, but the text was fine, so it was okay.

anyway.

“I have a question about Milan.”

“Ask as much as you want.”

“What on earth are you doing in the imperial palace?”

This is why I called him.

In the first place, I had no intention of punishing him.

Even though it looks like this, they fought together on the battlefield during the eight-year war and made a fuss about saving each other.

Especially since I, a poor commander, am a superior and said I would protect them, but these are the people who caused such a fuss, how could I punish them so severely?

“Um... you’re not going to scold me?”

“you!”

“Lord Lien, it’s okay. “I won’t scold you, so tell me quickly.”

Honestly, I’m a bit anxious.

Are you asking what kind of accident happened that those people who don't care about others won't scold them?

Just in case, my blood pressure rose and I was about to collapse holding the back of my neck, so I glanced at my doctor, who was trying to leave, and smiled kindly.

Then Milan, who had been rolling his eyes, scratched his cheek and slowly sighed.

"To start with the little things, we collapsed several buildings while trying to capture the revolutionary forces."

"A minor thing... no, before that. "A revolutionary army?"

Why did they attack the carriage I was riding in and throw bombs at the mansion?

I understand that the revolutionary army is targeting them, but why are they making such a fuss about catching the revolutionary army?

"As I told you during the carriage attack, His Majesty entrusted me with suppressing the revolutionary army rampaging in the imperial capital in exchange for food."

"...."

Did you do that? I didn't know. Because my memory flew away from that time.

Then it must have been these guys who saved me then. I wondered why I was in the imperial palace banquet hall when I thought I was going to die. I was so embarrassed when I came to my senses.

'Then why was my body covered in blood at that time...?'

As I look at the guy with narrowed eyes, the guy who got stabbed for no reason makes an excuse and blurts out some bullshit.

Of course, the content was full of provocative language.

“But you didn’t tell me to ask. “The Prime Minister was glaring at us, but...”

It must have made me more attentive to realize that he was glaring at us.

By the way, shouldn’t these guys be sent to the imperial palace right away? I think I ended up having to bury a few of those buildings.

I guess my silence was quite unsettling.

The guy who was sweating profusely and looking around started spouting out loudly, saying he had no idea what was going on.

“Do you know how difficult it is to suppress revolutionary troops carrying and installing artillery bombs without causing damage? “We could even knock down a few buildings!”

“...How much are those houses exactly?”

“Uh... about twelve or so?”

“....”

“....”

Lord Lien looks from next to me. ‘Shall I drag you along?’

After thinking for a moment, I shook my head.

If collapsing a few buildings was a minor incident, it would mean that other, bigger accidents occurred, so we need to hear about that.

“Any other accidents besides that?”

“I had a fight with the Royal Guard.”

“With the Royal Guard...”

“Somehow we got into an argument and got into a bit of a fight.”

“Pae fight....”

“Oh, of course I didn’t lose. It ended in a draw. “Against the Imperial Guard!”

“ ....”

“Actually, we were a bit on the defensive, but that’s because I bit off the guard captain’s ear! How ridiculous it is that even though he is the captain of the royal guard, he can’t stand even a single thing and shows his loopholes. Of course, I didn’t miss that opportunity! Haha!”

Lord Lien, take that thing out.

Can I lose?

As much as you want.

“Huh? Captain? Why are you grabbing me by the collar...? Count? Countnniiiiim!!”

You said you wouldn’t scold me. Oh no....

Bang.

The noise was quickly silenced thanks to Remember who kindly closed the door.

I said I wouldn't scold you, but I never said I wouldn't get angry. Of course it's bullshit.

That guy is proudly talking bullshit, so why can't he do it to me?

At some point, I lowered the hand that was massaging the back of my neck and touched the area under my nose. Fortunately, my nose didn't bleed. The back of my neck is fine too.

'What should we do with that guy...'

No, it's just the entire group of knights that are the problem. What should I do with these damn crazy dogs?...

With a deep sigh, I told the doctor who was still acting around me to go away and picked up a random document in front of me.

And not long after, he jumped up from his seat.

'This is it!'

The reason those guys have accidents is because they have extra stamina.

In that case, wouldn't it be enough to use up your stamina?

It was said that there were monsters wandering around the territory near the border. It would be perfect if I spent all my stamina and sent them to get rid of those disgusting people right in front of me!

After saving up for an hour, I started writing the order while humming a song in my mind and said,

“Count! “I see a monster over there!”

“...Okay...”

Contrary to the plan, I was dragged along with the damn guys to subdue monsters.

***

When they received the order to go on a monster-slaying mission, the members of the Lofty Knights reacted differently from other ordinary people.

Subdue extremely dangerous monsters. Even the location is near the border.

Even though they had to fight a battle that could mean life or death, they cheered instead of being shocked or angry.

I thought you were going to scold me, but you gave me such a fun job! Isn't this almost a vacation!

“Wow, as expected, Count! I thought I was going crazy because I was bored! “You see that we didn't get into an accident for no reason!”

“Even though you are busy, you take care of us who are bored! Who is the bastard who cursed our Count?!”

“It wasn't an insult?! “We were just discussing the difference in temperature between the Count's knights and our knights!”

“It's you!!”

Men dressed in neat white knightly uniforms flew through the sky. The landing spot is Milan, a man crouching in fear.

Then, as a desperate scream erupted, one member who had a calm personality barely came to his senses and picked up the forgotten order that had been buried in a far corner.

I bet these bastards didn't read until the end. So, you should read the country properly.

just as expected.

"Only our knights are going, right? The Count isn't going with us either."

"...huh?"

"what?"

Silence has come.

Those who were beating Milan all look this way.

Looking at the round eyes as if wondering what that meant, member Cleter touched his forehead and shook his head.

"You have to read the article to the end, you bastards...."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 43

43. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (8)

"Isn't it a miracle that we, commoners, learned to write in the first place? "You should be proud that you read that far."

"Haha, the teachers had a hard time."

"What trouble? It was fun to get excited, so we joked around a few times, but then everyone quit. Because of that, you learned to read from General Nemeseus. "I was scared."

"So only our knights are going? "Without the Count?"

The conversation, which had been flowing as a stream of consciousness, instantly returned to its original state.

This type of conversation is a characteristic of the Lofty Knights. It was nothing new.

Cleter answered with a sigh.

"okay."

"why?"

"How do I know that?"

The pathetic look in my eyes immediately fell.

He mumbled something about being hurt and walked away, and then silence came.

Cleter, who had been thinking deeply, suddenly looked around at his colleagues as the silence became longer than expected.

He appears to be sitting calmly, which is rare, as if he is thinking or bruising.

“...I’m drooling.”

“Use it.”

Okay, what do you expect from these guys? You’ll be lucky if you don’t get into an accident.

In the end, it is this side that plays the role of fortune-telling.

“First of all, the reason only our knights are going is because there is a border nearby.”

It is rare to go out to subdue a monster with only one knight corps.

It is natural that the number of knights operating increases as the number of monsters to be subdued increases, and usually there are at least 2 to 3 knights on average, so in that sense, if it were a normal knights corps, this subjugation could have been a little dangerous....

Cleter I chuckled.

—That is just the case of a general knighthood.

‘As long as monsters have feelings, there’s no need to worry.’

Even if you can't kill them all, you can probably chase them away.

In that case, all that remains is the Count.

Considering the Count's personality, he would have definitely wanted to go with you. It must have been quite frustrating since it had been a while since he had seen blood and he lived in his office all day.

Such a great escape route has appeared before the eyes of such a person, but why does he not take it?

Just as I was about to seriously think about it, I heard a voice striking a candle.

"Why is that?"

Cleter's eyebrows furrowed.

I said these things were stupid, stupid, but they seem to have become twice as stupid.

Would it have been that difficult to say that only one knight corps could move because there was a border nearby?

"What do you think it will be like for the opposing kingdom if several knights rush in as if they are subduing ordinary monsters?"

"What are you doing, you idiot? I know that much, right? That's not what I'm saying. What's the problem with only our knights going? "The Count even went alone."

"Oh, that? I heard that he led the army of a nearby lord to subdue him, so strictly speaking, he is not alone. And that's not what's important right now. "The Count..."

“Aren’t you going with me? “I think I know why.”

A familiar voice intervened.

When I turn my head to find the source, Milan raises his hand as if he is here.

It looks like it got beaten up a lot, so it looks like a mess. Even if it’s just dirt on your clothes, shake it off. Even though it is white, it stands out easily.

While thinking about this, Cleter paid attention to what he said instead of fussing over other people’s clothes.

“You think you understand? What?”

“When I visited the office before, it was filled to the floor with documents. “It looks like there’s quite a bit of work behind you.”

“In other words, you’re so busy that you don’t even have the energy to go out on a raid?”

“oh my god.”

“Why do I feel sorry for our Count...”

There was a stir among the members.

Come to think of it, I heard you fainted recently with a nosebleed. It seems like it was all due to the overload of processing the backlog of documents.

The moment I thought about it, the same thought appeared in the minds of all members.

“As expected, I should take the Count with him to the subjugation.”

“Do you think we are the only ones who can rescue the Count?”

“The doctor also told me to be careful of fatigue and stress.”

“Stress... after all, defeating monsters is the answer.”

“Wouldn’t the fatigue go away after defeating monsters? Not long ago, when the Count went on a raid alone, he came back with a very shiny face. “Honestly, no one could tell that his face was completely relieved of fatigue, right?”

The Murderous Knights love Deonhardt.

He was respected as a superior, a benefactor who saved his life on the battlefield, and a great commander who not only did not discriminate against commoners based on their status, but also tried to avoid losing them as much as possible. How could you not like it?

Therefore, when I heard that he had collapsed, I was quite surprised, even though he did not show it.

Due to the nature of his weak body, it was greedy to hope that something like this would never happen again, but the knights, who hoped to reduce the number of incidents as much as possible, sought the best method in their own way, and the result was the current situation

.

“let’s go! “To harass the Count!”

For the Count’s sake, you must take him to defeat monsters!

Men dressed in white knightly uniforms rush towards the office with solemn expressions.

A count's knight, who was walking shakily carrying stomach medicine, happened to witness this scene and dropped the medicine bottle.

"What are you planning to do again..."

***

After making the decision to send the murderous knights to subjugate them, I was going about my work in a much more relaxed mood.

It feels like I can breathe again knowing that those crazy dogs have finally disappeared before my eyes.

It's a bit uneasy because the location is near the border, but I'll figure it out. They're not idiots who can't tell the difference.

"Count? Is there a problem?"

"Oh no. 'I'm fine."

I guess I've roughly solved the biggest problem. I was discussing the count's 'settlement' with the butler Remember.

Yes, that bastard who quickly let the enemy know that I was back and had them attacked when I went to the imperial palace. There's no way we could just leave that bastard alone.

However, it is not possible to completely destroy all the users, and we have to filter them out in an efficient way with as little damage as possible....

"Count!"

“We can’t subdue it by ourselves!!”

“Let’s go together!”

Those who wanted it to go away quickly came in.

What are you guys doing? Where should we go together?

The pen in my hand fell out. As if this situation was quite interesting, Remember’s eyes wrinkled with friendly wrinkles.

With a devastated face, I looked at the guys who proudly occupied one side of the office.

Are you rebelling against me by sending you to a dangerous place?

Are you really asking me to go with you to kill me? Are you planning to wipe it out as soon as you arrive at the subjugation area?

“Exactly... it’s not just between you two. Sir Lien will also go with you, right?”

“Isn’t Lord Lien also a member of our knighthood? ‘Between us’ is correct!”

What the hell. There are always times when people say, “It’s a parachute.”

Of course, it was only meant to be a joke and they did not truly ignore or despise him, but it was these guys who parachuted in and treated Sir Lien like an outsider.

I was unable to continue speaking due to the absurdity, but Remember, who had been observing the situation, slowly walked out.

“It’s presumptuous to meddle, but please think of it as just the nonsense of an old man and listen to it. “Why don’t you go?”

“...Me?”

“Yes, this old man has been bothering the Count a lot for the past week. “This is my apology for that, so please think of it as a short vacation.”

If I apologize, doesn’t that usually mean I have to do something I like...?

It’s so absurd that I don’t even know what kind of expression I’m making anymore.

Remembrance spoke with a serious smile on his face, as if my ambiguous expression was reflected in it.

“My doctor also told me to watch out for fatigue and stress, so shouldn’t I take a break at least once in the middle of the day?”

Yes, you should ‘rest’.

Slaying monsters is not a rest, it is ‘work’ of extreme difficulty!

Isn’t it common sense that both ‘fatigue’ and ‘stress’ accumulate after defeating monsters?

I also fall into that ‘normal’ range, so how on earth are you looking at me to say something like that?...

“When the Count returned from defeating monsters alone not long ago, didn’t he come back with a bright smile on his face? The dark shadows under his eyes had also disappeared. I couldn't tell you, but this old man was very surprised."

"Oh, that's..."

That's because I rested well in the demon world.

There, I just lounge around all day without doing any paperwork or anything, and of course my dark circles disappear.

Ah, thinking about it makes me want to go to the demon world again. There, I was just mentally tired, but here, my body is tired as well, so it's driving me crazy.

Well, if I go there, I will miss the human world again.

"It's overdue anyway. It won't be noticeable if you push further, so go with peace of mind. "I will organize the documents to the best of my ability."

"That's..."

"That's right, Count! Let's go together!!"

"So..."

I don't want to go.

That's not the reason why my face is so bright.

But if you say that, you'll have to explain why the dark circles disappeared and you'll inevitably end up in a corner.

In the end, I had no choice. Remember's added words were the final blow.

“If the Count moves, the guy hiding in the Count’s mansion will also move along. “This old man will definitely catch it, so you can just enjoy it.”

“Okay...”

What can I say when I say I’m going to catch Sejak? There is no reason to object.

In the end, I said yes in a dying voice,
and now.

“Count! “I see a monster over there!”

“...Okay....”

“Let’s destroy it!”

“Where did you learn to rush in so recklessly without orders from your superiors?! “Can’t we sort it out right away!”

“Cluck, cluck, cluck.... Leader....”

“It’s not the leader, it’s ‘leader.’”

Where am I. who am i

Why am I in this dangerous place with crazy people?

Meanwhile, Lord Lien was controlling these crazy dogs as surely as a ray of light.

Come to think of it, this was the reason Lord Lien came by parachute.

At first, Milan, who was the best fighter out of all of them, was put in the leader’s position, but as soon as the guy who was supposed to lead the team saw the enemy, without saying a word, he ran to the front, shouting loudly.

So next, we put the calmest one, Cleter, in the position of leader.

[Hey guys, can you see the enemy over there?]

[Then let's go! Turn!]

I realized. That guy wasn't calm, he just looked calm.

In the end, that guy is just one of those crazy dogs.

They think you are in command if you just shout 'charge'.

I should never choose a leader among these guys. If you do that, you'll be ruined. It will definitely fail.

The person who came thus was none other than Lien Reiner.

Even if you don't have this kind of parachute, you have enough skills to officially join a good knighthood. I just feel sorry for her.

So, like a mother who raised her child incorrectly, I always kept an eye on Lord Lien's feelings, but these bad guys didn't even know what I was thinking and just talked back and caused accidents.

It was even like that today.

"I don't know if it's recklessness, but the Count taught me how to rush at the enemy..."

"That's right, he said to rush at all costs."

“Didn’t you say that you should become a crazy person that even crazy people don’t like?”

Plus, a frame-up!

When did I?! You allowed me to stay at your mansion, so this is how you repay the favor?

I glanced at Lord Lien’s gaze. I’m sure it’s not a misunderstanding.

Anyone can see that his face looks tired, but I’m sure it’s not a misunderstanding.

‘Damn it...’

That can’t be possible. I definitely misunderstood.

What if I decide to quit being a knight commander? At least because of her, those guys can be controlled.

I was anxious that this might actually lead to my resignation, so I quickly tried to explain.

“I...”

“I didn’t mean to insult the Count. sorry.”

Before I could say anything properly, a sincere apology came rushing in.

No, is there no assumption that I would not have taught that in the first place? What about the assumption that it is a frame-up by those bastards?

I was left speechless by the firm eyes without the slightest doubt.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 44

44. Honorary Count Deon Hardt (9)

Count Hardt, famous for having been bestowed directly by the Emperor.

Even there, an attendant stepped into the forest behind the mansion, which was deserted.

Anxious gestures, trembling pupils. He looked around several times, as if his intentions were not pure, and soon raised his head and whistled lightly.

Food is great.

A bird that you would normally see anywhere landed on my hand.

He lightly petted the bird, tied a white piece of paper around its ankle, and sent it flying into the air without delay.

I was in a hurry because I thought if I took my time and got noticed by others, I would only end up in trouble.

"Is it all over?"

"!"

I was startled and turned around.

An old man dressed in a neat tailcoat, who had been around for some time, was standing next to a tree and looking at me.

It is a face that anyone who uses this mansion can never recognize.

Remember, the butler of this mansion, is characterized by silver-blue eyes and silver-blue hair that is fading to white.

He looked at the bird flying in the distance with an expression that did not tell me what he was thinking, and then lowered his gaze to face the servant.

“I expected it to some extent, but I never thought you would really be Sejak.”

“Deacon Ji.”

The embarrassment was short-lived. The attendant closed his mouth as he was about to make an excuse.

What he saw was too clear to make excuses. So the only way left is to kill him.

Fortunately, this is a deserted forest and there are no other witnesses.

Even if he was a strong man, the opponent was an old man, so even if he was just an ordinary person, it would be no problem to kill him.

Of course, I know that the old butler in front of me is an unusual person who overturned and overpowered the revolutionary army, but since he plans to use weapons, there won't be a big problem.

The attendant, making a quick decision, gently grabbed the handle of the dagger in his pocket.

The two eyes that looked at Remember as if they were watching him were suddenly filled with life.

“Behind the scenes...”

“Aaaah!”

“...I should know.”

Suddenly!

The attendant’s head was cut off.

The head falls to the ground first, and the body that was running behind falls over.

Remember stood in the same place as before and looked at the collapsing body.

Even though his attendant suddenly died, he did not back down. There wasn’t even a scream. There was no sign of surprise or embarrassment.

I just looked at it with calm eyes and slowly moved my gaze behind it.

I don’t know when or where he appeared, but a man dressed in black is standing behind where the attendant was.

Remember slowly spoke as his eyes focused on the blood-stained sword in his hand.

“It’s obvious even if you don’t look at the person behind it.”

At most, it would be an aristocratic faction, a hostile kingdom, or a revolutionary army.

Among them, the most likely one would be Duke Stave Illuster, the leader of the noble faction.

It is difficult to instill a secret influence even inside the count's residence unless you have considerable influence.

In that sense, the hostile kingdom was too far away to have a strong influence, and it was difficult for the revolutionary army, which had to go into hiding because it did not even have a proper foundation, to plant a treasure in the hero's mansion.

Of course, I can't be sure based on that alone, but since the bird that just flew away gave me another person to dig up information from, there was no need to obsess over this servant.

'It might be a little dangerous, but...'

You might be alone, but since you'll be with the knights, it's a luxury to worry. Rather, we should hope that the blood-drunk people don't kill all the attackers.

He waved his hand towards the man who was standing still as if waiting for orders.

Without paying the slightest attention to the man who disappeared in an instant, Remember looked down at the red corpse that was soaking the forest floor and said as if throwing it away.

As if it was natural for this to happen, there was not a single emotion in his silver-blue eyes.

“I will use my authority as a butler to fire you.”

***

“They say Deon Hart went to the border area to subdue monsters. And that’s with only one group of knights.”

Duke Stave slowly curled the corners of his mouth as he burned the note in the candlelight. Eyes full of leisure move slowly to capture Cruel.

Cruel responded as he once did, with eyes urging him to answer.

“I will place a murder request.”

“That’s the answer again.”

“....”

“It was like that last time too. At the time, I thought they had simply forgotten the option of being a revolutionary army...”

—Now it seems like that wasn’t the case.

A sharp look passes through the purple eyes. Cruel silently accepted the gaze with his eyes slightly lowered.

The Duke, who was carefully examining Cruel’s expression in the suffocating silence, opened his mouth as if he wanted to think a little more.

“Why? “It would be much more efficient to use the revolutionary army than to submit a request.”

It is natural that those who try to kill with a clear sense of purpose will be more eager than those who try to kill just because it is a request.

You can save money and kill more reliably.

Nevertheless, Cruel was secretly pushing towards submitting the request.

“...It looks like you have no intention of explaining.”

“I was short-thinking.”

“No way.”

“....”

The duke sighed as if he was proud of the lack of response.

He spoke in a casual tone, casually brushing away the crumbled ashes that had fallen on the desk.

“Well, that’s good. Please feel free to do whatever you want.

“What matters is the result.”

“...thank you.”

“But you’d better not be clumsy. “It just looks funny.”

“I’ll keep that in mind.”

The conversation is over.

The Duke glanced at Cruel’s expression while holding up a new document and thumbing through it.

As always, a man is standing there without showing any emotion.

Knowing that he couldn't get anything out of that face, he fixed his eyes on the document again and muttered softly to himself.

'I like a dog that listens well.'

Let's watch.

Whether or not you are using a useless trick.

***

"Are you serious?"

A man who had silently assisted Cruel during his battle at the border of the Demon World opened his mouth without realizing it.

Even though I knew it was rude to ask again, I couldn't help it.

"okay."

"Are you sure you don't mind? "Your Excellency is definitely...."

There is no way the Duke wouldn't know this.

Senzer was very worried about how the Duke would react to Cruel's actions.

The duke is a smart man but also a very suspicious person. It was obvious that Cruel's life would come and go depending on how he accepted this.

Therefore, Senzer hoped that he would only do what the duke told him to do, but

“I’m not saying I won’t ask for a murder, so it’ll be okay.”

Cruel was adamant.

“Put in a request, but add conditions. “I’ll give you half of the promised amount even if I only injure you.”

“Costs arising from additional conditions....”

“I will cover them with my own funds.”

I don’t know what you’re thinking.

What does he want to do with Deon Hardt?

Senzer, who was observing Cruel’s expression because he could not even infer the true nature of his feelings for Deonhardt, soon gave up his thoughts and quietly lowered his head.

***

Silence led to misunderstanding. However, even if I explained it too late, they wouldn’t believe it, and it would be difficult if the monsters disappeared like this, so I quickly changed the topic under the pretext of putting monster subjugation first, and I was watching the subjugation side by side with Lord Rien on horseback.

Lord Lien has his own reasons for not fighting.

First of all, the skills of the Murderous Knights were as good as crazy, and more than anything, I, who was weak, really needed at least one bodyguard.

It’s sad to be brought to a place like this, but it would be truly unfair to end up dead. You may not be able to understand it and end up becoming a vengeful spirit.

And another reason would be that it would not be appropriate for Lord Lien to intervene in that scene?

“Ryaaa!!”

“Hey you bastard! What’re you doing! “Monsters are coming this way!!”

“Is it my fault that you’re easy on me?!”

“That bastard is going after me!!”

“Shut up and kill me!”

Sigh! Sigh!

Blood splatters everywhere and the monster is torn apart.

They were chopping up the monster so finely that I thought it would look something like that if you crushed the red pudding with a spoon.

Lord Lien goes into those guys and fights with them?

It doesn’t suit me at all.

Sir Lien is the kind of person who can be said to be the epitome of a knight.

She is the type of person who cleanly kills enemies by blowing their heads off. If she gets caught in that gap, she will quickly become covered in blood without having to do anything special.

That must be quite an unpleasant experience. As long as it was likely to lead to a resignation letter, I had every reason to stop her.

It was a time when I was lost in thought for a long time.

“You guys! “What are you doing!?”

“...hmm?”

I suddenly raised my head when I heard a voice full of anger.

I tried to ask why he was angry, but my gaze was blocked by a huge barrier and could not reach Sir Lien.

Instead, my gaze met a pair of eyes located in front of my nose.

“....”

“....”

I stopped thinking for a moment.

Black face, huge body, eyes glaring at me with resentment and anger. In addition, it was grinning and its fangs were exposed as if they were going to bite me at any moment.

So this is....

‘What the fuck is this?!’

I was so surprised that I didn’t even scream.

I froze, turning white, staring into the monster’s eyes.

In my heart, I just wanted to faint, but this body, which has never moved as I wanted, betrayed my expectations once again.

Usually, he falls down easily, but why is he holding up so well this time? Is it fortunate that I didn't scream in an unsightly way?

I tried to relax my frozen body and licked my stiff lips.

"What is this?"

"It seems like we were the only ones having fun."

"When I came to my senses, this was the only thing left.
"Most of them ran away."

"Almost all means of attack will be cut off, so it won't be fun, but it's better than nothing. "The Count should enjoy it too."

"Are you just watching out of consideration for us? "You didn't have to give in, but I'm touched."

What kind of bullshit is this? What do you enjoy, you crazy people? Do you think I am the same as you?

I would understand if it was a joke, but it's even more confusing because I can clearly feel that it's all serious.

Even Sir Lien's reaction was even worse.

"Oh, is that so?"

Why are you agreeing?!

If you combine the members' conversations, you can quickly get an answer to what they want from me.

So I'm not telling you to kill this monster.

They said that the Count should also enjoy it, so that probably means killing him as cruelly as possible, just like they did.

It's not difficult to follow.

Since I didn't come here to have fun, I was fully armed. All you have to do is take out one of the daggers tied to various parts of your body and tear into the monster that cannot resist in front of you.

'But I don't really feel like it.'

I feel like if I do that, something inside me will collapse. No, should I say it is broken?

That's why I was hesitating for a moment.

'...?!'

I turned my body reflexively, feeling goosebumps rising on the back of my neck.

I just instinctively turned to find the source of the chills, but luckily it saved my life.

Sigh!

"Ugh!?"

"Count!"

I thought I felt a shock to my shoulder, but then a burning sensation spread through me.

Following my instinct, I wrapped my arms around my shoulders and turned my head to see what was causing the pain.

"arrow?"

Looking at its location, it seems like it was originally aiming for my neck.

The monster won't be shooting arrows, so is this a surprise attack?

So who? Unless they wanted war, the other kingdom wouldn't have targeted us since we hadn't even crossed the border.

'...calm down.'

It is not for nothing that we survived eight years on the battlefield.

My senses from the battlefield returned and my head began to spin.

You can figure out the front and back later. First of all, what is important is the number and location of the attackers.

I quickly rolled my eyes and glanced at the location where the arrow had come from.

'You've come a long way.'

I chased after him on horseback, but I didn't know he was within reach of the arrow.

Ah, I had to cover my ears and eyes while subduing monsters. These guys should be a little bigger and louder.

'Then...'

What should I do...

That's where my thoughts ended.

The world turned white and the accident stopped.

And when things returned to normal, everything was over.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 45

45. Honorary Count Deonhardt (10)

“Count Bae, are you okay?!”

Even in the midst of great panic, Lien cut the potentially dangerous monster in two and hurriedly checked Deon’s condition.

The arrow went deep into my shoulder as if I had hit it right. Looking at the location where it was hit, it appears that it came from behind.

If that’s the case, it doesn’t mean it came from the border....

After wrapping things up in a short time, Lien, who was calling Deon again, paused for a moment at his reaction.

“Whoa...”

“...Count?”

I winced – I took a step back without even realizing it. A horrifying feeling of rejection came over me.

Is this what it would feel like if the energies of the members of the rampaging murderous knights were combined?

Excitement and madness that cannot be hidden are revealed in the slowly exhaled breath.

I heard a strange cracking sound and looked down to see him holding my shoulder as if he was squeezing it.

Even though his sharp fingernails made the wound worse and the hand covering his shoulder was drenched in blood.

Deonhardt was smiling.

“Lord Lien.”

“Yes yes!”

“Cut this off.”

“...yes?”

“hurry.”

Lien hesitated for a moment, looking at the arrow shaft that appeared as if urging him to do so.

Looking at the way you are talking, it seems like you should cut off the protruding part completely so that there is no discomfort. If you cut the arrow shaft like that, it will be convenient for now, but the aftereffects when you remove the arrowhead later will be significant.

The more you move, the deeper the arrowhead will dig in, and in order to pull it out, you have to cut deeper around it and expand the wound to pull it out.

It was natural that the recovery time would increase accordingly.

Considering the fact that Deonhart is the Emperor's sword, I should stop him.

The moment Lien met the bright red eyes that slowly moved and focused on me, he pulled out his sword and swung it as if he was possessed.

The arrow shaft that was sticking out and shaking falls down, and Deon smiles in satisfaction as the cumbersome thing disappears.

"Okay then, guys."

All right.

As the horse takes a step forward, he tilts his head slightly.

Then, as if from nowhere, another arrow grazed my ear and stuck on the floor.

Leaving the flagship Rien behind, Deon turned back the hood of his white robe with his bloody hands and looked around at the members.

His eyes narrowed under the light, as if the strong early summer sunlight was too much for him, but his mouth was still smiling.

"It's time to take your medicine."

It's a battle! The members' eyes changed.

Lien trembles because it doesn't seem like they are the guys she used to know.

Deon lazily wiped his blood-soaked hands on the hem of his robe and waited leisurely for them to finish preparing.

In the meantime, the attackers, who had no intention of wasting any more time, began to charge on horseback, but no one except Lien was impatient.

“Do you have any medicine?”

“Just mine.”

“damn. Then, Cleter, do you have any leftover medicine....”

“That’s all I brought with me just in case. “Are you sure you didn’t bring anything?”

“It’s about subduing monsters. “I never thought I would be dealing with people.”

Milan shook his head roughly as if he was troubled.

As if he was the only one who did not take medicine, several other members were also walking around among the members to get medicine.

Deon, who was watching this, took out a pouch from his pocket with clean hands.

“Milan.”

“yes? ...Hmph!”

Milan reflexively grabbed something that flew by, realized that it was actually a pocket, and carefully checked its contents.

Filled with pure white medicine.

Milan, who immediately realized what it was, raised his head and looked at Deon with puzzled eyes.

“Can’t you, Count, manage well without these things? But why...”

“I received it from a drug addict with a swollen liver when I went to carry out His Majesty’s orders.”

“yes? Ah... Anyway, I’ll be grateful.”

Milan wondered how on earth he could go to defeat monsters and meet a drug addict with a swollen liver, but he thought a good thing was a good thing and quickly put a pill in his mouth.

Then he immediately frowned.

The substance of the medicine dissolves instantly without a trace when placed in something like a glass of water.

In other words, it is not a drug made for a very good purpose. Thanks to this, it is easy to ingest, so if you think positively, you can look at it as a good thing...

‘These kinds of medicines are bound to have side effects...’

Even high-end medicines are unpleasant and even cheap. If the person who provided this wasn’t the Count, he would have spit it out right away.

‘Well... there won’t be a problem with the medicine the Count gave me, so the side effects won’t be that serious.’

Milan was about to swallow the medicine that was quickly dissolving at the tip of his tongue with an uncomfortable expression. Others who had been looking for medicine came and everyone was about to take the medicine and put it in their mouths when they said, “Oh, there is a mixture of sleeping pills and paralyzing drugs in there, so make sure to tell them apart.

”

“...Sigh!!”

“Tooh! Hehe!”

The sound of something being spit out was heard simultaneously here and there.

Some of them smelled the wet medicine in their palms and checked it again, putting it back into their mouths with relieved faces, while others threw it on the floor with bitter expressions.

A grumbling voice came from somewhere.

“You say you have some level of immunity, but isn’t that too much?”

“It’s my fault for not being able to distinguish.”

“Now that I see it, sleeping pills and paralyzing drugs seem to have very severe side effects. “Is the Count still a person?”

“I’m not a person now.”

“ah.”

“If you think about what you’re going to do from now on, you shouldn’t be a human being.”

“Anyway...”

Lien, who was watching the incomprehensible scene unfolding before his eyes, stuttered before opening his mouth.

“Count... Count, what kind of medicine is that...?”

“drug.”

“Cough- it’s a drug. Aren’t drugs banned in the empire? “If even the Count, who should be stopped, does that...!”

“It is implicitly permitted only for our knights. “As long as you don’t get caught outright, it’s okay.”

“What is that...”

“Now wouldn’t be the time to worry about such things, right?”

Deon, who had said that, kicked off his horse’s saddle and jumped up.

He lightly jumps over Lien, twists his body in the air, wraps his arms around the neck of the guy running towards Lien, and falls to the floor together.

Falling from a horse! If you’re not careful, you could not only get seriously injured, but you could even die!

When Lien, startled, looked down after Deon, he skillfully landed using his opponent as a cushion and plunged a dagger into both of his shoulders, pinning him to the floor.

Both shoulders, then both hands. As the other person struggled in pain, he lowered his gaze and asked,

“Should I do it on his legs too?”

“....”

These words are sincere.

The guy almost froze when he saw the shiny red eyes as if he was taking a bite.

Deon grinned at him and stood up.

If I had enough daggers, I would have done that, but unfortunately, there are only two left.

Therefore, he turned his gaze towards the members who had already entered into battle and spoke as if he was throwing his sword at Lien, who was waiting.

“Lord Lien.”

“Yes, Count.”

“Take care to make sure this guy doesn’t die.”

“I will follow your orders.”

You don’t have to worry about this anymore.

I could see the members fighting like crazy on one side.

If the general public had seen everyone’s eyes go crazy, they would have thought they had lost their minds... but Deon’s eyes narrowed.

“What are you doing now?”

A monotonous voice that is neither very loud nor contains any particular emotion. Still, for some reason, everyone’s eyes were on him.

Despite the enemy's gaze, it was quite a burden to see drugged and bloodshot eyes looking at him, but Deon didn't care.

Jerk.

He slowly steps towards the place where the dangerous madness flows between reason and instinct.

Entering a place full of horses was tantamount to suicide, but there was no sign of hesitation.

"It's been so long that you've lost your senses..."

"...."

"Or maybe it's because you feel like you can fight as a human now that you've become a knight."

"!"

He disappears for a moment, appears right next to the enemy's horse, and stabs the opponent's thigh with a dagger. When the unexpected pain threw me off balance, I took the opportunity to raise my fingernails and scratch the wound, grabbing my clothes and pulling them down.

The sight of the dagger being thrust down without hesitation as soon as it was dropped was enough to turn the attention of even members who were so accustomed to it that they even did it themselves.

Yeah, that one.

If I had really lost my mind, I wouldn't have looked away like that.

A sneer appeared on Deon's lips.

“Why are you suppressing the energy of the medicine?”

If the behavior after taking the medicine is no different from usual, there is no point in taking the medicine.

The members’ eyes widen as if they didn’t even know. Deon looked at each of the gazes directed at me and said as if he was pitiful.

“You guys aren’t that skilled yet.”

I don’t have the skills to survive without becoming cruel.

However, he was not immune to cruel hands. Feeling guilty about being a victim of that action as well.

So you have to get drunk. I need to blow away the memories with medicine.

“I would have told you repeatedly.”

Phew – I heard a creepy sound.

The bright red pupils in the eyes are curved like half moons and look to the side.

Perhaps they were planning to take advantage of the distraction to make a surprise attack, but there was a guy approaching with a weapon in his hand, standing there with his eyes wide open as if he couldn’t believe it.

A dagger that dug into the guy’s heart when he swung it.

He put all his strength into his hand, twisted the dagger, and pulled it out. A lot of blood splatters, leaving red stains on his white hair and cheeks.

Deon didn't stop there, he grabbed the guy by the hair, tilted his head back, and started repeatedly slashing his dagger at his face.

In contrast to his actions, which were rough and bordered on madness, his voice was calm and uncharacteristically calm.

“Reason just needs to be able to distinguish between enemy and enemy.”

The blood that had not yet soaked in runs down my bangs and drips.

And the moment they encountered the red eyes of the same color hidden behind them, they could not help but freeze as they seemed to hear those words that remained so powerfully in their minds:

[Eat by madness.]

***

While Deon and the Murderous Knights were dealing with enemies that had suddenly appeared, there was great confusion in the kingdom beyond the border.

The commander, who was in charge of the important role of guarding the border, looked blankly at one place and muttered in an absent-minded voice.

There was deep disbelief in his voice, as if he couldn't believe it even as he said it himself.

“Is that Deon Hart? “Hero of the Empire.”

“Looking at your white hair, it seems like that.”

“Looking at your fighting style, I think it’s correct.”

“I can’t see the color of their eyes because they are far away, but I think it is because of their white clothes.”

“The uniforms of the guys with me clearly belong to the Murderous Knights. So it’s probably right.”

“shit.”

Why on earth did you come here?

Even calling it a simple monster subjugation feels suspicious.

Subjugating monsters involves two or more knights, but isn’t that too few?

Just when I was leaning more towards the hypothesis that they had come to spy on a small number of elites rather than simply to subdue monsters, a further problem arose.

“What is that again?!”

A person who appeared to be Deon Hart was hit in the shoulder by an arrow that suddenly flew out.

And a battle broke out again with these new, suspicious-looking people.

As confusing as it was on the other side, this side was also confusing in a different way.

what? If he was going to harm the hero of the empire, there would have to be a high-ranking person behind him. Is it an infighting? Is there a lot of infighting in the empire?

Or a show of force against our kingdom? No, the arrow was stuck quite deeply for it to be considered a show of force. It will probably be difficult to use your arms properly for a while.

...Huh? For now...?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 46

46. Foreshadowing (1)

“...Hey, if the injury is that bad, how long do you think it will take to recover?”

“I think it will take a little longer since I cut the arrow shaft close.”

“So how much?”

“It looks like it’s stuck quite deeply, but it won’t take at least a month to heal. If you think about the aftereffects...”

“That’s right...”

He rubbed his rough chin.

Only two years have passed since the eight-year war ended. Even from the empire’s perspective, war would be burdensome.

Additionally, Deon Hardt was injured. During the war, he was sent here and there and utilized the most, so it would be unlikely that the war would go on without him.

So wouldn’t it be possible to take advantage of this?

“No matter how you look at it, doesn’t it look like a show of force?”

“yes?”

“Doesn’t this seem like a show of force against our kingdom?”

“No matter how you look at it, it looks like a one-sided attack rather than a demonstration of force... Ugh!”

Fortunately, there was one quick-witted guy.

The guy who quickly stepped on his colleague’s foot to cover his mouth briskly affirmed.

“yes! “It looks like a show of force!”

“yes? Contact the palace. No, I will contact you directly.”

I need to explain the whole story and tell you. If I do well, I think I can get a lot of compensation from the empire.

It looks like they came to spy on me in the name of subjugating monsters, so it’s fair to get paid this much.

A sinister smile appeared on the commander’s lips.

***

Deon Hardt’s words pierced the truth that I had been trying hard to ignore.

He didn’t seem to particularly want an answer, and the members were in no mood to answer either, so a cold silence settled over this small battlefield.

It's not scary. No, it was scary, but there was a bigger reason than that.

'Have you always been that good at speaking?'

'You did a good job. I don't think it was that sharp though.'

'Did you learn from the deacon?'

'Deacon, why did you do that?'

The members shook off their bitter feelings.

Even though it's not even a swear word, it hurts.

While the members were mesmerized by the attack that struck the sore spot, a silence of a different meaning lingered among the enemies.

'The one who moves first dies.'

Now was an opportunity when the opponent in the heat of battle had frozen, but the instincts trained through receiving numerous requests were warning of death.

And that turned into confidence when he made eye contact with Deon Hardt.

Red eyes the same color as blood, eyes that are slightly curved, and even the corners of the mouth that are slightly raised as if waiting for someone to make a move.

'Fuck.'

I picked the wrong opponent.

In fact, the warning cry of instinct began when I first received the request. However, they gave me too much money so I just walked away.

It doesn't necessarily mean you have to kill them, but you can just injure them, so who would refuse that?

In fact, even if he had not refused the request, this situation would not have happened if he had at least retreated without overdoing it when the arrow was first hit.

'Damn, I'm being greedy for no reason.'

In addition to being greedy for money, when I checked the extent of his injuries, I decided it was worth a try, so I attacked him.

Looking at his attitude and behavior, it seemed like the rumors were exaggerated.

But I never thought it would suddenly change like this.

There is only one way to overturn this situation without sacrificing anyone.

Everyone knew that fact without having to say it out loud.

The problem is trust.

'If you do three, you attack at the same time.'

'One, two, three!'

'....'

'....'

'Dirty bastards.'

'Someone else is talking.'

This is already the third time I've done this.

Amazingly, no one moved. No one even flinched.

As they were paying attention to each other, a voice was heard that changed the silent atmosphere.

"I've already caught one guy who will give me information, so don't be shy and kill him."

"...!"

"What do people who can't even ride a horse do that doesn't suit them?"

The members' eyes changed.

A little while ago, they were simply 'crazy guys' who enjoyed blood, but now they don't even look at their enemies as people.

They grin in this direction.

The sight was so unusual that as soon as the horse could turn back, the guys threw down their saddles and rushed forward without hesitation.

It was a bold action, as if the danger of falling from a horse was not even thought about.

"crazy!"

The astonishment sublimated into swear words and came out.

Coo! thud!

Dull sounds and soft moans echo here and there.

A proper muddy fight began in a space overflowing with madness and bloodshed that was incomparable to before.

It was a mess.

The man who was the first to attack without fear and was pinned to the ground forgot the pain and looked at the situation in front of him dumbly.

There is a lot of swearing and screaming and all kinds of dirty tricks.

Plus, it was more cruel than anything else.

I understand throwing dirt in your eyes. Biting is also understandable.

But is it really necessary to tear apart someone who is clearly already dead? I just can't understand this.

My body suddenly trembled.

'Murderer.'

Even though they have a different official name, the knights in front of me still carry the title 'Murderers.'

I was wondering why someone would mention a name that was not good when it came to the name given by the emperor, but now I think I know why.

The sight of him laughing and tearing his enemies to pieces with his eyes bloodshot and bloodshot seemed to anyone to be a ghost crazy about murder.

They said that guys like that were at the forefront of the 8-year war. It is natural to win.

How can you be sane while facing those guys right in front of you? No matter who the opponent was, they must have been terrified.

Even the words they were muttering added weight to the fear.

[Everything is for survival.]

These were completely unsuitable words for those who were chopping up their enemies with a big smile.

It's a rationalization so brilliant that it's truly shocking.

Those guys will feel less guilty with that. There will be less hesitation in your actions.

'Devil bastards.'

I looked at the situation with tired eyes and looked away.

If your subordinates are like that, what would a superior who has subordinates like that do?

'obviously.'

He was even crazier.

Deon Hardt. Comically, he holds the title 'Hero of the Empire'.

'Hero'. It's so absurd that it makes no sense. What on earth was the emperor thinking when he designated such a person as a 'hero'?

He was walking around freely in a space that was breathtaking just to look at, and was smiling brightly as if he was going crazy with genuine joy.

Regardless of the laughter, the person he touched was inevitably covered in blood.

The corpses that followed his steps were all so tattered that it was hard to tell who was who.

Once he joined in, the situation was quickly resolved.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

In the silence that came back in an instant, heavy breathing could be heard here and there in the unrealistic space, unable to calm down the excitement.

The man could not bear to look into the eyes of the Templars, whose eyes were red and bloodshot as if they were still under the influence of medicine, so he fixed his gaze on Deon Hart.

He was breathing slowly.

“It seems like the situation has been roughly resolved.”

As if sensing attention, red eyes turn in this direction.

As soon as our eyes met, he grinned, walked over with a stride, and stepped on the dagger stuck in his shoulder.

The dagger was pushed deeper and a low groan was released reflexively at the sudden pain inflicted.

“Are you blinded by money or stupid? Or does it apply to both....”

“ .... ”

“No matter how many people you bring, how absurd is it to attack head-on when you are with the knights?”

The foot on the dagger shakes slowly. At the same time, the dagger was swinging up and down, increasing the wound.

“Does it hurt?”

“ .... ”

“I don’t like torture very much either. So, if possible, I would like to obediently blow the backbone-”

—I guess that will be difficult.

Sir Lien, go and collect the members.

The devil, whose entire body was stained red, indirectly expressed his wish to remain alone.

***

“A protest has come in from the Kingdom of Ireon.”

The emperor, who had been reading the document with languid eyes, looked up.

Golden eyes, like those of a wild beast, were questioning what he had just heard.

What a protest. Who would dare protest against the ‘Empire’?

“It appears that Honorary Count Deonhardt has subdued a monster nearby. Then we were attacked and had no choice but to fight the inevitable battle...”

“Did you say we were attacked for a moment?”

“Yes that’s right.”

“Is Count Hart safe?”

“They say I will not be able to use my arm properly for a month after being hit by an arrow in my left shoulder.”

“One month...”

He put down the documents he was holding on the desk, rested his elbows as if resting his chin, and touched the corners of his mouth.

Wrinkles appeared between the smooth eyebrows.

“Please continue.”

“Yes, the Kingdom of Ireon is protesting, claiming that the battle was a demonstration of force. “It seems like he wants compensation.”

“War is not something that can be waged lightly, and Count Hart was injured, so he must have decided to avoid war. That kind of longevity is rare.”

It’s really shallow.

If you don’t have the strength, you have to at least be aware of it. It seems that the Kingdom of Ireon has no instinct to survive, let alone notice.

Do you think ‘empire’ is an empire for no reason?

The emperor took the title of ‘Empire’ by force. It is an empire because it has such force.

The absence of an irreplaceable vanguard? Of course it’s disappointing.

But that doesn't mean we lose the war. Deon Hardt was just one of many cards that increased the odds of winning, but his absence did not mean that his power dropped.

"I heard that their leadership is a mess, so that's understandable. From this side's perspective, they could blame the attack on Honorary Count Deonhard on that side and push back."

The truth doesn't matter. What is important is a plausible cause and national power.

The empire is still in its prime and the Kingdom of Ireon is on the brink. It was obvious without even looking at which side the other kingdoms would support.

"Then let's respond according to the plan your Majesty mentioned..."

"No."

The corners of the lips that were hidden under the hand curled up.

Emperor Edoardo said, smiling fiercely as if showing his teeth.

"It looks like Jim has been very quiet so far."

"...."

"Nemeseus."

"Yes, Your Majesty."

"Prepare for war."

"your majesty!"

The answer came not from Nemeseus but from the vizier.

The prime minister, who had called the emperor as if screaming, hurriedly tried to dissuade him with a pale face.

“It’s only been two years since the war ended.”

“I took a lot of time off in two years.”

“War costs a lot of money.”

“Do I need to worry about money when I have these?”

widely. The emperor’s hand touched the map.

Yes, money and materials are obtained through conquest.

We did it during the 8 Years’ War, so there is no reason why we can’t do it this time as well.

The prime minister could not bear to say anything and looked at the emperor in bewilderment.

A normal kingdom would have negotiated, or, if it didn’t work out, would have punished the person who caused the trouble and provided financial compensation to the other kingdom, even just for show. In any case, war is a means of inflicting great damage on both sides.

Moreover, the current empire has sufficient countermeasures even without the use of force.

The emperor wasn’t even thinking about that.

“Is there no reprimand... for Count Hart, who caused this situation?”

Probably not. If I had the authority, I would personally reprimand him.

Didn't it rekindle the emperor's war instinct that he had barely extinguished?

"What did he do wrong? Jim has no intention of reprimanding him, formally or informally. He just took good care of his territory. From what I heard, he went on a subjugation expedition with only one knight corps, but wasn't this to avoid provoking the opposing kingdom? "He has done enough."

"Haona...."

"Prime Minister."

The emperor laughed like a sword.

"Jim is a tyrant."

"...."

"Even if that wasn't the case, I was planning to continue conquering the continent, but it actually worked out well."

Conquering the continent was a goal set from the moment he ascended to the throne.

Anyway, he killed his brothers and sisters and ascended to the throne. Whatever the reason or the truth, I had no intention of acting irresponsibly.

That's the goal I came up with.

The Prime Minister, who was about to say something more, closed his mouth and lowered his head, laughing so sharply that it seemed as if he could cut himself.

The emperor was too obsessed with responsibility, responsibility had become a shackle, and the shackle was threatening to spell disaster.

‘If you call yourself a tyrant, you should throw away any responsibility, Your Majesty.’

A sense of responsibility is not bad. But shouldn't it be done in moderation?

The priorities were wrong in the first place. He was prioritizing his responsibility to his dead brothers and sisters more than his responsibility to the people of the empire.

I know very well that guilt is the cause. Because of this, he calls himself a tyrant. But I can't help but dislike it.

‘If a disaster occurs, I hope it does not affect the empire.’

Chancellor Ardal slowly opened his mouth, hoping that even if he went crazy, it would only affect the emperor personally.

“...I will prepare a budget plan secretly.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 47

47. Foreshadowing (2)

“As expected, the prime minister has a good sense of humor.”

Only then did the emperor relax his expression and smiled faintly.

There are problems that need to be resolved before going to war. Until then, it would be best to hide anything about the war.

I lowered my eyes and focused on the document I was reading a moment ago.

The emperor muttered as he reexamined the content about the cult that has recently been rapidly expanding in the slums.

“Even if pseudo-religions that arise during war are unavoidable, we should clean up before the war.”

When a country is in chaos, pseudo-religions become rampant.

I understand. For psychologically unstable people, the only place they can turn to is religion.

However, there is no room for rethinking about pseudo-religions that exist even when there is no war. Even more so if it is a religion whose size is called threatening.

Once a war begins, their power will only grow and not shrink, so they must be completely eradicated before the war.

‘Who should I leave it to...’

I waved my hand at the busy-looking Prime Minister and thought for a moment. The worries didn’t last long.

“After all, in the name of punishment, it is best to leave it to Deon Hardt...”

Since it is just a matter of eliminating the fanatics, even if he is injured, he will be able to finish it without much trouble.

If you finish it safely, you may be rewarded with that.

Those thoughts came out of my mouth without much tension.

Anyway, the only person who would listen was Nemeseus, and it wasn’t that important compared to the war, so I just blurted it out.

“Your Majesty, did you just say Deon Hart?”

“....”

At that moment, the emperor closed his mouth.

I forgot about it for a while. Nemeseus was a person who vehemently opposed Deonhart’s moderation.

He quietly touched his forehead as he looked at the rare, resolute eyes that met him directly, as if asking him why it was Deon Hart again.

***

“Captain.”

“I have to fight tomorrow too, but why didn’t you sleep in? Your face.”

“I had a nightmare.”

“...Don’t do this here, stay inside. “Your complexion right now....”

“It’s not just once or twice. Every night, the people I killed appear in my dreams. And that too, in the same way it was at the time of death. Unidentifiable things are coming towards me, dripping blood...”

“ ....”

“Please help me. Just as the captain said, he was brutally killed. I told myself over and over again that I had no choice if I wanted to survive, but it was hard to stay sober, so I took medicine as you taught me. Still, I feel like I’m going crazy. It’s painful. “The medicine only works during the fight, but after it’s over, the memories come back clearly...!”

“calm down. “Why don’t you calm down and think a little differently?”

“yes?”

“You didn’t take the drug to kill the other person, but you were swayed by the drug’s energy and killed the other person. "I couldn't help it because of the medication."

"Leader...? What kind of garbage mentality is that...."

"Puh-ha, really? Then how about this? "Oh, I didn't know what to say before, but you were hurt here."

"yes? uh? When..."

"...."

"Ah! Don't touch it! "It hurts!"

"It hurts now that I'm conscious of it, right? Actually, I pressed that wound a little while ago. But you didn't know."

"...."

"Pretend you don't know. Don't even think about it. You said it came to mind vividly, right? It's clearer because you're conscious of it. Leave your memories of when you took the drug in a hazy state. Even if it comes to mind, ignore it. "Because that's not what you did."

"...."

"You didn't do it."

***

When I came to, I was back in my mansion.

Before I lost my mind, I was near the border, but when I came to my senses, it was my home!

If it weren't for the wound on my shoulder, I would have thought it was a dream.

From what I heard, the people who attacked me somehow managed to get away with it. I didn't ask any more questions and just nodded quietly.

Since there were murderers and no one else together, it must have been resolved on its own. Honestly, I don't really want to delve into that seriously.

The whole world knew that their hands were cruel, and it was not a very pleasant act to recall the arrow that hit me back then and the burning pain that followed.

Just like that, several days had passed and today, Remember came to me quietly requesting a conversation, carrying a large amount of documents.

...'carrying a huge amount of documents'.

'It's ominous.'

First of all, I accepted it because it was a request for dialogue, but the majesty of that document is enormous.

I wonder if he thought a pile of documents was coming when Remember came in. I thought I was wasting my time due to the stress of paperwork.

Anyway, you can't have a conversation while holding documents. He puts the papers down on a nearby desk. 'thud!' The desk vibrated slightly with a terrifying sound.

"Cough."

"Are you okay?"

"Oh yeah."

"You didn't vomit blood?"

“yes.”

Unfortunately.

“Fortunately, the. “If you hurt your shoulder and vomited blood, it would have been really embarrassing.”

Are you being sarcastic now?

When I looked at him with a pouty expression, Remember smiled softly and took a step back.

Then he cleared his throat softly and spoke with a serious expression.

“While the Count was out on a subjugation, we caught Sejak.”

“oh.”

“Unfortunately, we were unable to find out who was behind it. sorry.”

He bows down. I was naturally impressed by the simple gestures.

More luxurious than the empire’s nobles. What on earth is this butler doing? I heard that you are from a small, isolated country in the center of the continent... Are you from a high-ranking noble family?

My thoughts filled with doubts were quickly interrupted by a voice that continued.

“I heard that the Count also failed to find out who was behind it.”

“Ah...”

That's what I heard. But why? Are you starting a fight?

"That would mean that the person behind it is not easy. I think a candidate would be the Duke of Illuster, the head of the revolutionary army, a hostile kingdom, or an aristocratic faction."

It wasn't a fight. Our butler is really talented.

He is good at managing the mansion, good at paperwork, good manners, and good at reasoning.

Isn't this almost omnipotent? If you're good at fighting, you're truly an all-rounder, right?

'No, I think I put up quite a fight...'

I remembered how he overpowered the revolutionary army.

Remember's words did not end there.

"In my personal opinion, I think it is the Duke of Illuster, but either way, the Count will be too much for him to handle alone, so it would be better to step down from here or ask His Majesty for help. "I'm sorry if it was presumptuous to meddle."

"No... thank you."

It looks like he was too absorbed in the answer. Mysterious silver-blue eyes took in me for a moment.

There was a short silence, and he grinned as if to change the mood, then took a step towards the pile of papers he had put down a moment ago.

Oh no, wait, why is that....

“There’s a lot of paperwork behind.”

“Umm...”

“Fortunately, the injured area is my left shoulder, so there will be no problem holding the pen and writing. “The Count is right-handed.”

thud! The sound and vibration that rang from the desk over there rang from my desk this time.

Breaking out in a cold sweat, I looked at the pile of documents in front of me, glanced at Remember’s eyes, and picked up the top document.

[Design drawings for the construction of a dam in Hart territory....]

“Ah!”

“Why are you doing that?”

“I must see your Majesty.”

I need to request the return of Hart Territory. Something happened so I forgot about it for a while.

There is absolutely no running away. This is something I had been thinking about from the beginning.

I packed up my outerwear, thinking that if I felt like the atmosphere was good after paying attention, I would have to return the murderous knights who were currently making a fuss in my mansion.

I ignored Remember’s gaze that followed me until the end.

***

I looked to the left. The crown prince is drinking tea.

I looked to the right. The princess is hanging on my arm.

Where am I. who am i

I just came to see the emperor, so why am I having tea time with the royal family now?

When I became aware of the situation again, I felt like my throat was burning, so I drank the tea with a half-hearted expression on my face.

‘The scent of tea is amazing again.’

Ha...

who am I to blame? It’s all my fault for getting the timing wrong.

Come a little early or late, and come when the emperor is meeting someone.

Considering that I was always able to meet the emperor right away, I was unusually told to wait today.

They say there’s a customer who came first, but that’s none of my business.

I definitely tried to wait patiently. They said it wouldn’t take long, so I really tried to wait patiently...

[Count! Crumble!!]

[Hwa, Her Highness?!]

[Excuse me, Count.]

[Her Royal Highness!]

The crown prince and the princess appeared.

For some reason, it was a strange situation where the crown prince was holding the princess's back, but thanks to that, I was able to figure it out quickly.

The princess tried to surprise me again. The crown prince prevented that.

Oh my, I almost died. This weak body cannot withstand even the princess's weight-bearing embrace, so it is best to avoid such situations as much as possible.

I expressed my gratitude with my eyes and calmly showed my respect, but the crown prince, who was looking at me blankly, suddenly threw a bomb.

[I would like to serve you tea as an apology, would you please?]

I refuse to say no.

His eyes seemed to say so.

They even blocked an escape hole in advance.

[When the servant finds it, I will send it to you right away. You can think of it as a short rest before an audience with His Majesty.]

[Oh, that's it...]

[Didn't you say that you would stop by me every time you came to the imperial palace? Maybe that was a lie...]

[No. I was so honored that I was late in replying. Thanks for the invitation. His Royal Highness.]

And now.

I was already drinking my fourth cup of tea to moisten my dry lips.

...Nope. This is not rest.

Where can I see this is taking a break? It's putting mental pressure on you.

"It looks like the tea suits your taste."

"Yes, yes...."

"I'll bring you some when I go back."

"thank you."

Actually, I don't really need it.

Of course it smells good.

The taste... of course, is neither sweet nor salty. There is sugar in front of me, but I can't reach for it because I can't see it. It's so bland that it feels like drinking water with a lot of perfume sprinkled on it.

In other words, it's not my taste. I'm just drinking because I'm thirsty.

The crown prince lifts the teacup to his mouth and lightly bends his wrist.

Although he is just drinking tea, his actions exude grace and dignity. After all, he is the crown prince.

Compared to that, the princess....

“Don’t you get bitten if you just drink the Count’s tea? “Try some cookies too.”

“...Yes, thank you.”

Just don’t think about it.

As she accepted the cookie the princess offered, she looked sideways at the prince who still didn’t say anything.

He put down the teacup and looked at his younger brother, who was unable to stop him, with eyes asking, ‘What should I do about that?’

Then, as if in resignation, he shook his head and turned his gaze towards me.

My image was reflected in the golden eyes unique to the royal family.

“I heard you were injured. Are you okay?”

“Oh yeah, it’s okay.”

I barely managed to stop myself from reflexively trying to cover his shoulders.

The crown prince’s eyes narrowed.

“My body has become weak due to the curse, so I need to be as careful as possible. “I don’t understand why you went out to subdue monsters yourself.”

“...I apologize.”

I didn’t come forward, I was dragged in.

But even if I tell you, you won't believe me. Who would believe that the Count is being swayed by the knights who serve me?

"Don't feel sorry for me, feel sorry for yourself. "Wouldn't I have to assist His Majesty for a long time?"

For a long time? Wow, that's terrible.

I couldn't say no out loud, but I couldn't say yes either, so I silently lifted the teacup with a faint smile.

'...full.'

My stomach is full.

While I was momentarily distracted by the unpleasant feeling of my stomach churning, the crown prince continued speaking.

"I hope you will take good care of His Majesty. "I'm saying this because you are the one, but honestly, I don't want to become emperor. I don't even think I will."

"...yes?"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 48

48. Foreshadowing (3)

I almost spit out the car.

I let my guard down and it came rushing in. Speaking of you, what is this?... As I froze, unable to adjust to the suddenly heavy content of the conversation, the crown prince continued speaking.

"I have no choice but to sit in the crown prince's position due to my position, but people know me, right? The age difference between Your Majesty and me is only 8 years. "When your Majesty gets old enough to retire, I will also be old enough to prepare for retirement."

8 years difference.

Crown Prince Elpidius Desert is 20 years old and is 8 years older than the 28-year-old Emperor.

Occasionally, envoys from other kingdoms who came without properly researching the information will tilt their heads and ask those around them if he is their biological son, but is that possible?

The crown prince is the emperor's nephew.

'No, but why are you telling me that?...'

I don't fit into this kind of heavy personal history.

There was no way he couldn't see my expression full of trouble, but the damn prince didn't care and continued talking.

"If the day comes when I ascend to the throne, it will mean that a problem has arisen with Your Majesty's life. "I don't want that."

"...."

"And more than anything, I definitely realized it when I saw His Majesty working. "I can't do it like him."

There was a mixture of unknown emotions in the eyes of the crown prince who said that.

What I can be sure of is that it was by no means a negative emotion.

'....'

Considering that the emperor killed all of his brothers and even killed their children to avoid leaving behind any successors, it would be strange not only to not understand the nephew's existence, but also for the nephew to not hate his uncle, but it is possible. There was a reason.

Because there was only one brother who did not die at the hands of the emperor.

When the emperor, who was the 9th prince, drew his sword, his only brother, the 1st prince, was already dead.

I don't know much, but seeing the story going around that 'If the 1st prince had been alive, the 9th prince would not have drawn his sword', it can be concluded that the relationship between the two must have been quite good.

Aside from that, there were many rumors about the first prince.

A royal family who is not like a royal family but like a brat. The only blood relative who was kind to the 9th prince, who was in trouble.

Even after getting married and giving birth to a child, he visited her every day and took care of him and his children together, so it is not surprising that the current emperor is good to the crown prince and princess, who are the children of the first prince and his niece.

You must have felt that much affection. Perhaps he felt like his own child or brother.

So, they would actually be recognized as 'crown prince' and 'prince princess.'

"So, please take good care of Your Majesty."

"Yes... Yes?"

I raised my head in surprise.

There was an inexplicable trust in the eyes of the crown prince who dared to meet him.

'I wanted to say this earlier... What is this endless trust? Isn't suspicion a virtue when it comes to royal family?'

Even the person asking for a favor is the emperor. The same emperor who personally drew his sword and swept the battlefield to conquer territory during the Eight Years' War!

I'm so dumbfounded.

"Brother, Count, why bother saying such a thing!"

"Your Highness the Princess...."

"Even if I don't have to say it, the Count will do well!"

Absolutely not. So don't look at me like, 'Did I do well?'

Why is the Crown Prince nodding his head!

"I was rude."

"Oh no."

I decided. I guess I should run away. If things continue like this, it seems like only burdensome topics will continue to come up.

Since you can't just jump out without saying anything, it would be better to make a good excuse, get away, and then come back. Then at least the atmosphere will change.

I happened to drink too much tea and needed to go to the bathroom, so I could use that as an excuse to leave.

I cautiously opened my mouth, observing the prince and princess's looks.

"Can I go to the bathroom for a moment?"

"Now that I think about it, I drank a lot of tea. "Please come back."

I bowed once towards the prince and princess who were waving their hands and hurried out of the garden where tea time was taking place.

‘I survived! I thought I was suffocating to death.’

When I think about going back there again, the future is dark, but once I get out, there is something!

I walked down the corridors of the imperial palace at a brisk pace, thinking that I should walk a little more slowly when I returned from my errands.

And, despite my exciting walk, I thought,

‘...Where am I?’

I got lost.

Don’t feel pitiful that you’ve lost your way because you’re frequently in and out of the imperial palace.

I would always meet the emperor immediately and return home immediately without having to take another route.

So, do you have the ability to know another way?

‘It would be difficult to keep the royal family waiting for a long time...’

My life is in trouble.

If by some chance they think I cheated on them, wouldn’t it be a big deal?

I hurriedly looked around in confusion.

Fortunately, it wasn't long before I found an attendant standing in a corner of one hallway.

"there!"

"...!"

Oh, I was so happy that I almost shouted.

I was startled and looked at him with wide eyes. I smiled slightly out of apology, but for some reason he started shaking.

...Maybe it's an illusion.

Fearing that he might run away, I didn't erase my smile but widened my stride and approached him with a stride.

I was a little concerned about the anxious expression on his face, perhaps because of my reputation, but I was more in a hurry now.

It feels like it's going to explode. I think it will be cheap like this.

I won't even tell you what it is.

"Here—"

"Aaaaaa!!"

...Where is the bathroom? You crazy person.

I looked at the guy who suddenly took out a knife and rushed at me with an expression full of bewilderment rather than surprise.

***

“You’re gone.”

“I know, right.”

He probably ran away. It seems like the conversation was quite burdensome.

‘Honestly, it was sudden.’

But I couldn’t help it because I knew there was no way we would have time to talk like this easily.

Crown Prince Elpidius smiled faintly as he quietly lifted his teacup.

I’m sorry for putting a burden on you, but I have no intention of taking back what I said.

Unlike the peaceful surface of the water, there was a shady movement going on underneath the water, and its blade was clearly pointed at his uncle, the Emperor.

A movement that has continued from the moment my uncle became emperor until now.

[We will allow you to sit on the supreme throne.]

[If this continues, you may not be able to sit on the emperor’s throne for the rest of your life.] [

The nobles’ opposition is growing stronger.]

[Please punish the tyrant.]

The eight-year war is over. Even in the heat of the moment, they continued to visit him.

That doesn't mean I'm shaken by those absurd words, but I can't even guarantee how long I'll be able to maintain this feeling.

They may come and shake you with weaknesses you didn't know about.

Is a weakness a weakness for nothing? If that moment comes, he will probably...

'....'

It has been 10 years since the position of the monarch changed. Even if you couldn't do the trick during the war because you didn't have enough time, you still had enough time to find a weakness or two if you wanted to.

Until now, the crown prince has served as a strong defense for the emperor.

To bring down an emperor, one needs not only a plausible cause but also an 'imperial family member' to sit on the empty throne, so if the crown prince does not agree, their actions will end in mere rebellion.

You could replace it with the princess, but the crown prince would have more power to convince others, and she wouldn't agree to that either.

The 'actions' of subversive elements had no choice but to continue to be pushed back.

But this too is now limited. No, the limit was already reached.

It's been two years since their actions began to change from 'appeasement' to 'threats disguised as appeasement'.

As a crown prince who did not know when he might be caught in a weakness and take an unwanted action, he had to hurry up and come up with a prepared plan.

Therefore, it was natural for the emperor to pay attention to Deonhardt, a hero he particularly trusted.

‘I’m glad you didn’t say that though.’

He couldn’t overcome the burden of those words and ran away. If he had heard these words, he would have probably run out of the imperial palace. He probably didn’t want to see me for the rest of his life.

‘If there is anything that gets in the way of assisting the emperor’, even if it is a member of the royal family.

‘...Kill him.’

He gave the princess some cookies and smiled sweetly.

The princess made eye contact and then nodded, folding her eyes like a crescent moon as if she knew. The sight of him nodding his head in response seemed to anyone to be a kind brother.

As always, the crown prince’s day went by peacefully today.

***

Until just a few minutes ago, Ireon’s spy was firing off congratulations alone.

This is because while the emperor was away dealing with visitors, he sneaked into his office and succeeded in copying and stealing important documents.

In that 'Empire'! Just a spy for a small country! That incredible feat was accomplished!

Of course it wasn't easy.

Even though they did not even dream of entering the emperor's office and instead aimed for the chancellor's office, security was tight.

It was more difficult because the limit of the preliminary investigation time was set at one week, considering the possibility that the tyrant emperor would start a war in response to the shameless demands of the Kingdom of Ireon without even weighing the profits and losses.

'I'm going back to my home country now, you damn bastards!'

Now that I have achieved my purpose here, all I have to do is go back, but it seems that things in this world don't go that easily.

"there!"

"...!"

A loud voice clearly calling this way.

Could it be that he noticed?

The spy, who unconsciously shivered greatly because he was being stabbed, belatedly made an expression of regret.

It was just a call, but the attendant was so surprised. Isn't this suspicious to anyone?

'What do we do?'

There are still important documents in my arms. If you get caught like this, you won't be able to get rid of it.

Should I run away? But that's like shouting out loud, 'I'm a suspicious person.'

'No, calm down. He may be a surprisingly dull person.'

First of all, I checked the other person and realized that this wasn't going to work. I need to run away.

I tried to straighten my rapidly tired face.

Red eyes white hair. It's unlucky. Even if you get caught, it's 'Deon Hart'.

He is famous for being crazy about blood. Since ancient times, there has been historical evidence that crazy people have good senses, and wouldn't the same be true for the person in front of us? He even spent eight years on the battlefield, so his animal senses must be unrivaled.

Still, I tried to place my hope on the possibility of the unknown, but...

'Is that... he's smiling right now?'

A smile as if he had clearly figured out this person's identity.

The spy closed his mouth and chewed the inside of his cheek as he smiled leisurely, as if no matter what I did, you were in the palm of my hand.

You should never deal with it. The moment you deal with it, you will definitely become that bastard's toy.

'You can't just run away.'

One of the few people qualified to bear arms before the Emperor is Deon Hart. He must still be carrying a weapon.

He is known to be good at not only swinging a dagger but also throwing it to hit a target, so there is no way he would just turn his back and leave this guy running away.

Probably, as soon as you show your back, a dagger will fly.

Deon Hardt, as if sensing his complicated feelings, strides towards him with a smile on his face.

Does that mean they won't give you any more time to think?

The spy's mind raced to somehow come to the best conclusion.

Pretending to be a servant and dealing with him would be playing into that bastard's will, and just running away would be the same.

In that case, the only way left is to 'attack him'.

'Of course he won't be our opponent, so let's aim to embarrass him.'

The easy-going thought that a clumsy spy who was even showing signs of surprise would not dare attack him. You have to use that thought.

If it were a sudden attack, no matter how much I did, I would be shocked. If so, there will be a momentary gap. Take advantage of that gap and escape.

Once the plan was made, there was no need to worry after that.

‘First, check to see what he’s going to say, and if the first word seems strange, attack right away.’

When I’m talking, my guard tends to soften without me even realizing it.

After thinking that far, the spy raised his head and faced Deonhardt.

A subtle tension flowed, and Deonhardt slowly opened his mouth.

“Here—”

“Aaaaa!!”

There was no need to listen to the end.

The spy, who immediately took out a knife, rushed forward without delay.

‘How dare you tell me where this is.’

If you’re going to listen to something like that until the end, it would be much more profitable to take advantage of the moment when you let your guard down by talking.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 49

49. Omen (4)

I just asked for the location of the bathroom, but why is he running at me with a knife?

I put aside the absurdity that came over me and twisted my body because I had to live first.

Perhaps because he was rushing with all his might, he lost his balance and fell forward. In the process, the blade grazed my forearm, but I didn't care.

This is nothing compared to what I've experienced so far.

'Then what do we do now?'

Time has stopped.

No, it seemed like it stopped for a moment.

I slowly rolled my eyes and took in the sight of the guy stopped in midair.

A red-faced face. If you lower your gaze a little, you can see the hand holding the guy's neck underneath.

The guy didn't stop, but someone suddenly reached out and grabbed the falling guy's neck.

Let's slowly raise our eyes to find the owner of that hand—

“...Brother?”

“....”

Our eyes met unwavering green eyes.

What the fuck, why are you here?

As if my doubts hadn't caught my attention, Cruel quietly looked at me and looked at the person he was holding in his hand.

His hands tightened as if he wanted to kill him like this.

Tendons stood on the backs of his hands and forearms, the face of the guy who grabbed his neck turned red, and his eyes were bloodshot.

“Keuuuh—”

Wow, it's bloody.

It didn't look good to see him struggling while holding onto Cruel's arm with both hands, so he looked away with a puzzled look on his face. At that time, something suddenly fell at the servant's feet.

“...document?”

What, are you really a spy?

Before unconsciously reaching for it, there was a hand picking up the paper first.

Cruel is still strangling the guy, so it probably isn't him.

Then, the owner of this hand is....

“This seems like an important document of the imperial family.”

“...Duke?!”

“It’s been a while, Count.”

Purple eyes grin. I quickly got up from my seat.

what? Why would someone who is not on good terms with the emperor come here?

“I’m on my way to meet His Majesty for a moment and give a reward to a dog that obeys me. “I never thought we would meet like this.”

His eyes briefly glanced at my injured shoulder.

...Is it possible for a duke who is neither from the royal family nor from the royal family to raise a dog in the imperial palace?

Or rather, my doubts seemed to be blatantly displayed on my face.

I was embarrassed by the answer that came back with a smile on my face, so I wiped my face, but the Duke’s voice continued as if I had more to say.

“I heard that the Count also came to see Your Majesty. “May I ask what your purpose is?”

“Ah, there is something I would like to ask about the territory I received recently...”

“Is it because it is not enough? “It’s small or the land is barren.”

“No, I just want to return the territory.”

“That’s interesting.”

As I looked at the duke’s eyes, which were gently curved with interest, I secretly expressed my trouble.

What if I ask more? I don’t want to talk about the reason here.

Especially in front of Cruel.

Fortunately, the duke didn’t ask any further questions, perhaps because he noticed that I was hesitant to ask the reason.

But no thanks. The topic you brought up to change the topic was a very difficult one for me.

He looks down and sees the servant lying on the floor.

Cruel, who was holding the bastard’s neck, was suddenly standing behind the Duke.

His expression was as calm as ever, to the point where you couldn’t tell he was strangling someone just a moment ago.

“It’s amazing that you were able to catch a spy while waiting like this.”

“No, this is....”

“There is no need to be humble. There is no need to be on guard. I have no intention of intercepting the ball. Even if it weren't for Lord Cruel, the Count would have easily subdued this man."

"No, I mean..."

"Count!"

Mistress, what else!

I looked back towards the place where the sound came from with full of frustration and immediately had to relax my eyes.

The people approaching from afar were none other than the crown prince and princess.

"It seemed like a lot of time had passed, but I was worried because he didn't come back..."

Geum-an quickly looked over the situation.

As if to prove that he was not the crown prince for nothing, he quickly understood the situation and smiled on his face.

"I never thought we would catch a spy like this."

"That's..."

"As expected, you're amazing!"

"Cough, Her Highness...."

Can't you both just keep your mouths shut?

Are you both doing this on purpose? To fuck me. Otherwise, there's no way I'm putting pressure on you by pretending like it's not the case.

But for some reason, the surrounding atmosphere is strange. It felt like the air had suddenly changed.

As I slowly raised my head, wondering if something was wrong, I made eye contact with those whose eyes were wide.

“Count, are you okay?”

“...yes?”

“What should I do? There’s blood!”

“...?”

“Call the palace doctor! hurry!!”

In addition to the princess’s fuss, the sound of the crown prince calling the courtier echoes through the palace hallways.

Only then did I feel the warm liquid dripping down my chin.

Ah, I thought I was simply possessed, but it seems that this weak body was hurt even by the slightest impact. For some reason, I felt a little sick inside.

It would not have been possible for something as simple as this to have happened, and I think this result was due to the surprise at the surprise attack.

“I’m fine....”

“Don’t lie, just tell me what made you feel like this. “There must be some inference, right?”

“No, really...”

“Now that I think about it, there’s a wound on my arm. “It looks like it’s been around for a while.”

The crown prince’s gaze landed on the wound grazed by the sword a moment ago.

This is at the level of a scratch. There really is no problem.

No, no matter how weak I am, there is no way I would vomit blood like this.

While I was wondering how to explain this to the royal family in front of me, who had been silently observing the situation, Cruel blurted out one word.

“It appears to have occurred while suppressing a spy.”

“Then... I guess we should consider the possibility that the weapon was coated with poison. Is Gonggui still there?”

...yes? Poison?

While I was sitting there with a dumbfounded look on my face as the situation was going by, a cloth was wrapped around the top of the wound.

Perhaps to prevent the poison from spreading further, the crown prince wrapped the cloth close to his shoulders and tied it into a knot... but tied it too tightly.

‘There’s no blood flow at all.’

No, that aside, my arm feels like it’s going to fall off. Moreover, because it is tied tightly, more blood comes out of the wound.

At first, it appeared as a plain red color, but soon changed to a cloudy dark red color and began to seep out in droplets.

“Is it also poison?”

It's like there's no blood flowing through it. If you tie it up so tightly, your blood will turn black and you will die.

By the way, where did you get this fabric? Who on earth would take care of something like this... Ah.

I made eye contact with Cruel. And next to him, the Duke smiles with his eyes wide open and praises him for doing a good job in a meaningful tone...

‘That bastard gave it to me.’

My mood suddenly became unpleasant. I would like to immediately throw away this useless thing, but I cannot untie what the crown prince himself has tied up for me.

I didn't have the energy to say anything more, so I just resigned and closed my eyes.

It was my own measure to ignore this whole damn situation, but...

“Count! You can't close your eyes now! “Hold on just a little longer!”

“...Ha....”

***

Gonggui was examining the other person with a hard face. His hands were shaking so slightly that only those with good senses could notice them.

If you feel a sense of déjà vu in this situation, you would not be mistaken.

He was the one who examined Honorable Count Deon Hardt, who was coughing up blood in the banquet hall last time.

Oh, it wasn't blood, it was pudding. Even thinking about it again, it is truly absurd.

So, even as I ran this time, I had doubts in a corner of my mind.

'It's real this time.'

The fishy smell is not fake. In other words, it is a really dangerous situation...

I swallowed back the tears that welled up.

The patient's condition has changed from last time, but the people around him have not.

His Royal Highness the Crown Prince and the Princess, His Excellency the Duke, and even the hero Cruel. I tried to take comfort in the fact that His Majesty the Emperor and General Nemeseus were not there, but—

"What is going on?"

Even General Nemeseus came, as if heaven hated him.

Honorary Count Deonhart appears to have some business to attend to, and after paying courtesy to the crown prince and princess, he sits down and begins to watch. Cold sweat was running down my back.

If you make a mistake, you will definitely die. Even if you don't get treatment, you will die. Feeling that his life was in danger, Gonggui's hands became busy.

Check the inside of the mouth, check the pulse, and check any wounds.

As the examination continued, the palace doctor's complexion became whiter.

The sight was so serious that even those watching became anxious, and in the end, the crown prince, who was unable to see it, opened his mouth as if he was nervous.

"Is it that serious?"

"That's..."

"It's okay, so tell me."

"...There is nothing special."

"...what?"

There was a moment of silence as the answer was completely different from what I expected.

The crown prince's eyes flutter as if he can't believe it, and the princess covers her mouth with both hands and opens her eyes wide. Cruel was only looking at the palace with his mouth shut.

While others were rushing to come up with different answers, the one who answered first was Nemeseus, who arrived late and was observing the situation.

"That must mean it's the devil's curse."

"Ah..."

Realization flashed across the others' faces.

Is that why you said it was so okay? Because it won't be curable anyway.

I guess they decided there was no need to cause unnecessary concern and waste their time.

An expression of novelty appears on each person's face and then disappears. In particular, the crown prince looked at Deonhardt with a sad expression.

'It's so deep inside.'

It's a pity that others don't know this.

The Crown Prince, recalling the well-known image of Deonhardt, tried to fix his distorted expression and change the subject.

'Because he doesn't want anyone interested in his curse.'

Sympathy only makes him unpleasant.

I barely took my gaze away from him and moved it to a sturdy man who arrived late.

"General Nemeseus. "What did you have to do that brought you here in person?"

***

The crown prince's attention was focused elsewhere. As I was anxious about what to say about the curse, I quietly sighed in relief.

For some reason, every time the story about a curse that didn't exist was mentioned, a burdensome setting was added.

But that's only for a moment

: "His Majesty is looking for Honorary Count Deonhardt."

"Ku ku hoo!"

I could barely suppress the cough that was about to burst out.

I have to hold back. If I cough here again, something crazy might happen.

The general's eyes are fixed on me. I pressed down on my mouth with the back of my hand, lowered my eyes, and tried to control my pounding heart.

...I calmed down, but I still don't understand.

General, why on earth did you come in person? I have a good errand boy called a valet, but I'm going to use it for something.

It even looks uncomfortable. There was displeasure in his eyes as they scanned me.

The general's busy eyes passed by the people on the scene and stopped at the servant with a frustrated expression.

"It looks like we have an uninvited guest ahead of time. Do you mind if I take care of it?"

"Even if that wasn't the case, I was planning on asking. For your information, the spy was caught by Count Hart, so make sure there is no mistake."

"...All right."

I was very uneasy that my name had to be included in that conversation, but the conversation ended anyway.

So now all we have to do is drag him away and throw him in jail... Why are you looking at me?

Even the look in their eyes is not clear.

"I have to see His Majesty anyway, and since you are the one you caught, let's go together."

"yes?"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 50

50. Omen (5)

"Then I will leave now, your two highnesses."

"okay."

Why are you talking without me? What about my doctor?

Even the duke slightly pulled away.

"I guess I'll have to go now too. Excuse me."

So it really seems like the situation is over.

No, it's really over.

The Duke and Cruel disappeared, and the Prince and Princess waved their hands at me, telling me to go quickly.

General Nemeseus also gestured with his chin for him to quickly follow, and while holding the man's collar with his hand, he picked up the documents scattered on the floor and began to lead the way.

And the palace doctor, who was hesitating and watching...

"I will send you some tonic medicine later, so don't forget to take it."

“...?”

“So please stay healthy. please.”

For some reason, he whispered firmly in a tone that seemed almost desperate, and then quickly walked away.

Unable to adapt to this situation and standing blankly, I glanced at the general.

He is walking at a brisk pace, as if he is going to kill him if he doesn't follow him.

‘The bathroom...’

Looking at the atmosphere, I don't think it will work.

In the end, I had no choice but to follow behind him.

***

The duke left the imperial palace and got into the carriage heading to the duke's residence. As soon as he left, he took something out of his pocket.

One of the documents dropped by the servant a moment ago.

On a piece of white paper, the budget plan for the time of war was written in a densely organized manner.

Cruel's eyes turned towards him as if he had sensed what the paper was, but the Duke didn't care.

He glanced over the contents of the document without paying any attention, then smiled and folded it and put it in his arms.

In my head, the conversation from when I had an audience with the emperor a while ago was playing back.

“You said there would be no war right now.”

You even write a budget like this.

“You’re not good at lying.”

A clear sneer appeared on the duke’s face.

Let me help you out with this.

You must be most worried about the demon world, Your Majesty.

‘At least they will remain calm until Your Majesty takes over half the continent.’

The Duke gently touched the area near his heart.

And there was Cruel’s gaze, silently watching the scene.

***

“You don’t look good. Where does it hurt?”

“no.”

“Are you breaking into a cold sweat right now?”

“it’s okay.”

I can never say that I can’t go to the bathroom. Even if I’m embarrassed, I can’t say anything.

I tried to straighten my expression and straighten my back.

The Emperor, sitting in a chair across from the table, narrows his eyes and looks at me, as if trying to gauge my physical condition.

As I sat there pretending to be even more sane, he smiled and leaned back in his chair.

“If that’s you, then that’s probably it. I’m saying this out of old age, but don’t hide the fact that you’re not feeling well. “You are one of the empire’s most important forces.”

“I’ll keep that in mind.”

“Then ask again.”

“....”

“I heard they caught a spy. “Are you feeling okay?”

Beneath the slow and relaxed expression, golden eyes like beasts shine sharply as if searching.

I couldn’t bear to look at him directly, so I answered while slightly averting his gaze.

“it’s okay.”

It’s really okay. Although I was grazed by that guy’s blade, it was literally just a grazing, and the cold sweat and bad complexion were just because somewhere in my body felt like it was going to explode.

If you’re really worried, give it some time to rest. Then it will be really okay.

I was obviously sincere, but the emperor’s eyebrows twitched as he wondered how he took my words.

He was silent for a moment, then opened his mouth again, raising the corners of his mouth as if it were invisible.

“...Okay then, let me ask you something else. “What brought you here?”

“About Hart Territory....”

“If you want to return it or request something similar, please refuse in advance. “The same goes for things related to the Knights of Lofty.”

“...Then quit your job.”

“It doesn’t work either.”

I expected rejection, but I never thought I would get rejected before I even said anything.

I felt like grabbing him by the collar and saying, ‘I’m giving it to you, but why aren’t you taking it?!’ I want to scream. Of course, if that were the case, my neck would not be able to maintain its proper position.

Just as I was about to ponder what to do with this, the emperor’s laughing voice was heard again.

“However, if you grant my request, I will grant you one thing you want. “How about asking again then?”

It feels uncomfortable to hear the emperor’s request.

But since there was no other way to persuade him, I nodded slowly.

Then the emperor asked with a subtle expression.

“Cruel Hart has decided to take on the same task, so if you participate too, you will have to grant the wish of the person who made it happen first. Will you still do that?”

“...I'll do it.”

You're granting Cruel's wish? That is absolutely not enough. I know what to wish for.

If I'm not careful, I might make a wish that will be detrimental to me.

If the opponent was an ordinary noble, you might not know it, but Cruel is a 'hero' like me.

There was infinitely little chance that the emperor would side with me in the face of the legitimate demands of a great 'talented person'.

That's why I spoke to him in a solemn manner.

“What can I do?”

A faint smile appeared on the lips of the emperor, who was looking at me with an expressionless expression as if searching.

He takes a document from Nemeseus and pushes it in front of me. As I naturally looked at the paper, a word that appeared to be the title written at the top caught my eye.

[Salvation Church]

“...Salvation Church?”

“Yes, Salvation Church. It is a pseudo-religion that is rampant in slums these days. “You just have to wipe them out.”

Elimination of pseudo-religion.

I was completely dazed by this type of mission I had never received before.

***

Deonhardt, who seemed to be already thinking about what to do, retreated with a thoughtful look on his face, and the emperor, who had been sitting down and re-reading the document, raised his eyes and looked at Nemeseus.

His expression revealed a rare negative emotion.

The emperor put down the document he was holding and spoke softly.

“Are you still dissatisfied?”

“I am against it.”

It was an immediate answer.

The emperor frowned at the resolute answer.

Nemeseus hates Deonhardt. No, I was overly cautious.

The emperor spoke in a tired tone.

“But isn’t it better than Cruel Hart? “He is the duke’s servant.”

[I understand that Your Majesty is having trouble with fanatics these days. Sir Cruel said that he would be willing to sacrifice his rest period for His Majesty’s sake. Shouldn’t the fanatics be eliminated for the sake of war?]

[...You've gone too far. [I have no intention of starting a war yet.]

[I guess I was mistaken. [Excuse me.]

The Emperor frowned slightly as he remembered the Duke barging his subordinates with a shameless look.

It was obvious what the Duke was aiming for.

A hero with a duke behind him will easily defeat the fanatic. These are things that gave the 'Emperor' a headache, so from his perspective, he must repay them.

When demanding that 'repayment', the duke's influence will be so strong that he will say 'absolutely'. It was probably a request that benefited the duke himself.

Originally, I was planning to bring in Deon Hardt, but thanks to this, I became more confident.

He is undoubtedly on the side of the 'imperialist faction', or more specifically, 'Edoardo Dessertes'. His skills are excellent, so he doesn't have to worry about losing out in competition with Cruel, and because his opponent is Cruel, he is also overflowing with motivation.

It was truly an ideal hand.

But Nemeseus.

"I think it's there."

"...."

"He is dangerous."

Nemeseus was adamant.

This time, he dared to look straight at the emperor, his eyes brightening as if he would definitely persuade him.

It was clearly rude behavior, but the emperor did not reprimand him.

Because it wasn't a disrespectful look.

How can you reprimand someone when they are 'appealing' to you to listen to them?

An impatient voice continued, as if being chased.

"Do you know what he did during the eight years of war?"

"I heard that he showed cruel hands, including chopping up his enemies. Is that the reason?"

"no. That was probably his own way of surviving and a strategy. So it doesn't matter."

A small boy who stood out even more with his white hair and red eyes.

This was the first time that a nobleman had joined the ranks as an ordinary soldier, and since he was under his command, his eyes were drawn to the temple.

The ridiculously weak child was naturally unaccustomed to killing people.

When ordinary people commit their first murder, the aftereffects last for a long time. However, there was no time to come to one's senses on a battlefield that was constantly moving.

That's why even adult men are having a hard time, so what about a child who chooses 'cruelty' as a way to survive?

The mind of a child is much weaker than that of an adult.

A child like that had to make a corpse with his own hands that was painful to even look at with his own eyes.

I had to hold a dagger that seemed heavy in my small hands and feel the feel of it as I stabbed the person.

I had to repeatedly fall into and out of madness.

“That guy...”

He must have gone crazy.

He must have felt that his ability to remain sane was reaching its limits.

While maintaining cruelty and suffering from the overwhelming guilt of being consumed by madness—...you must remain sane.

Do you know what method the child chose in such a situation?

‘Are you... are you okay?’

‘yes? ‘What do you mean?’

‘Uh...’

‘Oh, if you’re injured, it’s okay. ‘It wasn’t that big of an injury.’

‘No, it’s not that, it was in the battle a little while ago...!’

‘General.’

‘....’

‘I don’t know what you’re talking about.’

Nemeseus could not hide his trembling eyes.

“That guy has separated his personality!”

The confused child, clutching his shaking mind with both hands, seemed to have decided something, went into a tent with alcohol and drugs, and stayed there for three days, creating two personalities

.

No, it is ambiguous to even call it a personality. Rather, it would be more correct to call it ‘personality’.

It would be difficult to call something that remembers everything and can switch at will as ‘two personalities’.

The child gave himself two personalities.

A ‘crazy personality’ who has gone crazy with blood and only cares about battle and survival, and a ‘ normal personality’ who only remembers normal battles and his normal self.

“In other words, you have abandoned the guilt you should have been carrying!”

If you tried to mention the things you did when your child was ‘crazy’ to a child who was pretending to have a ‘normal personality’, he would pretend not to know and pretend not to know.

You know it. What did you do?

They are just pretending not to know under the name of 'rationalization'.

Denying and ignoring what he has done.

"What do you think will happen if that guy's spirit breaks down?"

The guilt I had to bear was too much for me, so I abandoned myself in such an extreme way.

That guy's mental strength must be worse than that of a sand castle. It was obvious that if I were to make him face reality, he would completely collapse.

What would happen if you keep belittling a guy like that and his spirit breaks down?

However, the emperor was calm, uncharacteristic of someone who had heard a serious matter with his own ears.

After sitting leisurely with his legs crossed and listening to Nemeseus's words to the end, the first words he spoke were extremely leisurely, as if he were talking about another world.

"What does that mean?"

I uncrossed my legs and leaned my upper body forward.

The emperor looked directly at Nemeseus' face as he got closer and spoke with a cold smile over his expressionless expression.

"Jim knows this too."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 51

51. Salvation Church (1)

“...But how!”

“Isn’t that Deonhardt’s choice? He must have thought about it and made that choice, and even if something happens because of it, he will have to take responsibility.”

A bored voice falls softly, as if it has nothing to do with him. Nemeseus was speechless and could not speak for a moment.

There’s no way it doesn’t matter. If a sword is damaged, the repercussions will also affect the owner who used it.

Even though he knew that the emperor couldn’t know that fact, he couldn’t understand it, so he forced his lips that wouldn’t fall apart and opened them.

“...Your Majesty may have to share that responsibility.”

“It doesn’t matter. Isn’t this what an emperor is supposed to be?”

“....”

“I’m just kidding. It’s worth seeing your expression.”

The emperor made a low sound on his mokuldae. A sound like laughter lingered in the back of my throat.

It's absurd that the author, who calls himself a tyrant, says things that are the standard of a saint, but I never thought he'd show such a blatant expression.

Thinking that he needed to learn how to hide his facial expressions, the emperor slowly came up with an answer to Nemeseus' words.

There is no grand reason.

It's a very simple story.

"I am not so incompetent that I cannot cover up even the mistakes of those I care about."

"...."

"Is this enough of an answer, General?"

Although I cannot be a saint enough to generously cover everyone's mistakes, I can be a saint enough to those I care about.

Giving generosity, money, time, and power that should be equally invested in other useless things to a few people.

Emperor Edoardo had the power and ability to do so, and there was no one who could refute it.

Therefore, unless it is a fairly serious accident such as treason, most accidents can be resolved.

"If the mistake is something Jim can't handle, then Jim's eyesight is wrong."

Even so, nothing will change. It just increases the amount of responsibility.

Additionally, the likelihood of something like that happening will be significantly less.

“There’s no way Jim would mindlessly surround a dangerous person.”

“If you do...”

“There is a leash.”

Cruel Hart.

The Emperor smiled slowly, remembering Deonhardt’s older brother.

[In order to destroy the family, he even claimed to be the companion of a warrior who was not even a member of the Eight Emperors. But why....]

The conversation with Deon Hart, who had just returned from the Demon World and burst into the banquet hall covered in blood, started to get wild the moment Cruel Hart became a hot topic.

Perhaps it was because I had just heard the news of Cruel becoming a hero that I couldn’t control my emotions.

As if the condensed emotions were exploding, the direction of the words changed and the tone of the voice rose.

The voice, which was getting louder as if it was going to spill out at any moment, suddenly died down the moment the emperor made eye contact.

I realized it too late. Who is the person sitting in front of me?

The emperor did not bother to criticize his rudeness.

Because I know how extreme Deonhardt's feelings toward his family are. And how much it benefits you.

Hate killing rage.

From his point of view, they are the ones who pushed a weak child, who was only 14 years old, into the battlefield.

After fighting on the battlefield for eight years, Deon's hatred for his family grew like a snowball, and when he finally stood before the emperor in recognition of his contribution in the war, he refused all rewards and asked for only one thing.

[Please allow me to destroy the family with my own hands.]

There was no reason to refuse.

Although Count Hart is a family that has been loyal to the royal family for generations, that is not a great advantage for him, who ascended to the throne through rebellion. In other words, there is no reason to keep it.

The incredible Count Hart family and the individual Deon Hardt, who can be used as a great sword if done well.

[Good.]

Without hesitation, the emperor sided with the individual.

Of course, it wasn't something I listened to right away. At this point, it would be better to solve other issues at the same time, and if you are going to use it as a sword, wouldn't it be better to refine it a little harder?

[However, I am a little doubtful as to whether it is worth it for me to give up my 'family' and choose you, the 'individual'.] [...What should

I do?]

[It just so happens that the hero is there to deal with the Demon King. He was preparing to leave the empire.]

As a companion of a hero, he came to deal with the devil.

Although the Duke suggested it, it was a bit odd, but it was an excellent way to refine the sword called Deon Hart.

The results were great.

He has recovered the body of a defeated warrior. At this level, even those who opposed him because he did not possess the 'fragments of a hero' would have no choice but to acknowledge him as a 'hero'.

From the emperor's perspective, it seemed like something more should have been added.

however.

Despite the Emperor's position of not wanting Deonhart to be ruined, he stuck to his starting position in exchange for money and land.

[It looks like Count Hart will be very quiet tonight. What do you think?] [

...Thank you for your consideration.]

Since a promise is a promise, the Emperor obediently accepted his request.

Once you have made your decision, hesitation is useless. The emperor secretly prevented unrelated people from coming around Count Hart's mansion that night, and Deon Hart killed everyone in the mansion without being caught.

One thing that was unexpected was that Cruel Hart was not at the mansion that day. Even worse, he came back while Deonhardt was busy with work.

The story might have been different if I had been at the mansion from the beginning or had only come the next morning after everything was over.

However, as fate would have it, Cruel Hart witnessed with his own eyes Deon Hardt murdering his family members and survived.

It was a little different than expected, but in the end it was a good hand to control Deonhardt.

Even so, if the Hart family's extinction incident attracted attention and Cruel Hart, one of the few survivors of the family, was killed, the repercussions would be significant. How many people can stop that?

In the end, in order to kill Cruel Hart, you must not pretend to be with the emperor.

'The reason Duke Illuster trusts Cruel Hart and keeps him by his side is probably similar to this.'

Deon Hart will be Cruel Hart's leash.

Is there anything more funny than this? They are each other's leash.

The emperor held up his hand, suppressing a sigh filled with complex emotions that was about to burst out.

“Please don’t mention anything more about Hany Deon Hart.”

***

Wow, what kind of yard is full of such cute things? Is this a new type of installation art? What if someone steals it?

Or money? Are you trying to brag that our family has this much money? I’m jealous whose house it is.

...Whose house is it? It’s my house!!

“What is that!?”

I’ve never bought anything like that!

Could it be that the knights caused an accident again? We need to get rid of these right away.

I stood up and slammed the desk, intending to run as soon as I could figure out the cause.

A few papers fluttered down, but the sight outside the window was too impactful to pay attention to such things right now, so I didn’t even notice them.

These shiny things are forming a small hill in my yard. How many documents are there now?

Even while I was half in a daze, the calm old man’s voice leisurely lingered in my ears.

“These are given by His Majesty as a reward for catching a spy.”

“It’s not necessary, it’s burdensome. Send it back immediately!”

“If you do that, the Count’s spirit will likely return to where it came from, so I dare to oppose it on behalf of this old man’s loyalty.”

“....”

No matter what I said, it was like that...

Thanks to you, I came to my senses. Yes, I gave it to you, but how would you feel if you rejected it saying you didn’t need it? If you’re a tyrant, it’s not strange no matter what you do, so just keep your mouth shut and accept it.

‘...If you’re going to give a reward, don’t give it like that, but take it to Hart’s territory or back.’

Perhaps the reason he didn’t mention the reward for catching the spy in his conversation with me was because he anticipated my thoughts. Damn, he’s a tyrant and even has a good head.

I felt like my throat was burning due to the fever, so I picked up the teacup on the desk.

‘As expected, it smells good.’

However, I couldn’t get more than a few sips and put it down again. I wonder if smelling this scent makes me want to go to the bathroom.

This is the same tea that the crown prince and princess drank when they had tea time. The crown prince took care of it before leaving the palace.

I couldn't bear to just throw away the prince's gift, so I threw it on the table in my room as soon as I got home, but when Remember the butler found it, he often brought it out with refreshments whenever he was at work.

That wasn't the only thing Remember came up with.

smart. There was a cautious knocking sound. Remember opened the door, took something, came over and put it down on the desk.

What was placed on the tray was none other than a bowl of herbal decoction that looked like it could be used.

"It's time to take your medicine."

"...Do I really have to eat that?"

"It was sent by the palace doctor. If it's good for you, it's good, but it's not bad, so eat it quickly. I've already completed the poison test."

I thought it was just empty words, but the palace doctor really sent the medicine to the count's residence. It's not even just 1-2 weeks. Is this the equivalent of almost a month?

I am grateful, but I don't like writing things...

Of course, my rejection didn't have any effect on Remember.

He grins and holds out a decoction. The behavior is polite, but is it because of the feeling of unspoken pressure?

"I'm full now."

My stomach was full because I drank tea.

“Still, eat it.”

“ .... ”

The decoction was extremely bitter.

As I was frowning, a piece of candy entered my mouth. I was startled and raised my head, and my eyes met with silver-blue eyes smiling gently.

...This butler is real. I am not a child.

‘But the candy is delicious. Does it taste like strawberries?’

I rolled the candy on my tongue and looked out the window again. I still feel like my head hurts just looking at all the shiny things piled up in the yard.

Those are the biggest problems, how should I deal with them?

I tapped the desk with my fingers and opened my mouth in a daze.

“Remember.”

“Yes, Count.”

“I will entrust half of them to Remembert. Use it for the mansion’s budget. The other half will be saved separately.”

“Yes, I understand.”

“Ah, please set some aside. I have a place to use it.”

“How much would you like?”

“Enough to gather information.”

He pulled the string and called the maid.

“Lien “Bring the Sir.”

To summarize, the money set aside went into the hands of Sir Lien, the leader of our Order of Murderous Demons and the only sane person. The purpose was none other than to investigate information about the ‘Church of Salvation’.

Like a conscientious knight, she A few days later, he came with two bundles of documents, one detailing where and how much money was spent, and the other information he had discovered, and now he said,

“The Church of Salvation is a new religion that is expanding its influence mainly in the slums. He was collecting believers by distributing bread and water.”

He was politely reporting the information he had found in front of me.

“Unlike usual pseudo-religions, there is no such thing as asking you to believe in the ‘cultist’ or pay ‘money’. All I can say is to believe in ‘salvation’...”

““Salvation’... It’s too abstract...”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 52

52. Salvation Church (2)

There are more than one suspicious thing.

It would be natural for a pseudo-religion, but the 'Salvation Church' was different from other pseudo-religions that appeared and disappeared countless times.

'It is currently widely known among commoners and is also receiving support from some nobles.'

Things may be a bit better now that a few nobles are sponsoring it, but it must have cost a lot of money to start.

In other words, he started with a level of funds that ordinary people could not easily have.

Since their starting point was a slum, their money usage at the time would have been almost like pouring water into a bottomless pot.

If you roughly calculate it, it's an amount that even a decent noble family wouldn't be able to afford...

'Money is not the goal, and the funder does not want to become the head of a religious cult and be looked up to by people. What on earth is this really?'

Out of frustration, I poured the lukewarm tea left in my teacup down my throat. And I immediately regretted it.

Damn it, I drank tea for no reason. I can't believe I want to go to the bathroom in such a serious situation.

I need to think a little more about the report, but...

'First, go to the bathroom. After that, I thought about it again....'

"Are you sure you want to go there yourself?"

"yes?"

I stopped walking towards the door.

This is some bullshit again.

Unlike me, who was momentarily dazed, Lord Lien looked at me with respect and spoke solemnly. At first glance, I saw her adjusting the sword at her waist.

"It's dangerous to go alone. I will follow you."

"Yes? No...uh...huh?"

...In the end, I was dragged away without even being able to go to the bathroom.

Lord Lien said with bright eyes, 'I respect you.' Shouting, he strides forward, opens the door, and waits, but in that situation, how can he say, 'Please go to the bathroom...'
Because of that, I couldn't take active action and just hoped that a savior would appear before I left the mansion, but in reality, was ruthless.

‘Fuck, my luck is like that.’

It wasn't that I didn't meet anyone. There were maids and servants. I even ran into Remembert on the way down the stairs. But our butler, who was usually so capable, must have not seen my expression as if I was being dragged to the slaughterhouse, so he just said, “He's leaving.” “Are you sure?” Lien simply asked, and when Rien answered that she was going to the slums, he wordlessly gave her two tattered robes and personally sent her off with a calm greeting telling her to go home. It was not a smooth robe or a clean traveler's robe, but a tattered one

. Judging by the tattered robes I gave him, he seemed to have a general idea of what we were going to do. I wonder why a person with such good senses didn't notice my expression. Could it be that he was ignoring me on purpose? “I think you'll have to put on your robes from here on out

.

”

As I walked in a daze, I found myself at the entrance to the slums. Sir Lien, who led me to a nearby alley, held out his shabby robe.

I looked down at it with dark eyes and slowly took it with trembling hands.

‘Are we really going to go on like this?’

It will at least give me time to mentally prepare. Or at least time to go to the bathroom. If I go in like this, I'm going to make a very different mistake, so I bite my lip once and cautiously open my mouth.

"...That . "Can I go somewhere for a while first?"

"Yes? Where..."

"Over there for a moment... It's only a short while, so don't ever follow me."

To prepare my mind, I have to throw away all the water in my body.

I haven't experienced it myself yet, but people are so surprised. I've seen with my own eyes evidence of people saying that when they're scared, they mess with their pants. It was really ugly. I never want to be seen like that, so it's better to be prepared in advance. Even if it's a slum, you wouldn't walk around with shit in your pants.

...But Lord Lien hesitated with an anxious expression, wondering what on earth he was thinking.

"Are you okay?"

"Yes."

I guess he's anxious because this is a slum... ..

Of course it's okay. I'm not some kind of child. Are you worried that I can't go to the bathroom alone? Besides, you're a girl. I followed you so I wouldn't have to worry about something happening. I faced Sir Lien with a stern face. Despite his calm-looking face, his intentions were urgent

. It was going on.

Stop dragging the time and let me go now. Can't you even see this white face? If I pretend, I have to pretend and understand. I was afraid that they would barge in while I was doing my business like this, so I left a nail in my mouth telling me not to follow again. I hurriedly ran to the corner of the alley.

"Now, just a moment...!"

Thinking about the possibility of Lord Lien snooping around, I took a couple more turns and barely managed to do my business, but suddenly the thought of wanting to kill them all came up.

What glory would I have? Why are you going through all this trouble? It's not that you want to own the land, but that you're willing to return a territory!

If that was all it was, I would have given up cleanly, but since Cruel is said to be in charge of this, giving up is not far off.

'Damn it... .'

I adjusted my pants and put on my robe.

Then I went out of the alley and took a turn, and there was someone standing in the middle of the alley where no one was there until I came in. It looks like that person is also trying to sneak in somewhere. The shabby robe in his hand is what catches my eye. It supported my guess, but that person looked somewhat familiar. The man , with black hair...

and just wearing a robe, also turns his head this way, as if checking for the owner of the person he senses. Since I hadn't put on my hood yet, of course I made eye contact with him.

...'Infiltrate somewhere'?

I will correct it. It looks like that person is also trying to infiltrate the Salvation Church. No, I'm sure.

"You—"

He's probably carrying out the same mission as me.

Cruel Hart.

Even though there was a hateful being in front of me, I could not express my unpleasant feelings.

Because I was so surprised by an encounter I wasn't prepared for—

I murmured.

"...!"

"Oh shit... cough"

— Because I ended up vomiting blood.

For some reason, it's been a bit quiet these days, but it explodes like this. shit.

I didn't want to look ugly, so I covered my mouth. I looked at the red liquid that filled my palm and dripped onto the floor, then looked up and checked Cruel.

He was motionless, looking at me and the blood-covered floor directly in front of me.

“....”

“....”

The green eyes that were looking at the floor slowly look up and rest at the corner of my mouth.

I immediately lowered my head. I'm so embarrassed that I can't even raise my head.

He vomited blood just because he was 'surprised' and for no other reason. This itself would be embarrassing, but why would I show myself like this in front of that guy?

If I stay like this, I will only be wasting time, so I quickly push the guy away and try to get out of the alley, but someone with a familiar silhouette slowly appears behind him as if hesitating.

“I'm sorry, Count. I was worried...”

Lord Lien, who checked on me, seemed to trail off, but eventually closed his mouth.

Her eyes go back and forth between me and Cruel standing in front of me.

I wondered absentmindedly as I watched her hand slowly moving towards the sword at her waist, wondering how she was accepting the situation.

‘—First of all, I'm really glad that he didn't come to me while I was running errands.’

***

I covered my mouth with my hand, but I couldn't hide the blood flowing between my fingers.

Looking at the blood on the floor and Deon Hardt's red-stained hands, Knight Commander Lien Reiner secretly regretted it.

'I shouldn't have just sent it.'

Why did he overlook the fact that he was the only one who could protect Count Hart?

When I thought about it, the signs were clear.

In addition to his pale face, trembling hands, cold sweat, and lips clenched tightly as if he was holding back pain, he even acted out of sync with his usual behavior of rushing into an alley as if he was hiding something.

The devil's curse has been activated.

'The article is disqualified.'

I knew that my eyes were not in good condition as they were not for decoration.

So, when he said he would be away for a while, I asked him out of concern.

[Are you sure it's okay?]

[Yes.]

It was a mistake to obediently send him away because I couldn't bear to disobey his firm answer and look on his face that told him not to follow me.

Contrary to popular rumors, Count Hart is a good-natured person who hates worrying others.

Of course, during battle, he showed another cruel side and caused quite a shock... but that was only limited to 'battle'.

Normally he was very reserved and kind.

It's the same just this time. Didn't he have no hesitation in stepping into this dirty place, saying that he would check for himself, saying that if there was insufficient information, he could order someone to investigate again?

Perhaps the reason he tried to hide his condition so much was because he thought that if he showed hemoptysis, they would ask him to go back. He probably didn't want to worry you and wanted to investigate.

How can I not care about this?

'But...'

I rolled my eyes and shifted my gaze to a man standing in front of Count Hart.

Who is it? Due to the location, only the back is visible, so it is impossible to clearly determine who it is, but judging from the Count's expression, it seems that they do not have a friendly relationship.

Could this be an assassin who has been waiting for an opportunity? Are you planning to attack while the Count is weak?

However, it is rare for an assassin to appear in public.

'...Have you already tried it once?'

Even if he is weakened by the curse, the Count is a hero. He would not have easily allowed an attack.

It would be correct to say that the raid failed due to the Count's formidable skills, and a standoff ensued afterwards.

'First, let's subdue the author.'

Neglecting the Count's condition and safety was an unforgivable mistake, but being so shocked that he was unable to do his job was an even bigger sin.

I am a knight. A knight who must protect the Count.

Lien quickly regained his composure and slowly raised his hand to his sword.

Perhaps sensing something suspicious, the person wearing the hood of his robe belatedly turns around to look at me.

The moment Lien felt the gaze beneath the robe on me, she immediately drew her sword and rushed towards the guy.

Cheaeng!!

A bloody sound rang out.

***

Cruel crossed his swords and silently scanned the opponent's face. Even though it was a sudden attack, there was no disturbance.

It's a familiar face. Was he the leader of the knights under Deon?

She swings her sword without hesitation. Kaang! The harsh sound shook my eardrums again.

Since he did not receive the title 'Hero' for free, Cruel skillfully blocked the attack and looked at the two with Deon's terrifying green eyes.

'Is it a mission after all?'

I heard long ago that Deon received the same mission as me.

So the Duke's voice telling me not to lose echoes in my head again. At the same time, the missions also increased.

I knew it in my head, but I never dreamed that we would meet already. I was so surprised when I made eye contact with him.

It never happened that I passed by without recognizing it.

Pale skin and red eyes are not very common. Isn't it funny that when such clear evidence is revealed, they don't even notice that they are wearing only a flimsy robe?

I was taken aback by the unexpected encounter, but my thoughts were short-lived. Deon, unable to contain his excitement, vomited blood.

—Did it come about because of an innate physical condition or because of the devil's curse?

My younger brother was weak from birth. If a curse had been added to his body, how much longer would he have left to live?

I'm not sure, but it won't be that long.

"...."

Cruel thought as he looked at the blood on the corner of Deon's mouth with an extremely calm expression.

'He shouldn't be participating in this mission.'

Even if there are other things, this must be prevented.

Was one arm not enough?

Cruel, who was wondering whether he should submit another request, showed no signs of doubting that Deon had been 'cursed'.

Because he clearly saw that was the case.

A black brand with a strange pattern engraved on the border between Deon's collarbone and neck.

As those who know about the existence of the stigma usually think, Cruel also thought that it was damaging Deon's physical condition and lifespan.

'So only until the little remaining life span comes to an end.'

All you have to do is hold on until then.

While repeating that, Cruel looked at Deon.

The green eyes, which did not feel lifeless, were sunken and focused only on one person.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 53

53. Salvation Church (3)

Bloody sword strikes take place. No, Lord Lien was pushing it unilaterally.

However, that did not mean that Cruel was at a disadvantage. He seemed to be lost in other thoughts and was leisurely blocking the attack. He even glanced at me occasionally.

So, how did Sir Lien, who always took pride in his title as a knight, feel?

Her eyes rolled back as she was faced with a situation for the first time in her life where she was openly ignored.

“You...! You!!”

“Now wait a minute...!”

If we continue to fight like this, Lord Lien is in danger. I couldn't let her die, so I quickly took a step forward.

I don't want to admit it, but my opponent is the hero Cruel. I knew very well that the title of hero he received was not obtained through rock-paper-scissors.

Because I have seen his swordsmanship since I was young.

“Please step aside, Lord Lien.”

“Count...! But!”

“It’s an order.”

If the disadvantaged party had been Cruel and not Lord Lien, I wouldn’t have come forward.

Sir Lien, who had a blank expression for a moment, perhaps shocked by my rare mention of an order, bit his lip and stepped back.

I was a little worried about her messed up mood, but there was something else I had to worry about first, so I kept my eyes straight ahead for now.

I made eye contact with Cruel, who was silently sheathing his sword. As usual, just as I was about to speak first, he broke my expectations and opened his mouth before me.

“Are you trying to infiltrate the Church of Salvation?”

“....”

The content was of a very unpleasant kind.

Out of embarrassment, I reflexively closed my mouth. As soon as he realized this, he tried to part his lips as if nothing had happened, but there was no way Cruel would miss that opportunity.

A voice filled with confidence fell.

“You’re trying to infiltrate.”

“...under.”

So what should I do? Since you're going undercover too, are you asking me to come with you?

Of course, they won't accept it.

I forcefully raised the corners of my mouth. He's probably looking into my eyes, not smiling at all.

"I don't think it's any of your concern."

"Don't go."

"...."

What.

I don't know how to react when a fastball is thrown straight at me like this.

Of course, aside from being speechless, I have no intention of obediently following his words. In the first place, who would follow the words of an 'enemy' who is running with the same goal?

'...Yes, I was given the same mission.'

When I think about that, my head goes cold. The embarrassing feeling disappeared and my stiff tongue loosened.

I immediately smiled broadly. A cool voice that did not match the expression flowed from between the lips.

"Whether I go or not, that's my decision."

"...."

“Isn’t the situation too bad to say you care about it now? — Hyung.”

“...!”

Cruel’s body flinched. His conscience may have been pricked, or he may have been struck by a dead end, or he may have been taken aback by a familiar title.

Well, it doesn’t matter either way. He might be like that, but I don’t attach much meaning to those words.

I turned around without delay. I could keep up this momentum and push further, but it’s too much of a waste of time to stay here with that guy any longer.

“So there’s no need to worry about me. I’m not happy at all.”

“....”

“If you understand, I’ll just go. Brother.”

Sir Lien, who had been looking back and forth between me and Cruel with his eyes wide open ever since he heard the title ‘Brother’, urged me to head out of the alley.

I am me, but Lord Lien is also Lord Lien. So you’re saying he’s a typical knight?

‘This isn’t the first time I’ve seen Cruel do this. ‘I guess it’s time to get used to it.’

Or were you so concerned that you didn’t recognize Cruel and crossed swords with him? Since he was wearing a robe, it was natural that he wouldn’t be recognized.

As I quickly turned my attention elsewhere and started walking, I heard a soft voice behind me.

“hair.”

Stop.

“It would be a good idea to at least paint it with mud.”

Because you can’t hide your eyes.

Cruel closed his mouth after saying those words. I pretended not to hear anything and left the alley.

Of course, my mind was complicated.

‘What is this guy? Why are you making such a fuss about giving bad advice?’

Of course, the advice itself is correct. However, I feel bad about accepting it...

....

“Lord Lien, is this okay?”

“Yeah, it doesn’t look like gray hair at all.”

“But why are you so far away...?”

“It’s my mood.”

“....”

Gray? No brown? Anyway, I awkwardly smoothed my hair, which was a color that could never be seen as white.

As the dirt fell down his shoulders, Sir Lien, who was moving away from me at a high speed, blinked at the corners of his eyes.

...Why do I feel a little bad?

“Lord Lien, I will infiltrate the Salvation Church.”

“Yes I know.”

“I’m sure they won’t just let me in there.”

“...!”

It was only for a moment, but a frustrated expression appeared on his face.

A person who has always been blunt and has no change in expression makes an expression like that, so this is refreshing in its own way.

I slightly raised the corners of my mouth and gestured towards her with a pleasant feeling.

“Come here. I will do my best to help you disguise yourself.”

Kwasik.

“...Now that I think about it, it wouldn’t be a bad idea for me to go in alone. Sir Lien should just wait outside...” ”

No...no. I promised you a little while ago that I wouldn’t leave the Count alone. As a knight, I keep that promise. “It is something that cannot be violated.”

“I’m okay...”

“I’m not okay.”

The facial expression isn't right. It looks like it's going to cut down someone at any moment.

I forgot about it for a while. Lord Rien is also a strong knight who could kill me in one fell swoop if he wanted to.

As soon as I realized that fact, the corners of my mouth that had been slightly raised twitched awkwardly.

I'm not going to die like this, right?

That too to the escorts.

Feeling that his life was in danger, I desperately tried to dissuade him, so Lord Lien decided to just lightly stain his face.

Of course, I really didn't want to do that, so I disguised myself with trembling hands... Well, it's still better than having both my head and face covered in mud, isn't it?

And now, at the entrance to the alley where the entrance to Salvation Church is, I pulled the hood over my head tightly once more and said solemnly.

"Then let's go."

"yes."

"...."

"...."

...Do you think you'll be kicked out right away if you go in with that look on your face?

His face has always been grim, and in that state, it seems like no matter what he does, he'll be caught right away. Was the mud painting that terrible?

“Lord Lien.”

“Yes, Count.”

“Why do you look like that?”

“it’s nothing.”

It’s nothing.

I swallowed the sarcasm that was about to come out and let out a small sigh. Meanwhile, she flinched slightly, probably because she heard the sound with her excellent hearing.

I was thinking for a moment about how to relieve this atmosphere, but perhaps sensing this as an unspoken pressure, Sir Lien lowered his head and suddenly spoke. Her expression was distorted in pain.

“sorry.”

“hmm?”

I didn’t mean to scold you. No, I’m not even sure she’s apologizing for the reasons I think in the first place.

Unstable. Whether in the demon world or the empire, whenever people around me reacted like that, a bad conclusion was always drawn.

So I reflexively furrowed my brows, and she hastily added, as if she was somehow being chased.

“Next time I will never leave you alone.”

“...Uh...”

I understand what caused that expression. But...

‘Then what about my private life?’

How do you solve your errands? Is this okay for me to give up my privacy for the sake of safety?

As expected, my hunch was right. When I heard that unexpected apology, I should have changed the topic somehow.

After thinking about how to reject her burdensome loyalty, the conclusion I came to was simple.

“...Thank you.”

Let’s agree for now and bring someone else with us the next time we go out.

“Then let’s go.”

I was worried that she might ask more questions about this, so I started to move quickly after stopping for a moment.

As if feeling a little better, I feel a light figure following me from behind.

Still, I looked back at her just in case and was at a loss for words for a moment.

“...Hide the sword.”

“Ah,” I

quietly touched my forehead as I saw Sir Lien’s unusually embarrassed expression.

I've felt this before, but this person doesn't seem to have much interest in anything other than 'knights' and 'swords'.

Anyway, isn't this a bit harsh?

Why does a person who has to play a 'poor person who came after hearing rumors about the Church of Salvation' wear a sword so openly?

"...Just bury it in the ground nearby. I'll go in first."

"I'm sorry. It's dangerous."

A restless appearance. It's shameless to ask them to wait because it's their mistake, but they're worried about just letting it go, so it's clearly visible that they can't do this or that.

It would be even more difficult since I had promised just a moment ago that I would not leave him alone.

Normally, I would have hidden my sword and waited for him to come, but unfortunately, I was quite anxious right now.

'We have to deal with it faster than Cruel.'

It's absolutely impossible to be behind him, and if you happen to run into him inside on the way, it's absolutely terrible.

So there is only one way. Doing it faster than that guy.

"Hide it as quickly as possible and come back. Then I'll leave."

"Ah...! One hundred times...!"

The voice that came out in a hurry suddenly fades away.

Tsk tsk, the place is a different place, so you can't even call me by my name properly. It would be difficult since I didn't decide on a separate pseudonym or title.

Well, it's a problem for her, but it's a good thing for me. Thanks to you, I didn't get caught and wasted time, so I came right away.

'Is it okay if I talk to that woman?'

There, at what appears to be the entrance to Salvation Bridge, there is a woman standing. I pretended not to notice the desperate, wordless cries coming from behind me and took a curious step forward....

Leak.

Uddangtangtang!!

"Gwaaak! Are you okay?"

"...."

"How long have you been starving? Are you having a hard time? Would you like to get up first?"

I fell down and was silent for a moment without raising my head. A woman's voice is heard directly above.

Shit. Did you come this far?

It doesn't hurt, but I feel embarrassed. Are you so embarrassed that you don't even feel the pain?

As I slowly turned my gaze while lying down, I saw Sir Lien admiring me from behind.

'Why are you admiring me?'

He even turns around without hesitation, leaving behind an uncomfortable expression... Are you leaving? Are you really going? Why am I so anxious? It's not like you're doing something wrong, right?

I feel like I want to stay like this forever, but is that possible? Anyway, I had to give an answer to enter the Salvation Church, so I opened my mouth with difficulty.

"Uh... Keluk!"

"Phi pipipipiga!!"

I roughly wiped the corner of my mouth with the back of my hand.

As expected, I was so embarrassed that I couldn't even feel the pain. I can't believe I got so upset after just falling and rolling a few times.

First, I need to reassure the woman in front of me. As much as they think of me as a poor person, they must also be considering infectious diseases. If this continues, you may be banned from going inside at all.

"Oh, this is... it's a chronic disease I've had since birth... I'm fine. It's not contagious..." "

Ah... let's go inside first. There's a place to rest inside."

"Before that..."

It would be better to allay any doubts in advance.

"I heard... that you can get bread and water if you come here."

"Oh yes! Of course!"

“You’re not going to get anything in return...?”

“Yes, so please feel free to come in.”

The woman smiles brightly, as if to reassure her.

Wow, does that make you more anxious? I don’t think I need to act this out separately. My psychology right now is probably that of the poor.

I hesitantly followed the woman without hiding my anxiety and doubts.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 54

54. Salvation Church (4)

‘As expected, it is amazing.’

Crack.

Lien, who had buried his sword, was inwardly impressed as he touched the dug-up ground around him with his hands. She was thinking of Deon when he was infiltrating the Salvation Church.

He even uses his body to infiltrate!

He fell and swept the floor until he reached the woman. Anyone could see that he looked like a poor person who had starved for several days and whose legs were weak.

I didn't see him go inside, but he must have gone in. Because there was no reason to doubt it.

The problem is when the robe is lifted from the inside...

‘The Count will take care of that.’

He's actually a count. I guess you are prepared for that.

Lien, who had overlooked an important issue due to his extreme faith in Deon, picked up a small rock nearby and placed it on top of where the sword was buried.

With this, you won't have to worry about losing your sword.

Now, all you have to do is go inside Salvation Church and meet the Count...

"Oh, I'm sorry. It's difficult to receive any more new believers today..."

"...Yes?"

"I guess you want bread and water, right? I'll give it to you here, so can you come back later? I'm really sorry."

"...."

It's intentional. It's clear they didn't let it in on purpose.

Lien suddenly took the bread and water and looked blankly at the woman in front of him.

The woman with an apologetic expression is clearly the woman who was standing in front of the Count when he fell.

But why is the treatment between me and the Count different? Did you notice something? Or discrimination? Well, the Count was handsome... or did he wear a robe?

Although she didn't understand, Lien had no choice but to walk away because if she just stood here, she might arouse suspicion.

'I'll have to wait nearby.'

When the Count comes out, I will apologize for my incompetence in infiltrating properly.

***

‘Did you think I’d let you in?’

Come and visit once in a lifetime. See if I let you in.

Saerin, the face of the Salvation Church and the actual director, looked at Lien’s back as he trudged away with a bright smile on his face.

There was a reason why she let the man from before come in and sent the woman back.

‘Because that woman learned the sword.’

The gait is that of someone who has learned the sword. A disciplined, powerful and overly regular gait.

Even if we assume that he is a knight who fell into poverty and became a poor person, this does not make sense.

There is no way that a desperately poor person who has starved for days on end could walk with such strength.

‘On the other hand, the man I sent in a little while ago had a normal gait that is commonly seen.’

I even lost strength in my legs and fell.

When I got up, the movement of one arm was unnatural. There’s probably something wrong with his arm.

‘Plus the blood.’

It was the kind of thing that couldn’t come out through acting.

It is inappropriate to use such a person as a spy.

In order to steal important information, you need to be skilled enough to steal ledgers. Is it possible for a person who has a chronic illness that causes him to vomit blood, can't use one arm properly, and has no leg strength due to starvation for a long time to go into the center and steal ledgers?

So the probability that the man is a spy is close to 0.

'At this point, we need to add one more believer.'

Saerin, who had no way of knowing that the man she had sent in, Deon Hardt, had no formal swordsmanship since he had learned the sword on his own while rolling on the battlefield, went inside the building to see him again without any doubt.

***

"Here, have some tea."

"Oh, thank you."

I reached out my hand and took the tea cup held out. Of course, I didn't drink it without any doubt. I knew what was inside this.

As I quietly and naturally smelled it, the woman smiled brightly, wondering how she had noticed it.

"It's just a common, cheap tea. It doesn't contain anything, so don't worry and drink it."

"...yes."

It definitely doesn't smell like any medicine... but I don't know. From that woman's point of view, she would have nothing to gain by killing me, who is just a poor person.

I carefully put the tea in my mouth and swallowed it. Warm energy enters and spreads throughout the body, relieving tension.

If it were winter now, it would have been twice as effective, but it's a bit disappointing. Tea is best drunk in winter.

"But aren't you frustrated?"

"...ah."

I reflexively adjusted the hood of my robe. I almost fell backwards, but I managed to stop it.

Is it because of my mood? At first glance, the woman's eyes seemed to sparkle.

No, now is not the time to worry about that.

'What should I answer?'

If you take off your robe, there is a risk of your identity being discovered. Fortunately, my face is not yet widely known due to my infrequent presence in social circles, but my red eyes are also my symbol...

What should I say?

"...It's okay. It's ugly..."

"Huh? If that's the reason, you can feel free to take it off. No one here will make a fuss about your appearance."

"ah...!"

It was only for a moment that the strong hood that covered his face was removed.

I hastily fixed my gaze downward. I wanted to cover my face with my hands or lower my head, but objectively speaking, that was too much of an excessive reaction, so this was the best I could do.

...Damn it.

Even though I could clearly see the woman's hand reaching out in this direction, I couldn't resist it.

If you refuse, they will definitely be suspicious.

The robe comes off, revealing a dull-colored head that has been painted with dirt just in case.

A woman's soft voice fell overhead.

"It's okay, raise your head."

"...."

After hesitating for a moment, a beautiful hand reached out without delay. Both cheeks were gently cupped and the head was raised.

My red eyes met the woman's eyes that were disguised as kindness.

And at the same time, the suspicion in the woman's eyes was clearly reflected on her retina.

"Your eyes... are red?"

"...Um..."

Even though I was prepared, I was speechless because I could clearly see the suspicion.

My mind feels completely blank and no thoughts come to mind.

If things continue like this, we will meet the worst possible ending.

‘Wake!’

You shouldn’t lose your mind here. I quickly rolled my eyes.

As if it is true that the number has increased a lot recently, you can see the back of the sentry guarding the entrance. Inside, several men carrying weapons were standing guard.

‘...I should have just waited for Lord Lien.’

If I had her at a time like this, I would have felt reassured.

You can’t even dream of escaping, and the only thing you can freely tease in this situation is your mouth. So you have to say it.

‘What?’

What should I say to erase the doubts that have already begun to arise?

‘think.’

When that woman urged me to take off my hood, what did I say and refuse?

The Maginot Line of time to give a natural answer is approaching. If the silence lasts longer than this, they will probably get suspicious.

time goes by. The moment the doubt in the woman's eyes gradually turned into confidence, I opened my mouth.

He bowed his head slowly, without any sign of urgency, but rather with a hint of hesitation, as if hiding his eyes.

"...As expected..."

"...."

"It's ugly, isn't it...?"

"...."

There was a short silence.

Did it work? I can't tell because I can't see their facial expressions because they have their heads down.

Just waiting like this might seem like a good result, but looking at the situation, I think it would be better to add a few more words.

Silence is evidence that you are shaking.

It would be much better to tip the scales clearly rather than vaguely.

"I thought you would hate it as expected..."

He opened his mouth with misery, sadness, resignation, and resentment.

Acting wasn't difficult. Although it was only half-hearted, it clearly contained sincerity.

"Who would like these eyes that even abandoned their family?"

“Oh no! It’s not ugly at all!”

done!

An urgent yet kind voice continued.

“You know Deonhardt? Deonhardt, the hero of the Empire! He also has red eyes. Just like you.”

“Deonhardt... you mean?”

“Yes! Of course, there are many infamous people like vampires and murderers...!”

“....”

I shouldn’t have said that. I felt a little hurt.

Well, I’m glad that my suspicions seem to have been put aside.

The woman also closed her mouth for a moment, perhaps thinking that her last words were a mistake, and then quickly changed her stance.

“Do you know what this place does?”

I know, but I don’t know the details. That’s why I came here.

Putting aside the fact that it wasn’t entirely my will, I shook my head.

“No. I just heard that if you come here, they will give you something to eat...”

“Aha, many people come here thinking that. That is the norm, so don’t pay too much attention.”

I didn't notice. It seemed to the woman that she had her head down for fear of remembering my face.

A woman with a benevolent smile gently opens her mouth as if to explain. I also pretended not to do that and listened closely and focused on what she was going to say.

'Yes, this is how they would attract people and turn them into believers. How well would you have been able to speak so well that you would have increased your income like that?'

So, try persuading me at least once.

"This is the Salvation Church."

"Salvation Church...?"

"It is a religious organization created to save those suffering under the reign of the tyrant Edoardo."

oh my god.

Respected Emperor, I said nothing. I just listened. No, I didn't listen. Actually, I have trouble hearing.

So please save me.

Is he crazy? Why do you hesitate to make such dangerous remarks? What if someone hears it?

'Manage your facial expressions Manage your facial expressions!'

I gathered my collapsing expression.

Now I am a poor person who knows nothing. They are poor people who are easily swayed by a few words. So how should I react?

“So, bread...”

“Yes, it is because of the emperor that you all live so hard. If the emperor had ruled properly, would you be living like this?”

“okay.”

Your Majesty, the emperor whom I cannot help but respect and respect! I didn't say anything. It's just another me speaking arbitrarily. I don't know!

‘...But if it were the emperor, he might kill you, saying it's not right for you to flaunt it with the same mouth and body...’

But there's nothing you can do about it. I can't even shout here to stop insulting His Majesty.

And why does this woman keep throwing bombs? Isn't life a waste?

Or maybe you have discovered my identity? So, let's die together...?

It's scarier because it doesn't make sense. But looking at the woman's expression, I don't think that's the case and it seems like the goal was really to incite...

I sighed.

‘The argument is flimsy. It's so clumsy that it's almost ridiculous...’

The reason the poor exist is because the emperor can't rule. Relieving the poor is something that no ruler throughout history has been able to accomplish.

If I fall like this, I will blame the emperor.

“The reason you fell and got hurt was because the emperor didn’t properly pave the road...”

Was it true?

He buried his face in his hands to hide his expression. A faint sigh flowed out.

This is an absolutely absurd claim. But it will be different for the poor.

What they need is not something like whether it is true or not, but a place to vent their resentment and anger about the disadvantages they have suffered because they are poor.

To put it simply, the woman in front of me threw a desirable prey in front of those who needed something to complain about and dragged them in.

Below is a group called ‘Salvation Church’.

Meanwhile, the woman’s explanation did not stop.

“You may think it is a pseudo-religion, but Salvation Church is different from general pseudo-religions. We don’t want money and we just believe in ‘salvation’ and nothing else.”

“...If I believe, will I really be saved?”

“Yes, of course.”

“who?”

In the end, all questions revolve around one thing.

‘who?’

Who will save me?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 55

55. Salvation Church (5)

“That is....”

“....”

“You will know when you become a devout believer.”

Steam is leaking out. I already felt exhausted.

Doesn't that mean that in order to get information, you have to keep looking here?

I was suddenly dragged in and infiltrated, and it turned out to be a long-term battle. Rotten.

As I sat there speechless and speechless, the woman gently smiled and stood up.

“Too much time has passed. I'm busy with work, so I'll have to go now.”

“Ah...”

“If you tell the guards at the exit, they will give you food right away, so don't worry. For now, feel free to go on a field trip today.”

...‘First of all, what about today?’

“There are people guarding places where entry is prohibited, so you just don’t have to go to those places.”

After saying those words, the woman turned around without any hesitation.

Only when the woman’s figure was no longer visible did I drink the cooled tea in one go and lean back comfortably in the chair. My body, relieved of its tension, became limp belatedly.

‘That woman is quite unlucky.’

I was confident that I would come again—

of course, I thought I was a poor person, so it was natural. It’s a place that gives out free bread and water, and if you’ve never been there before, you might not know it, but once you’ve been there, it’s natural to come back again.

‘...Let’s take a look inside first.’

For a moment, I wondered where Lord Lien was and what he was doing and why he hadn’t come in yet, but that was only for a moment.

she is a knight A knight who controls crazy dogs named murderers. It would be a luxury in itself to worry about her like that.

Even if you worry, you should worry about me.

With that, I threw away my thoughts about her and began to slowly walk around the inside of the building.

There was nothing special. Even the guards look exactly like an ordinary temple and would fit the bill of a Holy Knight.

That makes it even more suspicious.

'I can't believe it's clean even though it smells so suspicious. 'It doesn't make sense.'

Should I go into the room where the guard is?

As I was quietly scanning the guarded rooms, someone came into my field of vision.

The happy smile that seemed to have no worries in the world was so foreign that I couldn't help but be drawn to it.

Dwarf physique. Although the material is rough, the clothes are clean in their own way.

The person who crossed the interior without hesitation and headed somewhere, probably having been here once or twice...

'...a girl?'

He looks to be about 12 years old. Could he be a believer here? I guess I'm poor.

Although his complexion is not bad and he is smiling happily, there is a distinctive look of hunger left on his face. It must have been a while since he escaped from starvation.

Additionally, looking at the loaf of bread in her arms, she was half-convinced that it was a poor believer, but the girl seemed to have sensed her gaze and turned to look at her.

Our eyes met and an awkward air settled down.

“...?”

The girl rolls her eyes as if trying to guess her identity.

After checking the face, the girl scanned the face from head to toe and then looked at the face again, straightening her back without realizing it. The girl, after seeing her face scrunched up due to the disguise for a moment, clapped her hands as if she knew something.

“ah!”

“...?”

“You are a new believer!”

“Yes?”

“Nice to meet you! My name is Shiia!”

“Uh, nice to meet you...?”

Why is it so bright? Are you poor? Did I guess wrong?

Anyway, this kid clearly has a crush on me. I just needed a way to get some information, so I’m grateful that you approached me like this.

They held hands like ferns and shook them. Suddenly, a smile blooms on the girl’s face.

“Seeing as I don’t know your face, I guess you’ve been here not long ago. Did you come today or yesterday?”

“Today...”

“Aha, then you must still feel awkward and suspicious about everything. But there’s nothing to worry about. This is a place that really gives food without any conditions.”

The girl continues her explanation, naturally leading me somewhere.

The child’s voice contained only unwavering faith without any doubt.

...Something strange. How can you be so sure?

“We don’t force you to believe in religion. We just give you more food if you believe in it. Are you a poor person? I am also a poor person. You can believe it because a fellow poor person says it after experiencing it first.”

“I see.”

“And... this is the prayer room. People who are just starting to believe for the sake of food pray here.”

“...Does that mean that there is a separate prayer room for devout believers?”

Wow, this is awkward. You should have had a conversation with your child to know this.

The conversation ended a little awkwardly, but fortunately, the child nodded calmly, as if he didn’t feel anything was suspicious.

“Yes. There is a separate prayer room in the basement. There, we listen to the priest’s speech about real salvation. Salvation is real.”

The child’s eyes were hazy as he said that. There I held my breath for a moment.

Is it brainwashing? It's probably brainwashing. To speak with such confidence would be difficult without brainwashing.

...but.

'Strange.'

It is not the cloudy eyes that are uniformly seen among those who have been brainwashed. Rather, the child's eyes were sparkling with hope.

My eyes, which had been blurry for a moment, only relaxed for a moment as I imagined a hopeful future.

'why?'

What did they do?

I looked down at the excitedly chattering child with a complicated expression. My eyes must be showing their confusion right now.

Even if you think about what to leave out, there is no way to know right now, so first you have to find out about the prayer room located in the basement.

He erased his complicated expression and smiled softly. Yes, it's just a clumsy and faint smile, but since I'm a 'poor' who doesn't usually smile anyway, this will be enough.

As expected, the child faced me without the slightest suspicion.

"How do you get into the prayer room?"

"Ah, a 'real prayer room'? I don't know."

"...Huh? You don't know?"

“Yes. I know the entrance, but only the priest knows how to open it.”

Is that so? Well, it would be difficult for anyone to sneak in.

“Then, can you at least tell me the location of the entrance to the prayer room? I’d like to believe in the ‘salvation’ you mentioned, but I’m curious where I will pray if I become a devout believer.”

“Really? Now you too can be saved. That’s great!”

“Okay, so...”

“Um, but the location of the entrance to the prayer room is not allowed. I wanted to tell you, but the priest told me not to do so.”

...Don’t you know everything about this guy? He acts as if he will answer anything you ask, and is secretly ironclad. Are you playing with me now?

Instinct or intuition was speaking. This guy is wrong. No matter how much I ask, he won’t answer.

You have to find out yourself or find someone else and ask.

Without hesitation, I decided to find out for myself.

I don’t have time, but at what point will I find someone as good as this kid? It’s a good thing if you don’t raise suspicion by asking questions for no reason.

First, let’s get rid of this kid who is still making noise next to us.

... As soon as I could think about it, a boy from far away raised his voice in this direction.

“Shiia! What are you doing? I have to go!”

“Oh, Paul! I’m sorry, but I think I have to go.”

“Really? Then there’s nothing we can do. Go ahead.”

I didn’t plan on catching it anyway... but the look in my eyes from a boy named Paul was quite harsh.

Unlike a girl’s, her eyes are full of caution.

It looks like he’s about 16 or 17 years old. Is that why? He had a bigger head than the girl, right?

I felt like I would immediately tell the security guard if I showed even the slightest sign of suspicion, so I tried to make my face look as harmless as possible, but I heard a clear voice again, as if I hadn’t left yet.

“Oh, and you look tired. If you came from far away, it would be easier to stay nearby. It’s hard to go back and forth, right?”

“Okay, thanks for the advice.”

“See you then!”

The child disappears after the boy. He vaguely said, “I told you not to talk to people you’ve never met before.” A pounding sound was heard.

I stared at his back, but the moment the boy glanced back, I quickly turned around.

As I slowly headed towards the entrance, I touched my face just enough to keep the dirt from peeling off. It was an action that came about after thinking about the girl’s comment that she looked tired.

‘Did I look that tired...?’

Well, it’s only natural that I was brought here in the middle of paperwork without even taking a break. Damn my son.

After confidently going through the entrance, I turned around and silently headed to a deserted area around the building.

Of course, I didn’t forget to take some food with me when I left.

If they were brainwashed, they would usually do it by mixing food with medicine, so I received this to confirm.

‘...There’s nothing wrong.’

It’s just plain bread and water. The unexpected result stopped the accident for a moment.

Then... why were you able to gather believers so aggressively? Is there something I don’t know about? Or are you really dragging me into that lame argument? Using ordinary bread and water as bait?

‘....’

My head is blank. I feel like I got hit by something. It felt like my throat was burning, so I lifted the water bottle I had checked and tilted it to my mouth.

But before I could get it down my throat, I asked,

“Who are you?”

“Bwaak! Kwaak-kul-kul-kul-kkul...!”

A cold voice pressed down on my body.

Damn it, I swallowed the wrong water. As I coughed with my head down, I saw a very wet dirt floor in my field of vision. I can't tell the color because it's dirt, but I'm sure it's not blood.

Well, I don't feel any fishy or salty taste in my mouth. Fortunately, it looks like he only spit out water...

'...that's not fortunate!'

Did you get caught? You must have been caught after all?

If you get caught here, you will be in trouble in many ways. No, it's more than difficult, it's dangerous. I roughly wiped my mouth and focused on the sound of footsteps coming from behind.

'3...2...1... now!'

As it was a close situation, the decision was made quickly and the execution was also quick.

Without any warning, I leapt forward without looking back.

"ah...!"

Fortunately, the voice with a look of frustration is getting further and further away, as if he is not chasing me.

I kept running without slowing down, touching the windows of rooms that seemed deserted one by one, in case they caught up with me even if it was too late, and pushed myself into the only open one.

***

An unknown person disappears. Lien looked at the back with a helpless face.

I could chase it if I wanted to, but I didn't have to.

If you make a fuss for no reason, you could endanger not only yourself but also the Count who will be inside.

'But why does the back look so familiar...'

Even the coughing sound is familiar.

Where have you seen this person before? It's my first time coming here. There is no connection with the poor... huh? poor?

Now that I think about it, the Count disguised himself as a poor man and infiltrated.

...oh my god.

Lien's face turned white.

'Why were you there!!'

What on earth was the person who was supposed to be inside doing here?

First of all, I'm glad it looks safe! no no! That's not important now!!

'...Should I chase after you too?'

As if gauging the distance, his narrowed eyes scanned the street and stopped at a place where he seemed to have found something.

Wet soil revealing its presence in the middle of the road.

Due to the nature of the soil, it only appears black no matter what liquid is spilled on it, so it is impossible to determine by color, but it is possible to come up with a few hypotheses considering the surrounding situation and environment.

‘It looks like the liquid was spilled not long ago, so that would mean it has something to do with the Count. Plus, the Count had a bad cough a little while ago...’

Normally, I would have thought about sniffing, but this is a slum.

Not only was there a smell of all sorts of sewage coming from everywhere, but even from the floor, Lien put that method out of her mind.

There was nothing she couldn’t do if she wanted to smell it, but... as a knight from a noble family, there was no way she would touch unknown wet dirt or stick her nose in something that wasn’t even her lord’s order.

That’s why Lien, who came up with the most plausible hypothesis based on all the possibilities based on the circumstances, fluttered his eyebrows.

No way....

“Blood?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 56

56. Salvation Church (6)

That is blood. When the Count coughed, I saw liquid pouring out of his mouth.

The only possibility other than blood is vomit or spit, but it doesn't even make a sound to be called vomit, and there's no color or substance to speak of, and there's no way he would spit that much, so in the end, all that's left is... 'Is it the devil's curse

? Or were you attacked because your identity was discovered?'

The interior doesn't look very chaotic, considering it was attacked. Are you trying to end the incident as quietly as possible, as if nothing happened, to avoid confusion?

The devil's curse. And his identity was discovered.

The former is not good, but the latter is worse. If the two overlap, it's literally the worst.

Without worrying about which one to take, Lien assumed the worst.

'When it comes to protecting your lord, you must always assume the worst.'

So, the Count infiltrated inside and faced the risk of death when his identity was discovered. He barely escaped, but was injured in the process, and to make matters worse, he was also cursed by the devil.

And because they mistook me for a pursuer, they had to run again before I could catch their breath—

‘What did you do when you went back inside?’

Satisfactory evidence may not have been obtained.

‘Oh my god, you can’t give up until you get to that point. As expected, the Count...’

I hastily suppressed the feelings that were about to get stronger. The driver must not lose his composure.

What matters now is how you deal with it.

Should I go pick up the Count, whose condition and situation are both presumed to be bad, or should I wait outside?

‘If you go in, you might get confused.’

In that case, things get more complicated.

But what if the Count was in a truly critical situation? So what if you need some help?

‘...shit.’

I let out a long, silent sigh and covered my head. I was terrible at making choices like this.

That’s why I was extremely satisfied with my job as a knight where I only had to listen to orders, but I never thought I’d face such an ordeal.

Lien, who was at the crossroads of making the choice of a lifetime, was unable to make a decision and was hesitating, when a voice he had heard before was heard in his ears, which had become sensitive due to nervousness.

If you walk a little bit from here and turn around, you will see the entrance to Guwongyo Bridge.

“Call the guard captain right now.”

“Huh? What are you saying all of a sudden...”

“Suddenly?”

“ ....”

It’s a voice I’m sure I’ve heard before, but it’s unfamiliar. Is this not the person I’m thinking of?

no. The voice definitely belongs to the woman who smiled brightly at the entrance and chased him out. It’s just that the atmosphere is so different that you wonder if it’s the same person.

A voice that drips with chills like that.

When the other person also fell silent, as if embarrassed, Ye’s cold voice continued.

“An intruder came in. You didn’t even know it yet.”

“ ...!”

“If your opponent wasn’t a hero, you wouldn’t have any heads left by now. You would have been replaced for the crime of incompetence. Consider yourself lucky.”

hero!

Lien was quietly shocked.

The prediction was correct. The Count's identity was revealed.

What followed was even more shocking.

"For now, I've dealt with him on my own, so don't make a fuss and call the security commander. We need to discuss strengthening security."

I can't believe I handled it! That means the Count...!

There is no reason to think further or hesitate. Lien turned around and started running towards the place where Deon had disappeared.

'Count!!'

He hadn't even remembered that the woman said 'Hero' instead of 'Deonhardt' and that there wasn't just one 'Hero'.

Wow!

Because he disappeared so quickly, one of the knights, not knowing for sure which window Deon went through, noisily jumps over the visible window.

And disaster struck Salvation Church.

***

Of course, the Salvation Church has a prayer room. It is a space where guards are placed to prevent anyone from entering without permission, except at certain times.

Of course, only ordinary people could enter without permission, and the hero Cruel was an exception.

Tuk.

A small but foreign sound spread in a space filled with silence and no one around.

Cruel, a man with black hair falling from the ceiling, looks around in a familiar manner. Inorganic green eyes scanned the interior.

A space exactly like the blueprint. Arrived properly.

Cruel quietly lowered his eyes, remembering the paper in his arms.

I'm sorry Deon, but this game was unfair to begin with. He started with a blueprint, but he did not.

[This is a blueprint. So try to finish this game as safely as possible. Surely you can't do that, right?]

[....]

As safely as possible.

I couldn't understand what those words meant. Cruel just kept his mouth shut and lowered his head.

but.

Can Deon really understand the one-sided outcome of this one-sided game?

It might go wild. They may raise suspicions and try to argue with me in front of the duke. If that happens...

'....'

Cruel, with his mouth set as if remembering something, strides forward. Without hesitation, I headed to the window and then reached for the lock.

The hand that seemed to hesitate for a moment, unable to reach it and hovering around it, soon began to skillfully release it.

“What are you doing?”

“ .... ”

All action stopped for an instant. The hand that touched the lock falls off.

Saerin glanced at the completely dismantled lock and opened her mouth again, looking at Cruel’s back.

My body, which had been tense because I thought it was an unfamiliar intruder, had not yet relaxed, and a stiff voice came out.

“No, you don’t have to answer. It’s obvious even if you don’t hear it. Did you come in through the window? I’m sure all the windows in this building were locked, so I don’t know how you came in... I’m sorry.”

I glared at him with pointed eyes.

If it weren’t for him speaking so calmly because he was serving the same master, he would have called security a long time ago.

“I know your purpose. What you’re after and where it is.”

“ .... ”

“Of course I have no intention of helping you.”

Saerin is smart. As soon as she understood the whole situation, she realized her master's intention.

I didn't bother to ask Cruel to do something that would have been easily resolved if I gave him an order. That would mean they would test him.

She might have been kind to him, but unfortunately, she was wary of Cruel.

"The duke may be planning to test you. I intend to faithfully follow his wishes. He would have handed over the really necessary information to you long ago, so there is no need for me to help."

"...."

"I was being as considerate as I could just by not calling the security right away, so please do your business quietly and leave without making any fuss. Oh, and make sure to lock that window again. I'm the security chief. "Because I need to meet you."

I heard that Deon Hardt received the same mission.

If Cruel, a sturdy warrior type, is allowed to invade, Deonhardt, who has agile movements, will be even less able to catch him.

Considering that the other person was a hero, it was natural, but Saerin left the room quickly because she had no intention of accepting it with her eyes open.

In the quiet space again, Cruel glanced at the door she left through and then turned his back. I didn't even look at the lock on the window.

He jumps up onto the stage, examines the floor carefully, and then quickly pulls back the purple curtain behind him. A pure white wall was revealed.

‘...this prayer room won the most in the design award.’

Is it an illusion?

The duke gave us a blueprint, but it is not complete. It was an omitted blueprint that did not indicate anything like a secret space.

The duke only provided the bare minimum of information and did not provide any support whatsoever.

Well, it may be a ‘test’.

In any case, if it’s not here, you’ll have to go back to the beginning and investigate again. Just when Cruel thought that and turned around to let go of the curtain – murmur.

I heard the window opening.

He quickly caught the sound and hid behind the curtain, and almost at the same time, someone came inside.

***

The place I entered was a fairly sacred-looking room. Should I say room?

Long wooden chairs lined up. There is a podium in front, and even the expensive-looking marble floor and clean white walls make it hard to believe that it is located in a slum.

Additionally, the purple curtains hung mysteriously in harmony with the background, so what I felt was a strange sense of sacredness and mystery.

‘It looks like a prayer room...’

The room is bigger than I thought. I looked around slowly and then headed to the platform that stood out the most.

As I was trying to climb up the chest-high platform with my hands, I found a staircase in the corner and calmly walked up it. My body is precious.

‘It’s not as big of a deal as I thought.’

I quickly lost interest and this time I focused on the strangely hanging curtains.

I understand the hanging around the window, but it’s a bit surprising that the curtains are hanging on the wall behind the podium, which shouldn’t have any windows. Of course, if there were nothing but white walls, it would be boring and wouldn’t be able to create the current mysterious atmosphere, but this is still a slum, right?

It seems a bit out of place to follow the aristocratic way of thinking of putting curtains on bare walls as decoration.

‘Or is there really a window behind this?’

First of all, all you can see through the curtains is the wall.

I gently grabbed the curtain. It was meant to be removed, but unfortunately, my actions did not achieve their purpose.

Because I heard several footsteps outside the door.

What should I do?! Where do I hide?

The damn homing instinct reacted at times like this. In a hurry, I left the curtain right next to me and went down to the platform and hid behind the curtain next to the window I came in through.

It was about 3 seconds later that I realized my foolish behavior.

‘...What did I do, bastard?’

I feel like I want to bang my head against the wall. But then the door flew open and I had to stop and hold my breath.

About twenty people can be seen through the gap in the curtain. There are also familiar faces mixed in between them.

There was clearly a girl named Siia who was talking to me and a boy named Paul who was glaring at me.

Does that mean this is the prayer room?

“Now, let’s pray for salvation today too.”

Each person sits on a wooden chair, and a man in priestly clothing who brought them up goes up to the stage and opens a book.

It was a book with a fairly luxurious shell.

‘What the hell is there in the Bible? ‘It’s very varied.’

The guy starts reading the book. The content, like other Bibles, was so specious and boring that my expectations of what it would contain were meaningless.

‘...and it’s long.’

It doesn't have to be the same. Aren't those people over there who close their eyes and pray actually sleeping, not praying?

...I think that guy over there just dropped his head? Was it really true?

How many times did I yawn silently? My legs began to feel unbearably numb and I thought it was really dangerous, and the priest finally finished speaking.

The guy closed the book and smiled.

"So, another devout believer came in today? Most of you probably already know this, but I'll explain briefly for the newly added believer."

"...?"

"From today, rather than ending with this simple prayer, I will tell you more about true 'salvation'."

Salvation? If it is salvation, it is salvation. How can I explain it in more detail?

I instinctively sensed that it was going to be very important, so I pricked up my ears.

The guy's speech, which seemed like he was going to explain briefly, was longer than I thought. It was even possible to summarize it!

In the end, I want to say, 'Salvation is real.' Even Remember's harsh words disguised as nagging would be shorter than this!

“You will hear the explanation separately in a room that only devout believers can enter.”

Oh, what the priest just said wasn't what he said. These were the words spoken by the woman who opened the door and came in at just the right time, as if by design.

My eyes widened for a moment at the appearance of a few familiar faces.

‘...It's a familiar face. ‘You're the girl from a little while ago, right?’

The woman who took off the hood of my robe.

Even though they broke in like this, no one stopped them, not even the priest who was speaking, so it seems that they are in a higher position than I thought.

As she speeds up her steps and climbs onto the platform, the priest quietly retreats. It was a natural replacement.

A woman places her hand on the wall between the curtains behind the podium.

It was an action so natural that one was not conscious of it, but the result was anything but natural.

‘uh? Huh?Wait a minute, what is that?!’

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 57

57. Salvation Church (7)

I couldn't believe my eyes. Is something like that possible based on common sense?

A wall that has become mushy. It's not a mistake. The woman's hand was halfway into the moving wall, as if it were submerged in water.

'Am I finally crazy?'

That's not it either. The eyes of the believers who saw the new addition were as big as if they would pop out.

I stopped believing my eyes and instead focused on other concerns.

'How is something like that possible? It's probably not magic... witchcraft? 'Is something like that possible with magic?'

It's frustrating because I don't know anything about witchcraft.

In the meantime, the woman kept moving without stopping, as if she didn't want to give herself time to sort out her complicated thoughts.

“Now follow me.”

The woman disappears into the wall. Believers who seemed to have already experienced it before followed without hesitation, while believers who seemed to be newcomers also hesitated and pushed themselves into the wall.

When everyone finally entered, the wall returned to its original hard appearance as if it had never been there before.

Even the priest, who was the only one left who did not enter, left the room as if he had other things to do, and as soon as silence returned, I immediately ran out from behind the curtain and stood in front of the wall where the woman had touched.

‘what? ‘What did you do?’

He clearly touched it and muttered something under his breath.

I couldn’t tell from that alone, so I felt around the wall. After groping it a few times, a subtle touch is felt at the tip of my finger.

It’s so well polished that it’s hard to tell with the naked eye, so you can barely tell its existence if you touch it with your hand—

‘Jewel?’

The puzzlement lasted only for a moment.

This made it clear. This is witchcraft.

What could be other than witchcraft that produces effects similar to magic by paying a valuable price?

A kind of method that humans had discovered to counter the magic of the demons was unfolding before my eyes.

‘Who on earth is behind this level of magic?...’

A hollow laugh came out.

I’m getting more and more anxious about this. Can’t we stop here? I expected that it wasn’t a normal pseudo-religion, but it was still witchcraft.

Even if an ordinary person lives his or her entire life, the number of encounters with a shaman does not exceed 10 times. It is difficult to hire a witch doctor and the cost is enormous, so does it make sense for witchcraft to appear here?

I want to run to the imperial palace right now and grab the emperor and shout that I can’t do it, but...

‘That bastard Cruel...’

Not only will the emperor not allow him to give up easily, but Cruel is the problem more than anything else.

Even if dirt got in my eyes, I wouldn’t be able to see the power of wishing being handed over to that guy. I’d rather just make a fuss here.

‘...Are you really going to do it? I think it would be okay if we got ruined together.’

Since they lost the rearguard, the Salvation Church will rise up again somewhere else, but since their stronghold has been destroyed, there will be no harsh criticism from the emperor.

I was so immersed in thinking about how I would play the game if I were to play the game, that it felt like there was a bit of a commotion outside.

‘If I really mess up... I’ll break this first.’

Apparently, the medium of this spell appears to be the jewel in front of me. If this is broken, the spell will be destroyed.

...Should I break it?

As I was staring at the jewel in thought, a hand suddenly came out from behind the curtain right next to me and grabbed my arm.

That alone was enough to scare and surprise me, but the hand didn’t stop and pulled me in with a strong force.

It all happened in an instant.

After all, it was my arm that had been hit by an arrow, so my mouth opened in pain.

‘Huh?!’

‘Shh—’

Of course, I couldn’t help it because the hand was covering my mouth.

As I looked up in confusion, I made eye contact with calm green eyes looking down at me.

At the same time, I couldn’t overcome the growing feeling of disgust and tried to shake it off roughly, but

I jumped!

I had no choice but to stop moving as a man in priestly clothing opened the door a little roughly and came in.

This is not the priest from a moment ago. The priest, whose face I had never seen before, almost ran towards me with an urgent expression on his face, and pressed down on the jewel that I had been staring at a moment ago and twisted it to the side.

“quickly...!!”

...Why does it look so urgent? No, but why is it so noisy outside?

It vaguely said, ‘Give me my master!’ The sound of such cries is somewhat ominous. Now that I think about it, where is Lord Lien and what is he doing?

After a few seconds, a slight noise seemed to be heard from the jewel, but then a clearer voice came out.

“What happened?”

“An intruder has come in!”

“...I see. How many are there?”

“There is only one!”

“...One person?”

“Yes, I am currently searching the inside of the building looking for someone called ‘Master’!”

Kwaaaang!!

At perfect timing, a loud noise rang out.

The woman, who attracted attention by kicking the already open door again, found a priest standing there in confusion and spoke harshly in a voice that was trying to feign calm.

In her hand was a sword that seemed to have been taken from a guard here.

“Where is my lord?”

“....”

“....”

Out of absurdity and embarrassment, no one could continue speaking and even the voice beyond the jewel was silent, and I looked at the intruder’s face and slowly lowered my eyes.

I felt a persistent gaze from above, but I tried to ignore it.

I don’t know why that person is here, but I don’t know. I don’t even know who that person is. Anyway, I don’t know. It has nothing to do with me.

‘...Shit.’

Why are you coming out there...?

***

Wow!

“What the hell!”

As it was a noisy intrusion, security quickly flocked. Without having time to shake off the glass shards stuck to his body,

Lien took advantage of the fact that they were still dazed and quickly struck the nearby man in the back of the neck, knocking him out and snatching his sword.

It's a little awkward because it's not your own sword, but it's no big problem. Then now we need to know the Count's whereabouts...

Lien adjusted his sword and looked around. As if they sensed that her skills were extraordinary, everyone who caught their gaze stepped back in shock.

"...Where is my lord?"

Since he was only hired and did not swear an oath of loyalty, he should have been called the Count instead of the Master... In this situation, the Count's existence should not be made widely known.

'I'm sorry, Count. I will definitely take this responsibility.'

With a brief apology in my mind, I took a step forward. It was quite nice to see them taking a step back, but I couldn't afford to worry about that right now.

What if something happens to the Count while we're wasting time like this?

"No one knows?"

"...."

"I see. Then...."

"Who is that master?"

If no one knew, I was going to let him go and look for someone else, but an unexpected, urgent cry came back.

Lien stopped and looked back at the person who said those words.

...I know. How should I explain it? Count Deonhardt? hero? Either way, you shouldn't say it because it would reveal your identity.

After falling into deep thought for a moment, she finally said, "...It is my lord."

I had no choice but to give such a foolish answer.

For a moment, I passed by the dazed people who seemed like they couldn't believe my ears and headed for the door.

These guys are lucky. If it weren't for the need for people to spread the word about this commotion, it would have been sprawled out on the floor in a mess by now.

'I've thought about it in my own way, but...' As expected, he doesn't fit in with scheming schemes. So I don't know how to find and rescue the Count efficiently.

So, he is here today to play the so-called 'gangpan'. If a knight goes on a rampage looking for someone called 'lord', one or two people are sure to get stabbed. They will definitely try to make moves, either by reporting to someone or solving the problem themselves, and all you have to do is chase after them.

"Give up your master!"

"Ah, so who is the master?"

"You don't seem to know."

“Actually!!”

Lien began to attack the inside of Salvation Church without hesitation, swinging his sword.

I didn't kill him. There is no need to escalate the situation by murdering the Count even though it is not an order.

For some reason, there were no ordinary people in sight, so she felt free to make a fuss even more. Finally, a suspicious priest caught her eye.

Seeing this mess, he gets scared and runs somewhere.

‘It's him!’

If you follow that guy, you will be able to find out the Count's whereabouts.

Pretending not to notice his actions, I continued to walk around the length and breadth of the building and naturally followed him.

It goes without saying that in the process, countless people lined her path like traces.

The guy who was running around opens a door at the end of a hallway and goes in.

Before following him in, she suddenly thought of an assumption.

‘Maybe this is a trap. If that's the case....’

-Go in stronger to suppress the momentum.

It seems that he has somehow been influenced by the murderous knights, but he has no choice.

Isn't it impossible not to go in anyway? I don't know how many people will be in there. Then there is only one way.

Lien chuckled as he remembered the knights under his command.

'After all, I am the leader of the crazy dogs.'

I'll turn into a crazy dog and run wild.

Kwaaaang!!

She kicks the already opened door and bursts inside, showing off her shining personality.

The first thing was to find a person who appeared to be the priest he was chasing and aim his sword at him, and the second was to figure out how many people were around.

For a moment, Lien was taken aback by the fact that no one was there except the priest in front of her. She pretended to be calm, hid her emotions, and asked lowly.

"Where is my lord?"

***

- Where is my lord?

" ... "

Saerin sighed quietly at the voice coming from beyond the jewel.

They even said to strengthen security, but I never thought they would be so incompetent. I recognized Cruel Hart from the moment I didn't even notice him come in.

It was surprising because we both served the same owner. I was so surprised when we ran into each other inside the building.

Before I could barely control my surprise, what came to mind was the news that Deonhardt had also received the same mission.

I also think that if Cruel's intrusion was not noticed, Deonhart's intrusion would be allowed more easily.

As I thought about it, the red-eyed poor man suddenly came to mind, but when I came out and looked for him again, he had already disappeared, so I didn't think about it any more.

Then it turned out that it was a knight who came looking for his 'lord'.

'Are you sure.'

I knew it the moment I heard his voice. She is the suspicious knight she kicked out at the door.

A 'knight' came in looking for his 'lord'. And coincidentally, a red-eyed poor man visited at a similar time.

Although Saerin is from a commoner background, she is quite intelligent. With such solid clues, understanding the situation was instantaneous.

'It's Deon Hart. I'm sure you said you saw the guards leaving, but did the two cross paths? No, maybe he's still in here.'

Of course, even though I have figured out the situation, I have no intention of taking any action.

There is no way to take action, because the intended purpose of the 'Salvation Church' has already been achieved a long time ago and all that remains is to organize things. I just hope that the person organizing this place is Cruel Hart and not Deon Hart.

I'll just keep watching like this and when I see signs that Deonhardt is trying to get to the core first, I can step in and sort it out myself.

There is no need to leave until then. Since the Duke had said so, Saerin had no intention of doing anything other than acting as usual.

'I've done enough.'

Security was also warned to be strengthened, and important documents were hidden in the deepest places.

The top priority in this situation is not to let that knight know about the existence of the jewel embedded in the wall.

It will definitely break as soon as you notice it.

It's not because the spell is broken. This is because something that should never be discovered may be discovered.

A secret that could threaten everything about the Duke, even his life...

'So it must never be discovered.'

Saerin, being careful that even the sound of her breathing might be heard, mercilessly cut off the connection with the outside world and turned around.

She opened the door to the room and went out, sat down and spoke with a benevolent smile to those looking in her direction as if nothing had happened.

“Excuse me for a moment. Shall we continue?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 58

58. Salvation Church (8)

The priest is astonished that Sir Lien has followed him and cannot say anything and just opens his mouth.

Now I can see that the guy's appearance is a mess, as if he's been chased for quite some time.

His neat attire was a mess, and his sparse hair was scattered like dandelion seeds, sticking to his scalp.

In addition, it looks like it's clinging to the wall with its mouth ready to kiss.

Of course, it was because he was delivering urgent news, but if you didn't know anything, you would look like a crazy person.

As expected, Sir Lien, who looked him up and down as if I wasn't the only one who thought that, sighed as if he was tired and put away the sword he was aiming at.

"I guess I was following the wrong person. I never thought he would have been lacking in some way or that he would have been an inconvenient person."

'Hmm-!'

I almost laughed. I would have really laughed if Cruel hadn't covered his mouth.

I couldn't laugh out loud, my mouth was still covered by the guy's hand, and my shoulders were shaking, and the hand covering my mouth loosened slightly.

While I was contemplating for a moment whether to take advantage of this opportunity to shake him off, Lord Lien's slightly softened voice continued.

"I'm sorry. I don't mean to harm you, so you don't have to be so guarded."

"...."

"I think you got caught up in this place by mistake, but this is not a good place. So... Jiji? Jiji. You can't come. Those clothes are Jiji, so hurry up and change."

'Phew~!!'

help me. I'm dying from laughter.

The priest's mercilessly distorted face is funny, and Lord Lien, who commands 'support' with a serious face, is also funny.

It wouldn't have mattered if I just burst out laughing and walked out from behind the curtain, but considering the possibility that someone was still eavesdropping on the other side of that jewel and the possibility of Lord Lien calling me in a loud voice, I held my breath as much as I could and her voice continued.

"If you're wearing clothes like this, you've probably been here for a long time, so you probably know the way around.

Just go out that door and go back where you came from. Don't come to a place like this again."

"...."

"Do you understand?"

Still, he doesn't say he'll take me outside. It is visible that the priorities of the current situation have been firmly established.

Unlike Sir Lien's happy response, the eyes of the man listening to her were shaking mercilessly as if there had been an earthquake.

That's right. If you prove that you are fine, your life will be in danger, and it will be too shameful and your pride will be hurt to remain silent.

Life and pride. The guy who seemed to be conflicted between the two options for a moment said,

"Oh, okay."

In a way, it was natural that he chose life.

I can't believe I gave such a slurred answer when I had reported clearly just a moment ago. I felt like I was going to burst out laughing again, so I tightened my chin.

The guy, who was shaking with immense shame, runs out the door with tears hanging from his eyes and a red face.

Lord Lien muttered, 'It looks like he was quite scared.' He looked around the room to see if there was another door, and then went out.

Only then did I release the hand covering my mouth, hurriedly step out of the curtain, and bent my knees.

There was a hand in a hurry to help me up, but I knew who the owner of the hand was, so I shook it off with a loud thud and crawled to my seat.

“....”

“...sigh....”

I'm going crazy laughing so hard. I know now is not the time, but what should I do about this funny thing?

After reminding myself over and over again that I was running out of time, I finally calmed down and stood up. We need to check again the gem that had an unexpected function, and catch Lord Lien, who is increasingly moving away from us.

Before examining the jewelry, I glanced outside the open door.

In the distance, Lord Lien can be seen walking straight ahead without hesitation, his head moving back and forth with his flashing eyes like a wild beast looking for food.

‘...He walks so confidently because he knows so much about the roads here.’

Anyone who sees me will think I've lived here for 10 years.

Even the girl I thought was normal was like that. Are you really saying that there are no normal beings around me?

Anyway, if I leave it alone, I don't know what kind of accident will happen again. Recalling the shock and fear I felt when she broke into this place, I hurriedly checked that no one was around and immediately took a step out of the prayer room and called out to her as she walked away.

“Lord Lien.”

“....”

“Lord Lien!”

“Ah...?! Lord Baek! You’re safe!”

Who is Baekju again?

Anyway, I’m surprised that Lord Lien calls me lord. Even if you have no words to refer to me, I never thought you would call me master.

Most knights serve only one lord throughout their lives.

My relationship with Lord Lien is a simple contractual one. I requested a person capable of leading the Order of Murderous Demons, and the Emperor himself arranged for Lord Lien.

Since the emperor had introduced her, employment was natural... In any case, in the end, she and I were simply tied together by money, not a master-servant relationship.

That’s why I also used the honorific language towards her...

Lord Lien must have noticed my reaction, bowed his head and added an explanation as if making an excuse.

“I had no words to refer to you, so I had to call you master. I’m sorry if you felt bad.”

“No...no. It’s okay.”

I was just a little surprised.

“Even though I had to call you, I plan to take responsibility.”

“...yes?”

“Of course, I’m not forcing it. I’ve always respected you, Count... So, I, Leen Reiner, swear here and there.”

Why is he like this? He even stuttered his words. This makes it even more ominous. I don’t know what it is, but just don’t do it. No, can you please not do it?

Lord Lien, who couldn’t possibly know how uncomfortable I was, turned his sword upside down and got down on one knee.

And then he spoke solemnly in a serious tone – he was always serious, but now he was even more serious.

“I, Lien Reiner, acknowledge and serve Deonhardt as my lord and swear to follow him and his orders for the rest of my life, as long as they do not go against the will of His Majesty the Emperor.”

‘Unless he and his orders are contrary to the will of His Majesty the Emperor.’

Knights of an empire that do not have a master basically follow the empire and the emperor. Later, when the lord is decided, it is decided who will take priority between the lord and the emperor, and it seems that Lord Lien decided to give priority to the emperor.

Anyway, this one is really special. Do I really want to do something in this mess that could have been put off for a while and then go back?

Of course, since this was to my benefit, I solemnly answered accordingly.

"I pledge to do my best to ensure that your loyalty is not in vain."

Okay, it was a bit unexpected, but with this, we now have a breeder who will take care of the crazy dogs for the rest of their lives. I was always anxious, but now I feel relieved.

Now it's time to do the work you've been putting off for a while. I turned and went back into the prayer room and ran my fingertips over the jewels on the wall behind the podium.

A presence that can only be felt if you go in very slightly and touch it with your fingertips. I put my hand on it and mumbled something, and the door opened. I pressed it and twisted it to the side, and I was able to make contact.

If so, wouldn't there be other functions as well?

"You'll need a competent shaman."

"...I know. Are you there yet?"

"...."

Cruel obediently disappears at my annoyed words.

No, he didn't obey. He probably went to find the shaman before me. I can't lose either.

"Lord Lien. Let's go back."

"yes."

Sir Lien and I climbed through the window again as we heard the sound of countless footsteps approaching from a distance.

***

While Deon Hardt was struggling at the Salvation Church, Emperor Edoardo Desert, who had given him orders, was taking a late nap.

Originally, I didn't sleep unless it was a set time, but lately, my lack of sleep had become so severe that it was difficult to survive without even a short nap like this.

Sleep deprivation is not new. Edoardo had not been able to sleep properly even for a single moment since he ascended to the position of monarch.

How can he sleep comfortably when the people he killed come and harass him every night?

When he ascended to the throne of kings and during the eight-year war he fought to obtain the title of 'emperor', he killed countless people.

Perhaps, if all of those corpses were gathered in one place, there would be enough to build a mountain.

That's why so many people come to see it as a nightmare. Most people would have gone beyond insomnia and gone crazy right away.

But the emperor held on, and the dead seem to have been offended by him.

"!"

The emperor jumped up from the bed.

He sat there for a while, breathing heavily. After a while, he seemed to have calmed down a bit, sighing deeply and wiping his wet bangs. Cold sweat appears on my palms.

and.

The palm of my hand turned black in an instant—the entire hand was distorted and a strange human face popped out.

An angry face shedding bloody tears. A voice full of malice shouting that it hates and curses you.

[Emperor, I hate you.]

[Death, death, death, why are you the only one alive? I died like this, so why did you!!]

Now this is not a dream, but reality.

How angry would they be to come out and harass us in real life?

As the Emperor watched this in silence, a soft voice was heard, as if he was considerate of the man who had just woken up.

“There’s still time until dinner.”

The emperor just turned his eyes and looked in one direction.

As soon as his eyes met, Crown Prince Elpidius, who was leaning against the wall near the door, slowly stood up and approached.

“I heard that your food intake has decreased a lot recently. I was worried that you were unwell...” “

....”

“You seem to have had a nightmare again.”

Elpidius, standing in front of the emperor, checked his uncle’s condition.

Through the messy hem of the gown, you can see muscles glistening with cold sweat. Likewise, his golden hair, soaked in cold sweat, had a darker saturation than usual, and the subtle shadows under his eyes contained telltale fatigue.

The overall appearance was haggard.

It is dangerous if things continue like this.

There are so many enemies, what should I do if my physical condition deteriorates here?

“As expected, calling a congressman...”

“That’s done.”

“Uncle.”

Elpidius, who had called him to persuade the emperor, paused for a moment.

The focus of the emperor’s eyes is somehow strange.

His gaze was fixed on somewhere beyond himself.

I look back, but all I see is an ordinary room.

When I turned my head again with a puzzled expression, I saw the emperor pressing his eyes with one hand as if he were tired.

“Uncle...?”

“...You’re being annoying.”

...no way.

Elpidius’ expression became even more serious as he remembered the sense of discomfort he had been feeling for some time.

“No way... are you hallucinating now?”

“There are no problems in daily life.”

“Isn’t that the problem? Taeui right now!”

“Elpidius.”

“...Uncle...”

Edoardo, who seemed to have regained his composure and looked the same as usual, looked straight into his nephew’s worried eyes.

I’m sorry Elpidius, but he has no intention of chasing these nightmares and hallucinations.

Rather, if I said I was happy, would I really believe it?

“Recently, as I was processing documents related to the war, I felt tired and lost my mind for a moment. “It’s not a big deal, so don’t worry about it.”

“What the hell...!”

I was worried that I would forget my sins and live in peace, but if you come to me like this, I will never forget them.

Elpidius washes his face dry several times, as if he is trying to calm down. Even then, his emotions seem to be out of control, and his voice starts to fade away. It was only after a little more time had passed that it was difficult to come out.

“...even in this state, the war... Do you really need to do this?”

“I...”

“I am not asking ‘Your Majesty’, but ‘Uncle’.”

“...What answer do you think I will give?”

Elpidius’ face changed . It was painfully distorted.

“Then you’re going to memorize the list again!”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 59

59. Fate or Destiny (1)

During the Eight Years' War, the emperor always memorized the list of fallen soldiers even though he was busy. It would have been enough to simply provide appropriate compensation to the bereaved families, but he took the time he didn't have and pondered over the list of our fallen soldiers and the faces of those I had killed.

"That's because they wouldn't have died if it weren't for their burden."

It was avoidable. The eight-year war was a war fought solely by his choice.

The position of a monarch is a position where the lives of countless people come and go with a single choice.

Edoardo did not want to easily forget those who had become victims of his selfish choices just because they were dead.

If the head of a country does not take responsibility for what happened based on his or her own choices, who on earth will take responsibility?

Responsibility for the consequences of my choices.

This was something that every person had to shoulder before becoming a monarch.

“Whether it’s an enemy or an ally, isn’t Jim a victim of the choices he made?”

Then, it came to me in the form of dreams and hallucinations. It was a happy thing for him.

Elpidius could not easily continue speaking.

In the end, after a long time had passed, there was only one word that came out.

“...You are foolish.”

It was something he should not have dared say to the emperor, but Edoardo just laughed.

Unlike usual, helpless laughter spread throughout the large room.

“I know. This too is a disease.”

The emperor muttered as he faced the people glaring at him from a corner of the room.

“I don’t have an appetite, so I’ll skip dinner tonight. Eat together with Alethea.”

I have to play with them.

After Elpidius, who hesitated, left, the emperor, left alone, engraved the familiar faces of those approaching him in his mind and slowly closed his eyes.

I must have been hallucinating, but even with my eyes closed, I could clearly see them approaching.

No worries. Because they can't harm themselves directly anyway. That's enough.

Even though he vividly felt the hallucinations strangling his throat, he just laughed as if it was ridiculous.

There were too many things he was carrying to just collapse over these things.

***

After that, three damn days passed.

3 days cannot be considered too short. Who knows whether Cruel might have found a capable shaman in the meantime.

Actually, finding a shaman is not that easy. Ninety-nine out of a hundred shamans are from the south, but most of the empire's territory is in the north.

Except for the ninety-nine, the teacher of the remaining one was from the South, so they had to go to the South to find a shaman. However, Remember, a talented butler, did not complain at all in response to my unreasonable request to find the nearest shaman, and managed to pretend that there was a shaman. I found a nearby village and reported it.

Considering this, three days was an incredibly short time, but there was no way to know where Cruel was and what he was doing....

"...But Lord Lien."

"Yes, my lord."

"The back of my head is tingling..."

“It’s my mood.”

It’s okay to go on a hike that isn’t even in the middle of the mountain to find a village halfway up the mountain. It’s hard, but it’s bearable.

But I can’t seem to get this stare stuck in the back of my head.

“I’m fine.”

“I’m not okay. How dare you cause a situation by not even remembering the back of my master’s back. It shouldn’t happen. I’ll keep it in my mind this time and make sure something like this never happens again.”

“I just called you a backstabber...”

“And please speak in peace. The Count is my master.”

You changed your mind just now, right? I looked at her with a sullen expression and then turned my head.

‘Speak comfortably.’

She is noble. Unlike me, who holds only an honorary position, he is a noble from a high-ranking family that can be inherited. Although he is not the head of the family, that does not mean that the power in the family disappears, so despite the master-slave relationship, it was more convenient for me to just show mutual respect.

So, let’s compromise by speaking informally.

“I’m comfortable this way... Oh, there!”

“It’s a village. I heard it was small, but I never thought it would be this small.”

I internally nodded as I could see the size of the village at a glance.

Yes, that level is enough for a shaman to survive. Shamans are usually secluded beings. In that sense, that small town seemed very suitable for such a shaman to live in.

Remembert said he couldn't guarantee whether there would really be a shaman, but...

"Let's go quickly."

"yes."

After all, it is inevitable to have expectations. Lien and I hurried to the village entrance.

and.

"Huh fuck?"

"...."

"Oh, did I say that with my mouth? I'm sorry, brother. I was so shocked that I stopped."

Coincidentally, I ran into Cruel.

Can a coincidence like this even happen? At this point, I'm starting to wonder if he's stalking me.

But before I had such irrational suspicions, there was a solid reason to explain this encounter, so I kept my mouth shut and narrowed my brows.

'You came to find a shaman.'

According to what Remembert said, all the shamans except here, even the closest ones, lived far downstairs, so if he had any information, he would have had no choice but to come here.

But you can't help feeling bad.

So I close my mouth with a frown and glare at him, but for some reason, his eyes get bigger and bigger. It seemed like I could hear the wind blowing from somewhere... No, just for a moment. The sound is getting closer?

—Whoa!

My vision wavered. For a moment, my mind was blown.

***

“Get the hell out of this town!!”

“Oh, calm down, grandma! Look at what they're wearing! They're high-ranking people! Hey, someone stop grandma!”

“Disaster, disaster has come! We must drive them out! No, we must kill them!!”

“Master! Are you okay... Ah, the blood...”

“...Ha.”

Deon, who had been motionless with his head down, raised his head with a short smile.

I laughed.

Lien, who had been staring blankly at the raised corner of his mouth filled with absurdity and absurdity, noticed his eyes and took a step back.

Those are the eyes from back then. Those eyes that were shining with madness during the attack.

“My lord...”

“....”

Deon looked down at his palm after wiping up the area where he had been hit along with his hair.

Blood soaked. Even now, I can feel the warm liquid flowing down my temple, so the wound must be quite serious.

The bright red eyes, which shine even more horrifyingly because of the blood shed, slowly roll towards the old man who is making a fuss. The old man was so strong that even though the men were clinging to him, he did not let go of the stone he was holding.

Deon, who was watching, roughly shook the blood off his hands and walked away.

As drops of blood splattered onto the dirt floor, the gazes inadvertently turned toward him froze, engulfed in anxiety and fear. I couldn't take my eyes off him.

Head messed up with blood. Eyes that shine with a slight spark of madness.

Even so, the faces of those who were weighed down by the strangeness they felt and the thick and damp atmosphere began to quickly grow tired of him when they saw where his steps were heading.

It was the same for Lien.

“Master...!”

“I won’t kill you.”

Anyone can see that it looks like they are trying to kill the old man, but there is no way to doubt the lord’s words. Lien stopped in place at the resolute words.

I tried to ignore the gazes of the villagers asking me to do something.

Since the lord has confirmed it, blocking him any further means doubting him, and it is unacceptable for a knight to doubt the lord.

Besides, she already made two mistakes.

One is the failure to protect the lord. The other thing is that he failed to immediately draw his sword and respond when he was hit by a stone.

What right does she have to stop him like that?

‘I was too focused on the confrontation between my lord and his brother.’

The discord between the superior and his family wastes his nerves in a different way.

As a result, external threats were overlooked.

Who would have thought that there would be someone in this rural village in the mountain valley who would pose a threat to the lord?

‘...No, this is an excuse.’

The previous excuse becomes useless in that the lord was unable to raise his sword the moment he was hit by a stone.

‘Even if the other person was an old man, he should not have hesitated...’

While Lien clenched his fists and broke out in a cold sweat, Deon walked slowly and stood in front of the old man, slightly bending his waist and making eye contact with the old man.

The act of bending down and making eye contact would have been enough to be seen as consideration, but for some reason it only seemed like a mockery, so Lien tilted his head for a moment and soon found out why.

The conversation started in an uneasy manner after the forced open eyes and creepy red eyes stared at each other without moving. In that conversation—

“Hey old man.”

“A disaster!”

“So you call me a disaster?”

Deon grins as he faces the old man glaring at him.

The sight of him laughing and bleeding from his head was so bizarre that everyone held their breath.

Amidst the subtle tension, a playful voice soon followed.

“No. I’m closer to a ‘sin’ than a ‘disaster’. Aren’t I?”

“this person...!!”

***

I looked blankly at the grandmother who was yelling something and making a fuss.

You have a lot of energy for your age. This isn't just making a fuss, it's almost like using evil.

Meanwhile, my head hurts like it's going to break again. Not a metaphor, really.

Now that I think about it, I was hit by a rock. And this old lady shouted. I am a disaster and must be killed.

disaster. It's a disaster...

'Well.'

If I were to be honest, I think it would be closer to a sin than a disaster.

I turned my head and looked for Cruel. He was watching me from a little distance with complicated, incomprehensible eyes.

As our eyes meet, he naturally looks beyond me and approaches me. No, to be more precise, to the grandmother and the men who were making a fuss.

"I came to look for a shaman."

An extremely cold voice came out.

I didn't expect to see him worried about me getting hurt in the first place. I took the handkerchief Lien offered me and put it on my injured head and watched the situation.

"Actually, this old lady is a witch doctor... but she recently became senile..."

"Let go of this, you guys! I have to kill that guy!!"

"...So there are no more shamans in this village?"

“Oh, that’s it...”

Jang Jeong’s eyes roll. Before he knew it, his eyes caught sight of the woman who had approached him, grabbed his grandmother, and was gently persuading her.

“Grandma, calm down.”

“Ran, kill that guy. You saw it too, right?”

“Of course I saw it. But no. My grandmother always said, you shouldn’t treat people about something that hasn’t happened yet.”

Stand tall. The old man’s struggle stopped.

The old man, whose eyes were blank as if he had been hit on the head, muttered absently as if he had just gained enlightenment.

“...Yes, I did.”

The old man turns his head and looks at me.

I was weighed down by the force and tried to back away, but my weak reaction was canceled out by the old man holding my shoulder tightly.

it hurts! I recognized him from the time when the men were in trouble, so he is indeed a very strong old man.

“Oh my.”

“yes yes?”

“You should never hate anything.”

“...yes?”

“never. Do you understand?”

Earlier, he was making a fuss, saying that he should throw stones and kill him, but now he is holding his shoulder and gently coaxing and advising him. Is this what you call senility? You should have seen a senile person to know that.

... No matter how senile it is, an unfair thing is an unfair thing. . There’s Cruel and Lien here, but why only me...!

‘Ahh! This old lady is real!’

That’s where the arrow hit me!!

When there was no answer, the hand holding my shoulder tightened.

After nodding hastily at the grip strength that couldn’t be ignored, the old man’s hand dropped as if he was satisfied.

I massaged my throbbing shoulder and said gruffly: “I came here because I needed a shaman, but this old lady is a shaman?” I ca n’t do anything like this old lady who not only tried to kill me but almost broke my shoulder.

I told you not to hate anything, right? Honestly, there’s no way that’s possible for a human being. Let’s start with the person I am now. ....

“....”

After taking one look at Cruel, he turned his head.

...Anyway, we need another shaman. Do we have no choice but to go down to the south? So how long will it take?

“Let me follow you. “

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 60

60. Fate or Destiny(2)

“...Hmm?”

A young woman's voice. I was surprised when I unconsciously checked the other person.

Aren't there a lot of old shamans? I think she just turned 20.

Well, it was an unusual atmosphere. It wasn't normal to calm down the upset grandmother right away...

“Let me apologize first. I'm sorry for getting you involved in such an unpleasant incident.”

“Ah yes.”

“My name is Ran. I am the granddaughter of the grandmother over there. I also inherit my grandmother's blood, so I am good at magic. I don't know what you need a witch doctor for, but if you take me, you will be able to achieve your goal. I will.”

“He may not be trustworthy because he is young, but in this village, Ran is considered to have greater talent than his grandmother.”

I didn't have any other options anyway, so I was planning on taking him with me even if it wasn't enough, but hearing the villager's additional explanation was fascinating.

I quickly nodded, then noticed Cruel standing to one side and frowned slightly.

"By the way, the man standing over there is not part of the group. If you were thinking of being part of the group with that man..."

"I will follow you, nobleman."

The woman's eyes clearly focus on me, as if to reassure me.

I glanced at Cruel, who was observing the situation without much rebuttal, and slowly raised the corner of my mouth and held out my hand.

"Then please take care of me."

***

It doesn't matter if you miss the Shaman. Aside from proving his usefulness, the duke hopes for his own victory, and to achieve that, he will end up having to find a new shaman or teach him other methods.

Cruel, who seemed to have something he wanted to do by staying here, did not bother to do anything and just watched the only shaman join Deon's group.

Now, it's time to accomplish the objective that was left here instead of going right away.

Cruel, who was staring at the back of Deon and his group as they walked away, turned his gaze. The eyes, which look like they were carved out of rough green stone, embody an old man who was said to be a shaman.

There are many conversations I want to have with her.

Cries to kill the flying stone and disaster. Cruel, thinking that everyone was close to the edge, kept his mouth shut and took long strides toward the old man.

And the moment he spoke to her, who was breathing tiredly, with a rough tone, the old man suddenly raised his head.

Their gazes met and the old man's eyes softened.

"The baby is here too. He must be busy. Do you mind if I stay here like this?"

"...!"

The momentum that seemed to be swirling at any moment faltered for a moment.

An old man with clear, transparent eyes looks up at me, as if his treatment of Deon just moments ago was a lie.

The old man was said to be an excellent shaman, and as if he didn't know that he was Deon's older brother, he gently spread his arms in a virtuous manner. It looks like there are no boundaries at all.

"Come here. Let's hug each other."

"...."

"Come on."

I heard that I am senile, but is this appearance also a part of senility?

Cruel walked towards her awkwardly, as he had no intention of worsening the old man's condition for something that was not a loss.

The old man gently pulled the man's arm as he approached him very slowly and held him in his arms, whispering affectionately to him as if he were his own grandchild.

"You've been through a lot."

"...."

"You've really had a hard time."

Cruel quietly looked down at the old man's face, which was filled with deep regret. Even though he looked like he was about to cry, his eyes were still and motionless.

"Baby."

"...."

"You are the child who will become the beginning of destruction."

"...!"

"Don't worry."

Fearing that she might try to harm me as well, the old man continued to speak in a gentle voice as he held her tightly as he tried to retreat.

"I will never hate you. If I hate you too, there will be no one in this world who loves you."

I didn't mean to do this. I didn't send Deon first for this reason.

I feel like my head is spinning. All kinds of doubts and calculations appear in my head and then disappear again and again.

Why are you being so kind to me? Why is your attitude different from before? Is it really the same person? Was there such a thing as senility?

Is it possible that it was all an act? So what are you hoping for? What on earth is this old man, a former shaman, looking at?

Unable to hold his head in confusion, Cruel just slowly closed his eyes. The eyes, which had become harder than before, looked at the old man.

The old man closed his eyes and smiled, as if he knew what he was talking about even without looking.

“It is said that a living being that is not loved has a short lifespan. Shouldn’t it live a long time?”

—I have to win the implicit bet with my younger brother.

grasp! At that moment, Cruel grabbed the old man’s shoulders and roughly pulled him away. The old man’s body shook helplessly in his grasp.

Even though it was a very unpleasant scene, Cruel could not care less about it. His mind was filled with only one thought.

‘how?’

By what means?

As the old man said, he is in an implicit competition with Deon. No separate words were exchanged. There wasn’t any signal.

This is what happened as we just ran towards our own goals.

A fight to see who can survive longer.

Deon is probably fighting a battle of 'who can kill the other person first?' It may be different if you look at it differently, but to me, it's the same bet.

In any case, when he dies, Deon will have already died.

"Please try to win."

"...."

"If you win, no disaster will occur. Then the beginning of destruction will never come. So, if you feel like you are going to die or want to die, kill that child first and then die."

"...under."

It seems that the saying that I am senile is not entirely wrong. When you see that you can't tell what to say and what not to say.

He was restless and pushed her roughly towards the village young man who was sneaking up on him. She, helplessly pushed away, lands in the arms of a young man.

Cruel looked at her coldly.

'Useless interference using unequal affection as bait...'

I was curious about what was being said and for what purpose, but I just watched it and never thought it would cross the line like this.

‘Should I kill him?’

The right hand hovers near the sword handle. Seeing this, the young man who was supporting the old man gasped slightly, but Cruel and the old man, who were actually involved, remained calm, without the slightest agitation.

There is a short silence.

The green eyes stared into the old man’s deep black eyes for a moment, but eventually Cruel let go of the sword and turned around.

He was not yet broken enough to swing his sword at the senile old man.

***

“You said you had greater talent than your grandmother, right?”

I took a quick look at Ran, who had been silent the entire time we were going down the mountain, and cautiously set off.

It wouldn’t have been a bad idea to go down while maintaining this silence, but there was something that got in the way, so I had no choice.

After all, didn’t he call me a ‘disaster’? We can’t just ignore it since it’s been said that he should be killed.

I still want to live. Dying without knowing anything is a given.

Moreover, I feel uncomfortable because the person who said such a thing is a former shaman...

“You can’t know talent because it’s not something you can see with your eyes.”

“...Then let me change the question. Your grandmother once told you, ‘You saw it too.’”

“If you are talking about your destiny and future, then yes.”

While saying that, Ran looked straight at me.

“I can still see it.”

“....”

I slowly looked at Ran’s face. An expression that doesn’t look like a smile at all, and clear, clear eyes.

It doesn’t seem crazy at all. You mean it wasn’t nonsense?

“You might want to dismiss what I said a moment ago as simply the nonsense of a senile old man, but unfortunately, it was after seeing that future that my grandmother became senile.”

“...There’s no way I’m senile...”

Ran smiled bitterly.

“Knowing too much is not always a good thing.”

“...Did that old lady know me? How was she able to predict my future when I’d never even met her?”

“Actually, what my grandmother predicted was not a nobleman’s future, but the future of a village child.”

She slowly turns her head and looks somewhere.

“I had no choice but to see it because you were deeply involved in that child’s fate.”

As I followed the line of sight, I saw a man looking at me from behind a tree.

‘It’s a surprise! ‘What is that!’

By the looks of it, you’re 19? 20 years old? Anyway, I think I’m about the same age as the woman named Ran next to me, but she’s not my child, so I don’t know why she’s like that. It’s scary.

Even when we make eye contact, they don’t hide.

As a southerner is characterized by dark hair and eyes, the dark eyes look straight in this direction.

I froze for a moment as his gaze scanned this direction as if searching, and belatedly, I stammered and called Lien.

“...Lord Lien....”

“Yes, my lord.”

“Did you know?”

“yes.”

But why didn’t you say anything, man?

“My lord didn’t say anything, so I just left it alone. Is there any problem...?”

“No, no.”

That’s right, he also mistook me for an incredibly strong guy.

I couldn't bear to say anything and just sighed.

Anyway, so you're saying I was in that man's future? I didn't predict my future, I just saw myself in someone else's future, but that's how I reacted...

"...what on earth did I see?"

"You shouldn't talk about fate and the future carelessly. If you say it out loud, it could lead to the worst consequences."

"...."

"But I can tell you this much. To you, hatred is like a forest fire. It may not be a big deal at first, but at some point it grows rapidly and eventually engulfs everything. So, let us
"Your grandmother would have told you not to hate anything."

I feel like things have become more complicated in my head, but I definitely understand one thing.

Fuck, I don't know what it is, but it doesn't mean I'm going to do anything big in the future.

I don't know why I, who strives to live as peacefully as possible, end up in such big trouble, but the culprit behind it is 'hatred'.

The only person I currently hate is Cruel, so maybe he will be the spark.

'As expected, I have to deal with Cruel first.'

Even if it wasn't, it was an eyesore.

Because he became a hero, it's impossible to guarantee whose side the emperor will take, and since he even has the duke on his back, and because of the attention from the social world, we haven't been able to touch him so far, but we have to find a way quickly.

'Assassination is likely to make a lot of noise, and maybe I should put a curse on it...'

Hmm? Not bad? Coincidentally, there is a shaman next to me.

I thought about briefly asking about the curse, but Ran, who I thought was finished, continued talking.

"And that child is close to an explosive that will explode at any moment."

"ah."

Is he still doing that?

I looked at the man who was still looking at me with trembling eyes.

Ran seemed to interpret my gaze as 'interest in men' or similar feelings, and muttered with a faint sigh.

"When an explosive explodes, a fire occurs, and conversely, when a fire occurs, an explosive explodes. Because of that, I hoped to avoid encountering that child as much as possible, but... Destiny isn't something that can be changed that easily."

...What are you talking about?

You've been talking about fate since a while ago, but the tone is a bit off.

Can't we just call it 'a relationship that happens to become properly entangled in the future'?

In the meantime, The man seems to have made up his mind as if he has made up his mind. At the same time, Lien puts his hand on the sheath of his sword and stands guard.

Before she can unsheath her sword, the man stops walking and looks directly at me and slowly opens his mouth. I was nervous on the inside

. Words so absurd as to be shameless came out:

"Please take me with you."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 61

61. Fate or Destiny(3)

“Aaaah!!”

“grandma?!”

“Grandma! Come to your senses!!”

That was the beginning of this damn life.

It was just that I happened to get a fortune telling from an old woman who was a witch doctor. I didn't do anything, but I was so surprised when my grandmother screamed and fell from me.

And coincidentally, after that day, my grandmother became senile. It was also the beginning of misfortune.

Dan still remembers what she said.

‘Did you say he would be a strong supporter or stooge of disaster?’

How could I forget? After that, the villagers just whispered those words and avoided me.

The rumor spread quickly in this small town.

The village people hated Dan, and it did not go away easily even though the grandmother's granddaughter, Ran, tried to stop her. Rather, the negative emotions only grew and 'reluctance' turned into 'rejection'.

I was dumbfounded. I couldn't adapt at all.

Clearly, he couldn't accept the fact that the people he had laughed with and talked to until recently were rejecting him.

But the moment when no one spoke to him all day.

The moment when I had to stay up all night alone during the village festival.

At some point, various types of waste started to appear in front of the house.

Dan had no choice but to admit it.

'Just because of one prophecy.'

How barbaric is this?

A hollow laugh burst out. However, unlike his smile, his eyes were red and bloodshot, as if blood vessels were about to burst.

What am I suppressing right now: tears or anger?

What have I done with them so far?

It is natural for the life of an ostracized person in a small town to become difficult.

It wouldn't be a bad idea to leave this neglected village and head to the city, as he was already old enough, but Dan held on.

‘They said they saw disaster in me.’

He said he would be involved with me in the future.

So, if I just stay here, wouldn’t that ‘disaster’ come this way?

Of course, since our fates are intertwined, we will be able to meet each other even when we go to the city. But isn’t there a high possibility that I won’t notice the ‘disaster’?

Let’s wait here.

Even if you become senile, your skills will not go anywhere, so your grandmother will recognize the ‘disaster’ right away. Looking at their current personality, they will probably try to reject them.

If you stand on the side of disaster then, you will easily gain favor and trust.

The reason Dan wanted to stand on the side of disaster when it was not enough to try not to get involved with it was simple.

‘I’m so confident that I’ll be on the side of disaster, so I have to live up to that expectation.’

Dan is not a pushover who stands still after suffering. Especially if it wasn’t your fault.

Isn’t it so unfair that you are being ostracized even though you haven’t done anything yet?

So he held on and held on, but the moment he saw the face of ‘disaster’, he stopped laughing.

‘Was it you?’

What is fate?

White hair and red eyes. No matter how much time passed, there was no way I could easily forget his impressive appearance.

“It’s ridiculous that you suddenly asked me to take you away. Who is as suspicious as you...”

“Stop.”

The man who interrupted the wary escort slowly approaches. Bright red eyes looked up and down with strange interest.

Dan swallowed dryly and adjusted his posture as the atmosphere was completely different from before. Even though I was very nervous, I never avoided the eyes that seemed to be looking at me.

Even though Dan has only lived in a mountain village, he knows at least the identity of the man in front of him. There was no way I didn’t know.

Deon Hardt, a name that quickly became famous 10 years ago when the Eight Years’ War broke out.

‘During the war, he was famous as a ‘blood-crazed vanguard’ and ‘master of a murderous unit.’

After the war, he was famous as the last comrade of the last warrior and a hero of the empire.

Dan, who thought of his many titles, thought of the most impressive title among them.

‘The Vampire Count.’

Yes, the vampire count.

It is a title worthy of being a disaster.

Dan, who had thought that far, grinned.

A strange look appears in Deon's eyes when he sees him.

He slowly opened his mouth.

***

After walking frantically, I eventually arrived at the mansion.

I raised my head and checked the sky where the sunset was setting.

I think it was roughly around 5 PM. Nothing good will come from procrastinating, so it would be better to get the work done today.

...however.

'Why did you follow me?'

Why is it that the man who was spying on me from afar just a moment ago has naturally joined the group?

"Lord Lien. That man..."

"Are you talking about Dan? I still don't trust him, but... the lord himself said he would take him away, so continuing to oppose would be disloyal as well. I will correct him."

Did you just say it out loud?! No, when?

Listening to what Lien said, it seems like I decided to bring him... but I don't remember at all.

I thought deeply about this and decided to think optimistically rather than complaining.

Even if I don't, I'm stressed because there are so many things to worry about. If something more is added here, it will be a headache.

'There must have been a reason!'

At the very least, they probably brought it because it was useful somewhere.

For example, whether he is good at fighting or knows a lot....

"Because he lacks learning, he knows little, and his fighting skills are not at a level that would satisfy the Master, who is a hero."

"...."

Why on earth did you bring him here? Why did he follow me so quickly? And what is the title 'master'?

I have a lot to say, but nothing I can say out loud. I looked at Dan with a complex expression and then turned my attention to the shaman.

It is absolutely not a departure from reality. I'm just putting it off because I have more important things to do.

"I'm planning to leave right away after completing the simple preparations. Is that okay?"

"There is no problem. Can I just point out one thing?"

"Just say it first."

“Do you intend to take the lives of not only the leaders but also innocent people?”

“What if they are innocent people?”

“This includes those who are simply bewitched by the masterminds.”

I was about to answer without thinking, but I felt something off and paused for a moment.

‘Did I tell you that I was going to Salvation Church...?’

There is no need to prove anything separately. This person is definitely a witch doctor. It couldn’t be otherwise. Ugh, I got goosebumps all over my body.

He nodded, wiping away his wrinkled arms. I don’t want to lie to someone like this, and even if I do, I’ll be found out quickly.

I plan to kill all the ordinary believers of the Salvation Church.

‘Can we really say that those who are possessed by the wrong religion are innocent people?’

A shaman might think so, but I don’t.

People who are crazy about religion literally don’t care about what’s going on. Is it for no reason that they are called fanatics?

If the religion they believe in collapses, they will probably go crazy in various directions.

They may try to kill those who destroyed religion, or they may create a second Salvation Church.

Taking one's own life out of frustration will result in reactions that can be considered tame.

So, it would be better to just kill them all without leaving any unpleasant consequences.

Shaman Ran's expression hardened.

"There's no need to shed a lot of blood already."

The tone is subtle.

I thought they would stop him by saying that innocent citizens of the empire should not be harmed, that life is precious, or that shamans often mention karma, but there is no need to shed a lot of blood 'already'.

Doesn't this mean that more blood will be shed in the future?

"...Do you know something?"

"I cannot answer. But this is also for your benefit. Please weed out those who are simply possessed. If you refuse, I will not provide any help to you."

Judging by the expression on his face, it seems like he wouldn't do it even if a knife was put to his throat.

This way you have no choice.

In the end, I nodded with a deep sigh.

"We need to increase the number of people we can take."

If you want to kill them all, it would be easier to take more people if you want to select and kill people.

“Thank you for accepting my unreasonable request.”

“No, well... By the way, about that...”

As soon as my gaze reached him, a man answered in an extremely polite tone.

“Please feel free to call me Dan.”

“Yes, Dan...”

“Can I follow you too?”

“no.”

The guy’s face falls gloomily. I was dumbfounded again.

Where do you follow me? They say you can’t fight. Didn’t you hear that I was going to kill you?

“For now... just wait at the mansion. I’ll tell Remember, so there shouldn’t be any problem.”

Even if a guy who can’t fight follows along, it’s just a burden.

Of course, it’s not for me to say, but... their status is different, right? I have an escort, but he doesn’t. Even if I give orders to protect this guy, it is natural that there will be limits.

For example, when me and this guy are in danger at the same time.

No matter what reason I brought this guy, I have no intention of letting him go in vain like that.

So no.

“It’s because I’m a burden.”

“....”

I understand.

I closed my mouth. The guy who read the affirmation there lowers his eyes and thinks deeply about something.

Then, as if he had decided on something, he raised his head and faced me directly.

“Can you teach me how to use a sword?”

“...I?”

“I don’t dare bother you Master. Just assign someone to teach you basic sword techniques and I will never disappoint you.”

I’m not asking you to teach me some family’s swordsmanship – I don’t have any family swordsmanship in the first place – but it’s not an unreasonable request.

Do you want to follow me that far?

I’ll let him go this time, but I can feel his determination to catch up next time, so I slightly avert my gaze and nod.

I can’t refuse it because I can even see visions of my eyes burning.

I feel like I’ve got a huge stalker, but it’s probably just my mood.

‘...however.’

Suddenly, I rolled my eyes at the rising doubt and looked at him again.

One question that even I cannot understand.

Why am I so obediently trusting this guy?

Why is this guy so suspicious no matter where you look?

‘We should at least have a one-on-one consultation soon.’

I need to find out for sure what his purpose is.

I’m busy right now, so we can talk as soon as I get back from work.

With that in mind, I briefly introduced Dan to Remember, who was already there to meet me, and said,

“We will be staying together from now on, so please give us a suitable room.”

“All right.”

“And aren’t there a lot of knights hanging out in the mansion right now?”

“There are so many.”

“Good. Tell the appropriate person among them to teach Dan swordsmanship.”

“all right.”

This is roughly enough.

“And Lord Lien.”

“Yes, my lord.”

“How long will it take to recruit at least 10 normal knights from among the idle knights?”

“It won’t take that long. If you enjoy a cup of tea and wait, I will finish it within that time.”

“Then I will wait.”

***

Clink.

I looked down with nervous eyes at the teacup in front of me.

It was that tea again. The one who made me have a hard time going to the bathroom every time I drank it. Damn the car. Was it still there?

How much did the crown prince send? I want to burn it all down, but I can’t treat what the prince gave me carelessly. What I’m more worried about is Dan.

I just told you to post an appropriate article, but it’s true. The only knights hanging out in this mansion are crazy dogs.

‘I’d be lucky if they didn’t at least recommend medicine...’

...No, wait a minute. Do you really think they would recommend it?

Those guys can do it. I jumped up with a thoughtful look on my face. .

“Count Bae?”

“...Go right now and tell Remembert. When the knights teach Dan, they should only teach swordsmanship.”

Don't let them teach useless things.

For example, medicine, medicine, medicine, etc.

Those around me. It is inevitable that there will be more crazy people.

‘There are still enough crazy people.’

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 62

62. Sweeping (1)

"The Count said so?"

"yes."

"Okay, good job. You can leave now."

Remember sat down, hiding his rapidly racing mind with his usual expression.

He was trying to convey through himself something that could have been conveyed directly to the Knights or Lord Lien.

Remember is a capable butler and his master is a hero of the empire. He could immediately tell what Honorary Count Hart was giving instructions.

There's no way someone who went through war would spread the word through such an inefficient method for no reason.

So, his respected master is telling him to watch over a man named Dan.

'There's no way we'd let an outsider stay without any reason.'

This is probably to keep a close watch on suspected enemies.

There is sufficient evidence. At first glance, the saying 'Teach only swordsmanship' may seem like a worry that members of the Murderous Knights might try to drug Dan, but if you dig deeper, it can be interpreted to mean not to teach anything more than swordsmanship.

In other words, it could be an enemy, so be cautious.

'As the hero's butler, I should make sure the owner doesn't waste his attention on places like this.'

That is the duty of a deacon.

The old butler, who looked extremely ordinary, slowly stood up.

***

"So... to be more precise, you want to become stronger in a short period of time? It's not that you want to learn swordsmanship."

"yes."

"Then we're perfect. We're lucky. If it were any other knightly order, it wouldn't have been possible."

General knights learn 'swordsmanship' through systematic training and education. That's why those who pick up the sword late are unable to become as strong as they intended.

Cleter, who was sitting on a tree stump in a corner of the gym, tapped the seat next to me. As he watched Dan obediently approach him, he spoke slowly.

“Do you know about our knights?”

“The Order of the Murderous Knights... A very strong order...”

“They know how to flatter children. Well, we are famous. It is true that we are somewhat strong. Then, most of us are ordinary people who were forcibly conscripted, and even from the poor. What is it?”

“I... didn’t know that.”

“Really? This is a pretty famous story. You might not know it. Anyway, what I want to say is this. We were ordinary people at first who didn’t know anything. And it was too late for adults to learn the sword.”

“That’s right! See that guy over there in particular? He’s 46 years old this year. He was 36 when he was drafted!”

“...Milan....”

Kletter wiped his face. For some reason, this guy said he was quiet, but it looks like he won’t last long.

I thought about kicking him out for a moment, but it was obvious that it would only make it louder and stickier, so I gave up and looked back at Dan. Milan’s words must have impressed him, as he muttered quietly, ‘Forty-six...’

“So...”

“...How.”

“huh?”

“How did you become so strong?”

“Well... actually, there’s no reason.”

Cleter slowly spoke, sitting back and looking into space as if reminiscing about the past. No, I tried to spit it out.

If it weren’t for Milan who intervened first.

“First of all, all the weak ones were defeated during the war.”

“Milan!”

“Why? That’s right.”

At first, they stood at the forefront as meat shields. Although there were words and instructions from Deon Hardt, who was the captain at the time, all those who could not abandon their humanity and did not follow his instructions eventually died.

Of course, Cleter didn’t mean to say this either. I was just trying to make things a little more mellow, but I never thought this bastard would attack a player.

He took a deep breath and started listing the rest of the reasons with an expression of giving up.

“And that’s because after the war, those who had a place to return to left. Don’t you think that number is small for a knighthood that was once a ‘unit’? The only people left here now are those who are not afraid of death.”

People who have a place to return to and something to protect will take care of themselves. They say there was only one way out on the battlefield and that I had no choice but to pretend I wasn’t afraid of death, but there was no need to do that now that everything was over.

Therefore, those who had regrets about life naturally left the Order and returned to their daily lives.

Of course, there were many who returned because they could not overcome the aftereffects of the war, but the reason for the majority of those who returned was simply because they had 'no longer had a place to return to or anything to protect' in the long period of eight years.

Now that I think about it, it's funny.

During the war, I was shaking so much because I was afraid of dying, but now I am shaking like this because I want to die.

'Well, let's say it's different because it was because he said he would never die during the war even if he actually died.'

Cleter's face, which had been laughing while thinking that, hardened for a moment.

I said I was anxious from the beginning, but Milan, this damn bastard—

"And the last reason is because we are wimps."

"...A drug addict?"

"Yes, I may have said it in a grandiose way, but in the end, we are half-penny who cannot properly kill a person without medicine. In that sense..." "

...?"

"Do you want to try one?"

"Milan!!"

There was no need to shout.

Almost at the same time as Cleter raised his voice, he shouted! Milan fell into the distance with a cheerful sound. The person occupying the spot where he originally stood is none other than general manager Lien Reiner.

Instead of saying something, she trudged up to Milan, stepped on his chest, and looked down at him with cold eyes.

Soon, a cold voice flowed from between open lips.

“I never thought you would actually recommend medicine. Are you crazy?”

“Ouch, ouch... I’m sick, leader. I’m dying...! Kahak!”

“It’s the leader, not the leader.”

“Everyone, Captain! Captain!”

“okay.”

“I’m dying!”

Tsk, Lien clicked his tongue and slowly bit his foot. Milan, who was coughing and breathing heavily as if he had been waiting for her, looked at her as if it was too much.

In the meantime, the body that was lying down was steadily being raised to avoid being stepped on again.

At that cute yet scandalous behavior, Lien snorted once and looked away. It wouldn’t be a bad idea to educate that irreverent bastard a little more, but now she had a clear purpose for coming here.

And I don't have to say anything now...

"Cleter."

"Yes, Captain."

"Get ready."

"Ah...! Yep!"

"Now, wait a minute! Captain! No, Captain! Aren't you picking someone to go on a mission? But why is he the only one...?! I'm bored too!"

As expected, I thought I would ask. Lien chuckled at the expected question.

She responded kindly with a sly look on her face, with a bit of cheerfulness and exhilaration, as if she had been waiting.

"Because the lord told me to select 10 'normal' people."

"Ah... damn it!"

There will be no rebuttal again.

Lien couldn't hide his absurdity and burst into laughter, but then his expression changed and he looked at a nearby tree.

I've been confused since I arrived here, but now I know for sure.

"Please come out."

There was no answer, but she was still confident. A business-like voice continued without any pitch.

“How long did you plan to just watch? The person you personally brought almost took the medicine, but you stayed silent.”

“...What power does an old man have to stop the young men? And before I could stop him, didn't Lord Lien stop him first?”

Clutter took a deep breath. Milan also seemed surprised and said, ‘Huh? ‘Huh?’ I made a dumb sound.

Still, since they had suffered on the battlefield for eight years, they were well-versed in detecting signs, but they did not notice anything at all.

I always thought he was not an ordinary butler, but I never thought he would be like this....

Lien, who completely ignored the reactions of his subordinates, opened his mouth to Remember.

“What brings you here?”

“I came to deliver a message from the Count. One...”

She noticed Remember's gaze and spoke to the members.

“Take Dan and leave the place for a while.”

***

“Sorry, I'm late.”

“it's okay.”

Okay, so I was only a few minutes late.

Lien came to visit me shortly after I finished my cup of tea.

There wasn't a clear time given in the first place, and I drank my tea quickly, so it can't be said that it was particularly late, but that doesn't seem to be the case from Lien's perspective.

"I'm really sorry. What can I say..." "It

's really okay. There must have been a reason. For example, I was told to teach swordsmanship, and there was an article who recommended medicine first, so I gave him a little training..." "Oh, how did you do that

? ...!"

What was it real? I took a picture?!

By the way, if it's late for that reason, it's not something to apologize for. Rather, you should be praised.

"Good job."

"yes?"

"Did Dan take his medicine?"

"no."

"Then you did very well."

Lien prevented another crazy person from appearing in the world!

I contributed to peace on the continent, but it was too late. I emphasized it again with sincerity. Well done.

"Then let's go now."

I turned my gaze and scanned the faces of those standing in front of me. Mad Dogs, Lien, and Shaman Lan.

Well, it seems like no one is missing. But the number seems a bit high.

It is said that slums have little influx of new people. That's how familiar each other's faces are, so when a new person comes in, they will recognize it right away.

It might be just one or two people, but if new faces suddenly flock to a place like that, wouldn't the news quickly spread there?

"...I guess we'll have to split up and go..."

"It's a hassle to avoid getting caught, but I think it's safer to group them in groups of two or three."

I agree. Those three are a bit dangerous too. Wouldn't the two of you be safe?

But the problem is....

"Who doesn't know the geography of this place?"

"...."

"...."

There was no answer.

what? There's no way you couldn't hear me. Is there really no one who doesn't know?

Oh, that's ridiculous....

"Nothing."

“...hmm?”

“We are all from around here....”

“Considering the circumstances, we only recruited people from the poor in this area.”

A proud voice overlapped the voice calmly laying out the facts.

As expected, Lien. He’s competent. I have a lot of talented people.

‘I wish I didn’t have to go to that Injae-bok Demon World...’

I quickly dismissed the sad thought and nodded roughly.

“Then the knights pair up and take different routes. The gathering place is near Salvation Bridge. If you don’t know the location, ask Lord Lien and gather in a place where you won’t be caught.”

“yes!”

“Lord Lien and the shaman are moving with me.”

“All right.”

I watched them scatter in different directions and then quickly took a step back.

I feel like I can move a little leisurely, but I can’t do that when I think of Cruel.

Where is he and what is he doing now? Surely he didn’t move faster than me?

Maybe we should have gone together instead. No, but still...

....

It wasn't long before we arrived at our destination.

I wonder if it was a lie that they were from this area. All the knights arrived before me, even though they moved in different directions – one team even went back in the direction they came from.

I knew that a large percentage of the members of the Murderous Knights came from poor backgrounds, but I never thought there would be so many poor people from the same area rather than different regions.

“Ah, that's because this slum is the largest.”

“So, when it came to recruiting troops, the empire started from here.”

“Unless they were very old or very young, all men were taken away, but thanks to this, the size has decreased a lot. There used to be more people.”

Does this mean the scale has decreased? I can't even imagine what it was like before.

“Anyway, can I just charge now?”

“Guys, let's take some medicine!”

“...That's not it, so put the medicine down.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 63

63. Clearance (2)

I quickly stopped them and looked back at Lien. Although I didn't say anything, she must have realized what I was trying to say.

just as expected.

'I told you to bring in the ones that were okay...'

'Those are the ones that were at least okay.'

The woman who was beating up the members immediately responded with her eyes. I immediately read the explicit look in his eyes and had a moment of doubt.

That's the only thing that's okay? really? Even so, wouldn't there be one or two people who can imitate a somewhat normal person?

As Lien said, I searched my mind for a moment to see if there was anyone better than those guys.

'...there is none.'

After seeing Cleator looking at the medicine lying on the floor as if it was a waste, he shook his head.

‘There really isn’t any.’

Aside from feeling miserable about my situation, I can’t just waste my time here.

When the commotion seemed to have died down to some extent, I glanced at Ran, who had been looking pitifully at the guys who had been deprived of their medicine and had become sullen.

She sensed my unspoken question as to whether I had still changed my mind and gave a small nod. damn.

“...You don’t have to kill them all, but you have to exclude those who are simply possessed. So medicine is not an option.”

“You’re too soft, but...”

“I understand why you brought us here. We would be perfect for distinguishing between the poor and the poor. However, it would be a confusing situation, so why bother distinguishing whether they are poor or not?”

I know it too. But it can’t be helped. If the shaman doesn’t cooperate, it’s the end of the plan and all.

“We are going to set a fire inside the building. Most of the people who come out at this time will be ordinary people who are possessed by religion. The four of you will wait outside and select and kill the suspicious people hiding among them—” There is no need to capture them alive

. does not exist. Even if he wasn’t an ordinary person, he would be a small child to run away like that. Even if you miss a few people, it probably won’t be a big problem.

Those in higher positions will probably have something to hide or take care of, so they will go deeper. I acquire the 'things that need to be hidden or taken care of'.

It doesn't matter if you don't have it. Because I already know where something like that could be.

“—The remaining six are going to mess around inside. Likewise, just kill the suspicious guys. You can go in when you see smoke. Oh, and if there's one moving in a different direction as if it's going somewhere, have some of you chase it.”

“Who starts the fire?”

“I.”

I deliberately brought ingredients that smoke well and last a long time. All you have to do is light it and throw it in a place with few people.

Of course, the shaman has to go with me, and Lien will follow even if I don't like it, so in the end, there are no people left. Well, it's neat.

“But...”

“Huh?”

“There seems to be something strange about your plan.”

Cleter tilted his head.

“It's not that I don't know what I have to do... It's just that...”

“Are you going to complain about my lord's orders now?”

“No, I have to do it when I’m told. But... “

He looked down at my knight’s uniform and looked at me with a confused expression.

Ah, I know what you want to say.

“I think you are confused about the fact that we are sending the poor to live, but the purpose of this matter is not to handle it quietly. So, you can tell the world that the murderous knights have messed up.”

No, I have to tell you. Only then will my merits be recognized.

Of course, if I just go out like this, the emperor, who is known to patronize me, will be criticized even more, but that’s none of my business.

I am not a person who cares about the emperor being criticized, and even if he wants to reprimand me, I am just following his orders, so there will be no major problem.

“Then find a suitable place and wait.”

“yes.”

Leaving them behind, I walked around the back of the building and touched each of the windows. I tried to go in through that open window last time... but it was all locked?

‘Well, it’s even more suspicious if the security is still there even though you made such a fuss...’

We’re in big trouble! I don’t know of any other entrances other than the front door!

I glanced back at Lien and the shaman. The two of them shake their heads as if there is no other way.

An embarrassing wind passed between us for a moment, and Ran slowly opened his mouth as if a good idea occurred to him.

“How about checking to see if any of the knights you brought know how to open a window?”

“Hmm?”

“I heard that all the knights brought here were poor. I haven’t been out into the world a few times, so I can’t say for sure, but most of the poor people I’ve met so far are learning various and interesting skills.”

aha. I know what you want to say.

Now that I think about it, there were quite a few members who had quite interesting dexterity. For example, pickpocketing or how to open a door...

I told Lien to go check without further delay and bring him in if there were any such members. But she, who would normally have listened straight away, shows hesitation this time.

“I can’t leave my master alone again...”

“You are not alone. There is also a shaman like this. I will wait quietly, so don’t worry and go.”

“....”

“...?”

what? I guess it’s not just that?

I looked at Lien's back with some confusion as he walked away, showing signs of reluctance.

Not long after, she returned with a member of the group, and only then did I understand why she was upset.

'Lien was a knight.'

This situation of having to open a window like a thief must have been inconvenient.

The lord, who should always be prioritized, is not in danger, and I think I could have found another way if I investigated a little more, but I chose to open the window.

I knew I didn't have time, so I kept my mouth shut. If I had a little more time, I would have been careful and said, let's find another way.

It's not something I say that will make it happen. Pretending not to notice Lien's appearance, I looked away and looked back at the member who skillfully opened the door and was very proud.

"I never thought this would be used here like this...! I'm so moved..."

"Okay, good job. Go back now."

"Wow, you're so heartless. You could have praised me a little more..."

His mouth is grumbling, but his actions follow orders faithfully. I inadvertently let out a laugh as I saw the guy grunting and turning away.

I feel this every time, but those guys are just crazy talkers, but they are really good at understanding the situation. I wonder if he has any sense.

Actually, if I wasn't smart, I wouldn't have survived that battlefield, but it's still amazing.

Maybe that's why, with a slightly softened heart, I spoke to the back of his head.

"Go quickly."

"Yeah..."

As soon as the member walked away, we held on to the open window and crossed over. Oh, of course, I checked everything to see if there was anyone inside.

As if it were natural, my two companions followed me through the window without saying a word. Ran was a little tired, but thanks to Lien lifting her up, there were no major problems.

Since it wasn't the window I had passed through before, I stopped for a moment in front of an unfamiliar landscape and fell into a brief contemplation.

'Where would be better...'

It is difficult if the fire is discovered too quickly and the smoke spreads too late.

Just as I was hesitating because I had no idea if I even knew the geography of this place, Lien took the initiative.

"If you tell me where you think is suitable, I will guide you."

"Lord Lien? How...?"

“Last time, when I was looking for my lord, I visited most of the hallways and rooms. I have some idea of the geography.”

That’s so helpful. What a world...

I looked at her with subtle eyes and laid out the conditions I had in mind. She listened to me with a serious attitude, nodded and began to lead the way.

Thanks to Lien’s excellent sense of presence, she was able to navigate several crises without incident, and it may not be an empty statement to say that she had some understanding of the geography for a while, but she found a suitable location faster than expected.

“Here it is, what do you think?”

“It seems okay.”

“Then...”

“Yes.”

I set fire to the ingredients I brought with me. Wow, there’s already a lot of smoke...

Lien covered his nose and mouth with the handkerchief he held out and threw it on the floor.

My vision was already starting to get obscured, so it seemed like I had prepared an incredible amount of ingredients. I looked at the large amount of smoke spewing out with half anxiety and half pride, and then turned around.

From now on, it is a race against time. The leadership, who senses something suspicious, must steal important evidence before they run away.

“Let’s hurry.”

Thanks to Lien’s guidance, it wasn’t that difficult to find the prayer room.

The interior still had a mysterious atmosphere with the white walls and purple fabric, but this time, instead of looking around, I led the shaman in search of a problem that needed to be solved.

There won’t be anything more to see anyway.

There was no one by the way. It couldn’t possibly be here. Is it already inside? Or is this a trap?

‘...Honestly, I’m not sure there will be any evidence left.’

Because Lien caused that mess. The leadership, alerted by the previous incident, may have already stolen important clues or evidence elsewhere.

Nevertheless, the reason I came back here was

‘It doesn’t matter anyway.’

In any case, Salvation Church will be destroyed due to this incident. This is true if you exclude the possibility of a comeback or a second Salvation Church.

If the leadership stole key documents, Cruel would not be able to find them either, so considering the situation, I will ultimately be the winner of this game.

Neither Cruel nor I could find the key documents.

What about the collapse of Salvation Church? I did it.

So who will be the winner?

It's just a thought in my head, but honestly, I feel like I want the leadership to steal the ledgers. If I find it, it will only be an element of bonus points, but if Cruel finds it, it will be an important hand that will turn the game around.

That's why they came up with such a reckless and weak plan.

'Anyway, you'll find out when you go in.'

I went up to the stage and removed the hanging purple cloth. Ran's eyes immediately fell on a certain point on the wall.

"It appears to be a spell using a jewel as the main medium. It seems to have a communication function that allows a signal to be transmitted immediately when it is destroyed, and also has a space distortion function..." "I see. All I have to do is pass through this place. Is that possible? "

"...."

"...?"

"...Just a moment... Could you please give me a little more time?"

"Is there something wrong?"

"Something... something..."

His words trail off.

The initially calm gaze became serious as if sensing something strange, and the quiet black eyes were trembling. And it soon turned into astonishment.

“...Why... Here....”

“Why is that?”

“Why is there a spell here?”

“...yes?”

“This is not witchcraft. It is magic disguised as witchcraft.”

My head was blank for a moment. This was something completely unexpected.

Magic. Of course I thought it was witchcraft... but suddenly it was called magic? In the human world?

This is a serious problem. I don't think it will be long before I end up in the demon world again...

‘Ugh, my stomach...’

Just thinking about it made me feel stressed, so I tried not to think about it and looked back at the shaman and Lien.

As he was a shaman, the situation was serious . Ran, who felt this more clearly than anyone else, was explaining the device to Lien, who had a stern expression on his face and a question mark above his head. Although he was explaining, he seemed lost in thought.

“I was convinced after seeing the space distortion function. Do you know the difference between magic and witchcraft?”

“I only know that magic is breaking the rules of the world, and witchcraft is about paying a certain price and slightly twisting the rules to use it to your advantage... Is that right?”

“Yes, that’s right. If we take this space distortion as an example, it wouldn’t even be a distortion. This is a combination of a completely different space.”

“You mean grafting?”

“Yes, completely different spaces are connected through this gem. If you destroy this wall, there will probably be nothing behind.”

“That means that if you break the jewel...”

“It would mean that crossing into connected space is a long way off.”

Those words sting me for no reason. Good thing I didn’t break it.

Anyway, that’s not what I’m curious about right now. There are two things I’m curious about.

Who cast the spell?

Is it possible to move on to ‘that’ space through this?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 64

64. Sweep (3)

"I don't know who cast the spell, but I have a vague idea of the structure. Please wait a moment."

She places her hand on the jewel, as the woman once did. Unintelligible words continued.

I still don't know what he's saying, but as he murmurs, the wall becomes more and more flabby.

In other words, evidence that the structure has been understood.

I'm really glad that these aren't empty words... but I have some doubts. Is it possible for a shaman to have some reach into the realm of magic?

'I don't think he's an ordinary shaman...'

Did you say he was very talented? I had no idea that the scope of his talent would exceed my expectations...

but whatever.

"You can go in now."

On the contrary, it is beneficial, so there is no problem.

The shaman retreated and I stood in front of the wall.

...I felt really uncomfortable when I tried to go in. This won't suddenly become hard or anything like that, right?

I slowly stretched out my hand. As soon as my fingertips touch it, the wall shakes again.

'Ugh, I don't like the feel of it at all.'

Lien next to him says he will go in first, but if he backs out, his face will be lost. It's a face I might have to look at from now on, but I can't avoid her every time.

In the end, I closed my eyes tightly and pushed myself into the wall.

***

"Fire!!"

"Hi! What kind of knights...!"

It was chaos itself.

The members in charge of causing trouble inside clenched their fists when they saw those coming out.

Children, the elderly, people who have lost a leg, people who are blind....

All of these people, even among the poor, have to live with an unavoidable penalty.

Only then did the members understand why the poor were fascinated by this pseudo-religion. No, it would be correct to say that he was bewitched.

The poor are just uneducated and not stupid.

Cleter laughed helplessly.

‘Tell them to make trouble...’

I knew it instinctively the moment I checked their faces.
They won’t go away easily.

If they’re being reckless enough to kick them out, they should kill someone as an example. At least the arms and legs should be blown off.

The guards we killed upon entering were not enough. We must touch the poor.

‘But who?’

A child? Old people? A person without a leg? Blind people?

“Turn off the lights!”

“Stop the knights too! We must protect this place!”

A desperate move. As someone who was also a poor person,
I could understand why they did that.

Walking down a path where you are likely to die is not because you are stupid.

It is the last hope. To the point where I thought it would be better to die if it ended.

To begin with, for the poor, life was no more than a stone rolling on the ground, so throwing one’s life away was not that difficult.

If it’s for their ‘salvation’.

“Please get out of here, Sir!”

“Oh please...!”

My jaw tightened.

The Murderous Knights are literally murderers. It killed countless people, including old people and children.

The enemy is naturally destroyed, and no matter what it is, as long as the order is given.

‘If I had given an order to kill them all...’

I would have taken medicine and wiped them out right away. At least if they were enemies, there would have been no hesitation.

However, the order this time was not to kill them, but to cause trouble, and the people in front of them were not enemies.

That’s why I couldn’t help but be agitated.

The only time the Murderous Templars become murderous spirits is when they take medicine. Those who did not take medication were merely weak humans struggling with feelings of guilt.

That’s why I try to show a more cheerful side, but...

“Get out!”

“...!”

“Shiia!”

...It was difficult to show cheerfulness even in a situation like this.

Cleter lowered his gaze blankly at the dull shock he felt on his waist.

A small girl was clinging and crying as if trying to stop her from walking.

“Please go out, please...!”

“Shiia! It’s dangerous! Come here quickly!”

A boy calls her from afar. Cleter suddenly came to his senses at the urgent cry.

The child cannot be left alone as long as he touches the body of a knight performing his duties. The atmosphere depends on even these little things. So let’s use this kid as an example...

“...Damn it.”

He swore softly.

‘Captain, I think you made the wrong decision this time.’

Her judgment was wrong.

Rather than members from the poor, people other than them should have come here.

If they were people who did not understand the poor, they would feel guilty, but the depth of their guilt would be relatively shallow.

The culprit was different, but it was a painful moment for those who were in trouble.

***

Ah. iced coffee. ah.

Shiia's hands were shaking.

There is smoke. Evidence that there was a fire. Even a group of knights came in, killed the guards, and threatened the poor to drive them out.

Shiia could feel the poor.

If we get kicked out like this, this place will be a mess. It's just a mess. It may never come back again.

"Shiia, let's run away for now. I think people who run away are just let go."

It seemed like Paul was saying something next to me, but I couldn't hear it.

For Shiia, this was a sacred area. A place like a dream world full of only good people with no malicious intent or bad people.

A place where malice cannot or cannot invade.

That's why I was able to break down the strong boundaries and live comfortably here.

"Uh... why..."

Malice invaded. Bad people come and trample on sacred land. The building is filled with acrid smoke, and a glimpse of red flames shines through a window on one side of the building.

The moment the poor people who noticed the situation blocked the knights' path and begged her, she ran forward without warning.

No separate goal was set. They just rush at any of the 'bad people' they see in front of them.

'No no...!'

I had barely made a living, but now it felt like I was finally living.

"Get out!!"

"Shiia!"

He was holding on to a man wearing a white knight's uniform.

"Please go out, please...!"

"Shiia! It's dangerous! Come here quickly!!"

Wrong. No matter how much I scream, it cannot reach Shiia.

"That stupid kid...!"

Paul couldn't overcome his anxiety and bit his nails. Even in my hectic state, my mind was trying to figure out who the people in front of me were.

Knights in white livery.

Among the many knightly orders, as far as he knows, there is only one that uses white as a knight's uniform.

Murderous Knights.

Then, the person who sent them here....

‘The Vampire Count!’

Yes, Deon Hardt.

Far away – my teeth ground apart. Why does a high-ranking person bother to pay attention to a place like this?

Because the Salvation Church is a cult?

I’m not a fool and I know that Salvation Church is not as normal as I thought.

But what is it? The poor have to worry about what they will eat every day. For us, the Salvation Church that gives bread and water is really ‘salvation’ itself.

It could be an evil cult disguised as salvation. It’s okay to have a suspicious plan. Whatever it is, it will be less painful than starving to death.

So, if the Salvation Church falls, we will take revenge.

The opponent is of course—

‘Deonhart is the Emperor’s sword. Then, this current movement must also be an order from the emperor.’

—Emperor.

Was it an intended result or an unexpected move?

At this moment, the tip of someone’s sword was aimed at the emperor.

***

The squishy sensation that weighed down my entire body felt like I was passing through a rather soft pudding.

For no reason, I raised my head while touching various parts of my body and couldn't help but be momentarily dazed by the scenery I saw.

“What? This place is the same as there before, right?”

No, it's a little different.

In the prayer room earlier, the chairs were wooden, but the chairs here are light purple. There's also a door in the corner.

But other than that it's the same. The white walls and the strangely hanging purple fabric...

“It's the same.”

“No, it's different.”

I heard two familiar voices. You came in. Instead of looking back or saying something useless, I scanned the room and asked back.

“Different?”

“Do you see this gold?”

As I move my gaze along Ran's fingers, I see a faint crack. It was engraved on the floor and widely engraved throughout the room with certain rules.

Anyone can see that it looks like it is a medium for witchcraft.

“There are Jin engraved all over the room. I think it might have something to do with that door...”

The door in the corner.

As soon as my gaze lands on that place, Lien goes straight to grab the doorknob. Contrary to expectations, the door opened smoothly and I was speechless for a moment at the view beyond.

“What... oh...”

I see a green tree. It's not just one tree. A lot.

Yes, beyond the door was none other than a forest.

“Similarly, it is magic disguised as witchcraft. It is a combination of other spaces, so if you open the door in a non-specific way, you will be connected to the outside.”

“If I open it using a certain method, it connects to the inside?”

“Yes, to be exact, you can move as long as you perform a certain action in this room without opening the door. When you come out, just open the door as usual and come out...”
Have you already analyzed that far

? It's not even a spell, but it's fast.

“How long will it take?”

“Magic is an unfamiliar area to me... so I think it will take at least 10 minutes.”

At least 10 minutes. too long. Of course, I should be grateful that there was a way... but my heart was very urgent.

It's not a problem if someone comes in along the way. Since not many will be able to come in at once, it will be easy to suppress them.

But what if someone is already in that room? What if you're trying to take your belongings and run away through another passage?

As long as he runs away safely, he'll probably go out completely if Cruel catches him.

"shit."

There is no other way. Is there no way to just wait? Is that really all there is? really?

In my anxiety, I didn't even notice that I was walking in circles in this space.

The fact that I found out was when Ran, who was worse than me, opened her mouth.

"Calm down. Nothing can be accomplished by being so nervous."

Stop.

Was I nervous? No, but that doesn't mean you can do it as you want, right?

Anyway, I stopped because I had some respect... No, I thought I stopped, but why am I walking again?

Even though I stopped for a moment, at some point I was spinning along this space again. And this time in the opposite direction.

The moment I realized that fact and stopped, the scenery changed without me being able to do anything.

“...Fuck?”

“....”

“No, this is not because I was surprised.”

Why are you here?!

I was surprised that the scenery had changed in an instant, but I froze when I came face to face with Cruel holding a torch in a room full of documents.

***

When ominous smoke came from somewhere in the building and news of intruders was heard, Saerin, the actual head of the Salvation Church, quietly took a step back.

This is Deon Hart.

Perhaps those besieging this building and those wreaking havoc inside are the famous murderous knights.

Other than that, there was no need to think of anyone else.

Aside from Cruel, the only person tasked with eradicating the Salvation Church is Deonhardt.

‘He may be unrelated, but he is also a commander.’

By setting fires, ordinary people are driven out and those who are deeply involved are singled out.

People who had something to hide would try to fight their way through the crowds and head somewhere, so it could be said to be quite the problem, but unfortunately, Saerin's brain was much better than he expected.

She is from a commoner background and is the Duke of Illuster's servant.

There's no way a commoner woman would have had the brains to become a duke's subordinate.

As soon as she realized that this incident was related to 'Deonhardt', she obediently backed away. She didn't bother to run or rush somewhere to get the documents, but quietly, without holding her breath——abandoned the Church of Salvation

.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 65

65. Clearance (4)

'Anyway, the purpose was achieved.'

The remaining work was left to Cruel Hart.

Unlike Deon Hardt, who knows nothing, he knows how to enter 'that room', so by the time Deon Hardt arrives, everything will have been cleaned up.

In other words, Deonhardt will have no way of knowing that the Duke is behind the Salvation Church, and Cruel will be responsible for the consequences of everything that happens after this, so all she has to do is take a step back and watch with interest.

And from her perspective, what Deonhardt did this time was...

'Step back.'

Soft. So much so that I doubt whether he is really the 'deonhardt' I know.

If it had been him, he would have completely sealed off the building, preventing even a single rat from escaping, and then killed everyone inside.

Isn't it possible for the enemy to escape by mixing in with the general public?

There is no way anyone who went through the war would not know that fact.

'...Are you saying it doesn't matter if I miss one or two people? 'Because it's going to be a small piece anyway?'

Well, if you predict his priorities, it's completely understandable.

Securing evidence is probably the most important. Only then will we be able to punish those behind it and completely eliminate the Salvation Church. Aiming for the head first is a general's instinct.

but.

Saerin slightly raised the corners of her mouth. A smile that was by no means innocent spread across the face.

'In the end, I'm the one who wins.'

Deon Hardt won't find out who's behind it.

***

I see a mountain of documents piled up. There is a strange smell of oil.

Among them, Cruel was frozen with one hand in his bosom.

There was silence.

I quietly lowered my gaze and checked the man's stiff upper body in an awkward posture.

He must have been surprised, too, as his hand slipped out of his pocket, and what caught my eye were a few documents held at the end of it.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

He blinked several times in that position, and as if he noticed my gaze, he packed the documents in his arms. Then, naturally, he took a look at me and threw the torch he was holding into a pile of documents.

‘...?!’

No wait. What does this do...!

In an almost unrealistic instant, all the documents were engulfed in flames.

I heard it smelled like oil, and this was it!

Damn it, nothing can be saved like this. How did we get here, but losing evidence right in front of our eyes is unfair, so I can't just leave it at that.

I quickly reached out for the burning document. Just holding it for a moment won't cause too severe a burn. All you have to do is catch it like this, throw it on the floor, and then step on it.

But my purpose was not achieved.

chin.

“Let go of this!”

“....”

“You crazy bastard! Why are you burning this!!”

Crazy bastard. You idiot.

As for the general public, I used the Templars to chase them out, and the leadership can't even tell where they are hiding. Probably got out of here. I won't be back for a while.

In other words, all that's left is to contact the imperial palace and have them take these documents... Why on earth!!

Although he struggled with all his might to shake off the hand, this weak body had no effect on Cruel's control. Instead, as I was struggling, my hand brushed against the burning document, and he immediately picked me up and threw me around his shoulder.

“Fuck!”

I'm so fucking annoyed and so fucking angry.

Cruel is blocking me, and my weak body can't do anything about it. I was wheezing with complex anger towards both of them, but a specific thought that briefly crossed my mind made me stop all my actions without realizing it, like a doll with its strings undone.

I feel Cruel glancing at me, wondering if I'm strange, but...

“...Duke.”

Stop.

Just like I did a moment ago, he also froze in place.

I started walking again as if I hadn't heard anything, but it was already too late. I had already gained confidence.

Yes, it is a peacock.

Salvation Church, which is presumed to have a huge background. A purple cloth used only here. Cruel burning documents.

Who did Cruel follow?

Whose symbol was purple?

Excluding the royal family, who was the most powerful person?

‘—Starbe Illuster.’

The leader of the noble faction with purple hair and eyes, followed by Cruel.

“This ...”

“....”

”

Anger exploded.

***

Honestly, I don't remember much after that.

According to Lien, smoke came out of Jin, then the door in the corner opened, and Cruel came out along with thick smoke.

Cruel was carrying me, and when I tried to plunge the dagger into his side, he immediately threw me at Lien and disappeared.

“I’ve never seen you so angry.”

“Is that so?”

“Yes, he got so angry that he even vomited blood. I was so surprised at that time...” ”

I see... that’s right...”

He was definitely very angry. I wonder if my reason was lost in anger.

No, even thinking about it again makes me angry. I’m not saying you played with people. There is no fucking place to talk about.

Telling the emperor would be of no use unless there was evidence. It would be nice if they didn’t see it as just a dirty plot by a loser.

‘Fuck Cruel...’

Since he got the documents that I couldn’t, he will be the winner of this competition. What on earth are you trying to ask for? I don’t know what it is, but I just hope it has nothing to do with me.

“Oh, what about a shaman?”

“I went back.”

“...yes?”

“He said he had nothing more to do and would go back.”

No, since there is no reason to hold it, it is right to send it...

“Well...”

“Ah, it is said that the reason the master was moved to that space was to go around the room.”

“No, that’s not it... okay? I beg your pardon?”

“They say that if you circle it in any way, three times to the left and twice to the right, it will move. Perhaps the idea was to conveniently draw and move it with a finger, but who knew. “I didn’t expect the Count, who was moving around the room, to be moved.”

“....”

“That’s great luck.”

I was at a loss for words. So was that why I was moved?

No, that’s not important now...

“You really just sent the shaman? “Empty-handed?”

Shamans are rare beings, so it is better to be remembered fondly. But what if you worked hard and sent it away without any compensation?

“The deacon gave us a reward and a carriage.”

“Oh, that’s it.”

As expected, Remember. Thanks to this, I won’t be remembered as shameless.

...Anyway, it’s a little disappointing. I was going to ask you about the curse.

“Lord Lien. There is one thing I am mistaken about, but the reason the Count vomited blood was because he received strong pressure on his abdomen while being placed on his shoulder.” “...?” He raised his head in confusion. He grinned

. Silver-blue hair that was slowly changing came into view.

Naturally, Remember passed me and put down the tray he was holding on the table. I looked at him with a dumbfounded expression, but a voice that seemed to completely exclude me was heard. “Ah... It’s because of anger

. It wasn’t. I guess I was wrong.”

“I can’t say that anger had no effect at all, but that was the biggest cause. There is no need to be embarrassed if you misunderstand one thing. It’s just that the Count was in a glass body.”

“Glass body...”

Why are you muttering that again?

The word competent is a cancellation.

In the end, I couldn’t hold back and said one word.

“No, Lord Lien. Why are you repeating that over and over again? And what does Remember mean when he comes in...”

“Oh, sorry.” I knocked, but there was no answer.

Remember bowed curtly, leaving out the 'glass body' thing I wanted to point out the most.

I couldn't say anything more about his polite and impeccable behavior, so I clicked my tongue and looked at the tray on the table. On the tray, there was a decoction and a note. Ugh, decoction... that was still there

. ?

"...What is that note?" It was an unsightly note that looked completely different from the invitations he had occasionally seen.

Remember's eyes narrowed.

You noticed! I didn't want to take medicine, so I changed the subject! That's my age. Is he doing it?

I was just staring at him because I was being pricked for no reason, and he shook his head as if there was nothing he could do. The answer came back with a faint smile.

"It's a note from a shaman. Before I left, I left a message asking you to give it to the Count."

"Are you a witch doctor?"

I muttered in confusion and reached for the note. Before opening the note, I hesitated for a moment, wondering if I had used a suspicious device, but my hesitation was short-lived.

At least in my memory, I have never committed any major disrespect to her.

The contents of the note were not as long as I thought.

[A curse is not something that can be taken lightly. In order to kill someone, it is essential to kill someone with the greatest value to the caster. I have to sacrifice it. Would you, a nobleman, be able to sacrifice your life to kill someone?]
Gugit. My

hands were tense. I calmly crumpled the note without any change in my expression and dropped it into the decoction right next to me. It was pure white. The note soaked in black water and became stained black.

I watched it quietly and slowly pondered the last sentence of the note.

‘Can I sacrifice my life to kill someone?’

That’s bullshit. Of course, my answer is ‘no’.

I guess they even predicted my answer and didn’t write down the method for casting the curse. How did they know I was going to ask this question before? ‘

What is a shaman?’

While I was engraving that name firmly in the corner of my head, Remember called me carefully. When I raised my head, a black decoction filled my vision. No, they had dipped the note into it so I couldn’t eat it?! “I had an attendant bring me a new one

. It’s no use trying to avoid it like this, so stop rotting old man and eat it now.” ”

....”

This really tastes bad.

I took the decoction with trembling hands. Under the unspoken pressure from Remember's gaze, I couldn't help but open my mouth. I put it on it. Just as I was about to open my mouth to swallow this terrible liquid, it clicked.

"Come in!"

I gently put the bowl of medicine down on the table. Remember was probably so happy that he narrowed his eyes and looked at me. Either way, I was happy. I greeted the servant who came in.

"What's going on?"

"Someone from the imperial palace has arrived."

"Ah."

...Ah?

My head, which had been frozen for a moment, turned around at the news on a larger scale than I expected. It was a person who wasn't even an invitation. My impression of the attendant's words that he had come personally was simple. It had come.

***

He had refused the call several times, using the excuse of fainting, so in a way, it was something that had been predicted. However, by sending people and a carriage like this, there was no other option. I never thought they'd bring me here.

Besides...

"...."

"...."

I wonder if they were seeing Cruel together as well. What would be the difference if we met separately?

'Ugh, it's awkward.'

I closed my mouth and fixed my head straight ahead. Not only did I not like this situation, but the bitter taste was still lingering in my mouth, so my expression was not very good. Damn butler. I never thought I would give you medicine and send you away. I have to hurry to get to the imperial palace

. Remember grabbed me as I stood up and the decoction was held out in front of my nose. And when that horrible taste comes back to me, my face inevitably becomes distorted.

However, it only lasted for a moment. When I felt the gaze next to me, I immediately changed my expression and fixed my gaze on the door.

'Let's see what's engraved on this gorgeous door...' There are jewels and magic stones embedded in them, and their gaze is focused on me.

...The side of my face feels hot. Are you looking at me like that because you think there is something to see?

The gaze that was on the face slowly lowered, hovered around the shoulder, and then lowered further and stopped at a certain place.

I noticed where his gaze was directed and turned my head to glare at him.

Yes, I bandaged my hand. I made a fuss about catching the documents you burned and ended up getting burned. Fuck, I'm still pissed. You damn bastard.

"What do you see?"

"...."

He was looking at me blankly and slowly opened his mouth as if he wanted to say something.

But even before the first word was said.

"Your Majesty wants you to come in."

As the throne room door slowly opened, both he and I turned our heads forward as if nothing had happened.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 66

66. Declaration of War (1) When the door was fully opened and I entered, the gorgeous interior caught my eye.

'I guess someone would say it's not an empire.'

I thought there was a risk that the emperor's eyes would wander elsewhere in the magnificent and splendid interior, but he quickly shook his head and dismissed that assumption.

Who would dare to leave him behind and look elsewhere? The intimidation of the man sitting at the head of the table at the end of this road extends all the way to here.

Edoardo Desert. The one and only emperor of this land who no one can refute.

Perhaps because it was a public place, he was right there, displaying an even more insurmountable dignity.

While I was lost in thought for a moment, Cruel, who was standing next to me, took the first step. Not to be outdone, I quickly came to my senses and started walking towards the emperor.

Soon the steps stopped and Cruel's and my mouths opened at the same time.

"Blessing the Empire."

In times of war, 'Glory', and in normal times, 'Glory'.

"New Cruel Hart meets the present-day Empire."

"Syn Deonhardt behold the present Empire."

And after that it's the same.

As I waited politely, the emperor's voice fell over my head.

Perhaps due to his mood, his voice did not sound very happy, as if he was singing for a public official. Rather...

"Raise your head."

Oh, it's not my fault. Look at that face. Where is that happy face? There are wrinkles between my eyebrows.

'Why? Is it because of me? 'What did I do wrong?'

Now that I think about it, I've done a lot of untrustworthy things.

I sent away people who were possessed by a pseudo-religion, and because of all the fuss I made, I couldn't even bring a single document... I guess they realized that I wasn't a very useful person. I quietly rolled my eyes and looked around.

'Seeing as I can't see anyone other than Cruel and me, I guess they don't plan on officially reprimanding me...'

Then wouldn't I have a chance too?

First, let's do our best and if it doesn't work, we can run away.

Of course, the option of attacking the emperor was not included.

Not only is there no way I can win against those protecting the emperor, but I also don't want to fight General Nemeseus.

And above all....

'Because the emperor is a hero with the fragments of a warrior.'

How could the nine princes, who had no foundation, kill everyone and ascend to the throne of kings? How did he become an emperor recognized by everyone just eight years after ascending the throne?

This is because there is overwhelming force.

He is the one with the greatest warrior fragment among the heroes who have appeared so far. The size of the fragment was unknown, but everyone thought so.

That's because no hero showed as much inaction as the emperor.

There's no way I could kill him like that. This is a dangerous level even for the general public.

'Let's just pray.'

You don't know, right? Considering the affection we have had so far, we may save it.

No, no. Against the emperor, it would be much more likely to bet on his still usefulness as a 'spy' rather than on 'love'. Because I am the only human who can be by the Demon King's side.

While my mind was filled with various thoughts, the emperor's public affairs continued.

After the formalities were over, he finally got to the point.

"Empire Count Deonhardt showed careless behavior, such as letting ordinary people who were possessed by a pseudo-religion go, but he took active action and opened the way to catch the mastermind. Although it is unknown how Cruelhardt moved, he found out the mastermind and obtained the evidence. I brought it."

Is it an illusion that the voice seems to have added strength in 'I don't know how it moved, but'?

The emperor continued speaking with a more uncomfortable expression than before.

"I would like to give the right to wish to both of them for their hard work, but since there is only one right to wish, I have to choose only one person. So, after much consideration, Jim decided to side with Cruel Hart, who played a more decisive role."

"I'm so sorry."

Sheesh. Is it really me?

Here, that bastard burned the papers! I can't shout that.

The good news was that the emperor didn't think the papers were burned because of the fire I started.

Maybe you thought about it, but as long as you don't say it out loud, you won't be disadvantaged for it, so that's somewhere.

"So what do you want?"

A lower voice than usual asks.

Cruel bowed deeply once more and answered calmly.

"I dare ask you to give me the Hart estate, currently owned by Honorary Count Deon Hart."

...what?

"...What do Honorary Count Hart think?"

No, wait a minute. Hart Territory is my land!

Of course, I said I didn't want to have it, so I did everything I could and ran to the emperor to argue...!

Still, it feels bad to be taken away like this. In fact, isn't the transfer of ownership of the territory without consideration of the parties' consent?

He quickly turned his head and looked at the emperor. Our eyes met with unwavering eyes.

'ah.'

There is no choice. If I refuse here, it will only hurt my face. No matter what I say, it's Yeongji who was making such a fuss about not wanting to have it, so if I just reply that it doesn't matter, it will completely collapse.

The emperor knew that too, so he pretended to give me a choice and asked what I thought.

“...Even though it wasn’t like that, it was a burdensome territory. I’m just grateful.”

I gritted my teeth and glared at Cruel. He must have sensed my gaze, but he didn’t turn his head in this direction.

There is no way the emperor does not know about my discomfort. He pretended not to notice and lightly tapped the armrest to draw attention to himself and opened his mouth.

“There is a problem that needs to be resolved before handing over the ownership of Hart’s territory to Cruel Hart. You need a title to have a territory.”

My body and Cruel’s bodies trembled at the same time.

‘...huh? ‘Why is he falling?’

No, it’s me. I feel threatened by the fact that he even has a title. Even so, why are you, Cruel?

“I said it before, Cruel Hart. Are your thoughts still the same?”

“...Soshin neither wants to continue the Hart family nor change his last name.”

“...!”

Ah, I realized what you were saying. Because I also rejected the emperor’s offer for the same reason.

The direct reason why I stopped being just an ‘honorary count’.

When I first met the emperor after the eight-year war, he praised my merits and told me that he would support me and that I sit as the head of the Hart family.

Not the current honorary count, but the head of the 'real' Hart family with a long history.

If it were normal second sons, they might have been a little greedy. But at that time, I hated the Hart family to the point where I was sick of hearing their name.

There is no way I would sit in a position that I hate so much.

When he flatly refused, the next thing the emperor recommended was another title. It was said that the basic title of marquess could easily be obtained if the emperor used more effort.

Of course, it wasn't a bad offer.

'If I hadn't had to give up the last name of 'Hart', I would have easily accepted it.'

Either you build a new castle yourself, or the emperor grants you a new castle.

Anyway, after hearing that since the 'Count Hart family' already existed, no other titles with the same surname should appear, I neatly gave up the title.

What the emperor gave me was the title of 'honorary count.'

Since the title of honorary count is a single-win title, it will naturally cease when I die. In other words, there is no room for confusion to arise later due to the creation of two 'Hart families'.

Originally, the emperor wanted to give him the title of honorary marquess, but in history, 'honorary' titles were only given up to the title of count, so the emperor, who often had to fight with his ministers to clean up after the war, had no choice but to step down due to the circumstances.

'Cruel also received a similar offer.'

Of course it is. He too is a 'hero' now.

Now that I think about it, among the official heroes that currently exist in the empire, there is no one with the title Cruel Hartmann.

If the reason I don't want to give up Hart's castle is because I don't want to forget my anger and revenge, is it because he misses me?

Maybe that too was due to a desire for revenge. A desire for revenge against me, who killed my family in front of my eyes.

It is somehow understandable that he refuses to become the head of the Hart family.

Probably because it's painful.

"It's difficult. The title of honorary count already belongs to someone with the same last name. But that doesn't mean we can't make you, who hasn't done much more, an honorary marquess, and we can't even make a hero an honorary viscount or baron."

It's a lie. I just don't want to give it to him.

Even so, it's better to have a title than not have one at all. Because of that, there were several protests from the noble faction about this issue, but the emperor simply ignored them each time. It was probably a deal that could be wielded against the duke

. It must have been because he didn't want to hand over more.

Strangely enough, the duke wasn't very proactive about this issue, so he was able to ignore it... but the emperor spoke with an uncomfortable expression towards Cruel, who was silently waiting for his next words.

"Let's hand over ownership of Hart's territory to Duke Illuster. What do you think?"

You are the duke's subordinate, and if you wish, the duke will gladly appoint you as the manager of the estate.

Somehow, it seemed as if he could hear your true thoughts.

Cruel, who was silent for a moment, slowly lowered his head.

"...Your Majesty's consideration . Thank you."

"Then it's resolved. Everyone, except Honorary Count Hart, leave."

Cruel glances at me and walks away. My wide-open eyes show that he doesn't care.

Damn you. What on earth are you planning?

No, rather...

‘.. .Why did you leave me alone, Your Majesty? It’s scary.’

Has it finally come?

The moment when it was revealed that I was not a talented person.

I put off the matter of Hart territory for now. For now, I just have to think about how to relieve the emperor’s anger.

I exhaled quietly and slowly closed my eyes. *** Anyway both brothers are stubborn. Even if they die, they do not want to continue the Count Hart family...

,

Do they know that the ownerless Count family is on the verge of ruin? Collaterals who are almost like strangers have gathered together to claim the owner. He’s barking like he’s supposed to.

But there’s no way he doesn’t know. He just doesn’t care.

The Emperor sighed and looked at Deonhardt, who was left alone.

‘You don’t look good.’

It must have been because the Hart Territory was taken away.

Since he had no intention of causing trouble by mentioning it, Emperor Edoardo obediently brought up another topic. A topic so strong that the Hart Territory would be forgotten in an instant.

"After the audience . We're going to have a meeting right away, so you'll find out soon, but I'll tell you in advance now. I plan to go to war."

"...!"

He seemed quite surprised. After all, it has only been two years since the war ended.

The emperor smiled slightly as he faced the enemy's fully exposed eyes.

"The elimination of the Salvation Church is very important. It ended at the right time. At that time, the Kingdom of Ireon was barking at me to the point that I couldn't stand it."

"Are you going to go to war... with the Kingdom of Ireon?"

"That's how it will start." That's the beginning

.

The end will be the unification of the continent.

That's what I meant . Deon's expression darkens as he notices. He must be thinking back to the terrible eight years of war.

However, he himself is not so heartless as to send the wounded to war. Oh, right. To be honest, I just don't want to lose talent like that.

If he had just wanted to order preparations for war, he could have said so at a meeting a little later, but why did they have to meet separately like this?

"I would like to ask you for the Demon World."

Conquering the continent itself is no problem, but the Demon World is annoying.

There's no way the Demon King would just watch obediently as the empire devours the continent.

In that sense, Deon Hardt has very high utility value.

He is the hero of the empire and the commander of the Demon King's army. He is the only human who can stay by the Demon King's side and gain his trust.

"Stay by the Demon King's side and do your best to prevent the Demon King's army from getting involved in this war."

"...I will follow your orders."

"I will take charge of the Lofty Knights until you return. If you leave them in the mansion as is, one day, even the Count may be overthrown."

"...."

"And."

Even though fall is approaching, summer is still summer, so my eyes were focused on the collarbones exposed through the light clothes.

To be exact, on the black stigma just above the collarbone.

[The Devil's Curse.]

I stretched out my hand, repeating the words that made me laugh bitterly just by rolling them around in my mouth.

"...I hope next time we meet with this thing gone."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 67

67. Declaration of War (2)

It was a slow touch, as if caressing a wound.

But for some reason, it felt like it was going to grab my neck at any moment, so I had no choice but to remain still.

Besides, this stigma...

'It's not like a curse.'

Of course, it is true that the devil did it. However, it was not for the purpose of weakening the body and other cursed purposes as the people in the empire thought.

As I have said time and time again, my body is not weakened by external influences, it is just inherently weak.

So this brand is a 'location tracking' spell.

Think about it. Why would the Demon King trust me to obediently send me to the human world?

No matter how good I am in the demon world, in the end, I am a human whose hometown is the 'human world.'
Although he stays in the demon world obediently without any complaints, isn't it easy to be shaken when he sees the human world?

That's why the Demon King always used a location tracking spell on me whenever I went to the human world.

'It was like that when I first accepted the Demon King's offer and went to the empire.'

When I said that I would carry the hero's body with great difficulty and return to the empire, the Demon King cast a location tracking spell on me.

They say it's for my safety and to prepare for an unexpected accident... but in the end, it means that if I don't come back, they'll come find me.

With my nose completely pierced, I couldn't say anything and just dragged the hero's body back to the empire. I was in front of the emperor and other important figures of the empire without realizing that my clothes were disheveled from covering the hero's body. Arrived.

And because he had spent too much stamina, as soon as he put down the hero, he burst into tears and vomited blood.

At the time, I was so focused on getting my body in order that I didn't even notice that their gaze had moved away from my face and stopped a little lower.

An unprecedented black stigma and hemoptysis. The warrior's cold body and his colleague who collected it.

In a way, it was natural that their thoughts were influenced by the 'Demon King's Curse'.

'I didn't listen even if they said it wasn't like that, and I couldn't say out loud that I was the commander of the Demon King's Army, so I kept my mouth shut...'

Now, I just hope I don't get caught.

There was a good reason for deceiving even the emperor.
Because I needed an excuse to go back to the demon world.

What on earth would they think if I, a person with all four limbs intact, had to go back to the demon world? Of course, 'This bastard is going to betray you outright, right?' Shouldn't you start thinking about it?

Therefore, I implicitly acknowledged that it was a curse and slightly added a setting that required one to stay by the devil's side to break it.

Therefore, it is too late to explain. The moment he finds out the truth, the emperor, who has been fooled, will cut off my head himself. I guarantee you.

So my answer was already decided.

"...I'll try my best."

A person who has never been cursed in the first place responded to the person who said that he would like to meet the person next time when the curse has been lifted.

***

"Hart Territory... That's surprising."

This land is of little use to me. Of course, if you look at the profit and loss, it is closer to a gain than a loss...

Duke Starbe Illuster glanced at Cruel, who, as always, did not respond.

"...Now that I think about it, when I met Honorary Count Hart in the corridors of the imperial palace not long ago, he said he came because he wanted to return his territory.”

Cruel Hart was also there at that time.

No. He was there first and he arrived late. And I had a conversation with Deon Hardt.

[I heard that the Count also came to see Your Majesty. May I ask what purpose you came for?]

[Oh, there is something I would like to ask about the territory I recently received...]

[Is it because it is not enough? It's small or the land is barren.]

[No, I just want to return the territory.]

[That's interesting.]

I only said it was interesting, but I didn't really investigate what the territory was, but Cruel wanted to personally investigate it. If you did, there's nothing you couldn't figure out.

Couldn't the 'territory' in that conversation at that time be this 'Hart territory'?

The Duke, who narrowed his eyes and carefully examined Cruel's expression, soon smiled and shook his head.

No way. It seems that he has become sensitive due to the meeting that will be held a little later.

I guess it's just that I was displeased with the Hart estate being in the hands of the person who destroyed my family.

'Surely it's for Deon Hart?'

After thinking that far, the Duke grinned at Cruel.

As always, he looked kindly in his eyes and then spoke soothingly in a soft voice.

“I didn’t mean to reprimand you. This was simply a light event to reward you.”

“ .... ”

“Is there anything else unusual?”

[You bastard!!]

Recalling the shouts and Deon’s attitude at the time, Cruel slowly removed his lips that seemed to have hardened. Green eyes turned to the floor and an unwavering voice came out.

“Nothing in particular.”

“Is that so?”

“ .... ”

“I understand. I will gratefully accept the gift. If you wish, I will hand over all management authority of Hart Estate to you.”

“...thank you.”

Cruel quietly closed his eyes. 들끓는 분노가 압축된 ‘개새끼가’라는 거대한 외침이 고막을 뒤흔드는 듯해서 그는 무심코 데온이 배후를 눈치챈던 그때의 그 상황을 다시금 떠올렸다.

[You must have had fun just playing with me? is not it? 이 개새끼야!!]

온갖 욕설이 쏟아진다. Cruel had been frozen for a long time from the moment the word 'peacock' was said.

I noticed.

I didn't open the window like this. I was just hoping to get a moderately satisfactory result and leave, but I never expected to be able to guess the identity of the person behind it.

'Now that I think about it, I was quite clever when I was young.'

I'm not happy at all.

Still carrying the child with one arm, he reached around his waist with his other hand and grabbed the handle of his sword.

'If you're a duke...'

You'll want to kill this kid who found out who's behind it.

Kaang! Sparks flew.

Cruel, who managed to block Deon's attack from an uncomfortable position, glanced back and forth between the red-hot interior and his younger brother, then hurriedly walked away.

Cruel quietly whispered to Deon as he increased his speed to escape this hot space as quickly as possible.

Deon was still struggling and swearing.

"If you want to live, don't speak out about what you learned here."

You're smart, so you can tell what things shouldn't be said.

And just as Deon's dagger was about to hit his side again, Cruel, who opened the door and went out, saw his younger brother's knight named Lien in front of him and immediately threw Deon.

'....'

Duke Starbe, who had been quietly examining Cruel, who was speechless as to what he was thinking, turned his gaze with a natural smile. The same soft voice as always filled the room.

"...and Saerin."

"Yes, Duke."

The woman who had been waiting in the corner for their conversation to end, as she had once done, looked up.

A woman who willingly took on the tiresome task of overseeing the Salvation Church. The duke looked sweetly at her.

"Thank you for your hard work."

"...I just did what I had to do."

The answer came a beat late. The duke continued speaking regardless.

"From now on, move very secretly under the water. "The emperor must not get caught."

There are words that are filtered out from the Salvation Church and taught to the remaining true believers as if to brainwash them.

The emperor is sin, the duke is salvation.

Peacock is salvation.

‘Stabe Illuster is salvation.’

This is the purpose of the Salvation Church.

Making people blind to Duke Stave Illuster.

At the same time, it worsened public sentiment towards the emperor.

“Please leave it to me.”

“I feel reassured.”

After smiling once, I turned around.

I erased the woman’s existence from my mind and spoke to Cruel, who was waiting behind me.

“Then let’s go. I’ll be late for the meeting.”

I started walking. You can hear a sound following you at a certain distance from behind.

The eyes of the Duke walking ahead were so cold that his previous appearance seemed like a lie.

***

When the duke entered the conference hall, everyone except the emperor had already gathered.

The noble faction and the imperial faction. It looks like they are sitting perfectly divided into two groups.

Although the sight was quite funny, the duke naturally calmed down his expression and gave a soft greeting.

“I guess I’m late.”

These words were spoken by the head of the noble faction and the second most powerful person after the emperor. Those from the noble faction began waving their hands.

“No. Your Majesty hasn’t come in, so the meeting hasn’t started yet.”

“You came at just the right time.”

“There isn’t even an agenda yet. Please sit here.”

The duke follows the instructions and sits at the head table, which is the seat closest to the emperor among the aristocratic seats.

The faces of the emperor faction frowned at their confident and natural attitude, but they did not say anything.

Because according to principle, it is right for him to sit there. It’s just that the person himself is so unlucky that no matter what he does, he just looks disapproving.

“...Sudden meeting. I’m worried about what’s going on.”

“I don’t know what it is, but it must be important. There’s no way His Majesty would have held such a large meeting without thinking.”

“What on earth is going on?...”

That’s war.

I can't believe I still can't get my head around the subject I've been watching the emperor for so far. The duke suppressed the laughter that was trying to escape his mouth.

I had fully anticipated this situation from the time I prepared a separate budget plan.

Even if he had not been aware of the preparation of the budget, he would have fully predicted that the meeting would be related to the 'war' since the meeting was convened.

Isn't he 'the' emperor?

The easiest way for someone who has cut off all of his blood to prove his qualifications as a monarch is to turn the tip of the sword he is holding outward.

Proving your worth by conquering.

'That's what he can do best and-'

-Because it would be much better to be remembered as a conquering emperor rather than a corrupt emperor.

'The conquering emperor still deserves praise for expanding his territory...'

"What do you think, Excellency the Duke?"

"You mean what I think?"

I raised my head and looked around at the question that suddenly occurred to me.

Not only the noble faction, but even the imperial faction had their eyes fixed on him as if they were curious about his answer.

“Yes, I wonder what your Majesty will say...”

“Well, how can I know your deep thoughts?”

“Ah...”

I guess I was secretly looking forward to it. Contrary to his vague gestures as if he knew something, when the answer came back that he didn't know, sighs broke out here and there.

These are not people who will literally believe what comes out of their mouth. There was a subtle confidence and doubt in their eyes.

I guess I should respond appropriately at this point.

The duke added, still showing a suspicious smile.

“However, I heard that the Kingdom of Ireon has been causing controversy recently. It might be related to that.”

A cold silence fell in the conference hall.

I was glad for the silence, so I leaned back in the chair and closed my eyes for a moment. At the cautious call, the Duke slowly lifted his eyelids.

“That means... Are you saying that there might be a war?”

“It's just a guess.”

It wasn't an outright affirmation, but it was definitely not a denial.

The moment the people in the meeting room fell silent at the answer full of affirmation, a voice was heard outside the door announcing the emperor's appearance. .

As soon as everyone stands up, the door opens and the emperor, accompanied by Nemeseus, walks in. He strides forward as if there is nothing to get in his way, and everyone flinches at his ferocious force for a moment, then a unanimous greeting comes out of everyone's mouth. came out.

"Bright on the empire."

"Everyone, please sit down."

A low voice fell.

Those sitting in their seats reflexively looked at the emperor's expression as the voice was uncomfortable to even pretend to hear.

Expressionless, but expressionless with a cool feeling somehow. This is it.

All of those who are here now are people who have survived so far in the imperial palace, where if you lose your head, you will be blown off your head. They have been able to sense the emperor's mood and have calmed down. If you open your mouth incorrectly, you will die. Let's keep it as close as possible. "First of all, even in the midst of being busy

, I would like to express my gratitude to all of you who participated in the sudden meeting."

Of course, a few years ago, one person lost his title after failing to attend due to being busy

... “I’ll get to the point quickly.”

“....”

“Three days from now, Jim is planning to declare war.”

“...!”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 68

68. Declaration of War (3)

This was not a meeting but a declaration.

That alone is outrageous, but even three days later. What nonsense is this!

So many words started pouring out that it was meaningless to promise to keep my mouth as quiet as possible.

"It was only two years ago that Your Majesty declared the end of the war. Why are you going to war again?"

"The reason I declared the end of the war was because there were no more kingdoms to rise up. But it seems that in just two years, a kingdom has been created that has forgotten the horrors of the empire."

Kingdom of Ireon.

When the emperor snaps his fingers, a waiting servant places documents in front of each noble. Those who read this groaned softly.

There is certainly nothing the Empire can do wrong. But it's still not war. Isn't there more to lose than to gain?

While they were gritting their teeth and thinking about how to persuade the emperor of a foolish kingdom blinded by profit, a story even more shocking than before was heard in their ears.

“And since we are already going to war,

I am planning to move with the goal of conquering the continent.

”

“!?”

“It’s something I’ve been thinking about for a long time. It would be better to finish it all at once while wiping out the Kingdom of Ireon.”

“Your Majesty! What is that...!”

It is a goal that was set from the moment he ascended to the position of monarch a long time ago. No matter what the ministers said, the emperor had no intention of backing down.

Besides, it’s not just the Ireon Kingdom that’s arrogant in the current situation.

After the news of Deonhardt’s injury spread quietly behind the scenes, other kingdoms’ attitudes toward the empire became more relaxed.

That’s about it. The weight of the name ‘Deon Hardt’.

‘It’s worth it.’

Troubled times give birth to heroes.

During the long eight-year war, many 'heroes' were born and their fame died in vain to the point where it was meaningless.

At the end of the war, there were only three people left alive.

Deonhardt was the last of these to rise to fame as a hero, and the most famous.

This is because, unlike other heroes who each had their own area, he traveled around various areas throughout the war and played an active role as a vanguard.

Originally, this was implemented because it was the best way to utilize Deon Hart at the time, but it soon revealed unexpected effects.

The fear of none other than 'Deonhardt'.

Even so, he has a unique appearance with red eyes and white hair.

As the rumor spread, this changed and became known to enemies as the devil itself. The bonus is that he is not only unique, but also has a warm appearance that makes him famous in many ways among his allies.

Whatever the meaning, his 'fame' broke the enemy's momentum by half with just his presence, and made most people unconsciously think that 'most of the Empire's power is held by Deonhardt.'

Therefore, it was natural for other kingdoms that had been keeping their heads down to the news of Deonhardt's injury to slowly raise their heads.

‘It doesn’t matter because it’s not true.’

it’s bothering.

Every time his energy comes back to life, he tramples it down, raises his head again and presses it down...

After all, the goal is to conquer the continent, so is there any reason to do this?

So let’s end it all now.

That was the conclusion reached.

Naturally, other ministers were flagships. What does that mean! Isn’t it the same as saying that while you go to buy things, you also buy a building!

It must be dried.

My thoughts changed. Even if war with the Kingdom of Ireon is unavoidable, the conquest of the continent must be prevented.

The pale-faced nobles began to rush to speak.

“It’s still too early to conquer the continent! There’s a lot to prepare and the budget...!”

“All the basic preparations have already been completed.”

A budget plan, neatly organized and unclear as to when it was prepared, was placed in front of each noble.

“War will cause great damage to the empire! Damage does not necessarily occur if enemies enter our territory and trample on it!”

“You don’t have to worry about the Empire. I don’t think Jim would have considered that either.”

“We haven’t eradicated the revolutionary army yet! It’s dangerous to go to war with the enemy inside!”

“That’s why Jim called you. Shouldn’t we come up with a plan?”

“The aftermath of the Eight Years’ War has not yet been completely resolved. The people of the empire will be anxious. Even if you think about the stability of the empire...” “During the Eight Years’ War, did the enemies ever invade the homes of the people of the empire? This time too. They will be safe.”

“Ha... psychological anxiety...”

Most of the words that came out after that were similar.

For the sake of the people of the empire, please hold off on conquering the continent, etc. For nobles, the emperor takes priority. I know very well what this means.

Responsibility.

Edoardo Dessert values duty and responsibility. Since becoming emperor, he has never neglected to take charge of the empire and take care of its people, even if he does not feel like it. Calling himself a tyrant and It was an unsuitable move.

So, I thought that if I brought up the empire and its people, they might reconsider a little, but the emperor was a strong enemy as expected. “

For the sake of the empire?”

A cold voice fell.

The voice, which had been rising to the sky without realizing it, suddenly disappeared. It fades away and the emperor slowly stands up. His golden eyes, looking around at the nobles, were shining fiercely like a beast whose pride has been touched. The moment he felt and realized that something was wrong, the emperor growled and called out to the duke.

“Lord Illuster. ”

“Yes, Your Majesty.”

“What was your greeting to the emperor?”

...Ah.

The corners of the duke’s mouth rose.

‘I can’t believe you’re trying to resolve the matter this way.’

If you come out like this, you should be taken advantage of.

He stood up gracefully, placed his hand on his chest, and bowed towards the emperor. A voice mixed with a faint smile flowed softly from his mouth.

“New Starbe Illuster is the ‘current empire’. See you.”

“Yes.”

As if it was obvious, the emperor took his gaze away. He looked around at the frozen nobles and spoke strongly, as if repeating it in his head.

“The burden is the empire.”

“....”

“Who cares about the empire? Does the fact that you keep mentioning this even after hearing Jim’s answer mean that what he said doesn’t make sense?”

“It’s all ridiculous!”

“We’re just being loyal...”

A tension that felt like it was going to explode at any moment filled the meeting room. As I pressed down on him, desperate answers came back from all over the place.

When the emperor explodes in anger, someone is sure to die. This is not a metaphor, it’s real. The emperor looked like he was afraid that his head would be blown off, so he closed his mouth for a moment and then slowly opened his mouth with a more subdued expression. “I know the loyalty of the nobles. However, if you don’t want to insult me, it would be better to refrain from saying more than this.” “I will keep that in mind.” The nobles

bowed their heads and sighed inwardly. They were completely caught up. If this happens, they will not be able to persuade the emperor. That would be a mistake. The emperor must know this very well.

As expected, the emperor said everything he had to say, so he stood up and said as if he was going to end the meeting.

“War is confirmed. We will hold another meeting later, so you can come up with a plan to deal with the revolutionary army by then.” ”

...I will follow your orders.”

“And Lord Illuster.”

The Duke shouted, meeting the Emperor’s gaze towards me. He raised the corners of his mouth without saying anything.

The meeting was over. The nobles who had gathered dispersed with serious expressions on their faces, and the conference hall was empty.

The duke, who was supposed to be among them, was facing the emperor in another room.

Still with a smile on his face. The emperor, who was looking at the peacock with fierce eyes, slowly opened his mouth.

“Duke.”

“Yes, Your Majesty.”

“Thanks to you, I was able to catch the mastermind behind the Salvation Church. For this, I would like to express my gratitude.”

“It was not me, but Sir Cruel.”

As expected, it was not so easy to let go. The Emperor quietly frowned and glared directly at the Duke. The Duke also did not lose and faced him with a smiling face.

The two gazes collided in the air.

The emperor was still glaring at the duke for a long time, assuming that no one was looking away, and spat out the words as if he were chewing on them.

“As it happens, the person behind it was someone who was in conflict with the duke within the aristocratic faction.”

“But the aristocratic faction is an aristocrat. It’s green onion. Who would welcome a loss of power? As members of the same aristocratic faction, it’s just a pity.”

That’s funny.

The duke won’t let anyone who goes against him. Since he can’t openly target the emperor faction, he must have picked someone who is annoying within the noble faction. It’s obvious. A little more

. Let me try.

Depending on the person, it may be like pushing them, but if you are a duke, you will definitely get away with it. No matter how much you push them, it will only be like trying to push them.

But even pushing them is helpful now.

“There is an interesting story recently . “I heard that.”

The emperor opened his mouth.

“The emperor is ‘sin’ and the duke is ‘salvation.’”

“It’s nonsense from ignorant people who don’t know anything. The Salvation Church has been wiped out, so do you really need to worry now?”

Chaang!

It was just a moment. The duke closed his mouth and quietly lowered his gaze to see that it was aimed at my neck, then looked back at the emperor. The emperor pulled out the sword of Nemeseus from behind me. He was aiming at the Duke’s neck.

He raised the corner of his mouth in a rare sarcastic way and raised his sword slightly. At the same time, the Duke’s head also rose.

“It’s definitely nonsense. The burden would be closer to a ‘disaster’ than a ‘sin’. Isn’t that right, Duke?”

“....”

As he closed his mouth, the emperor’s expression changed for a moment. He had a murderous expression on his face, as if he had never laughed before, as if he were about to kill him.

“Does he look so funny?” A gloomy voice full of anger falls. . The air was oppressed by the murderous blood coming from the emperor’s body.

Blood was flowing from the wound where the sword had penetrated. The purple eyes went down to check it and then immediately fixed on the emperor. The duke was still smiling.

“Your Majesty is looking at me . You cannot kill.”

Disaster does not discriminate between people. But the emperor in front of you does.

Therefore, you are not a disaster.

That is why I covet your power. Conflicts of conflict are of no use against disaster, but they can against you. “...the Duke often seems to forget that he has already pushed out one duchy.” “Is that possible?”

“

Do you think he would hesitate just because he is the last remaining duchy?” “

That You probably don’t hesitate because of that reason. But even so, Your Majesty cannot kill me. “Even if it’s not that reason, you have many reasons not to kill me.

‘Do you think you can’t kill me?’

‘I can’t kill you.’

Countless glances exchanged. Facing golden eyes full of anger, the Duke smiled proudly. If you kill me, you will be quite troublesome. You will incur opposition from numerous nobles. There is a limit to using force.

You will want to go to war. You want to conquer the continent. To do this, we must first seek internal stability.

There's no way you could kill me like that.

'Even if you aim for it, you'll probably aim for it during war.'

Of course, even that won't be easy.

Do you withdraw your sword or cut it down?

After a long fight, it was the emperor who finally retreated first.

He took the sword away, handed it back to Nemeseus, and chewed it out.

"They said it was a sin, but there was a separate sin."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 69

69. Rolling Wheel (1)

Emperor War Conquest of the Continent Demon World
Watch Sibaal...!

When I returned to the count's residence, I put my face down on the desk in the office and cursed repeatedly.

I can't believe I have to go back to that place full of crazy people!

I couldn't disobey the emperor's orders, and my resolve wasn't strong enough to run away from the hands of the emperor and the devil for the rest of my life, so in the end I raised my head with blank eyes.

'I need to pack my bags.'

I already feel sick to my stomach thinking about having to live with people like time bombs around me again, but what can I do? The opponents are the Emperor and the Demon King. ha ha ha. Ha ha ha ha ha.

...Fuck.

"Ugh..."

"That master...?"

“...?”

“I came to see you after hearing that you came back. Are you hurt?”

A man with an appearance that is not easily seen in this area sticks his head in outside the door, observing.

Black hair and black eyes. Looks closer to a southerner than a northerner.

So... your name was Dan? He followed me from the shaman's village and learned the sword... But why? Is there something wrong?

“No, it's okay. What's going on?”

I immediately straightened my back and responded as if nothing had happened. He was silent for a moment, probably because my attitude was absurd, but then he slowly opened his mouth.

With a bit of hesitation, the opened lips hesitantly spat out the words.

“I...”

“Count!”

Oh my. It seemed like he had made up his mind and opened his mouth.

I clicked my tongue inwardly at him, who had suddenly cut off his words, and then looked at the servant who suddenly barged in.

No separate reprimand was given. Even if it wasn't, that white face is very pitiful. If they scolded me here too, I think

I would die of a heart attack.

Moreover, we, the people who use the count's mansion, try to strictly maintain courtesy towards me.

So, it probably means that something big has happened to the point where even etiquette is forgotten.

...shit.

“Wha-hwa-hwa-hwa-hwa....”

“Wha what?”

“His Royal Highness the Crown Prince has come to visit!”

Oh, His Highness the Crown Prince? Look, it's a big deal.

No, wait a minute.

...The crown prince?!

“Why again!!”

“Hi!”

Why did you come here without any message again?

I jumped up and hit the desk. As I put on my coat to show minimal courtesy, I glanced at the servant next to me who was panicking and chanting ‘I'm sorry’ like a mantra.

“Where is His Majesty the Crown Prince?”

“I'm sorry! Yes? No, he's in the parlor. The governess is serving him...”

For some reason, someone other than Remember came to report, and it turned out that it was because the other person was the crown prince.

Without even hearing any more words from the servant, I hurriedly walked away.

I had completely forgotten about Dan, who was just rolling his eyes and watching me behind me.

***

“Cyn Deonhardt beholds the Empire of the Future.”

“Okay, I’m sorry for coming here so suddenly.”

“no.”

Crown Prince Elpidius smiled faintly as he looked at Honorary Count Deonhardt, who greeted him calmly even though it was a sudden visit.

He was also calmer than usual today.

That’s inevitable because what I’m going to say now is a bit sensitive.

“You’re going to the demon world?”

“ .... ”

At that moment, Deon’s eyes quickly scanned the room.

After confirming that no one was there, the eyes immediately looked directly at the crown prince. Bright red eyes and golden eyes met.

It wasn't until a moment before I looked at the red eyes full of caution that the golden eyes gently opened.

"There's no need to look at it like that. Did you really think I didn't know the secret about you?"

"...."

"I am the next emperor. Given my age, if I become emperor, it will not be through the due process, but rather suddenly taking over the position because Your Majesty had an incident. So, no matter when or when I become emperor. "Isn't it natural to make all preparations thoroughly so that you can lead the empire without any problems?"

In other words, this means that the emperor is sharing all important information.

"...Excuse me."

"No. It's strange that you're not on guard."

Anyway—

I leaned against the back of the chair and crossed my legs.

"The reason I came here is to tell you what Your Majesty couldn't say and to see your face."

"...."

"Shouldn't we take a good look at the face we won't be able to see for a while?"

It may seem like I'm saying the opposite, but it's true.

Honorary Count Hart would have taken care of it without having to tell him this.

Elpidius, who knew that his brain was larger than average, opened his mouth leisurely, confirming his thoughts.

“You may already know, but His Majesty said that if the Demon King decides to go to war, you should return immediately.”

“All right.”

“No matter what happens.”

“....”

“You told me to definitely return.”

Deon looked at the prince blankly.

It's impossible to tell what he's thinking, and his red eyes, which are almost eerie, look motionlessly at Elpidius.

Even Elpidius did not avoid this time. Golden eyes resembling those of a wild beast without any smile meet their gaze.

After a period of silence, it was Deon who retreated first.

“...I'll keep that in mind.”

Contrary to his obedient answer, his eyes shine strangely.

The crown prince quietly watched the eyes that were lowered and hidden silently, then stood up.

“I am always grateful for your hard work.”

***

Elpidius is very interested in Honorary Count Deonhardt.

It has both positive and negative connotations.

Who is Deonhardt?

It is never good. Isn't he the one who had both the title and the title 'Hero' and stopped the Demon King and collected the body of the hero? 'He is also'

the corps commander of the Demon King's army.

Yes, he is a hero of the empire and the corps commander of the Demon King's army at the same time.

That's why he is the next leader . As the emperor, Elpidius had to know more about him.

If I swung the sword without knowing much about it, I could get hurt again.

'I want to have a friendly relationship rather than a coercive one.'

The bond becomes a stronger shackle than anything else.

I don't know what the Emperor thinks, but Elpidius always had Deonhardt's betrayal in mind.

As most of the base is here, it is unlikely, but if there is a 'human world' from over there, 'If we provide an environment and benefits that surpass the advantages of....

"Brother! Did you have a good time meeting Count Hart?"

"...Alethea."

"Except me." I also want to see the Count... but my thoughts stopped there. Immediately, Elpidius with a friendly smile approached my younger brother. .

“I had no choice because I had to talk about something important. “Isn’t that why you became the crown prince?”

“I don’t want that kind of annoying position. “Just do it, brother.”

He ordered the attendant who followed him to prepare a tea table in the garden, and turned to the garden, walking at the same pace as Alethea. He naturally guided her steps and confirmed that there was no one around. He lowered his voice and opened his mouth softly.

“After Uncle Alethea and I, you are next.”

“I know. So, I’m learning everything I need to learn. Brother, why are you so impatient?”

“....”

Was I impatient?

Elpidius fell silent, feeling as if he had somehow hit the nail on the head.

Thinking about it, he had been impatient recently.

The revolutionary army led by Honorary Count Hart previously. In the end, he died without even being able to conquer his stronghold, so he failed to achieve any significant results, and while the revolutionary army was still holding on, my uncle even declared war. Moreover... The silence seemed to be longer than expected, and we arrived at the garden before we knew it. The tea table was prepared

. Elpidius, who sat down and neatly bitten his surroundings, slowly opened his tightly closed lips.

The biggest problem that made him impatient.

“Your uncle is hallucinating.”

The emperor’s condition is not as good as expected.

The emperor is having a nightmare. I knew it right away. I tried to call Tae-ui, but my uncle’s firm refusal forced me to wait and see. I never thought it would lead to hallucinations. In fact, I’ve been having nightmares for quite a long time, so maybe it’s only natural.

The emperor’s nightmares are It started when he ascended to the position of monarch. It became extremely severe during the 8-year war. ‘

In the end, like this...’

When on earth did it start?

No, ‘when’ is not important. The important thing is that even though we know, we do not It was my own ‘action’ of not calling him.

I felt guilty. But I still couldn’t call Tae-ui.

“Huh? No, since when... or before that, did you call Tae-ui?!”

“Your uncle refused.”

“But I can’t just leave it as is!!” ”

How can I break your uncle’s stubbornness?”

What are these people who are already dead?

Since his living uncle was several times more important to him, he visited him again during the day and tried to persuade him again. I mean, I did it right away.

But my uncle was adamant.

“There’s nothing I can do about my uncle’s pathological sense of responsibility.”

“You have to say it right away. “It’s not responsibility, it’s guilt.”

“Yes, guilt.”

To be more precise, it could be said to be a terrible combination of guilt and responsibility.

Elpidius, who remembered his uncle who tried to take responsibility for the dead, sighed quietly and looked at Aletea with a rare, stern expression.

“Okay, Alethea? We don’t have time.”

There are big problems that will arise if you do not rush, but there is no harm in rushing.

From the day he noticed the hallucination problem, the crown prince completed almost all handovers from the emperor. So that if a problem arises, you can immediately take over and continue working.

—At least so that the emperor can run wild on the battlefield to his heart's content without worrying about other issues.

Now all that remains is the question of Deonhardt.

At first, not knowing anything, I approached him thinking I was simply trying to gain my uncle's trust. There would be no harm in building a friendship with him as the crown prince.

However, now that all information has been shared, perspectives have no choice but to change.

'After all, he is a corps commander. A double agent.'

Of course, after that, I approached him casually as usual, but...

today, when my gaze changed and I began to look at him more closely, something subtly bothered me.

'Actually, I should say that I discovered it.'

Elpidius concluded his speech in a muttering manner, thinking about the person whose identity he could not confirm and who had not yet been completely defined, as there was a strange feeling about him.

"...So, Alethea, focus on what you are learning now. I will do my best."

"The situation is such that we must at least stop the war..."

"Has our persuasion ever worked so far?"

“....”

Definitely.

As they said, the two had tried to stop the emperor's actions, which bordered on self-harm, several times.

If I had succeeded back then, things wouldn't have ended up like this.

Alethea's shoulders slumped.

“...I'll try my best...”

If you can't help your uncle directly, you can help him indirectly.

For Aletea and Elpidius, Edoardo Desert is such a precious family that they don't mind turning the world against them.

[I'm sorry.]

I raised my head, remembering my uncle's voice still vivid in my ears.

Unlike that day, an extremely clear and clean sky filled my view.

[It's my fault. I will take full responsibility.]

'No, you don't have to do that.'

What difference will it make if I answer in my mind now?

Elpidius calmly raised the cooled teacup, finally answering in his mind to his uncle's voice, which was apologizing for things that did not need to be apologized for and taking responsibility for things that were not necessary.

A lot of time has passed since then, and while trying to take responsibility for things that their uncle should not have been responsible for, they ended up taking on even bigger responsibilities.

Everyone was young back then. It was just a crime to be young in the imperial palace.

—The tea is bitter.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 70

70. Rolling Wheel (2)

The crown prince left, leaving behind only meaningful words.

After seeing off the crown prince and returning to his office, Deon sat down at his desk and picked up documents as if nothing had happened. Contrary to his calm demeanor, his gaze as he looked at the documents was slightly out of focus.

Deon thought as he stared at a corner of the document with his shiny bright red eyes.

‘What do you know?’

And how much do you know?

What did the emperor intend to convey such words?

“...master?”

“ ... ”

He stiffened for a moment at the voice that broke his thoughts, and then put down the document he was holding with a small sigh.

How preoccupied would I have been to not even notice its existence?

I looked at Dan with an expressionless face.

As his dull gaze was directed straight in this direction, Dan, who had been standing up from the sofa and carefully examining him, flinched slightly and took a step back.

“...Are you okay?”

His voice was trembling slightly.

While I was staying at this mansion and learning various skills, I was familiar with the story about the owner's personality going back and forth between extremes.

In fact, I saw that side of me firsthand when I immediately asked him to take me away.

‘What on earth happened?’

But now it is on a different level than then.

The atmosphere that was secretly flowing out as if I was feeling uncomfortable was sharpened and aimed in all directions as if it would tear everything apart.

How else can I explain the feeling as if countless blades were pointed at me as soon as I could speak?

“...I thought you said you had something to say.”

“yes yes!”

“say it.”

“It's no different...”

Is it really okay to say this to him in this mood?

Dan, who had been pondering whether or not to say the words he was going to say over and over again in his mouth, eventually couldn't resist the glare from Deon, so he closed his eyes tightly and opened his mouth.

"I need you to lend me some money."

"...what?"

A voice full of absurdity returned.

What happened like this must definitely come to an end. If we stop like this, we will only end up with a huge misunderstanding.

Dan added hastily.

"It's not that I'm greedy for money. I just..."

"...?"

"...I want to make money."

Deon's head tilted.

He slowly got up from his seat while silently listening to Dan's words that he would give me all the profits he received by rolling the money.

He walks around the office desk, sits down on the sofa across from Dan, slowly crosses his legs, tilts his head, and touches the corner of his mouth.

It was an action that seemed innocent at first glance, but the voice that came out next was so low that it gave me the creeps.

“Did you know how to make money from the beginning?”

“...no.”

“That would mean you learned it here. Isn’t that strange? What you wanted to learn must have been swordsmanship. Did I mishear, or did the butler disobey me?”

Bright red eyes shine blood red.

Dan stopped breathing for a moment at the unique look in his eyes that was secretly revealed by a crazy person.

Eyes that are a mixture of all kinds of dark, thick, and creepy emotions that make you feel like your breathing is constricting just by looking at them.

Even though he stopped breathing, a smile began to bloom on his lips.

It’s not a fake smile. Deon’s eyes narrowed at the sincere smile, but Dan couldn’t pay attention.

Because I was really happy.

‘If it’s a disaster, it has to be like this.’

After all, I wasn’t wrong.

As Dan, who had blown away any remaining doubt, was trembling from uncontrollable emotions, Deon uncrossed his legs and leaned forward.

Like a wild beast heading towards its prey, I lean on the table and push my upper body beyond it, bringing my face close to Dan’s face.

The red eyes that filled Dan's field of vision slowly hid between his bent eyelids.

"I wondered what your purpose was. You said you would follow me, but you didn't expect anything from me."

"...."

"It's the same even now. All you asked me to do was to make some money? Are you giving me all the profits you make from it?"

This does not even fall into the level of 'desiring'.

I liked the emotion in his eyes and accepted it, but that didn't mean I thought nothing of it.

There is no way you would follow a complete stranger without any reason.

Deon knew this truth very well, so he made two assumptions.

"There are two guesses so far."

"...."

"What you are asking for is so great that you may be trying to build trust first—" "...."

"

"Or perhaps following me itself is your goal."

And now I could vaguely feel his smile.

Deon slowly straightens his lowered upper body and returns to his original position, leaning against the back of the sofa.

There was a meaningful smile on his lips.

“I won’t pry into how you tricked the residents of this mansion and what you learned from them.”

“...!”

“You said you wanted to make more money than that, right?”

***

Remember came in, carrying papers at his side.

He greeted me in an uncomplicated manner, as I was in a daze as I had not yet recovered from the shock of the sudden visit of the crown prince, and then suddenly said something out of the blue.

“Calling this old man means that a conclusion has been reached.”

“?”

“I think the conclusion was made to invest, is that correct?”

“...invest?”

I feel like the spirit of running away from home has come back. Are you suddenly investing?

While I was losing my mind about this, I was suddenly struck by lightning.

Even I, who am not interested in investing, know very well that if you make a mistake in investing, you will end up in trouble, but what is this?... I was about to ask in more detail, but someone interrupted me.

“Yes, Master said he would entrust the money to me.”

It’s a surprise! Did you say Dan? Since when have you been here? Or rather...

I said that?!

“I see. It’s not a bad decision. I personally confirmed Dan’s skills.”

These people are talking about something that seems very important without me. Should I act like I’m crazy and step in and stop him right now?

Just as I was rolling my eyes trying to understand the situation, something caught my eye.

This is the document stuck to Remember’s side.

It’s not because the amount is crazy large. Rather...

“That document... seems like a small amount...”

“Ah, this is what you mean. It’s all thanks to that man named Dan.”

It’s Dan again.

Unlike in the beginning, when he was quite wary of what had happened while I was away, he looked at Dan with warm eyes and started saying things that Remember had not asked him to do.

“After looking at the backlog of documents, he said he wanted to help and asked for guidance, so I only taught him the basics and he did the job very well.”

As he says that, he looks at me for some reason.

For some reason, I feel like I can hear a voice saying, ‘More than the Count.’ I guess it’s just my mood.

So was it favorable?! Because there are fewer documents to process?

“We even went so far as to pick out inefficient systems and change them to be more efficient. This is the result.”

His finger pointed to the stack of papers in front of me.

Unlike before, there is a large amount of documents that can be easily processed in 4-5 hours.

...no way.

I raised my head. I made eye contact with Remember, who had a happy expression on his face.

Instead of asking directly because I was worried that I might be disappointed if I had expectations, I asked cautiously with my eyes.

‘Is this really the end?’

‘Yes that’s right.’

“...pass.”

Those words just came out of nowhere.

I understand why Remember was so friendly.

This guy must be caught! Anyone who misses has to catch him and beat him up.

“So... do you want me to leave the money to you?”

“yes.”

“Okay. Do whatever you want. Remember will allocate the budget.”

“Ah...! Thank you. I will never disappoint you.”

“Then go out.”

It doesn't matter whether you succeed or fail. Remember will give you enough money that you won't suffer even if you lose it.

Rather, seeing as Remember isn't leaving, I feel like I have something to say.

Sure enough, no sooner had Dan left, saying thank you until the end, than Remember put down the thinly-organized documents on the desk in his office.

Even though the amount has decreased, I still hate paperwork. I sighed softly and sat down in front of him.

As I picked up the top document, I immediately heard Remember's explanation.

“The handover of Hart territory has been completed.”

“Ah...”

Is this what you wanted to say? Immediately my expression darkened.

From the subject of being taken away to the handover being done according to the procedures. I feel dirtier. It's as if I agreed.

'No, it's true that I agreed, but still.'

I didn't want to hear any more, so I just nodded and changed the subject.

Still, since I am a butler, I have to tell him where I am going.

I can't say I'm going to the devil world, but I also can't just disappear without a word.

"I'm going to be away again for a while."

"Is that so? It seems like you've finally regained your former self, but it's a shame."

You say that, but why are you looking at my dark circles? Is this fatigued look my true self?

Still, considering they didn't ask me where I was going and for what purpose, I should say I was glad.

I touched my darkened eyes again and sighed.

"We will leave as soon as we are ready. So please get ready as soon as possible."

"Can I keep the estimated travel time the same as last time?"

"yes."

"All right."

Remember, who was about to leave, let out an exclamation of 'Ah' and turned back, as if he had forgotten something.

"And that man named Dan whom the Count brought in."

"...yes."

The one that made me invest.

He said you only learn swords, but he also taught you paperwork, and if that wasn't enough, he made you invest.

Of course, I'm not saying that it's a bad thing that he learned accounting, but when I think about it again, I feel like I was hooked. Anyway, it's a bit of a strange feeling.

"As the Count ordered, we monitored him to see if there was anything suspicious, but we didn't see any unusual behavior."

"yes?"

"I'm not sure if it's because we're still building trust or if there really is nothing..."

"Yes?"

"In this old man's personal opinion, I think it's probably the latter."

No, wait a minute. I ordered it? Surveillance? whenever?

And the deacon's 'personal opinion'. This is literally just my personal opinion. The goodwill is dripping from your eyes.

"He's quite talented in swordsmanship. I heard he's not a genius, but he's a genius."

This is almost like a grandfather who is infatuated with his grandchild.

How could Remembrance be made like this with just paperwork? Is he that great or am I just that bad at doing paperwork...?

"Above all, where he clearly excels is in paperwork. I'm sure you know this."

"Ah yes."

After seeing the reduced documentation, I even invested.

It's a bit uncomfortable, but I have no regrets. We must capture these talents. Especially if all he wants is to entrust a portion of the money to him.

...But a little while ago, I thought Remember would be able to sort things out on his own...but now that I look at it, I feel a little uneasy.

"Anyway, so this guy named Dan seems like a pretty nice kid."

"...."

They're not giving you a lot of money just because you're pretty, right...?

I couldn't help but look suspiciously at my foolish grandson, who was late.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 71

71. Rolling Wheel (3)

It's a bit unsettling, but Remember is undeniably a great butler.

I packed my luggage that the butler had secretly and quickly prepared for me, put on my travel robe, and went down the stairs of the mansion.

When we arrived at the first floor, Remember, who was waiting at the entrance holding the reins of a horse, handed us arrows and a bow with a rubber ball instead of a point along with the reins. I accepted it silently.

If you suddenly use a bow and arrow, you're going to be in a lot of trouble from now on.

As expected, it was when I had just gotten on the horse.

"Count niiiim!!"

"I heard you're leaving? You're leaving us behind?!"

"Isn't it too much for you to leave without even saying goodbye!!"

"No, more than that, I heard that His Majesty is taking charge of us again. Can't you at least prevent that?!"

Guys dressed in white knightly uniforms are rushing in from afar.

...Let's bounce.

That's a crazy dog. I don't even want to imagine being bitten by a crazy dog.

I quickly kicked the horse in the stomach. Since the front door was already open, there was no difficulty in escaping. Thank you Remember!

But they are not the ones to give up here.

I left the city smoothly and was running through the fields when, as expected, I began to hear the sound of several horses' hooves behind me.

"Bag's agniyyyyyyyyyy!"

"Stand there!"

"If we stop obediently now, there will be no bloodshed!"

"Catch it!!"

"Get the fuck out of here, you crazy people!!"

A thick layer of dust rises from behind. I screamed inwardly at the sight that resembled a puffy cloud.

Those crazy people! Where is Lien doing? Your master is now in danger!

"You guys! Don't you stop right now?!"

"...ah."

It was there. They just didn't listen.

I looked behind me with a tired expression as I saw the horse chasing me with fearsome force at a little distance from the stampeding herd of horses.

I touch the quiver of arrows I packed a little while ago. From there, I took out an arrow.

I put an arrow on the bowstring, and without slowing down my running speed, I turned my upper body and aimed at the head of the horse running in front.

Since there is a rubber ball instead of an arrowhead, there shouldn't be any problem. If you're not careful, the guy above you might fall off the horse, but considering how monster-like they are, I don't think it's that dangerous.

Either you will avoid danger on your own, or other people will take care of it.

"Count!! I don't like the emperor or the imperial palace! I'm scared of both your majesty and the general!"

Who is that guy going to kill along with him?

'Oops, I made a mistake!'

I tried to hit the horse's head, but I ended up hitting the guy's forehead!

The head of the guy who could have been accused of insulting the imperial family was thrown back. The hand that was tightly holding the reins suddenly loosened and the body fell to the side.

It was a dizzying situation where he could have been trampled by the hooves of a horse coming right behind him, but there was a hand who lifted him up before he fell to the ground.

“Wow! Gotcha!”

“Oh nice!”

“Haha....”

“Haha....”

“...It’s disgusting, so why don’t you get out of the way now?”

“Do you think I like being on your lap?! Get out of the way! I’ll take the reins!”

While one side was having a sweet relationship(?), the other side was in chaos.

The path of a horse that lost its owner became entangled with that of other horses.

Sometimes they get caught in front of a good horse running in a straight line, and sometimes they collide with another horse and fall, so it was natural for the other horses following them to fall at the same time.

“Uggyaaaaa!!”

“Whoo! I dodged it!”

“Did you see? My falling technique skills?”

On the floor, those who landed safely are proudly avoiding those who fall on top of them, shouting,

“Idiots, I’m going first!”

“Ugh!”

The other guys holding the reins jump over them and continue to chase me.

If it were the guys I knew, the moment one of them fell, they wouldn’t have been able to think of any other way and they would all have fallen together, but to be able to react like that...?!

Of course, it’s only a small part of it, but still. What on earth did the imperial palace teach you?

I’m glad Remember brought plenty of arrows.

Praising the deacon’s excellent preparation, I pulled the string again.

***

Deonhardt secretly received royal orders and left the Count’s residence.

Duke Stave Illuster, who heard this news through an informant during the conversation, glanced at the other person.

I suddenly heard the information in front of him. If your prediction is correct, your reaction will probably be right now....

“You said it was Deon Hart. I guess we can use this opportunity to find out where he is going.”

also.

“I’ll have to add four people.”

“We cannot afford to cause trouble to you, Your Excellency. Since you have been indebted to us so far, we will assign someone from our side this time.”

The Duke’s eyes widened at the intended reaction. Sinister purple eyes were hiding behind the eyelids.

“I’m sorry. I don’t remember doing anything worth talking about.” “Now that you say that, I have nothing to say. Anyway... I was getting on your nerves a little while ago. Can I ask how you got that wound on your neck?”

“Ah.”

I reflexively touched my bandaged neck.

“It’s nothing. I have a child who was a bit irritable.”

“Do you have a nephew?”

“Well, I’m talking about what you said earlier.”

A topic that is not nutritious . There was no reason to continue. The duke blatantly changed the topic.

The other person was not particularly interested, so he obediently followed the changed topic.

“Ah, you mean the story about the emperor declaring the conquest of the continent? I don’t dare doubt your Excellency, but I still have to ask you why.”

“ .... ”

“Why are you telling me not to move?”

The man sitting across from the duke asked, adjusting his posture as if he would listen if he told me the reason.

As if he is not the leader of the revolutionary army for nothing, the solemn atmosphere characteristic of a person leading people dominates the room.

The kind of atmosphere I was familiar with from the emperor.

The duke, who narrowed his eyes at the very atmosphere he could not achieve even if he tried hard, soon smiled and began to sing in a soft voice.

As if he was trying to regain the initiative he had lost, the duke's unique atmosphere began to gradually encroach on the entire room.

“The revolutionary army must not move in earnest until the Emperor has eaten half the continent.”

“So why on earth...!”

“When war is ripe. So when the emperor can no longer stop the war at will, that is the right time.”

The position of leader of the revolutionary army is not something that can be held by a fool. The man, Daniel, kept his mouth shut.

By the time the empire has consumed half of the continent, other kingdoms will have already moved on. Even if you were slow to make a decision and stayed still, the situation would have started to move at that point.

Because he must have felt threatened. There is no way we can just ignore this situation. This means that even if the emperor is satisfied and wants to step down, he will not be able to do so easily.

In order to replenish the troops lost in the previous war, the emperor will draw most of the troops except the minimum troops to protect it from various places, including the imperial palace.

At that time, even if revolutionary forces run rampant within the empire, they will not be easily suppressed. Because there won't be enough people to stop them.

"...As expected of you, Duke. Please excuse me."

Daniel, convinced, took a step back and Starbe moved immediately.

There must be a revolutionary army following Deon Hardt by now. It would be nice if it ended well like this, but the emperor can't be that easy.

[Did you say you were leaving now? No matter what, flies will be attracted to it. Take care of them and come back. Instead of chasing after Honorary Count Hart, you should just kill the flies and come back.]

He did not induce the revolutionary army to move for no reason. The revolutionary army that follows Deonhardt will soon die.

I feel sorry for the soon-to-be-dead revolutionary soldier, but there is no grand reason for doing such a meaningless act.

What he is aiming for is none other than screwing over the emperor.

'I'd be quite upset if the person I sent to clean up didn't come back.'

Dead or alive? If he lived, he would have betrayed him, so even if he was rejected, if he died, he would have died after completing the matter, or he would have died before that, etc.

The Duke grinned, thinking of the emperor who was quite upset, and gave an order to Cruel.

[If you follow the traces of the revolutionary army, there will be someone who receives orders from the emperor to watch over Deon Hardt. Kill him. And if you are in a position to chase after Deon Hardt, check where he is going and then come.]

Pugh!

Since the revolutionary army was being killed in an ongoing manner, it was not difficult to find the 'man who was watching my back'. Cruel, who killed the masked man as instructed by the Duke, raised his head.

As a result, the blood that splattered on his cheek rolled down his jaw line and fell on the floor, but his gaze remained unwavering and focused on one place.

In the distance, Deon can be seen walking into the forest after returning the horse he rode.

Is it because they are afraid that traces will remain?

Cruel, who had been staring at the back for a while, stepped into the forest just before Deon disappeared between the trees.

With just enough distance for Deon to come into view, Cruel also disappeared between the trees of the forest and I wonder how long it would have been since then

...

Cruel came out of the forest.

The same attitude and expression as usual. Green Eyes, not knowing what he was thinking, glances back at the forest I came from.

And for a moment, Cruel turned around. He finds a horse that was tied up some distance away, mounts it, and runs towards the place he needs to return to.

Perhaps because autumn had arrived, the wind became sharper and hit him harshly.

....

"You're here. Did you handle your work well?"

"yes."

"So did you find out where Deonhardt was headed?"

" .... "

" .... "

"...By the time I finished the job, Deon Hardt had already left. I'm sorry."

***

“He left.”

“huh.”

“He left.”

“They abandoned us.”

“I even have a bruise on my forehead!”

“Looking at your mouth, it looks like you have some time to spare. Let’s add 10 more laps of the training ground.”

“Ah, Captain!!”

“We’re going to die!”

“It’s noisy! If you keep talking like that, we’ll add 10 more laps, so shut up and run!”

Lien, who spoke fiercely to silence the knights, sighed and looked up at the cloudy sky.

The dark sky, which looks like it’s going to rain at any moment, seems to represent her feelings, making it even more depressing.

Lien sighed again and lowered his head. The two clear eyes, as if they had been depressed for a while, were filled with solemnity and shined resolutely.

The reason my lord left without saying a word of greeting was because I was so untrustworthy.

So....

‘I will become a more trustworthy knight until the day we meet again.’

The firm resolve of a knight that no one could hear was scattered silently in the air.

***

Salvation Church collapsed. There was no salvation.

Shiia sat down in front of the empty lot that had burned down, leaving only the remains, and stared into space in confusion. His eyes were blurry, as if he was drawing the Salvation Church when he was fine.

Tuk. Fighting.

Cold raindrops hit her body. The rain that fell one or two drops soon became a torrential downpour, hitting my entire body violently, as if to remind me to come to my senses.

Even in a downpour that felt like a torrential downpour, Shiia could not easily come to her senses. Because Salvation Church was going to be her first and final resting place.

There existed a world where warm bread and clean water were provided consistently and people did not have to be wary of those around them.

I feel like I had a warm dream for a moment. It would have been better if it had been a dream. Shiia couldn't help but despair even more because the remnants in front of her were showing her that it was not a dream.

Because now I can't even dream.

I don't want to do anything.

I wish I could just die like this.

A child who had let go of everything saw someone's legs stopping.

"Sia."

"...."

"How long will it be like this?"

"...."

"...Please Shiia."

Please at least give me an answer.

A squeezing voice came out as if pleading.

Looking at Siia, who was still silent, Paul squeezed and released the collar near her thighs with a dark expression.

An overwhelming feeling of regret came over me. At that time, Salvation Church should not have been introduced.

It might have been best to just live life as usual. Such meaningless assumptions run through my mind again and again.

'...No no.'

Those bastards of the Murderous Knights, not Deonhardt, not the Emperor...!

Yes, if it weren't for the emperor. If he hadn't meddled, the current situation wouldn't have happened.

In the end, the emperor is the problem.

The problem is high-ranking people who clumsily intervene without knowing anything about slums.

Anger appeared in Paul's eyes. The anger grew deeper and turned into fierce hatred, which soon became cold and hardened with a sense of duty.

"I joined the revolutionary army."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 72

72. Rolling Wheel (4)

Only then did Shiia raise her head.

Paul bit his lip once, looking at me with empty eyes that seemed to be looking at me but not seeing me, and a distorted smile appeared on his face. A bright voice came out with effort.

“come with me.”

Be friendly, but don't become attached. Was it?

Paul sneered as he remembered the unspoken rules that circulated in the slums.

‘It's already too late.’

A kid younger than me who I first found in the slums.

At first it was curiosity and interest, but soon it turned into a specific emotion that stuck to a corner of my heart.

Is this what it would feel like to have a younger sibling?

Dangerous. Even before I could define what I was feeling, Paul could instinctively feel it.

That's why I kept my distance. Remembering the rule of not giving affection to others, I hovered around them and only occasionally helped them when they seemed dangerous.

Even if that were the case, what use would it be?

Now I know. What is this feeling?

I had already become attached to this child even before we distanced ourselves, but now there was no reason to ignore this child.

I extended my hand to Shiia.

"Let's go together, Siia."

"...."

"Please...."

" "...."

There is no answer. Paul met Shiia's eyes and slowly withdrew his hand with a stiff expression.

He lowers his head as if trying to hide his expression. My lips, which I had bitten hard to control my emotions, slowly softened after a few seconds.

"...okay."

"...."

"You can either keep living like that. If you don't go, you'll only lose out."

The voice could not be raised in the end and came out as a muttering.

After finishing speaking, Paul turns around. I walk as if I'm angry like I once did.

Unlike back then, Shiiia didn't chase after him and he never came back to help him.

Paul, who was walking slowly until the end, stopped in front of a man. As I was staring at the nose of my shoe with my mouth shut, a friendly voice fell over my head.

"You came alone? "Didn't you say you were bringing your younger brother?"

Not being immune to affection, I eventually raised my head. When I met eyes that were as kind as my voice, tears poured out like a lie.

"Neuung..."

"...Oh my."

Clear liquid drips at my feet. Daniel, startled, quickly took out a handkerchief and wiped Paul's face.

He felt so bad that the child, who was still so young, had already experienced so much in this world and was quietly shedding tears without making a sound, so he couldn't say anything and just wiped away the child's tears before gently hugging the child.

"I'm sorry. I'm sorry." I said something wrong. I made a mistake. "I should have asked the question wisely, right?"

"Sob!"

"It's okay, it's okay..."

I slowly patted the back of the child who was shivering as if he was unfamiliar with someone's warmth. The tremors are gradually subsiding, as if it is ineffective.

"Yeah, yeah, it'll be okay."

"...Ugh."

"What if your younger brother doesn't follow you? You can become stronger and protect him, right?"

"...Yes...."

A voice that seems to be crawling.

Daniel, who checked Paul's face to see if he had still not calmed down, smiled and took a step back.

It seems like shame is coming to me later. After checking his bright red face again, he held back his laughter and opened his mouth.

"Then shall we go?"

***

As always, under the dark sky with three moons, Lirinel, commander of the 11th Corps of the Demon King's Army, was sitting on the castle wall, shaking his legs with a sullen expression.

Unfortunately for the adjutant, her frustration was now at its peak.

That's because no one who wants to come is coming, and only other people are coming in droves!

In the first place, the entrance to the Demon King's Castle is rare and even regular.

Unscheduled entry means that the person is either an intruder or a high-ranking official who is allowed to freely enter the Demon King's Castle.

A representative example of a 'high-ranking position' would be 'corps commander', so he rushed out whenever there was a reaction to the barrier erected around the Demon Castle... '9th corps commander Trover and 5th corps commander Orel

. And Orel's adjutant Dernivan... was.'

I was still disappointed, but I was even more upset when Trover broke the castle wall with his body and entered without even opening the door, saying he would use magic to get through.

Damn you, that's magic! They just broke it in with force! I definitely said that if you can break through my barrier with 'magic', give it a try!

'Oel brought something strange from somewhere and tried to talk to me, so I ran away first...' It's okay to list out interesting information I learned, but if I say something wrong, I keep asking 'Why?' Because you will have to be baptized.

Also, the conversation with her never ends.

'Dernivan doesn't know how to accept that personality.'

Ah, I miss you, Demon....

I was just looking up at the night sky while drawing a picture of Demon like that. At some point, Lirinel widened her eyes and jumped up.

There was a reaction to the barrier. The direction is North Gate!

The place where you are now is the western wall, so it's not that far away.

No matter how many times she tried in vain, she couldn't help but feel the glimmer of hope that had come back to life. Lirinel immediately grabbed the broom next to her and jumped down the castle wall.

A strong wind greets her, and her small body approaches the floor at an alarming speed.

Just before colliding with the floor, she got on the broom, quickly turned around and flew up.

'That's right, I was scolded by the Demon King for using magic carelessly.'

Even when greeting Orl and Trover, I flew away with magic and got scolded.

Because the reaction of the barrier is not only known to the caster, but also to the guards. If you wait a little bit, the other person's identity will be reported anyway, so it's a waste.

Magic is breaking the rules of the world. A world that cannot tolerate blatant violation of rules sends a hero.

In the end, the more magic you use, the closer you get to the time when the hero is born, but only the Demon King knows how much is left.

The Demon King probably felt that time had shortened a little with this magic.

Lirinel, remembering the cold expression of the Demon King, shrugged her shoulders and then straightened them as if she had never done that before.

‘So this time I used a broom as a medium!’

If the opponent this time is Demon, wouldn’t it be okay for the Demon King to get over it?

While I was thinking about this and that, I arrived at the North Gate.

A little further out of the Demon King’s Castle from the North Gate, Lirinel busily looked around to find the person to whom the barrier had responded.

There was no need to wander around for that long.

In the distance, from the direction of the forest, someone strides towards the castle gate in a straight line.

It was not a black robe, which was someone’s symbol, but a common travel robe, but it was not difficult to think of it as someone.

It was the same for the gatekeepers.

“No way...!”

“Don’t panic, just relax! If you make a mistake, we will die today.”

There were more than a few people who died because they were offended while interrogating the corps commander.

Even if it were other corps commanders, it would be serious, so why is it that 0 corps commander has the least amount of information?

Of course, since he is wearing a robe, it is still only an estimate, but his one and only life is too dangerous to leave everything to such a flimsy hope.

If the author is really Commander 0, I have no idea how to deal with him, so in the end, there is only one thing I can do.

Let's act wisely!

First of all, follow the rules so that no flaws are found, and if that person shows even the slightest sign of discomfort during the inspection, just let them go.

'But please, if it weren't for Commander 0...'

In the meantime, he reached in front of the gatekeepers and pulled back the hood of his robe.

As a result, their simple wishes were cruelly trampled.

White hair is revealed under the moonlight, and blood-red eyes look directly at them.

I've never seen it before, but it looks familiar.

Even in the Demon King's Castle, he only stayed in the inner city, so I had never seen his face in person, but I had heard of his appearance so I could not help but notice him.

"Daemon Arut."

“I confirmed it.”

0 Corps Commander Daemon Arut.

For the demons, the object of respect and fear has returned.

And there was someone screaming silently in the sky.

‘Demonnniiiiim!!’

***

There was a bit of trouble with crazy dogs when we left, but we arrived at the Demon King Castle safely.

As expected, as it was a demon world, the corps commanders were constantly hunting monsters, and yet I had to encounter numerous monsters... With my fingertips, I gently touched the brand on the side of my neck above my collarbone.

A location tracking spell engraved by the Demon King himself.

In a way, it is natural that the demons avoided it thanks to this magic imbued with the demon lord’s energy, so I think it can be seen as a kind of extreme pass.

‘Anyway, I think I felt eyes on me before I entered the demon world...’

It seemed like there was a bit of noise in the back...

‘Is it because of my mood?’

I arrived at the Demon King’s Castle safely without any major incidents, so it was probably just my mood.

It's been a while since I've been to the Demon World, so I guess I'm really nervous.

Now that I think about it, I was so nervous that I spoke informally to the gatekeepers a little while ago. Fortunately, I moved on without complaining... but honestly, I was nervous.

However, speaking without shaking your voice was the limit.

The demon world, which I had barely gotten used to while I was in the empire, became awkward again. No, I got scared!

'It will probably take some time to get used to it, so don't encounter the corps commanders for the time being...'

"Daemon!!"

Hey! It's a surprise!

A little boy fell from the sky with a broom.

I was secretly frustrated by the appearance of a familiar face. Why? The only faces I'm familiar with in the demon world are dangerous people.

'No, there's no way there are people in the demon world who aren't dangerous in the first place.'

11th Corps Commander Ririnel.

Feeling fortunate that she was the least fearful of all the corps commanders, I opened my mouth to her as if nothing had happened.

"Long time no see."

“Yes! It’s been a while! It’s late, but I heard that when you were dispatched to defend the city, you not only did it perfectly, but even completely wiped out the monsters! You’re a demon after all!”

“Ah yes.”

I heard so.

I’ll tell you, my memory was gone at that time. I lost my memory after drinking, and when I came to, I found myself vomiting blood.

According to what Ed, the adjutant, and Ben, the doctor, said, he was attacked while trying to fight his way through the monsters and was blown 2 meters away.

“Oh, that’s right! Are you any more injured than that?”

“...?”

“Well... I was worried when I received a signal that the necklace I gave you was broken. I’m glad you’re safe.”

“Oh, I see... not yes?”

necklace?

“Ah ah! Of course, I didn’t doubt Demon’s skills... I just...” ”

No, that’s not it...”

Now that I think about it, the necklace that Lirinel gave me disappeared at some point, right? If you look roughly at the time, it seems to have been before we even went to the Empire...

probably at the border with the human world, where we went because a new hero had appeared. It looks like it was lost in the chaos there.

But it was broken. Didn't they say that it would definitely save their life at least once? There's no way it could break that easily.

...Anyway, it's better than saying I lost it.

"...It was very useful. Thank you."

"Go... ahhh no! !! Jejeje! I'll make it again! If you need anything, please tell me as much as you want!"

What

are you scared of? I guess I took a step back without realizing it. Ririnel, who had an expression of "Oops," quickly gathered her emotions, cleared her throat, and changed the topic. "How was the mission

? Oh, this is just asking for your thoughts. Trying to find out what mission you were given..."

"I was tired."

"Huh?"

I was tired. In particular, the eradication of the Salvation Church was truly terrible.

"They created a fake religion and tried to do something. "I met people who blindly believed in that and put it out there."

"...?"

Ah, the demon world doesn't have the concept of religion?

Actually, demons only believe in and follow their father, the demon lord...

It's not really a secret that I went to the human world. It doesn't really matter as long as you don't know that you're on a mission, but it's a hassle to explain.

However, looking at this child's questioning eyes, it's not easy to explain it. In the end, I couldn't help but explain it in an easy to understand way, and she nodded. He said,

"Ah... that's stupid. Rather than trusting such meaningless things, it would be better to trust Demon..."

"Yes... yes?!"

"Huh...? Now that I think about it, I guess this is good? Demonism... Demonism..."

"Hey...?"

I think you're muttering something very ominous just now.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 73

73. Back to the Demon World (1)

“Lirinel...?”

“Oh yes! It’s nothing, Demon!”

“It doesn’t seem like it’s nothing...”

“Hehe, but what is that?”

“ .... ”

“Oh, of course, if it’s mission-related, you don’t have to say anything...!”

I’m not shutting up about that right now, am I?

But what can I do against a corps commander? In the end, I sighed and unpacked the luggage I was carrying.

To be honest, I was quite surprised when I unpacked my luggage to take out food.

What on earth does Remember know?...

“Wow, it’s a cookie?! I’ve never seen anything like this before!”

They even brought me some pretty nice souvenirs.

Except for its shape, it is a cookie that can be easily eaten even in the Demon King's Castle. Lirinel's eyes sparkle as she looks at me, as if she is fascinated by the fact that this is her first time seeing it.

Well, it's not that I don't understand that reaction. I guess so. It's a very pretty flower-shaped cookie that doesn't exist in the Demon World.

To get some favor, I handed the bag of cookies to Lirinel.

"It's a gift."

"Oh...? Really?! Thank you!"

At times like this, I really feel like a helpless child.

"Oh my god, what a tribute...! I never thought a day like this would come in my life.... "

"?"

Although it seems like I say strange things sometimes.

He looked so pure and happy that it was hard to believe he was the commander of the Demon King's army. He took out a cookie and put it in his mouth, and then he started walking.

The nearby gatekeepers had been keeping an eye on us since earlier. It's probably not because of me, a human with no magic power, but probably because of Lirinel. Although he may seem like a child at first glance, he is ultimately a corps commander.

True to my intention of leaving the spot, Lirinel immediately followed me.

“Are you going straight to the Demon King?”

“...I guess so.”

I don't want to go, but what can I do? I have no choice but to go.

Lirinel, unaware of my speed, smiled brightly and nodded as if everything went well.

“I'll guide you to the shortest route!”

***

Unlike the other gardens of the Demon King's Castle, access to the central garden is always restricted. The only people allowed to enter are the Demon King, the corps commander, and those permitted by the Demon King himself.

However, for a long time, someone visited the central garden, which had been neglected because neither the Demon King nor the corps commanders visited often.

“The Empire attacked the Kingdom of Ireon?”

The Demon King asked as he sat in front of the table in the middle of the garden and lazily lifted the tea.

“It will not simply stop there. The Emperor's goal is to conquer the continent. The Kingdom of Ireon is only the cornerstone for that.”

A man with golden hair as brilliant as the sunlight, with pointy ears and pure white skin, answered. Blue green eyes looked directly at the Demon King.

As anyone would expect, the person in front of you who does not look like a demon is a completely different race from demons. The same was true for everyone else here.

Races that are neither demons nor humans but only appear in books somewhere.

Let me clarify one thing at this point: the original name of this place where the devil exists and where three moons rise is not the Demon World. 'Demon Realm' is simply a name given because demons are most widely distributed and occupy the largest area.

A long time ago, before the 'demon race' was even born—numerous races lived here. The name of this place at the time was 'Abyss'.

The name that seemed to have been forgotten is still alive. What does that mean?

—There are still other races remaining in the Demon World, or rather, the Abyss.

"What do you like?"

The demon king raised his eyebrows slightly as he put down a sip of tea on the table.

"There's no way someone like the Fairy King would come all the way here and lie, so let's believe him. But what I'm curious about is why you came to me and said that. Aren't you obviously not interested in the human world?"

"...don't think that we are stupid just because we have recently changed generations. We are responsible for each clan. We know that once the empire conquers the continent, this will be the next place.”

To be precise, they will be targeting the ‘demons of the demon world’.

If humans begin to set foot here in the name of extermination of demons, it will only be a matter of time before other races become aware of their existence.

In that case, they will be next after the demons.

From the perspective of the Fairy King, who values the flow of the world and nature, he cannot be pleased with the demons, who are nothing more than an ‘error in the world’, but the stability of the clan is more important than his disgust for them, so he had no choice but to come here like this.

“So don’t die?”

“It means don’t cause harm to my clan by dying needlessly.”

The Demon King chuckled at the cold words.

However, even for a moment, the laughter disappears and a strong pressure weighs down the entire garden.

“Okay, that’s all good, but can’t you speak more politely? I know that the fairies hate the demons, but even so, there is no blood on his head—” The 120-year-old fairy king, who had no blood on his head, gently bit his lip. The Demon King, who was looking at him with emotionless eyes, turned his head.

Dwarf Chief, Mermaid Queen, Vampire Queen.

The leaders of each tribe, who were 700 to 800 years old, were struggling to survive under extreme pressure.

“Since I am in the position of an equal ‘chief,’ I don’t want any honorifics. Can’t you just stop talking in such a cocky way? Anyway, things these days are...”

“....”

Clicking his tongue and shaking his head, the Demon King glanced at those who were unable to respond due to the pressure and sighed. “...That’s it

. What are we going to do with children?”

The pressure disappeared.

The Fairy King frowned as if his pride was hurt, but the Demon King pretended not to notice and stood up. There is more important work right now than educating foolish children. Because it just appeared.

“You said the empire attacked the Kingdom of Ireon, right? That’s good.”

The location tracking brand I engraved announced that ‘he’ had arrived here.

“The informant who was dispatched to the human world has just returned.”

“I know that ‘informant’.”

Racial characteristics . As if he wasn’t going to disappear easily, the Fairy King continued to maintain his cocky tone and continued,

“He’s from a human. It is very suitable to be used as a spy, but before that, there is one thing I would like to point out.”

....”

“Is that person trustworthy?”

“...Well.”

I walked leisurely and entered the garden entrance door. The Demon King smiled while putting his hand on the.

“As long as he is here.”

“....”

“He will be very reliable.”

***

“Welcome. Even so, I had a lot of things I wanted to ask, but I’m glad you came.” The Demon King welcomed Deon with open arms and touched his collarbone as if brushing against him, and naturally began to lead him somewhere. Deon’s eyes were obediently drawn into his hand, touching the missing brand. At some point, it became thinner.

The direction he was heading towards was none other than the central garden.

The central garden is close to a greenhouse in order to easily control the entry and exit of outsiders. Unlike other gardens, access is controlled, so it is a place where even the devil himself does not often walk. Heading.

Deon, who was staring at the back of the Demon King at the rare sight, immediately lowered his eyes without saying anything. Eventually, in the garden where he arrived, the Demon King offered another chair and immediately began asking questions.

“The Empire is the Kingdom of Ireon . I heard it was attacked. The Emperor’s goal is to conquer the continent, right?”

Deon, who was standing quietly without sitting on the chair given by the Demon King and looking around at the different races around him, nodded slowly. “Yes.

” He wasn’t worried about whether they would hear.

Even though there was an opportunity to talk, there must be a reason for bringing him here and asking questions in front of others.

“What was the order the emperor gave you?”

“[Monitor the devil and prevent him from getting involved in this situation. ]”

“And?”

“If the Demon King decides to go to war, he told me to come back no matter what.” ” guess that’s me.” In any case, we’ll wait and see until the emperor devours more than half of the continent, so we don’t need to pay much attention right now. Probably not.

Hmm, I

The Demon King, who was pretending to be worried by stroking his chin, soon raised his head and faced Deon. The Demon King's characteristic dark eyes gently curved and a friendly voice came out. "Is there anything else you want to say to me?" "The human world

. 'Magic' was discovered in."

"Huh?"

The Demon King's eyes widened as if he had heard something unexpected.

Deon could easily read the emotions openly revealed in his wide-open eyes. Embarrassed

.

That's right, embarrassed. . That was all. Pure bewilderment, without any hint of 'anger that someone used magic in the human world' at will.

Deon, who was carefully examining it, slowly opened his mouth.

His red eyes were aimed straight at the Demon King, and his voice was calm as if he had not noticed anything. came out.

"In one building, magic, not witchcraft, was used."

"Ah, really?"

"...."

"Okay. Let me investigate."

Stop.

The Demon King calmly holds out his hand. Deon's gaze was persistent as if he sensed something, but no words came out from his tightly closed lips. He couldn't hold on any longer, so

Deon eventually turned around. Deon's lips, which had not opened until he headed towards the entrance to the garden, slowly opened once he stood in front of the door.

From his leisurely open mouth, something completely unrelated to the previous conversation came out.

"The movement of his left arm seemed unnatural, Ben. Let me see it."

A voice that was extremely friendly.

"...I understand."

The red eyes that glanced at him obediently withdrew their gaze. Instead of saying anything more, Deon opened the garden gate.

Deon disappeared and there was a short silence. The person who broke it was none other than the Fairy King.

"You want to investigate?"

A cold laugh pushes away the silence and spreads low throughout the garden.

He, who was laughing so coldly that it was so cold, glared at the Demon King with a straight face, as if asking when he had laughed before.

"In the human world . Who else can use magic?"

The demons basically follow the demon lord. It would be absurd for them to think something absurd and not even a minor deviation.

“You, right?”

“A habit of speaking.”

“Is that important now? !”

“But that doesn’t mean it’s your job to interfere.”

“Aren’t you afraid of the future!”

The Fairy King couldn’t overcome his frustration and finally screamed.

As someone who sensitively feels the flow of the world, he can’t know for sure. There was.

—The world is preparing.

Sooner or later, the world will send a hero. Unlike before, it will send a hero who is very threatening to the Demon King. No, if it is prepared to this extent, it may send a hero who can ‘definitely kill’ him. However , The Demon King may or may not be aware of this situation.

“Why should I be afraid of the future?”

“...What?”

“There is no reason to be afraid. Anyway, the hero will appear and I will meet him. This is what has been happening until now. There is no reason to be afraid now.”

“Ha...”

A laugh broke out, but it was short-lived.

The Fairy King, with a cold face, stood up without hesitation.

“Yes, it is none of my business. Long lower limbs. Do whatever you want. I won’t care anymore.”

The meeting ended here.

I didn’t like it, but I still thought of it as the head of a race that was acting as a kind of first line of defense. I thought about the people who would rush in here with a sword in the heart of the Demon King. The Fairy King left the room without hesitation to come up with a solution.

The others also stood up obediently without saying anything, even though they looked dissatisfied because the Fairy King had already said what they wanted to say or needed to say

. Let’s go. Oh, and I hope we manage the monsters properly. Recently, they have been wandering around near our territory.”

“...I’ll take care.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 74

74. Back to the Demon World (2)

I was crossing the hallway of the Demon King's Castle and heading toward my room.

Although it's been a while since I've been to the Demon King's Castle, I have no intention of wandering around for no reason. It would be troublesome if I were to wander around and run into strange people.

For example...

"...Daemon...?"

"ah."

...Hien or something.

There was silence for a moment, as if time had frozen. Unable to overcome the awkward silence, I carefully raised my hand to say hello, but...

Clink!

Hien absentmindedly dropped the flower pot he was holding and instead of saying hello, he was inwardly horrified and had to take a step back.

A strange plant wriggles and dies among the broken flower pot fragments, accompanied by a helpless sound like “Kieeee.”

‘...’

Yes, the Devil’s Egg was a place like this. Why did I come back here to enjoy wealth and fame? Can’t I just jump out into the human world like this?

I was frozen and just stared at it, but suddenly a shadow appeared in front of my eyes.

“Demon! You’re back!”

“Oh um... yes.”

I know that you’re happy, so can you please get rid of that face? Is there a huge sense of disparity now?

I must have been in a state of mental shock as I looked back and forth between the strange plant on the floor and Hien’s bright face...

“Cough.”

I ended up coughing up blood.

“Dededeeddaemon!!”

Hien makes a fuss. I can’t bear to touch my body and am fidgeting in front of it. If it were just this, it would have been okay.

But the problem is,

“...Daemon?”

My adjutant Ed, who was passing by, noticed me like this and said,

“Demonnniiiiim!!”

“....”

“I finally found it! Are you okay?! Why can’t we meet like this...! Oh, first, let’s start with dental treatment...”

My doctor, Ben, came to visit me.

The quiet corridors of the Demon King’s Castle suddenly become noisy, and the occasional passerby pays attention and whispers.

This beautiful event is waiting for me as soon as I arrive.

‘Haha fuck.’

I want to hide anywhere.

My feelings reached their peak when Ed suddenly grabbed Hien by the collar.

“What have you done?”

Why are you doing this to such a cute kid? He didn’t do anything.

“I’m sorry...”

“!?”

Why are you apologizing?!

The moment I saw Hien lowering his head somberly as if he was sincere, I thought back for a moment to see what he had really done to me. All that was gained was confidence in Hien's innocence.

"Hey, Ed! Cough!"

"Daemon!!"

"Don't talk!"

For your information, this is a scam. I foolishly forgot that there was still blood in my mouth. I swallowed blood by mistake.

So what happened?

The blood that had entered the airways flowed back and came out of the mouth again along with a cough.

With the catastrophe unfolding before his eyes, Edgar let go of Hien's collar and hurriedly approaches me. A careful hand touched me.

"Don't force yourself to stand, lean on me. Breathe slowly."

"Cough... loud"

"Yes, like that..."

"... Cough."

Ah, I barely calmed down.

I feel embarrassed to see such a rude attitude after meeting after such a long time.

Because of that, I couldn't raise my head and was just looking at the floor. Ed, who was looking at me like that, called Ben in a quiet voice.

“...Did you know what caused the burn?”

“Same as always. Aftereffects.”

“Tsk. Then that means there is no other way.”

“Yeah, I don’t know exactly where, how or why it hurts, so I’m just upset.”

Of course... I was poisoned, so I don’t know where or why it hurts.

“Rather, please help Ed Demon. I have to do the rest of the treatment in the room.”

“What? What else is left?”

“Uh, you also got an injury on your arm.”

“!”

Ed was shocked and let go of my arm to support me. Because of that, I stumbled because I couldn’t keep my balance, and I got startled and quickly stretched out my arms to support my waist.

His hand supporting her waist was shaking.

“I’m sorry. Did I grab your arm that was uncomfortable? If that was the case...”

If that was the case, well.

My senses sound an alarm. A warning that if you listen to the backstory, you might not get any sleep tonight.

Fortunately, he was holding my good arm, so I quickly opened my mouth.

“No, I grabbed your healthy arm. So you don’t have to apologize.”

“ah...!”

“That’s good. Then, why don’t I help you quickly? Are you planning on spending all your time here? Are you not going to treat Demon?”

“I have to! I’m sorry Demon, please excuse me for a moment.”

Ben rummages around looking for something in the bag he always carries, and Ed walks along, supporting me as if he were holding me.

So what about Hien?

When I glanced back at Hien, who was looking depressed and drooping, Ed caught it again without missing a beat and turned his head to show his teeth at Hien.

“See you later.”

No, I mean... he didn’t do anything.

....

“Are the injuries serious?”

Ignoring my opinion that it was okay, he eventually helped me to the room and sat me down on the bed. He helped Ben take off my outer clothes and asked.

This time too, my intention to take it off on my own was ignored.

“No, I’m moving along smoothly. It’s just the slight pain that comes from time to time. If you’re Demon, you’ll ignore it, so as long as you don’t move roughly, you won’t feel any particular pain....” There was something in the middle that didn’t seem very serious, but

I I couldn’t deny this. Ben, who had unbuttoned all his shirts and exposed his bare shoulders, paused for a moment.

His brow furrowed rarely.

“...Are you trying to add more?”

“....”

“But why is the signal....”

Ben looked at the magic stone around his neck in annoyance and glared at it for a while, then muttered, ‘Is this an error?’ and changed the subject.

As I looked at the magic stone for a moment, I heard him mumbling, ‘I guess it’s just my mood,’ but since he didn’t think it was a big deal, I just ignored it.

“Demon, wasn’t there a battle before you came here?”

“Huh? I don’t know...”

I don’t think there was anything that could be called a battle...

“Ah, there was something similar to a battle.”

“Of course! How intense. If I had...”

“Yes... well...”

It was intense. For me, it was like a life-or-death struggle. The chase with the mad dogs.

When I thought about it, I was pulling the bowstring like crazy. At that time, I was mentally unstable. I didn't pay much attention to it because I didn't have it, but even so, I was overworking my weak arms, so it wouldn't be surprising if the wounds got worse. "If

Demon-sama himself had come forward, he wouldn't be alive and well by now." "

Probably all over the ground . "Wouldn't the fragments of his body be scattered in pieces?"

"I guess so."

...How on earth are they looking at me? I was so shocked that the conversation that was painful to hear between the two continued even when I was silent. It was only after the treatment was over. The curtain finally came to a close.

Ben, who had put on a new bandage, lightly tapped my shoulder as if giving advice and said,

"The treatment was completely completed, but I think it would be a good idea to remain alert and wear a bandage for a while. Since the use of magic was kept to a minimum, you never know what side effects might occur if you move roughly for no reason."

"Yes."

"Then I'll just leave..."

Knock –

For a moment, everyone's heads in the room turned toward the door. . Even me.

... It's strange. Why does the sound of a knock on the door sound so scary?

This is the Demon World. Unlike the human world, in some ways there are very few people who will come to visit me, and in other ways, there are countless people. I can't tell who is standing outside the door. It's even scarier because it's unpredictable. Who on earth is it?

'No matter who is there, to me, it's still a scary opponent that I have to be careful of...'

While I was lost in thought for a moment, Ed opened the door slightly and looked outside.

Then, he checked the opponent . Seeing his face suddenly contort, I was strangely relieved. The fact that Ed was frowning so openly and mercilessly meant that he was at least a lower-ranking demon!

Now that I thought about it, there was one guy who came to mind... No way. ...

"What's going on? "Hien."

I heard you can catch people.

He tightened his nerves and focused on their conversation. Ed, who noticed this, stopped what he was going to say and pushed Hien out the door. Even though he was pushed away restlessly, he seemed strong in a strange way

. Hien finally opened his mouth, but said

, “I...”

“Before that, you have something to say to me.”

Ed coldly pushed him away, so I had no choice but to be helplessly pushed out into the hallway without even being able to have a single conversation with him.

Ugh, come on . Isn't it dangerous? It looks like Ed is trying to do it.

I'm sure they won't kill him, but Hien is basically looked down upon in the Demon King's Castle.

From my perspective as a human, all demons are the same, but what is that damn incubus succubus

? Thinking that I might break it, I quickly opened my mouth.

“I'm sorry, Demon....”

“Ed.”

“Yes?”

“Hien did nothing wrong.”

“Ah...”

There was something about the reaction that was subtle. Isn't this the reaction I expected? Feeling uneasy for some reason, I added, just in case.

“Really.”

“...Yes, I understand.”

“Yes....”

But why are you leaving? Do you really understand?

Uneasy. I was looking at the closed door with my heart full. Meanwhile, Ben, who had finished organizing his luggage, took a step back from me, holding his bag. “As expected, Demon-nim, you have a big heart.” “Yes?” “That gardener is going to die right now

.

” Aren’t you being considerate?”

“That’s not true, because you really didn’t do anything...”

“Yes, I know. There is no way a mere gardener would dare harm a corps commander. You couldn’t have done that in the first place.”

What did you really know? But why...

“For other corps commanders, just because they saw their weak side is enough to constitute a deadly sin.” ”

....”

“Incubus and the like. Because it’s not something you dare to look at.”

Oh my god.

I quietly despaired at the unimaginable answer.

From now on, I have to live among those guys again.

“Then Ed...”

“He probably already knows. I will. There’s no way you wouldn’t know. I just needed an excuse.”

An excuse...?

I quickly stopped what I was trying to reflexively ask. I thought it would be better for my mental health if I just didn’t ask.

But despite all my efforts, Ben kindly gave me the reason. He even added:

“It doesn’t make sense for a guy like that to be around the commander of the 0 Corps in the first place.” “....”

”

Of course, with Ed’s personality, he wouldn’t go against Daemon’s words, so Daemon would go that far. As you said, I won’t kill you or anything. I’ll end this by warning you not to approach me carelessly again.”

“Never again...?”

Hien doesn’t approach me.

It’s something I was hoping for, but I feel a bit uneasy. Is it because the method doesn’t seem right?

I have a subtle feeling. Ben dealt the final blow to me as I remained silent.

“Didn’t it bother you too, Demon?”

“ ....”

“...I’m sure you were tired from the long journey, so please excuse me. I’ll just leave.”

After Ben left and I was alone, I slowly laid down on the bed. The familiar ceiling came into view at a glance. I’m tired. I’m tired physically, but I’m also mentally tired.

I raised both hands and stroked my face.

“Oh really...”

Ed and Ben were mistaken. It’s not that I’m bothered by Hien, it’s that I’m scared of him.

He’s a demon. It

’s something I can’t help as I’m a weak human being, not a warrior or a hero with the fragments.

‘But...’

I thought of Hien approaching me with pure kindness. It was literally pure kindness, not with any disrespectful intentions. Of course, that kindness came across as scary to me... but it wasn’t intentional. Above all,

Ed . Wow, every time Ben treats Hien like that, his resentment towards him will definitely pour out towards me.

It's the demon's grudge. I don't have the confidence to survive without receiving something like that .

I'll tell you when it looks good. I've already warned you not to approach, so I don't have to rush over and stop you right away.

But right now, I want to rest.

I couldn't overcome the mental fatigue, so I sighed. I slowly lowered my hand and lifted it to the ceiling. While watching....

'...Shibure.'

"Why won't the world let me rest?

If I move carelessly, I might get cut. I rolled my eyes, checked the sword right next to my neck, and looked straight ahead again. In front of me, the demon holding the handle of the sword was smiling with the corners of his mouth stretched out as if he was happy to see me.

" Hello, Demon."

" ...."

"As expected, you are Demon. Are you saying my sword isn't even worth reacting to?"

"D'Vellania."

"Yes, I'm glad to meet you too. I don't even know how long it's been since we've met-"

2nd Corps Commander D'Vellania.

The being who I find the most terrifying slowly smiles and greets me. It was handed over.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 75

75. Back to the Demon World (3)

Demon Arut. We don't know who he is, what he looks like, or what he does, but his name is widely known throughout the demon world.

If even demons in distant areas whose faces I don't know know each other, what would it be like in the 'Demon King's Castle'?

There is no way that the movements of a person who is treated as a being second only to the Demon King will not be known. Since he rarely moves, even if his actions are trivial, they spread throughout the Demon Castle in an instant, and the long-awaited news of his return naturally reached the ears of the 2nd Corps Commander Develania.

"Hmm, Demon-nim has returned?"

Even so, I was upset about not being able to see each other for a long time, but it turned out okay. I happened to go to the second city and buy some clothes.

As soon as I thought about it, I took action immediately.

Devellania quickly began to pack up the luggage that had been stored in one place without even unpacking it, as if possessed.

“I’d like to say hello to you at this point” and also give you all the clothes that I couldn’t give you because the timing was different.

She grabbed the ‘gift for Demon’ and moved without delay.

....

It wasn’t that difficult to sneak into Demon’s room. Because Demon’s lieutenant took advantage of the altercation with the gardener and sneaked in through the open door.

I thought it came in secretly, but it seems like Demon noticed it from the beginning.

While lying down on the bed, he looked straight at the ceiling where I was hiding, then raised both hands and swept down my face as if it was not worth dealing with.

Not only was he lying down defenseless, he was even blocking my view.

As the commander of the 2nd Corps, who is mainly responsible for stealth and assassination-related work, this honestly hurts my pride. So, without realizing it, I ended up moving a little too much.

Puuuk –

The sword sinks into the bedding without a sound. To be exact, right next to Demon’s neck.

Nevertheless, without any sign of surprise, Mr. Demon slowly lowers the hand that was covering his face. Red eyes glanced at the sword and then looked straight at me.

For a moment, I was startled by his eyes that seemed to be asking me what I was doing, but then I slowly smiled and opened my mouth.

“Hello, Demon.”

***

“I really missed you. I had a lot of gifts to give, but the person I was supposed to receive was not there...” “....”

”

Anyway, was my sword really not worth reacting to? I thought I trained hard. I mean.”

“....”

“Huh? Demon? What?”

“Sa....”

“Sa?”

Save me...

I barely swallowed the words that were about to come out of my mouth.

I was so shocked that I froze, so fortunately I didn't scream out loud, but as a side effect, my heart felt like it froze for a moment. I almost died of a heart attack.

D'Bellania's eyes shine as if she is curious about the words she barely swallowed. There was an interest that could not be hidden in the two drowsy downcast eyes.

“Sa what?”

"...."

I was impressed by the tenacity of biting on something that was nothing special for a moment, but before I could answer, Develania clapped her hands as if she understood.

"Ah! Because there was no life in it?"

"...!?"

No, I haven't said anything yet.

"But how could I dare to show my life. The moment I show signs of survival, he will turn and try to kill me."

"...."

"It's not that I don't think life is a waste or anything, but the extreme Demon-sama is cool, but I like the moderate Demon-nim better. "I don't know if Silua is a pervert, but I like gentle men."

I don't know what he's talking about, but I definitely understand that Silua is a pervert.

Is it okay to call the 7th Corps commander a pervert? Then, the corps commanders fight again. What should I do if this happens? Of course, Silua is a pervert.

"Oh, more than that, I've been going around a lot and buying clothes that would look good on Demon-"

But you seem to be just as perverted as her. The way you look at me now is very similar. I slowly stood up, looking away from the uncomfortably sparkling eyes.

I wanted to run away if I could, but whether it was by accident or design, D'Vellania was blocking my quick escape route, so I gave up on pointless resistance and obediently took the box she held out .

I accepted it.

Well, if it's just this one thing, it's fine. Usually, I bring a mountain of clothes and pile them in the corner of the room. "Of course, this isn't everything. I just gave it to you first because it was the one I liked the most, but I piled the rest over there. "Try this first, and be sure to wear the rest at least once."

"...."

Did you get that again before you knew it?

That's right, there's no way I could give you just one. I was too naive. I sighed and opened the box. A blue, flowy dress appeared.

"This is...."

"I heard that it was inspired by the clothing of the southern part of the human world. I don't like humans, but their culture has a lot of interesting things."

"But..."

"Oh, by the way, the top and bottom are matched, so wear them with the pants below." "

So, I understood that... "

It's definitely a design I've seen before, whether or not it's a lie that it was inspired by southern clothing. It's a little different, but I think it was probably called a durumagi? But wasn't the most important thing overlooked?

"Isn't there anything to wear inside?"

Yes, clothes to wear inside! Usually, if they even match the pants, don't they always try to bring clothes to wear underneath? As far as I know, this is an outer garment. Perhaps because it has been improved, there is no knot to hide the gaping front.

Of course, this could mean that you should wear the clothes underneath yourself. But, as someone who experienced Develania's infinite clothing hell, I had no choice but to shake my head.

Due to Develania's personality, if I had given her outer clothes, she would have also given me clothes to wear underneath.

Could it be that I forgot...?

"Oh, that was originally the case. That's how you wear it."

"...Originally?"

"In the human world, you might have worn it a little differently, but in the demon world, you wear it like this-."

Crazy.

"Now, would you like to try it on?"

"Ah...."

Damn. This is why I have 2. I was avoiding the corps commander. I looked at the clothes in my hand, sweating profusely. I do n't want to wear them. No, I should never wear them, even if it puts aside exposure and my taste. If it's the Develania I've experienced, I'm sure I'll be fine if I wear it at least once. They'll try to wear everything, even things you didn't plan on wearing, just because they say it suits you. It's obvious that the end result will be an appointment to go out to buy clothes. But the person you're dealing with is the commander of the 2nd Corps. It was a time when you were hesitating, unable to firmly refuse.

Knock

.

" This is Daemon Ed. What do you do when the 8th Corps commander and his adjutant request a meeting?"

"Oh."

As expected, Ed! He looked back at Develania with a smile on his face. He couldn't tell him to get out of the way out loud, but as he just heard, he was busy, so he silently asked him to leave quickly. I'm looking at him...

"Tsk."

"...!?"

Did you just... click your tongue...?

As soon as my surprised gaze reached me, Develania grinned and sat down as if asking me when I had clicked my tongue. She stood up. Her eyes were fiercely focused on the door.

If it weren't for the scary look in her eyes, I would have thought what I had just heard was a mistake. Her voice sounded as usual as usual.

"It's a shame, but I guess I'll have to postpone trying it on until later.

" "Okay..."

"If you don't like the design, please tell me. Later, let's go to the second city together to buy clothes that you like, Demon." "

...Yes."

You should never say anything. Whether you like it or not, let's never say anything.

Meanwhile, Develania approached the door and grabbed the handle. I yanked it open. Edgar, who had raised his eyes indifferently as he prepared to show politeness, as if he had expected me to tell him to come in or come out in person, soon shrunk his pupils to a small size. "Mr. Develania?"

"Hello?" "I didn't know you were

there

. "I'm sorry if I interrupted you."

"No, it wasn't important. Our 8th Corps Commander's business is more important than mine. Isn't that right?"

"...."

It seems like the commander of the 8th Corps is answering something, but the sound is so low that I can't hear it. Moreover, my eyes were busy looking beyond them rather than at them

. You didn't bury it in the garden, right...?

"Anyway, I'll go. Good work..."

Ah, it looks like we're finally leaving.

After confirming that Hien wasn't behind them, I inadvertently turned my gaze and stopped looking. As Develania passed the 8th Legion commander with a weapon draped behind his back, he loosened the strap holding the weapon. Because of that, the two long, vertically intersecting windows slid as if lying down and widened horizontally. Without knowing this, the 8th Corps commander steps inside the door.

And tick.

"Ah."

The width of the door opens . A spear that was longer than the width got caught in the entrance.

As if he had been caught by the back of his neck, the 8th Corps commander was frozen with his legs outstretched before he could even step inside.

His adjutant, who had witnessed the scene from the side, sighed as if he had gone crazy. Kigo—

“I...”

“Oh my gosh.”

—The 8th Corps commander sits down.

With his face buried in his hands, he mutters in a voice that sounds like he is digging a tunnel.

“Why do I live... I am also an idiot. It’s trash that has no use at all....”

“No, Hel! That’s a mistake everyone makes! Besides, Hel carries a lot of weapons...”

“I’m not worth breathing when I carry a lot of weapons that I can’t handle...” “That

’s absolutely not what I meant! Oh my...”

“I’m the one who hurts the adjutant’s head...”

“Oh no! It’s not because of Hell that I’m having a headache. It’s a chronic headache! Hel, you did nothing wrong!”

Why are those bastards making such a fuss here?

I stared blankly at the scene unfolding in front of me with dead eyes. And then I thought to myself,

‘What did Ed and Hien talk about? ‘

...I guess I’ve adapted to this crazy place, too.

***

Ed and Hien didn’t have a conversation as special as Deon had expected. The bloodshed he was worried about didn’t happen.

Ed's sharp words just left Hien one-sided. "... So
, don't approach Demon ever again."

It was an arrogant voice befitting the top candidate for corps commander.

Hien, who had been listening in silence due to his low status, suddenly raised his head.

When his eyes met his , Ed's face distorts and he takes a step back. Although at first glance, his expression and actions seemed to be disgusting, Hien could tell.

That demon does not hate him. It just pathologically 'avoids' him.

'...Now that I think about it.'

I've encountered him countless times and received countless amounts of hostility, but I don't think I've ever felt anything more than disgust.

'Why?'

"What are you looking at? Get rid of your eyes."

As expected, I don't feel any disgust.

Hien has received a lot of hate for being an incubus who lives as a parasite on others all his life. There was no way I could distinguish the disgust directed at me and not at anything else. So I mustered up the courage to open my mouth

.

" Ed doesn't hate me, does he?"

"...!"

"I'm sure. Ed, you don't hate incubus and succubus. But why... big!"

I guess I touched him wrong. I instinctively tried to grab the hand that was strangling me, but when I realized the situation, I relaxed my body. Colorful. I let out a faint sound of strangulation and looked at the face of the person who had strangled me.

Even in this situation, his expression showed no sign of disgust.

Instead, what was revealed was anger and...shame from not being able to avoid something that one wanted to avoid?

'Tsk.'

The strangling force becomes stronger.

Although he may not have a moderate temperament, I said this because I thought he was someone who respected Demon's opinion above all else, but was I mistaken?

At that moment, there was a hand grabbing Ed's arm.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 76

76. Demon Realm Again (4)

"If I keep doing this, I'll catch a mysterious demon. "There's no way that Demon doesn't know that he cares about that guy."

"...Ben."

"I guess he really didn't mean to kill me. "This guy didn't do anything wrong."

"What about Demon?"

You talk back. Should we consider ourselves lucky that we didn't kill the gardener?

Saying nice things to a guy like this doesn't work.

Ben let out a deep sigh and immediately spoke bluntly.

"It seems like Demon doesn't like it."

"...."

"I told you that I would never let that incubus approach you again, but you didn't seem to like it."

Suddenly, the grip on Hien's neck loosened.

Hien sits down on the floor, covers his throat and coughs. Ed, who was stroking his hair, clicked his tongue in annoyance.

Ben, who ignored Ed and passed by, sat down in front of Hien with his legs bent and lifted his chin with his finger to check his condition.

“...Luckily there are no problems.”

I let go and stood up. Ben glanced at Hien looking up at me and immediately laughed. A faint laugh dispelled the subtle silence.

“Understand. “He has bad memories of incubuses and succubi.”

“yes?”

“Ben.”

“He was originally an unbiased guy.”

Unbelievable. Hien opened his eyes wide and looked at Ed.

There are two main standards by which demons treat others. ‘Powerlessness’ and ‘a method of supplying energy necessary for biological activities’.

In the latter case, most demons gain energy through meals, and some demons do not need to do anything special or gain energy through something else.

It doesn’t matter how energy is obtained, but if energy can only be supplied through someone else, that demon will be looked down upon.

‘A disgusting and vulgar demon that barely survives by living as a parasite on someone. That’s the incubus and the succubus...’

I looked at Ed’s annoyed expression. The face immediately distorts as soon as our eyes meet. Hien swallowed the words floating around in his mouth.

...It seems full of prejudice.

“It seems incredible.”

“...I believe it.”

Regardless of whether I don’t understand it or not, I believe it. That way, you can understand him showing his irritation but not showing his disgust.

‘If you say that right... I’m not the problem, it’s the ‘Incubus’ that’s the problem, right? That’s also because of Ed’s personal feelings.’

Then, Ed, you just have to keep it out of sight!

A hopeful conclusion was reached.

It may be that Daemon himself ordered us not to be seen, but didn’t he say that he wanted us to keep seeing him?

If Deon heard, ‘I never said that?!’ Thinking about jumping up and down, Hien called out to Demon-sama with a once again moved expression.

Of course, if you say it out loud, the attention of those two will be directed towards you, so just keep it to yourself.

At that time, a boiling voice was heard.

“Ben, turn it off right now... no, no. “You go back.”

“yes yes?”

“Yes, gardener. “Nothing good will come of staying here, so I’d better go back.”

They’re staring at each other without even casting a glance, but I’m sure what they said to me was clear.

Since the two demons had the same will, there was nothing to worry about. Hien, who was watching the confrontation between the two with a bewildered expression, quietly retreated.

Ben, who was watching the back moving away, turned his head and made eye contact with the gaze glaring at me.

“Your facial expression is scary. “If you do well, they will try to kill me.”

“If I had said more there, it really would have happened that way.”

“more? what? This refers to a case where a succubus is mistaken for an incubus and a confession is made incorrectly...”

Boom!

The spot where Ben was standing caved in.

“shut up.”

“...This shouldn’t be a training ground.”

Ben, who had already moved to avoid the spot, mutters as he looks at the floor where the harpoon was placed. When I looked up, I made eye contact with Ed. A rare open face caught my eye and I burst into laughter.

“calm down. “Do you know what you’re like now?”

“....”

“It’s ugly. I’m sure you know that you can’t mess with the gardener unless you know that Master Daemon doesn’t want you to. Besides, the gardener didn’t do anything terribly wrong.”

“....”

“Why don’t you calm down and go to your place. By now, news of Demon’s return should have spread throughout the Demon Castle. “I guess there are a lot of visitors.”

“....”

It was too much. I was so embarrassed that I overacted.

Ed remembered the incubus running wild in strange places and sighed, filled with self-pity.

I know there is nothing wrong with the gardener. However, as a perfectionist, he just didn’t like it because it reminded him of the most shameful memory in his life.

I wanted to avoid it, but I couldn’t because of my position as Demon’s lieutenant. So I tried to take advantage of this opportunity to get rid of it.

I knew implicitly that Demon-sama didn’t want to get rid of him completely, but I pretended not to know, using the excuse that it was for his sake.

Even excluding personal feelings, the existence of the Incubus was a factor in disparaging Demon's name, so there was no hesitation, but 'I never thought I would say such a thing...'

He was the adjutant of the commander of the 0 Corps.

Considering that you should not put your personal feelings into acting for him, your current actions are disqualifying.

Ed, who had thought that far, raised his hand and wiped his face to come to his senses.

'Let's go back.'

In the past, whether the incubus played with his mind by lying about his gender or made him a laughing stock by publicizing his confession, that is just the past and has nothing to do with the gardener.

Let's forget it. The more sensitive you are, the more ridiculous you become.

I quickened my pace, thinking of Demon, who was waiting for me as he had done until now, covering his memories.

It was right in front of Deon's room that Edgar met the 8th Corps commander.

"Is it okay for me... to steal Daemon's time...?"

"Why do you say that! Hel is a worthy corps commander! "I wasn't able to greet you properly last quarter, so I need to do it right this time!"

"But..."

The quarter refers to the time when Demon goes out on a mission and the time he returns and stays in the Demon King's Castle.

Since they are demons who don't have any special seasonal changes and basically live a long life, their concept of time is poor, so I roughly divided them by watching his movements. After listening to the conversation, I think I know who that black figure is.

A corps commander who was unable to say hello to Demon during the last quarter.

Various weapons hung not only on the back but also all over the body. And a black figure from head to toe.

"Commander of the 8th Corps?"

"...!"

I knew it.

Ed, who was convinced that the opponent's identity was the commander of the 8th Corps, immediately bowed.

"The greeting was late. This is Ed, the adjutant of Corps Commander Daemon Arut. "Commander of the 8th Corps, what are you doing here?"

***

The commander of the 8th Corps, squatting in front of the door, blames himself as if he were going to fall into the ground. Next to him, his adjutant enthusiastically cheers him up, and Develania, who caused this situation, giggles under his breath.

‘...haha.’

This is shit.

I quietly watched the scene in front of me, then turned my head and looked at Ed.

The intention was to try to sort out this mess, but Ed just lowered his head further and didn’t do anything.

‘Bad guy...’

After Ji brought him in.

I looked at him with cold eyes and then turned my head. The priority is to resolve this crazy situation.

Clap –

The two hands lightly touched each other. As if by magic, everyone’s attention was immediately focused and silence came.

So....

“That’s shit.”

“It’s not... you’re the devil?”

I was startled and stood up from my seat.

What, why is the devil here?! There is even Lyrinel behind him.

After being the commander of the 2nd corps and the 8th corps, now the devil and the 11th corps commander. What is this?

“Master Demon....”

“...?”

Unlike the Demon King’s calm expression, Lirinel stamps her feet nervously with anxious eyes.

I was so nervous that I looked at her, and when we made eye contact, she was shocked and then started crying.

“I’m sorry...”

What what?

“Oh, it’s none other than Lirinel, who received something interesting. “It was a unique-looking cookie.”

The Demon King, with a fox-like grin, shakes something.

What was in his hand was none other than a bag of cookies. It was obvious without having to ask where it came from.

But why is that? I thought I gave something quite ordinary. What are you trying to say for giving something strange to the commander? Because you can’t trust cookies given by humans?

“Sin....”

“Why don’t you give me something like this?”

“Song... yes?”

“It’s too much. “You can’t believe you only give this to Lirinel.”

“That’s right, Demon Nim, you didn’t even say a word to me, but you only gave that to Lirinel? “You’re doing it too much-.”

“....”

Before I was relieved, I was at a loss for words.

So you came to me now because I didn't give you a gift?
The devil?

Even the commander of the 2nd Corps, who had been exposed by the Demon King, began to wish for a souvenir. It seemed like he was trying not to show it, but Ed was also staring at me, and even the 8th Corps commander had stopped blaming himself and was looking at me with an expectant look in his eyes.

‘...Why do you just keep blaming yourself?’

“Daemon?”

“Ah yes. “For a moment...”

I quickly looked away and started rummaging through the luggage I had brought with me when I came here.

What was in it? There has to be something good. If you don't give me something, I don't think it will continue like this.

On the way here, I roughly checked what Remember had brought for me, but I couldn't take a closer look, so I was a little worried... ‘

Wow... unexpected...’

In the end, it was a useless worry.

Silver pocket watch, white gloves, cookies. Somehow, if I put the meaning together, items that seemed to roughly resemble a gift caught my eye.

‘Besides, it’s new.’

It is perfect.

It’s a bit odd that I don’t use a pocket watch, that gloves are stuffy so I don’t wear them unless it’s a formal event, and that the cookies are shaped like flowers and hearts, unlike the ones he usually serves.

What could Remember have known? I guess I kept it there just in case.

‘...Then you don’t know this either...?’

Are you preparing for when you return to farming...?

When I found a flower seed in a corner of my bag that I didn’t even know was there, I made a subtle expression, forgetting to control my facial expression.

“Pocket watch?”

“yes.”

“I don’t know if I can accept something this good.”

The Demon Lord smiles and puts the pocket watch in his pocket. My cold, narrowed eyes followed the figure.

The words I couldn’t say lingered in my mouth.

As Ji looked at....

“I was thinking about cookies. But I never thought they would give me something this good. Anyway, thank you.”

“...!”

Did I tell you what was on my mind?

Looking at the Demon King turning around, I don't think that's the case. As I watched him leave, saying he had a lot of work to do, I made eye contact with Lirinel. He still has a tearful expression on his face and his mouth is open.

‘really sorry.’

It's not okay, but it's okay. It's obvious to me that it wasn't intentional, but I can't say anything.

When she roughly expressed her intention that it was okay, her face brightened, she bowed, and quickly disappeared after the devil.

I turned my gaze and caught Ed in my eyes. He was changing his gloves.

‘It's the same shape and the same color, so why bother...?’

The black and strange patterns on the backs of the hands, always hidden by white gloves, are revealed and then disappear.

I felt a little scared for no reason, so I slowly averted my gaze, and I heard Ed's satisfied voice.

“Thank you, Demon.”

Well... if you liked it, that's fine. I nodded roughly and took out two bags of cookies from my bag.

Of course, this belongs to the 2nd and 8th Corps commanders.

There were only two bags of cookies left, so it was a shame. If I wasn't careful, I would have been in big trouble. My liver is still too small to listen to the corps commander's complaints.

However, the expression on Develaina's face as he looks back and forth between Cookie and the 8th Corps commander is strange.

How can I say it, it feels like a mix of grumpiness and playfulness?

"Huh-."

"...?"

"Hey, Commander of the 8th Corps."

There was no answer, but Hel responded to the call and raised her head. Develania smiled sinisterly.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 77

77. Back to the Demon World (5)

“In the first city, there was someone who was talking about Demon to outsiders.”

“!”

“Oh no...! Hey Hell!!”

Before his startled adjutant could say anything, Hel disappeared. As if it was literally falling to the ground.

Although I was surprised for a moment, I quickly nodded.

‘That’s right, he was from Shadow.’

A literal shadow, not a metaphorical expression.

The power of the Demon King does not purely unite among itself to create demons. If you inhabit an ogre, a demon of ogre origin is born, and if you inhabit an object, a demon in the form of that object is born.

Hel, the commander of the 8th Legion, is a demon born with the power of the demon king imbued in his shadow.

Maybe that’s why the shadow, which can’t even see its face, appears to have a three-dimensional effect, but I never thought it would have had such an ability.

...But why did it disappear?

“A guy who couldn’t even fulfill his duties doesn’t deserve to eat Demon’s cookies. So, Demon.”

“yes yes?”

“Can you give me both of them?”

“Dvelania!”

Before I could answer, the adjutant who was kneeling where Hel had disappeared and looking at the floor in confusion shouted. Actually, I was the one who was scared by him.

The adjutant shouting loudly at the corps commander. It is also a corps commander who is not my immediate superior.

Is he really crazy?

‘Don’t do this here, go out and fight, you bastards...’

Don’t spill blood in my room.

***

Deon must have been very uncomfortable with the two demons roaring in his territory, so he handed each bag of cookies to Develania and Hel’s lieutenant, Nine, and sent them out.

No, to be more precise, it was closer to the fact that the two noticed the discomfort of ‘Demon Arut’ and took the initiative to back down.

If I had done more here, there would definitely have been a disaster.

I know very well how scary his anger is. The two were not foolish enough to look down on someone who was normally a moderate person.

However, a fight that temporarily stops because of one person cannot end just like that.

As soon as he came out of the room and the door closed, Nine held the cookie bag tightly in his arms and glared fiercely at Develania. Interest arose in Develania's eyes.

"Oh, are you staring at me now?"

"Stop harassing our Hel!"

"I? "Why did I just say the right thing?"

"Even so, your self-esteem is at rock bottom, so do you have no conscience?! "It's too much!"

8th Corps Commander Hel. A person who has mastered the art of weapons to the extent that he handles all weapons as if they were his own body.

Coming from the shadows, his unique abilities seemed to be suitable for missions related to infiltration, so at first even the Demon King wanted to appoint him as the commander of the 2nd Corps, but he had one fatal flaw... his self-esteem was ridiculously low

.

'There is no way you would entrust me with such an important task.' 'There is no way someone like me could do something like this.' 'Is it really okay for someone like me to do something like this?'

But if you fail just a little bit, you'll think, 'After all, trash like me should go out and die.' 'Why do I live?' 'After all, I am trash, not worth breathing...'

"Trash... I am trash after all..."

Nine was confused as he looked at his superior, who suddenly popped out from the shadows at his feet and sat down, covering his face with both hands. He made an expression.

Blood was dripping from the edge of his clothes, as if he had just finished taking care of his work.

I explained several times how amazing it was that they got the job done so quickly...

"No! How did you come to organize things even now? Everyone makes mistakes. How you handle it is important. In that sense, Hel did an excellent job cleaning up the mess! "You did a great job!"

"...really?"

"of course! If Hell had made a really big mistake, Daemon wouldn't have given him cookies like this! "Look at this."

"Is that really mine...? "Demon-nim gave it to me as my share...?"

"yes!"

Actually, I got it through a war of nerves with the 2nd Corps commander.

Nine, who had lost his cool, waved the cookie bag as if to show off, attracting his attention.

“So don’t act like this here, get up quickly. “Let’s eat some of these cookies in our room and relax.”

Looking at this scene, some may wonder why the 8th Corps commander blames himself when it is just news that the story about Demon is circulating outside.

But this was natural.

Until the uproar caused by the monsters, the 8th Corps commander’s current external mission, which seemed to exist as if he did not know what mission he was in charge of and no one was interested in it, was ‘bordering major cities in the demon world.’

However, there is a secret mission he has been carrying out even before that.

A mission that Demon Arut took on from the moment he joined the Demon King’s army.

[To prevent information about Demon Arut’s appearance from leaking out to the human world.]

Why is the story about Commander 0 not widely known?

Why can’t the empire even figure out what the commander of the 0th Corps looks like?

Did all of this really feel like a coincidence?

Hel moved steadily from the moment she received the mission.

When a worker on vacation outside the Demon King's Castle tries to tell an acquaintance about the appearance of 'Demon Arut'. When a demon goes out on a monster hunt and is revealed with his bare face at a gambling house in the first city. A hero at the border with the human world. Even when fighting with.

He steadily followed the trail, killing and silencing it.

Contrary to his low self-esteem, it was excellent workmanship without a single mistake.

Even now, as soon as the 2nd Corps commander received a tip-off, didn't he move immediately, deal with the enemy, and return? If you think about the amount of time it took to get all of this done, it's ridiculous that people who heard the story would have dealt with it as well.

'I just need to do something about his self-esteem... Sigh.'

While Nine was sighing, the true Hel barely got up from her seat. As if to reassure him, Nine smiled and politely held out her hand, and Hel was about to take it.

"Isn't it important not to make mistakes in the first place?"

"...!"

"Dvelania!"

Hel collapses again like a sand castle. Develania giggled at the immediate response.

This is why I can't stop harassing the 8th Corps commander. Because it's fun.

It has nothing to do with Develania, so I turned around, leaving behind Nain, who was talking about how he kept arguing, asking why the demons could make a mistake, asking why my child... was so upset, and saying that he was going to go to the demon lord.

‘If this continues, I won’t even dream of disturbing you for a while.’

I plan to persuade Demon to go to the second city to buy clothes soon, but it would be difficult if there were disturbances even then.

Deon had no intention of going, but De’Vellania was already happily thinking about what clothes to buy, and took a brisk step forward.

I burst out laughing happily at the shout of the cocky 8th Corps commander’s adjutant coming from behind me.

***

The Kingdom of Ireon was in chaos.

“They say the imperial army has already trampled a city and is advancing towards here! You say you’ll be arriving in the next city soon, but what on earth have you been doing to get to this point? “There is no need to come up with any countermeasures!!”

“How can we come up with a solution that even you can’t come up with!!”

“So you’re saying we should all die together like this?!”

People who can’t do anything other than sit in front of a table and raise their voices are shouting loudly, saying that their lives are not worth it, while innocent people are dying outside.

The conference hall, which should have been sacred, has long since turned into an arena for fighting rather than a place for preparing countermeasures.

‘That’s bullshit.’

The King of Ireon, who was sitting on the throne, gently pressed his eyebrows. Even though I took the medicine, my head is already pounding as if I’m getting a headache.

That’s why I said, don’t mess with the emperor. Because black flames were flickering in his eyes that I met by chance.

It’s not a red flame. It was not burning on the basis of passion, anger, hatred, and revenge, which are common fuels.

A flame that is empty but burns relentlessly without losing the will to live. If I had to give it a color, it would be closer to ‘black’ rather than ‘red’.

Yes, it is a black flame. I still didn’t know for what purpose it was burning, but I instinctively knew that nothing good would come of touching it.

‘I thought this country was in good shape before...’

This is how it falls apart.

The king’s words do not work. The king’s authority has fallen to the ground, and the nobles are too busy serving their own interests and do not take care of the people.

Nevertheless, perhaps because they are politicians, they were not stupid at all, but this time it was a miscalculation.

The nobles were not blinded by money and demanded compensation from the empire. Underlying their actions was the expectation that, even if the empire would not immediately grant their demands, they would at least attempt 'negotiation'.

Think about it with common sense. In any case, it is true that there was a small battle near the border, and depending on one's perspective, this is enough to be felt as a threat to the Kingdom of Ireon.

In addition, wars cost a lot of money and manpower. Only two years had passed since the end of the Eight Years' War, so it was difficult to imagine that the empire would easily take the call of 'war' in this situation.

Even Deon Hart, who was a great vanguard during the 8 Years' War, had to rest due to injury, so who would have expected war?

Of course, only based on 'common sense'.

'The fist that I touched with all my might came back to me with a timid touch.'

The king covered his mouth, leaving the embarrassed nobles alone.

I felt like I knew what the emperor was hoping for, so I felt like I would start crying.

'...Did the emperor want war from the beginning?'

A cautious guess soon became a certainty.

The emperor was waiting for a 'justice' to wage war. The Kingdom of Ireon has diligently provided him with the opportunity to draw his sword, and he will become the first victim of that sword.

If I had known this fact earlier...

'...it would still have been the same.'

Even then and now, he is a powerless king and his voice will be drowned out by the remarks of the nobles.

"How about... surrendering?"

In the chaotic conference hall, one of the nobles spoke cautiously. The king quietly closed his eyes as he looked at the other nobles, whose eyes were shining as if they were waiting.

This was also expected.

Those who have much to lose are afraid to fight. Loyalists died or disappeared without anyone knowing, and even those who were clean were stained with mud.

There are only traitors left here. I knew very well that those who put their own interests first could not serve the country.

But why is my appetite so bitter?

"What do you think, Your Highness?"

The King of Ireon smiled helplessly as he faced the eyes that were looking at him with one mind and one intention, as if asking when they had fought.

"Let's prepare for surrender."

***

A month has already passed since I arrived at the Demon King's Castle.

And I was able to recall a very important fact that I had overlooked.

"I'm bored...."

The devil's castle has nothing to be dirty about! I should have brought something fun to play when I came.

snap. I threw the cube I had just solved onto one side of the bed and flew to the side. I turned my head, buried half my face in the pillow, and looked down at the floor.

There was a large, completed puzzle sitting there.

There's one more thing to decorate the wall of your room. It was a few pieces long. Was it 6000 pieces?

That's probably about it. I vaguely remember it because it was a puzzle I once threw out of self-destruction. It's so hard for me to guess that in the end...

'Oh, I don't know.'

Thanks to a month of rest, the shadows under my eyes that had formed in the human world have disappeared, but I feel like I'm going crazy because people don't do anything.

"...I guess I should at least go outside."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 78

78. Again, the Demon World (6)

is full of monsters that I can't do anything about, but I think it's better to move than to stay locked in my room.

I quickly got up from my seat and put on my coat.

Since I wasn't planning to go out of the Demon King's Castle and only wanted to look around, I didn't need to prepare in detail and just took the basic things I needed and stood in front of the door.

Before opening the door, I glanced back. What you see is the completed puzzle scattered on the floor.

I wondered for a moment if I should clean it up, but there was no place to put it away...

'If I leave it alone, Ed will clean it up on his own.'

As always, I will frame it and hang it on the wall.

After confirming that there was nothing more to worry about, I opened the door and went outside without hesitation.

....

“Ah, Demon!”

Yeah, it seemed like that for some reason. I was expecting that we would meet roughly... but I never thought we would actually meet.

I vaguely knew that my liver was unnecessarily large, but I never imagined that it would be this shameless.

Hien approaches, smiling as if nothing had happened, as if Ed had dragged him aside to warn him not to approach him again.

I secretly took out the secret weapon I had brought with me in case I met him.

I can't be swayed by him forever, right? It's not like Remember gave it to me to use it for this purpose... However I choose to use it, it's up to me.

'I couldn't believe it, but I brought it out like this... but I can't believe I actually ended up using it.'

As expected, Hien immediately showed interest in what I had in my hand.

“Daemon? What is that...? It looks like a seed...”

“It's a flower seed.”

“Flowers? What does the flower look like? Does it have eyes or a mouth? Or tentacles? If nothing else, do you have the ability to possess creatures or emit poison? What about feeding? Do they eat humans or demons and monsters? Or both?”

What is he scared of?

His eyes flashed, and he slowly put his head back to avoid Hien, who was right in front of his nose, and quickly spoke.

“I don’t know either.”

“...yes?”

“I know that it is the seed of a special plant that is different from the normal demon world plants, but I am not sure about the exact details.”

You can’t say it’s the seed of the human world. No, there won’t be a big problem if I say it, but it would be difficult for me if I revealed it in this situation.

I plan to use this as bait to send Hien back.

If I send you this, you won’t appear in front of me for a while because you’ll be busy germinating this seed. This is the distance I set between him and me.

‘I can’t keep him around or completely kick him out, so what can I do?’

I have to keep my distance at least in this way.

“Would you like to grow this?”

“yes? “Me?”

“yes.”

“Can I really raise this precious thing...?”

I nodded.

It’s not particularly precious... these are rose seeds. It’s just that you can’t raise it in the demon world.

Most plants in the human world basically require sunlight. It would never be possible to raise it in a demon world where the sun never rises.

When I think of Hien, who will appear with a sullen face later, my conscience pricks me a little, but if I can quickly send him away in front of me with this, then pricking my conscience is no big deal.

Hien takes the flower seed with his hands shaking. With a face filled with emotion, he held the seed tightly in his arms and bowed down.

“thank you! “I will make sure to make a flower bloom and show it to Demon!”

“Um... yes, I will support you.”

As if he wanted to start right away, Hien nods and quickly runs off somewhere.

Okay, I killed it.

Praising myself for killing a time bomb so cleanly, I picked up the pace I had stopped and leisurely crossed the hallway.

There’s nothing to do. Let’s go down to the first floor. If I have time, I should go outside and look around the building.

I postponed going down to the first floor for a while. On my way down, I found a library.

I raised my head and saw a huge door showing off its immense grandeur.

‘Now that you think about it, have I ever stopped by the library?’

I remember it wasn't there. Let's go in now. But is it okay to go in...?

As my worries were for naught, the two demons guarding the entrance to the library immediately stepped aside and made their way as I snooped in front of the door.

Stiff eyes follow my actions. I was confused as to whether they were telling me to go in or not, but I decided to trust their actions rather than their eyes.

As I entered, the first thing I saw was not a book, but a librarian. The librarian who was sitting down reading a book glances at me as if checking on the other person, then fixes her eyes on the book again.

“....”

“...!”

Jump up! Craddangtangtang!

The book fell to the floor and the chair fell backwards.

“De... Dedededemon! “What’s going on here...!”

Ah, I was slow in understanding the opponent. Are you surprised that someone you didn't expect to come came?

Maybe they were surprised by someone who wasn't supposed to come. Even though I am the devil's army and the army commander, in the end, I am still human.

“I just wanted to look around... can't I?”

“No way! Feel free to look around as much as you like! If there is a book you are looking for, please let me know.”

The librarian hurries away. As I watched them go back to their seats and clean up after themselves, I turned my head and looked at the numerous bookshelves that occupied the large space.

Since I'm just there to look around, I don't have any intention of wandering around this space. I roughly reached for the bookshelf near the entrance. I took out the book I could reach and looked at the cover.

[Information on the heroes of the current empire]

[Author: Idelia D'Vellania]

'Current empire?'

If the 'current empire' is the 'current empire' I think of, it means that content is added immediately whenever new information comes in. So this book was nearby.

I opened the book. My eyes met a familiar portrait.

[First hero. Nemeseus.]

[...He became a count for actively helping the current emperor Edoard Desert, who was the 9th prince, during his rebellion. Afterwards, he served as commander-in-chief during the 'Eight Years' War' and received the title of marquis. Among the current empire's nobles, he is the only one without a 'surname'.]

[He was a commoner and, in need of money, worked as a gladiator in a gladiatorial arena and met the current emperor, Edoardo Desert. Edoardo, who was the 9th prince at the time, praised his sword skills and generously supported him on the condition that he become his master...]

I feel like I am prying into someone else's private life. I quickly turned to the next chapter.

Information about the general is still coming out. I turned the page again.

'How much research did you do... Why do you even know the general's tastes?'

My hands became faster as I flipped through the pages.

My busy hands stopped moving when a new character appeared. A portrait with bright eyes was glaring at me.

[Second hero. Stigma Primiro.]

[Viscount Lowfel's illegitimate son. In recognition of his contributions during the 'Eight Years' War', he received a new title and a marquess. We are focusing on eradicating barbarians from the southern border of the empire, using overwhelming force...]

Uh... Wait, if it's like this, it'll also write about me, right?

I quickly turned the pages of the book. After the information about stigma, my name appeared.

There was no portrait there.

[Third hero. Deon Hart.]

[Investigation is prohibited by order of the Demon King.]

[Do not be curious.]

The tension was relieved.

yes. There is no way the devil would handle things sloppily.

thank god. I sighed in relief and turned the empty page, and the portrait appeared again. Black hair and green eyes. An expressionless man wearing a cold aura and staring straight ahead.

[Fourth hero. Cruel Hart.]

[Known to be related by blood to the third hero, Deon Hart. Although he is known not as the emperor's person but as the person of the duke who opposes him...]

Just looking at it made me so irritated that I closed the book. As I was about to put it back in its place, there was a book that caught my eye.

A title written in old-fashioned handwriting, as if someone had written it by hand.

[About the Hero and the Demon King]

[Author: Caber]

Without thinking, I reached out my hand and took out the book.

[Hero.]

[A human being chosen and given power by the world to kill the Demon King.]

[Talent in weaponry, innate strength, brain, and even lifespan. Everything that makes up the object is far beyond human standards.]

[A hero has two choices when he dies...]

I thought there was something special, but what is it? You know everything, right?

I turned the pages roughly, turning two or three pages at a time. After flipping the page a few times, an explanation about the 'hero' appeared.

[...the dregs of a hero. What is called a warrior's fragment in the imperial language can be called a 'fragment of talent' in other words. The fragments that were floating around, invisible and undetected, are absorbed into humans by pure chance, without any foreshadowing or reason, and these are the 'heroes' who possess the fragments of warriors. Although he is not as good as a warrior, he surpasses the average human....]

[※ Originally, humans with warrior fragments were called 'heroes', but in the empire, 'heroes' are those who have meritorious actions that can be recognized by everyone regardless of whether or not they have warrior fragments. With the inclusion of humans, the meaning began to become confused. 'Hero candidate' and 'real hero' are mainly used to refer to humans who possess the fragments of a hero, so if you are worried that the other person will be confused, use these two words appropriately according to the situation.] I also know roughly this

... Is this something a little different?

Demon King Demon King... Ah, I found it!

[Demon King.]

[The world calls for a hero...]

Before I could even finish reading the sentence, I heard a voice right next to me.

"What are you doing here?"

“!”

ear! My breath reached my ear!

I was so startled that I dropped the book. The pages of the book, scattered around randomly, turn in a hurry and stop at a certain place.

Wow, the book isn't spoiled, is it? I quickly stretched out my hand, wondering if the demon in charge of the book might have a grudge against me.

The text on the page that seemed to be the last page caught my eye. There was only one sentence written there, as if it summarized the main points.

[The hero and the devil are proof that this world is immature.]

Is the book safe despite being immature and naval?

Fortunately, there doesn't seem to be any significant damage when seen with the naked eye. After checking the cover, I lightly dusted the outside.

Only then was I able to recall a fact I had forgotten for a while.

“Uh....”

“Now you see me.”

What was the reason I dropped the book in the first place? Wasn't it because someone suddenly spoke to me?

I barely raised my stiff head. I made eye contact with a man with a mask-like smile.

‘Ssslelew.....’

As I suppressed the scream that was about to burst out, a moan-like voice came out between my lips.

“Ma... King?”

“huh.”

“Here... why...”

“I have a book to take with me.”

He points to the book in my hand with his chin.

I looked at the book and him alternately and then held out the book. The Demon King, who naturally took the book from my hand, casually put it under his side and called to me.

“Why did you come here?”

“Ah... I just wanted to look around...”

“Aha.”

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

There was an awkward silence. I don’t know if other demons would know, but I’ve never had anything like this with the demon lord.

The Demon King, who was unable to leave the situation as he was experiencing it for the first time and just rolled his eyes, looked at me with incomprehensible eyes for a moment and opened his mouth with an exclamation of ‘Ah’.

“Sorry, I was thinking about something else for a moment.
“Will there be more here?”

“no.”

I even met the devil, so why am I still here because I’m crazy?

“If you’re going because of me, I’ll go too, so you don’t have to worry.”

“no.”

There is nothing to do here anyway. I’ll just have to go outside the building as planned.

I hurried out of the library as if running away from the devil’s gaze, which was staring at me as if trying to gauge whether it was sincere or not.

And I succeeded in going outside as planned... but I got lost.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 79

79. Demon Realm Again (7)

I can assure you that the Demon King's Castle is very large. Even if you look at it separately by dividing it into extroversion and introversion, it is ridiculously wide.

Would it be understandable if I said that the Demon King Castle itself can be considered a city?

So, it means that I can't help but get lost here. It's not because I'm stupid.

'Where am I?...'

I'm sure it's an introvert.

I looked around, cursing my feet as I walked aimlessly.

An empty vacant lot. A quiet but well-maintained dirt floor. Weapons lined up around.

'....'

Before I could think of what these meant, my body reacted first. I reflexively took a step back and swallowed dry saliva.

...Why do I feel cold sweat running down my back?

'I guess this is....'

"Demon Arut?"

Startle.

"What's going on here?"

"...."

I froze. At this moment, there was only one thought that came to mind.

Mi... Lee Chin.

I knew it was someone's training hall, but I never would have guessed that it was the 1st Corps commander's training hall. And among many corps commanders, he is the 1st corps commander.

I turned my creaky neck to find the source of the voice. Outside the training hall, I made eye contact with Jaykar, who was drinking water while holding a sword in one hand.

"...Long time no see."

"Yeah, it's been a while. I heard you came back. So what's going on here?"

"...."

"...."

He pursed his lips a few times and then just shut them. Jaykar's gaze followed as if demanding an answer, but he tried to look away.

Oh, it can't be helped. I can't say that I came out because I was bored and then got lost.

There was such an awkward silence for a moment that I said,

"Ah."

Jaykar nodded as if he understood something.

"The training ground exclusively for the Commander of Corps 0 is in that direction. "I guess I was confused about the location because I didn't use it much."

"Ah..."

"You can get there faster if you cross the 5th Corps' exclusive training ground."

That's not it.

Even though I don't use it, I at least know where my private training room is. ... maybe.

However, Jaykar looked at me with a satisfied face, as if he was completely convinced.

"I was worried that it didn't seem like I was practicing Tong, but I'm glad. Of course, it's not that I don't know your skills, and you're the type of person who gets stronger through actual combat... But isn't not practicing at all another story?"

Where did you hear such nonsense? I'm the type of person who gets stronger through actual combat? If I experience real combat, I will die, you damn demon.

"If you're not lost, you came to spar with me..."

“The direction is that way? Thank you.”

“The 5th Corps training ground will be easy to find. Even if it wasn’t, there was a lot of fuss about having some kind of commemorative party. “The party may be over, but the traces haven’t been cleaned up yet.”

“Yes...”

I hesitated further, but then I hurriedly left because I felt like I was going to have to spar with the 1st Corps commander.

As Jaykar said, it wasn’t difficult to find the 5th Legion’s training ground. I walked straight in the direction he pointed and came across a vacant lot that was a mess.

Empty plates and alcohol bottles on the table, littered on the floor with chairs strewn about in a mess.

Judging by the fact that no one was there, it appears that the 5th Corps members went in to rest. Thanks to this, I was able to look at all of this in detail with peace of mind.

For example, a liquor bottle.

Oh, it’s not that I really want to eat it. That’s true, but... this is a widely spread alcohol in the human world.

Although it is not very expensive and is a bit strong, it is an alcoholic drink that is considered an advantage and is compatible with beer among commoners. I can be sure because it is a drink that nobles sometimes enjoy drinking and I also enjoyed it.

Why is this here....

‘You are the commander of the 5th Corps.’

I picked up the bottle of alcohol, which had some liquid left on the bottom.

If OL has returned, this drink and the unidentifiable objects scattered here and there are completely understandable.

Her curiosity is so great that not even the Demon Lord can handle it.

How could it be that the devil had thrown him out? The name was to have them roam the entire demon world for reconnaissance and information gathering, but in the end, they sent them outside to solve their curiosity and not torment the demons for nothing.

The effect was good. It's just that every time I come back, I bring a bunch of strange things that I don't know what they are and introduce them to them.

Still, it's better than being asked endless questions, so I'm keeping it out there.

"Come on, let's quickly clean up after ourselves."

I suddenly raised my head at the sound of a voice. Two employees were entering the place, carrying tongs and a trash container, as if they were trying to clean up the place.

When I look closely, it seems like they haven't found me yet. If he had seen me, he would have definitely made a fuss in some way.

I need to sneak out before I get caught.

That was when I turned around.

“Hasn’t it been a while since the 5th Corps commander came back? “What kind of party is this all of a sudden?”

“Do you not know the 5th Corps Commander’s personality? In the meantime, I was so obsessed with introducing and using strange objects here and there that I postponed the party. And this isn’t just a return party.”

“then...?”

“You know, Dernivan? “Dernivan, the 5th Corps commander’s adjutant.”

“Of course you know.”

“Well, the commander of the 5th Corps is dating him. That’s why we held a celebration party to commemorate the occasion.”

“Cough.”

Oh no. I was so embarrassed that I started coughing... wasn’t there any blood? Well, luckily I’m fine.

If it’s Dernivan, I know it. A person who is the exact opposite of O.L., who is full of curiosity. I remember that they were emotionless demons, to the point where I thought undead had more emotions.

But Dernivan and Orel are dating?

I was dazed for a moment at a scene I couldn’t even imagine, when there was a voice that brought my consciousness to the surface.

“Um... Commander 0 Corps...?”

A voice that trembles so pathetically. Suddenly, I raised my head and made eye contact with people I had forgotten about for a while.

What, why are they like that?

I was too scared to say that I was willing to give in because of my status. His complexion, which had been fine just a moment ago, turned pale when he looked at me.

The employee's gaze turns to the alcohol in my hand and then glances at the empty liquor bottle hanging on the table in front of me.

One, two, three... As the number increased, the pupils began to tremble mercilessly, but when they passed five, they got bigger as if they were about to faint, and after that, their conversation continued in a whisper as if they had given up on counting.

"Among the bottles of alcohol on the table... how many of them were still healthy?"

"How do I know that?"

"Is that so...?"

"...."

"...."

As if they had made a promise, the two exchanged glances with their mouths closed.

I couldn't wait to see what the hell they were doing and was about to quietly open my mouth when I said,

"Emergency bisaaaang!!"

“The commander of Corps 0 has been drinking!!”

...?

I could only stare back in bewilderment as the two screamed and ran away.

“what...?”

***

-Express Alert Express Alert. 0Legion Commander Daemon Arut drinks alcohol. Everyone is in a defensive posture.

-Notify me again. Demon Arut, commander of the 0 Corps, is drinking...

Alarms began to sound from communication seats with loudspeaker magic installed throughout the Demon King's Castle.

Everyone in the Demon Castle took out their weapons without hesitation in response to the alarm that rang throughout the entire Demon Castle without hesitation.

This was the same even for a single stable keeper.

The rookie tilted his head when he saw his senior picking up his weapons instead of just feeding the horses.

0 Isn't the corps commander an ally? It's just that my friend drank alcohol, so why is he so nervous?

This is something you can trust even if you have to fight a war.

“Sir, why are you using a weapon...?”

“what? Hey, didn’t you read the work rules?”

“yes? Yes, not yet...”

“Are you crazy?! “Is this thing determined to die?”

There are not just one or two work rules, but when will you read them all? As soon as I came in, I ordered him to work.

I was planning to finish reading it this evening.

As I was looking at my senior running wild, I felt a sense of anxiety creeping in, and I pursed my lips to hide it.

“I was planning on reading it all today.”

“Ha... Okay, since this is the current situation... I’ll explain only the important things first. “Listen carefully.”

The senior glanced at the waist and back of the newcomer and touched his forehead.

This guy didn’t even bring a weapon. The work rules must have clearly stated, ‘You must always have a weapon for self-defense.’

In a hurry, he held out a dagger.

“First, pick up your weapon. “When Commander 0 drinks more than a certain amount, he will randomly cut down anyone he sees, so if you don’t want to die, you’d better hold on to it.”

“yes? Yes....”

“There are three things you need to remember. First, if Commander 0 asks you if you are an enemy, immediately answer no. Secondly, we will not stop there, but when asked the reason, we will explain it as clearly as possible. Third, if you doubt your answer, immediately enter a defensive posture.”

“Yes... But why are we in a defensive posture? In order to survive, you must attack rather than defend....”

“If you injure the Commander of Corps 0, you will die at the hands of the Demon King.”

“Hi.”

This literally means that you must only provide minimal defense. If I overreacted and got hurt on the 0 Corps Commander’s body... I reflexively wrapped my arms around his neck and trembled.

But if we don’t, what if we die? The opponent is the Commander of Corps 0. If you hesitate for no reason because even if you put all your effort into it, it won’t be enough, your head will be blown off without you even realizing it.

So this is almost like just dying...?

Seeing the newcomer’s eyes filled with fear, resentment, and the desire to live, the senior smiled and adjusted his weapon.

“Suppression is done by the Demon King. “We just have to aim to survive as much as possible.”

If you wait as long as you can, the Demon King will come and subdue you.

As he said that, the back of his neck was soaked with cold sweat.

***

How would you feel if you suddenly heard that a 'special alert' was suddenly displayed throughout the Demon King Castle and that the reason was 'me'?

Needless to say, I thought it was a mess.

Even the reason is so far from the truth that I feel so unfair that I go crazy and start running wild.

I drank alcohol? No, it's ridiculous that the alarm went off because I was drinking, but what's even more absurd is that I didn't even drink alcohol. I couldn't even smell it, let alone drink it!

'Are you sure to drink it right now?'

As I was thinking that and staring at the relatively large amount of alcohol bottles left, people with shields came rushing in from a distance.

They came running with solemn expressions as if a war had broken out somewhere, formed a circle around me at a certain distance, and all at once stamped their huge shields on the ground.

thud!

The ground shook once.

"...."

The feeling that came to mind before embarrassment was absurdity.

What did I do... I erected it perfectly, without any gaps.
Completely surrounded hahaha.

It seems like a familiar scene comes to mind, but maybe it's my mood.

Yes, it's like when hunting a wild boar that invades a village in the countryside, narrowing down the siege like this...

Are you fucking kidding me?!

'Am I a wild boar?!'

I furrowed my brows for a moment, but then quickly relaxed my expression.

In this situation, showing off your nerves is neither porridge nor rice. Rather, the probability of dying at their hands will only increase. Even now, you're shocked that I just furrowed my eyebrows. It seems that vigilance has increased further.

In order to overcome this damn situation, we must first let down their guard. Only then will you be able to persuade or do anything else.

So I suppressed my irritation and forced a smile,

"Hey."

"Ji...you're smiling right now, right? "Are we going to die now?"

"Mu don't back down. If even one person retreats, everyone dies. "Hold your shield tight and be tense."

It backfired.

...Aren't you the 8th Legion? Looking at the large shield, it is clearly the 8th Legion.

Why are these guys who aren't regular shield soldiers so timid? Is it because of the corps commander? Were you influenced by the corps commander?

I'm nervous this way, I'm nervous that way... I don't know what to do with me.

'Just kick it away?'

When I saw the shield that was like an iron wall, I shook my head.

No, if I do that, only my ankles will hurt.

I have a temper, but I can't express it as I want. Instead of physically expressing my anger about this shitty situation, I just kept a straight face and glared at the shield.

Because of this, it became a little noisy again, but that was only for a moment.

"There's a demon out there?"

A familiar voice coming from beyond the shield.

'What the fuck...?'

Unlike the situation, the voice was full of leisure, but on the contrary, my heart sank to the floor.

It's the devil. The person I met in the library a little while ago is here.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 80

80. Demon World again (8)

All I could see was the shield, so I couldn't confirm it directly, but it was definitely him. It's been so long since we met, I never thought we'd meet again.

He seemed to have calmed the chaotic situation just by appearing, and he leisurely asked a question among those who had already become quiet.

"What are the steps?"

"It is estimated to be stage 1."

"calculation? "Have you not checked properly yet?"

"sorry."

"it's okay. "Just call Ben."

"yes."

"Then—"

—Open.

The words were like a death sentence.

The shields that were tightly interlocked were moved aside and the Demon King appeared between them.

He took a step inside, waited for the shield to be completely closed, and then looked at me frozen and cautiously opened his mouth.

“Daemon.”

“....”

“Demon can you hear me?”

I can hear it, but I don't know what to say first.

I've come too far to handle this situation.

“There's no way I can't hear what you're saying from this distance, so it seems like you're ignoring me, but it's nice to hear, so I'll just say it.”

“....”

“First of all, those here are not enemies. “No one is going to attack you and there is no need for you to kill anyone right now.”

“....”

...I know. i know. I know it very well.

The war is over, battles do not occur except in special cases, and I am living in reality.

What are you saying out of nowhere?

As I watched the Demon King speaking softly to calm me down in a serious manner, I felt like I was going to burst into laughter, so I kept my mouth shut.

The Demon King opened his mouth again, wondering how he interpreted my silence. and.

“So calm down a little and put down that bottle of alcohol in your hand...”

“Demon King! I heard you called! “No matter where you are hurt...!”

Ah, this voice. It's Ben.

Why did you call the doctor? You really want to kill me and then treat me...?!

But the devil's attitude is too kind to say that. You're not the type to kill someone with a gentle smile... aren't you?

...is not it?!

While I was in deep thought, the Demon King, who had removed his shield and wielded a sword, gave a cold command without taking his eyes off me.

“Daemon drank. “Check what level you are now.”

“Yes, I understand.”

How many steps?

While I was tilting my head at the unknown conversation, Ben came out.

He takes a step forward with a solemn expression and looks at me, swallowing dry saliva. And the first thing he did was lower his upper body, raise his hands slightly as if pushing, and say,

“Daemon, I am not your enemy.”

It was said.

While he was saying that, he did not avoid my eyes or lower his raised hand.

As if I were some kind of wild beast... Oh, the fuck, I guess this is right?

“Now then, Demon? “If you can hear me, can you answer me?”

“...yes.”

“!?”

Ben froze at the reluctant answer. The same goes for the Demon King next to him.

I was so shocked that I tried to remember if I had said something wrong, but all I said was ‘yes’.

I was rolling my eyes and looking around, wondering what was going on, but Ben, whose eyes were wide open, stuttered out the words.

“Daemon...?”

“yes.”

“Daemon?”

“yes.”

“Ugh, Demon, are you speaking politely now...?”

“yes? yes.”

I used to use it in an honorific way, but now I'm wondering what it is.

"...I guess you're drunk."

"Yes, I think..."

At this point, someone could have explained the situation to me, but I don't seem to care.

The Demon King and Ben leave me alone and whisper something seriously.

From time to time, harsh words such as 'false report', 'punishment', and 'shall I kill' were exchanged, but it soon stopped and the devil raised his head and looked at me.

"Did you drink demon alcohol?"

"I didn't drink it."

I'm finally saying it now. I feel relieved, but I'm a little worried about what happens next. The matter has gotten so big, will it be easy to get over it?

However, contrary to my worries, the Demon King, who had never once raised his voice in front of me, showed his unchanging attitude this time as well. He calmly nodded as if he had roughly anticipated the situation.

There was no sign of anger or irritation brought about by the sudden commotion anywhere in the scene.

"Okay... then what about that drink in your hand?"

"It was here. "It's a drink that is commonly known in the human world, so it's strange..."

“Demon King, I think it was an attempt at drinking it.
“There’s no way Demon would just leave the alcohol behind.”

...what am I doing?

What on earth was Ben thinking of me? What about the Demon King who nods his head at that?

That alone was absurd, but the words of the 2nd Corps Commander Develania, who had jumped over the shield and entered, wondering how he knew about this place and what his purpose was, were shocking.

“It looks like Demon is bored. How about allowing him to go out for a while? For example, he went to the second city with me to buy clothes...” I laughed, clearly showing my absurdity at the absurd and unexpected remark.

Damn. Do you think I will go? I plan to stay confined to the safe Demon King Castle. And even if I go, I will never go with you. Why am I going?

—There was a time when I thought:

***

I was hit in the back of the head.

To whom?

“Would you like to go to the second city with Develania?”

“yes...?”

To the devil.

It was a suggestion, or rather an order, that came only a week after the tumultuous drinking incident ended.

I was a little relieved because he didn't call me for a week, but then he came in like this. How dare you attack with such a shameful delay in time.

The absurd drinking incident ended in vain. I've never drank alcohol in the first place, so it's a natural result.

I really like the fact that it ended quietly without anyone – especially me – dying, which goes against the nature of demons who have to cut off someone's head to relieve their temper if they pull out a sword, but I really don't like the current situation.

With Develania in the second city!

“Just think of it as going out to have fun. Oh, instead of going in a straight line, turn a little to the outskirts.”

“...with the commander of the 2nd Corps... that is.”

“huh.”

“....”

Can't I go?

“It would be better to lock him up while he can.”

As if the Demon King had noticed my flustered appearance, he came towards me with a grin on his face.

He didn't stop at just approaching me, he placed his mouth next to my ear while holding both of my shoulders. He then whispered something, and when I heard what he said–

“What does that matter...”

“Do you really think that?”

“...I’ll go.”

Even though I still couldn’t hide my dislike of going, I had no choice but to express my positivity.

Like a cunning devil. Even if it doesn’t seem to have anything to do with me, if I say, ‘Do you really think that way?’, I feel anxious and have no choice but to go.

If I had known what going around the outskirts meant, I would have never gone, no matter what he said. Fuck.

***

[The war is going to start soon.]

So I need your help. Even if that wasn’t the case, different races protested over the monster problem.

[The war has started, and I hope I don’t end up tying you here.]

[...I’ll go.]

The Demon Lord Caber, who had persuaded Deon at once, leaned back in his chair rather than open the closed door. The Demon King’s characteristic dark eyes were low and had a dark glow.

The Empire accepted the surrender of the Kingdom of Ireon.

It is said that there was no proper battle in the first place. They only trampled on two cities in a straight line toward the capital, but that alone made the King of Ireon lose his will to fight and declared surrender.

No, the news of surrender arrived just as the second city had been trampled, so to be precise, the decision to surrender was made when one city was trampled.

If it was going to collapse so easily, why did they go through such a useless provocation?

Did you think that the 'empire' built with blood would just ignore provocation? If you really thought that way, you were a fool with no room for relief.

There is no need to wake up a sleeping lion and not even scratch it.

'We'll collide with the empire sooner than you think.'

Now the emperor began to go on a rampage without hiding his purpose of conquering the continent.

He is an emperor who has already been at war with several kingdoms at the same time. If you did it easily once, there's nothing you can't do the second time.

I have no intention of quietly watching the empire devour the continent.

It is obvious that the direction of the power that grows as it engulfs the continent will eventually lead to this demon world.

I was thinking of moving when about half of the continent was swallowed up, but I don't think I would have as much time as I thought.

Caber, who had been staring at the ceiling with his head tilted back against the backrest, slowly raised his upper body and stretched out his hand on the desk.

Eventually, a voice without a trace of laughter came out of his mouth as he confirmed that the communication stone was in his hand and that he was connected to all the executives of the Demon King's Castle.

"From now on, I am issuing a ban on magic throughout the Demon World. Never use magic other than the magic already imprinted on the tool in your daily life. However, use is permitted only at that moment when life is threatened."

The appearance of a hero wasn't something he normally cared about, but things were a little different now. If a hero appears during a war with the empire, it will be quite troublesome.

Either drastically increase the use of magic to encourage the appearance of heroes before war, or stop using magic to delay their appearance.

There was no time to spare until the war with the empire, and even if we were lucky and a hero appeared before the war, there was no way the emperor would send a hero to the demon world at that time, so in the end, there was only one option.

'It's unclear whether the world will follow the intention...'

How can you predict and stop a typhoon?

It's just best to be as prepared as possible.

Thus, the monarch in charge of the fate of a race gives an order.

“Additional duties are assigned to the 2nd Corps commander, the 4th Corps commander, and the 8th Corps commander. If there is someone who uses magic without a valid reason, let them be hunted down and punished appropriately.”

It means just kill it.

This method has always been used in the past, so there is nothing awkward about it.

When the 2nd Corps commander asks for various information, the 4th Corps commander combines each piece of information to reduce the scope of those more suspicious, and the 8th Corps commander checks them one by one to identify and kill the target.

This method was also used to identify and eliminate those who had spread the appearance of the Commander of the 0 Corps to other places, so there will be no more problems now.

“more.”

After that day, the use of magic stopped throughout the Demon World.

This seemingly insignificant change could only be felt by the Demon King, the warrior’s fateful opponent, and the Fairy King, who was sensitive to the flow of the world. The Fairy King, who sensed this change, sneered lowly in the middle of his forest.

[It’s already too late.]

The Demon King can only roughly sense that the hero’s appearance is getting closer, so he doesn’t know.

The world has already made all preparations. Just looking at the timing.

The moment the world sends a hero would be the worst moment for the Demon King.

The end will most likely be death.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 81

81. The news of the turbulent (1)

surrender of the vainly fast kingdom of Ireon quickly spread throughout the continent.

And naturally, this almost immediately reached the ears of the revolutionary army, which was heavily focused on news from the empire.

Revolutionary army members were quietly angry.

How was the Revolutionary Army created? Isn't this a group of people who were angry and opposed to Emperor Edoardo's forced conquest?

Above all, most of them come from kingdoms that were destroyed by the emperor's hand.

The emperor's actions of advancing without hesitation and obtaining the surrender of a kingdom sprinkled salt on the bitter wounds of the revolutionary soldiers and brought back painful memories.

A grueling eight-year war in which many kingdoms disappeared from the map. And his own country disappeared as it was included in the 'many kingdoms'.

‘It’s been a while since I stopped all activities. ‘How long do I have to hold my breath like this?’

‘It’s okay if you can’t kill the emperor. If only I could fuck him.’

‘Why have you stopped your activities now? After all, wasn’t the reason we moved so far to puncture his power and lower his approval rating rather than to kill the emperor?’

‘What on earth is the leader thinking?’

I want to move. I want to blow a hole in the emperor’s power. I hope that the emperor’s face will be horribly distorted.

The emperor’s actions ignited the revolutionary army’s desire for revenge.

However, the leader’s answer after hearing this news and the reaction of the revolutionary army members was simple.

[No change in command.]

Power should be preserved as is.

Naturally, many people protested. However, the leader’s next words silenced their voices in an instant.

[Prepare to hit the emperor’s head.]

A new wind began to blow among the revolutionary army.

***

Meanwhile, Daniel, the leader of the revolutionary army who gave all these orders, was quietly preparing to leave the headquarters. His face, covered in fatigue, was subtly stiff.

He put on his coat and let out a faint sigh.

‘I’m tired.’

My body can handle it just fine, but the mental fatigue is incredible.

I knew right away that it wouldn’t be easy to control those who tried to rush forward in anger, but it felt like it was getting more difficult as each day passed.

The more the government is pushed back, the more precarious this position will become.

Honestly, it’s unfair.

‘It’s thanks to someone that we’ve stayed together and not scattered until now.’

With people from each kingdom gathered together, there is no way factions would not arise.

Among those who were divided into factions and were at odds with each other, Daniel was the one who coordinated them and kept them from scattering.

Even if just one thing goes wrong right away, the revolutionary army will not be able to unite properly and will disperse.

“brother.”

“Ah, Paul.”

“Are you going to see your mother?”

“okay. So wait here. I will be back.”

I left Paul behind and walked down the dark road. As I was crossing the road with no lights, like an old secret passage, all kinds of random thoughts came to mind.

And I remember it again. The reason the revolutionary army gathered.

It started for a very simple reason.

[My kingdom has been destroyed. I am angry and want revenge, but there is no royal family to serve as a focal point and raise an army.]

Because the cruel emperor sought out and killed all of the royal family's blood, even the collateral branches. Even if they were non-royal figures, if they were popular, they were killed without mercy.

I want to get up, but I have no focus.

While they were suppressing themselves and only observing their thoughts, someone came forward as if to represent their feelings.

[I will kill the emperor. Anyone who wants to participate, please gather. Origin does not matter.]

Until the last word that it does not discriminate against origin because the purpose of killing the emperor is consistent with his own.

Many people gathered.

The number was beyond imagination. It felt like I could achieve my goal at any moment.

Then, even though they had not done anything yet, worries about what would happen after the coup arose in the minds of those who had some free time.

[If we kill the emperor and all his family members, what will we do with the empty space?]

The crown prince or princess cannot be presented as puppets. Because they must die.

However, if one of them sits in that empty seat, problems will arise.

They are a group of people from each kingdom who were trampled by the emperor. It was clear that if someone sat down, people from other kingdoms would be dissatisfied.

While we were just having a subtle battle of wits without being able to come up with a clear plan, someone's voice came out.

[Do I really need to fill the empty seat? Can't the 'position' itself be eliminated?]

If we simply kill the emperor, we will only become rebels.

Let's create a new system in the name of 'revolution'. This is the time to abolish the caste system and create a world where everyone is equal.

This statement received majority agreement and became the core ideology of the revolutionary army.

Thus, the radical and violent group that was born primarily out of revenge and anger was transformed into the current revolutionary army that is supported not only by those who lost their country, but also by civilians and even some imperial citizens and scholars.

‘It’s only natural that it has captured the tastes of many people.’

Those who are angry about losing their country are fascinated by the violent aspect of killing the emperor, while scholars are opposed to the new concept of eliminating the class system, and civilians are fascinated by the dream-like future of a world where everyone is equal.

But do they really know?

All of these processes and results are not accidental, but come about through someone’s thorough planning.

Daniel stopped for a moment in front of the door he arrived at and eventually raised his hand and knocked on the door.

-smart.

“mother. “This is Daniel.”

“Come on in.”

‘Someone’ who gathered people together under the pretext of ‘killing the emperor.’

When people were worried about what would happen after the massacre, ‘one person’ said, ‘Let’s eliminate empty seats and create a world where everyone is equal.’

Daniel has long known the concept of ‘a world where everyone is equal’.

A world without kings, nobility, and no class system. A world where everyone is the owner of the country and everyone is its worker.

“Welcome son. “Are you hurt anywhere?”

Inside the room, a woman with a noble aura was sitting in a rocking chair, welcoming him. Eyes as clear and deep as the sea that seem to pierce the world, and fine wrinkles that look like they often smile softly.

A woman who appears to have been knitting, with a somewhat shaped scarf resting on her lap, makes eye contact with Daniel. The woman’s eyes softened.

Daniel, who was standing there, took a step forward with a smile similar to hers.

“doesn’t exist. “Mom, are you okay?”

...His mother was the daughter of a noble family who ran away and married a commoner.

It would be difficult to think that this is just a story about a foolish person crazy about love. She was smarter than you could imagine.

By falling in love with a commoner, she questioned basic rules that no one had ever questioned before.

An idea that went beyond basic rules and was close to the fundamentals.

Caste system.

From a young age, Daniel listened to his mother sit on her lap and share her thoughts.

Even while continuing a simple married life with my father, when my father died after being mistaken for a nobleman, and even when my mother became weak due to severe stress.

She explained her thoughts and methods to Daniel, and Daniel piled up such knowledge in his head.

And as I watched my mother getting weaker day by day, I made a decision.

I will show you the world you think of before you close your eyes.

“I’m fine. “Son, what brought you here today?”

“I want to go to Ireon.”

Daniel knelt at his mother’s feet as he spoke of the name, which was now a region of the empire rather than a kingdom.

We need to increase our power until there is a coup.

Unlike during the Eight Years’ War, the king and his lineage are alive in the Kingdom of Ireon, but the fact remains that the empire obtained a forced surrender. Of course, there will be people who are dissatisfied with this result. If you do well, you may be able to receive support from the king.

‘No, you’re going to feel uncomfortable because of the revolutionary ideology.’

Even without the support of higher-ups, if we can attract those who are dissatisfied with the current situation, that is enough.

“It must be dangerous.”

“Many people died.”

I leaned my face on my mother’s lap and closed my eyes.

The faces of those who threw their lives away pass by.

“...If we continue like this, we will not be able to achieve our goal. “I need to replenish my power.”

“son.”

“Mother, I am a sinner.”

If the situation is not favorable, at least he is the one who paid the bomb so that he does not die alone, and he is the one who made him do something that almost killed him.

Then, when he occasionally heard news that a civilian had been caught and killed, Daniel had to suffer all day long.

I opened my eyes. As if he couldn’t even feel the hand gently caressing his head, Daniel muttered softly, his eyes shining with determination.

“For their sake, the purpose must be achieved.”

“Are you planning to go directly?”

“Yes, how can you earn their trust without going there yourself?”

“The emperor is probably expecting it. “Maybe we can put a soldier on standby.”

The emperor is smart. There was no way he was unaware of the revolutionary army’s thoughts.

I don't know if you're too busy with various things... I don't know.

"...The Emperor will go to war again. I'm sure. The Emperor never stops. I will use this opportunity to go all the way to the end. So..."

Even though he thinks to himself, he continues to make skeptical assumptions.

"You can't worry about this. Besides, the revolutionary army hasn't had any major incidents recently, so they may have put it off as a priority."

As if she sensed his intentions, the woman smiled kindly instead of bothering to refute him.

"There is no need to try to convince this mother. "Son, son, do whatever you want."

"Ah..."

"But before I leave, there is one gift I would like to receive from my son... can you give it to me?"

"Whatever your mother wants."

The woman's mouth opened with a smile on her face, and Daniel's face, who had been quietly listening, immediately turned white as she heard the words that followed.

....

"Are you here?"

"okay. "Nothing happened, right?"

"yes."

“Oh, Paul. Could you please tell Iram to recruit some good people? Of course, you decide to go together.”

“yes? yes. By the way, are you okay? “You don’t look good...”

“Ah.”

I reflexively touched my face.

“...It’s no big deal. “There’s one more thing I’d like you to tell me, Paul.”

“Please speak.”

“Please find me a poison that will allow me to die without pain.”

“...!”

“Please.”

Daniel smiled bitterly, looking at Paul’s surprised expression.

This was the best he could do.

[Which mother can survive the loss of her child?]

[The son must return safely.]

[If the son dies, this mother will die too.]

He could not stop his mother.

***

Contrary to expectations, the emperor did not even care about the revolutionary army. At the second meeting convened, each noble who thought the subject matter was valuable brought forward a plan for the revolutionary army.

I think it was more diverse than I thought. After listening to each of the plans, the emperor chose the most useful one and left the rest to others. So there is no need to waste your attention on such a thing.

‘Did you say that once the Kingdom of Ireon is conquered, the revolutionary army will move there, so let’s have soldiers on standby?’

Probably so.

So, I remember saying something roughly.

[Send the Lofty Knights.]

Another name is the Murderous Knights.

There are two reasons for sending these guys away.

Firstly, the job is to deal with too many accidents.

I’m bored, I’m annoyed, I’m happy... I feel like my severe headache is getting worse because I keep having accidents every day for all sorts of reasons. Why do you destroy a healthy building and why do you have to juggle an iron sword and almost eat your healthy arm? It’s not even his own arm, but the arm of a passing attendant.

And secondly....

‘Who else can deal with crazy people?’

The Murderous Knights are a self-proclaimed crazy group, and the Revolutionary Army is a group of people who have a different meaning from them.

Shouldn't crazy people be dealt with by crazy people?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 82

I wasn't worried about the upheaval (2) .

At least the Murderous Knights will not lose. Because they were the vanguard that trampled on their opponents and committed massacres during the eight-year war.

'If you had an accident like that, your body wouldn't have rusted.'

So, as before, the opponent of the revolutionary army was left to Deonhardt's knights. You don't have to worry about it anymore, you just have to report it later.

The emperor was sitting at the head of the conference room, leaning his elbow on the handle, leisurely stroking his mouth, watching them continue their discussion.

Every time golden eyes resembling those of a wild beast flashed, the nobles who were exchanging opinions were shocked, but no one pointed it out.

What we need to pay attention to now is none other than the emperor's notification that occurred a little while ago. This is an agenda that has been thrown out as if it were nailing down the fact that this is not the end of the war.

[Which kingdom should I choose as my next conquest?]

This was said at a time when the kingdom of Ireon had been subdued and the arrangement had not yet been completely completed.

Although there were many people who opposed the war in the first place, no one took it as a risk.

It's not because I changed my mind right away. Just because I could feel with my own skin that the emperor was in a very bad mood right now.

As their lives were precious, they could not say anything and could only continue the meaningless discussion.

Then, in a suffocating atmosphere, a nobleman dared to open his mouth to the emperor.

"I apologize, Your Majesty, but no matter how I think about it... this war is going to be difficult."

A trembling voice. The nobles around him held their breath.

He closed his eyes tightly, as if he thought he was dead after saying this, but the emperor did not punish him right away.

The beast, which had been watching the situation in the conference room with its chin up, slowly lowered its arms and straightened its posture.

Something similar to a smile appeared on the expressionless lips.

"The reason is?"

"The problem of military history... is big."

“It’s a matter of troops...”

The emperor immediately knew what he wanted to say.

Instead of saying something, the nobleman nodded as if asking him to continue, and the nobleman, who gained courage, began to speak slowly.

“The conquered kingdom’s very existence is a variable. A certain number of troops are needed to monitor them and prepare for unexpected situations. “The revolutionary army within the empire is an example of that variable.”

“And since I have no intention of stopping the war, the number of operational troops will continue to decrease.”

“Yes that’s right. “There are limits to using the troops absorbed from conquered kingdoms, so the problem will only grow as time passes.”

Battles are bound to result in casualties. It may be okay for now, but the longer we fight the next war and the next war, the more the impact of the empty seats will be felt like a snowball rolling.

Even when you occupy a kingdom, a certain amount of troops are sent there. Considering this, it was obvious that the number of troops that could be deployed would be drastically reduced in the future.

‘If you completely crush the occupied royal family and gather all your troops as you did during the Eight Years’ War, it doesn’t mean that you won’t be able to hold out...’

Given that the Emperor accepted the surrender of the Kingdom of Ireon and spared the royal family, the situation was already in the midst of the Eight Years' War. has changed from

The noble glanced at the emperor.

Fortunately, it seems to be okay so far.

"...Materials can be obtained through conquest, but not soldiers. Unlike other kingdom armies, the imperial army is an army with strong pride and loyalty to the empire. Soldiers gained through conquest will never do that."

"Hey man. "Leave it at that."

The emperor felt like he was going to explode, so another nobleman next to him carefully stopped him.

Other nobles who had ties to him also quietly called him because they did not want to see the head of someone they were close with blown off in front of their eyes.

"Yes, the army can be replenished by conscripting commoners. It would be enough to just sweep out the poor in the slums right now. Since the people of the empire are fighting for the empire, loyalty is natural..."

"Bullshit! " Soldiers' motivation is also important in war! "How motivated must the person who was forcibly taken be!"

"If you want to live, you will pick up your sword and fight."

"I'm saying that now...!"

"That's enough, focus on the original agenda, Margrave Amiable! Even if the motivation is low, how dare you when you have the numbers...." "

There are limits to pushing through the numbers and operating like a puppet according to the commander's plans! so...!"

The Margrave Tender Amiable, who had been raising his voice in excitement without realizing it, inadvertently turned his head and looked at the emperor, then stopped breathing. Other nobles who had been following his gaze without thinking also stopped breathing for a moment when they saw the emperor.

The emperor's golden eyes were glaring at them with murderous intent ready to explode at any moment.

"...."

"...."

In the silence, the emperor raises his hand and smooths his chin. Even though it was an insignificant action, the nobles' bodies shrank greatly.

"I didn't know you guys had this kind of talent. "How can you bark so well?"

"...."

"But I heard some bullshit that I couldn't ignore."

A cold voice fell as if it had brought with it the chill of the mountaintop in the middle of winter.

"It is said that troops can be replenished by conscripting commoners."

An overwhelming sense of death poured down throughout the conference hall.

Something is wrong. The nobles, who felt that their lives were at stake, hurriedly lowered their heads and looked around at them with a stern expression. The emperor, without hiding his discomfort, began to chew on each word.

“Do you know why commoners pay taxes?”

During the Eight Years’ War, people were conscripted. This was an unpleasant experience that forced me to confront my own priorities and selfishness, and it settled in a corner of my heart.

This plan was put forward as a last resort when troops were running low. How irritated I was while ordering this.

How dare you casually offer up the very thing that caused you to feel guilty and intensely self-loathing and started your nightmare in earnest.

“Taxes are the price of protection and welfare.”

Instead of collecting taxes, we protect them and take care of them so that they can make a living.

That is the duty of nobles with estates and the duty of the emperor.

“But while you were collecting taxes like that, did you just say that if there is a shortage of troops, you should immediately conscript the people first?”

I don’t even want welfare. It’s not as easy as it sounds, and even I couldn’t do it myself.

But even if we can’t, shouldn’t we be protected?

“I will give up my private soldiers and go to war myself!
“Speak of conscription of the people without saying anything like this and without even thinking about it!”

“ ....”

“So what you’re saying is that the people of the empire are fighting for the empire, so loyalty is a given? There are degrees of barking with your mouth. What on earth are you misunderstanding and what are you saying? It is a choice for the people of the empire to protect the empire, and it is a duty for the empire to protect the people of the empire!

“The people of the empire are free to abandon the empire if it fails to fulfill its role!”

“How can a commoner....”

“Of course! The empire doesn’t treat its people properly, but do you think the people of the empire would sit in the empire and take up arms to protect it? The illusion is also oily and ridiculous. “I can already see that that humble place will be destroyed by the people of the empire who have turned away, and your heads will be hung on the guillotine.”

“your majesty!”

“You are talking too much!”

“Are you saying too much?”

Do they really not know why they are so angry?

When there was a shortage of troops during the Eight Years’ War, the first thing the emperor did was order the nobles to participate in the war. So they probably didn’t know that there was a method like this.

It was just that their own safety and property were more important to them than the people of the empire.

‘You have no right to be angry at me for pushing the war, but...’

If the emperor is out of his mind, shouldn’t his subordinates also come to their senses? What if we lose our minds together?

It’s disgusting. Even them and themselves. So I couldn’t control it.

Without realizing it, I grabbed the handle of the sword that was leaning against the throne.

It was when he heard the Prime Minister clear his throat that he became aware of his actions.

“Hmm.”

I woke up to the sound that brightened the atmosphere.

The others seemed to have come to their senses as the atmosphere calmed down a bit, and the nobles who had kept their mouths shut with faces filled with fear hurriedly bowed.

“I’m sorry.”

“God was stupid.”

“...Yeah, that was stupid.”

The emperor looked around at the pale complexions of the nobles, let go of the sword handle, and stroked their faces. A black ghost hovers in one corner of my vision.

I could tell without even thinking about what it was because of. He gritted his teeth and spat out the words.

“It is not a sin, but it is a sin for the person standing on top to be foolish. Don’t you know how many people’s lives are determined by each document you fill out and a word you utter? “I think you need to rethink what noblesse oblige is.”

“No shame.”

“...I feel sorry for the Margrave of Amiable, but I have no intention of postponing or stopping the war. So let me make it clear right now. “If we run out of troops, I will be the first to order you to join the war.”

Just like it was during the 8 years war.

“The standards are the same as then. If there are two or more men in the family, one of them must participate in the war with more than half of the soldiers. Otherwise, more than 2/3 of the soldiers must be surrendered.”

“...”

“Conscription of commoners is only a last resort.”

“...”

The emperor, who looked at the silent nobles for a moment in silence, let out a silent sigh and crossed his legs.

As his posture became more comfortable, the atmosphere among the nobles also became a little more relaxed, and after giving them a moment to compose themselves, the emperor soon opened his mouth again.

“Then let’s get back to the main agenda.”

Which kingdom should the next war be with?

....

After breaking up the meeting and returning straight to his office, the emperor threw his sword aside and sat down in a chair. He placed both elbows on the desk and pressed his temples, then looked down at the desk without thinking.

There was a pottery there that I had been examining before the meeting.

One of the trophies of the Kingdom of Ireon.

Did you say it was royal porcelain?

Even though I'm not an expert on crafts and have no discernment, the craftsmanship was so elaborate and beautiful that I could tell it was amazing.

And the thought I had at that time was...

'Can't I sell this and turn it into war funds?'

I consciously tried not to think about the unpleasant events in the conference room and focused on the object in front of me.

But it was useless.

The emperor was looking around at the pottery, and when he lifted it up to check the bottom, he noticed something strange.

A black stain settled on white porcelain.

I rub it with my thumb to see if there's something on it, but there's nothing on my hand.

The emperor, who was looking at his neat thumb, shifted his gaze back to the porcelain. As his eyes met, the black blob moved.

Wiggle.

And wow—

the ceramics began to turn black, like ink spreading on paper.

smart.

“Your Majesty, this is Ardal....”

Clink!

At the sound of something breaking, Prime Minister Ardal’s expression stiffened as he stood in front of the door. He quickly opens the door without asking permission and his eyes widen as he sees the devastation unfolding in the office.

It was broken. A priceless piece of royal porcelain.

“Your Majesty... What is this now...”

My lips are trembling. The emperor, who let out a dry exclamation ‘Ah’, responded indifferently to the groan-like voice that followed.

“...The pottery is ugly. “It seemed like it was a defective product.”

“pond...! “Your Majesty doesn’t know how to look at porcelain!”

The Prime Minister's cries, as always, were ignored. The emperor looked down at the broken shards of pottery.

...The hallucinations became worse. It wasn't enough to interfere with my daily life.

It was clearly a hallucination when I swallowed the ceramics. A being that remains in the realm of the mind and cannot have a direct impact on reality.

I raised my head. My eyes met with something dark, giggling, looking at me from behind the Prime Minister.

'...'

Emperor Xia smiled proudly.

The prime minister frowned, asking if he was laughing now after the accident, but he didn't care.

This was also why I was in a low mood in the conference room. I needed to focus on government work, but I was constantly interrupted, so how could I feel good?

I have no intention of enjoying heaven anyway, so why are they urging me so hard?

'They have no patience.'

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 83

83. While the turbulent (3)

emperor was mocking him, Ardal walked quickly through the pile of documents, took out a bundle, flipped through a few pages, took out a pen, edited the details on the spot, and sighed proudly. .

“Haa... 3 royal porcelains...” He crossed out the number of royal porcelains and added 3, then grumbled as he put the report back in its place.

It's the same in the conference room, and now I can't believe I'm breaking precious ceramics while doing it.

Although the emperor called himself a tyrant, he also set his own boundaries and acted accordingly, but these days it is a bit strange.

As things continued to unfold that the emperor I knew would not have done, the questions I had began to come out one after another, mixed with the dissatisfaction that had rapidly built up recently.

“Your Majesty, do you know what's strange these days? During this important period, whenever I get a chance, I become dazed, and at other times, I become overly sensitive, and when I feel like I'm looking at something and check, I find that I'm just looking at empty space. It's like..."

Ardal's actions stopped.

In the strange silence, his pupils widen and his hands, suspended in mid-air, tremble.

I turned my head and looked at the emperor. The emperor remained silent, not sure if he was asking him to say something or if he was just going to remain ignorant until he found out the correct answer.

"...as if I was seeing something in vain."

"...."

Ardal became convinced as there was no answer. And where did it come from?

"I guess you didn't call the congressman."

Guilt disguised as responsibility.

"okay."

"Ha..."

I forgot that it was rude and touched my forehead.

Ardal could not understand the emperor. Edoardo Desert was the most inexplicable of all the people he knew.

Yes human.

He pondered over the words, which did not suit the emperor, who did everything flawlessly, including battles, paperwork, and even daily life, and then laughed bitterly.

He, too, is ultimately human.

“Can you tell the difference?”

“till now.”

“Yes, you definitely should. “The moment His Majesty loses his ability to discern and swings his sword at an ally, the emperor will be replaced.”

This means that he will personally take the lead in replacing the emperor.

Even though the emperor clearly understood what he meant, he did not say anything. Because I know that for Ardal, the top priority is the ‘Empire’.

Wouldn’t it be bad to have at least one person like this among those who are filled with greed?

“Do you know His Royal Highness the Crown Prince and the Princess?”

“The crown prince knows.”

“Then there is a high possibility that Her Majesty the Princess knows. Have you ever been asked to get a medical examination? ...No”

Of course there was. I need to change the question.

“Your Majesty, are you still not willing to be examined?”

“does not exist. “More than that, Prime Minister.”

The emperor firmly changed the subject, as if he did not want to talk about him any more. Ardal, who was about to say something, closed his mouth at the next words.

Precisely because of the emperor's actions of pointing to a certain place on the map.

"As you know by participating in the meeting, the next opponent for the war has been decided to be the Kingdom of Srahan. "I plan to attack this area first, so I have a document listing the characteristics of this area..."

"Are you serious?"

The expression disappeared from Ardal's face.

The emperor, who had stopped speaking, raises his head. Our eyes met in silence.

The gorgeous golden eyes, like those of a wild beast, were filled with strong will as always and were burning intensely, using their own souls as a sacrifice.

Ardal, who had been looking at him in silence, slowly opened his mouth to dispel the silence.

"You're not in a good condition."

"Isn't that the realm of the mind and not the realm of the body?"

"The mind tends to have an effect on the body."

Like other nobles, Ardal was not happy about this war.

Even if it's the same for the Ireon Kingdom, there's no need to mess with other kingdoms and make a mess. Of course, since the emperor's goal was to conquer the continent, he would not care about such things...

But more than anything, he did not like the reason why the emperor set the goal of conquering the continent.

So, when it was confirmed that the Emperor's condition was not good, I was secretly hoping that, if not canceling the plan, they would at least postpone the war.

"So the Prime Minister is telling us to upset the plan that has already been discussed?"

"...but."

I know that it would be disrespectful to the nobles who participated in the meeting.

But still.

"This is crazy."

A hard voice came out.

The emperor plays a significant role in the power of the empire.

Is it for no reason that the emperor is the implicit first hero of the empire? The emperor is the strongest among those who possess the warrior's fragment.

He, who holds a key role both as a commander and as a general, is not in good condition, but they are going to force a war.

War is a dangerous thing where if something goes wrong, the lives of countless people can disappear in an instant.

What would happen if the emperor's condition worsened and he was unable to discern between right and wrong and gave wrong orders or even swung his sword without distinction?

"know."

“But why...!”

“Well...”

His golden eyes quietly lowered as if he was lost in thought. The eyelashes are long and create shadow.

The Emperor, who was silently looking at the broken shards of pottery on the floor, soon raised the corners of his mouth and looked at the Prime Minister.

An unknown voice came out quietly.

“Does a crazy person need a reason to do something crazy?”

bang!

The emperor, who had been laughing lazily at the noise that followed, immediately withdrew his smile. The golden eyes look down to see the hand that hit the desk, then go up again to look at the owner.

The emperor, who was looking at the chancellor's face expressionlessly with his teeth clenched as if he would explode at any moment, asked softly.

“What is this, Prime Minister?”

“If you're going to go crazy, go crazy in a nice way, and if you want to die, go somewhere quiet and die instead of sacrificing the innocent citizens of the empire! “If you want to beat yourself up, don't move the empire and cut yourself with a knife!!”

It eventually exploded.

There was coldness in the emperor's eyes, but Ardal seemed not to be afraid and burst into anger without hesitation, pouring out the words he had been holding back until now.

He was angry because he knew what the emperor's purpose was and because he cared for the empire more than anyone else.

"Your Majesty probably knows that the soldiers who sacrifice in war are also citizens of the empire. So why are you pushing for war? If you fulfill your responsibilities after death, that's it! Why are you ruling out the option of not going to war at all? Why must the people of the empire be sacrificed and the empire exploited for your personal purposes! Why on earth!!"

"Prime Minister."

"Responsibility is good. It is something that every human being deserves to bear. But... But why did you think that the emperor's first priority was 'responsibility'? no. The emperor prioritized responsibility, but it was not the first thing.

If the emperor really considered responsibility as the top priority,

"Do you think responsibility for something else is more important to you than the people and the empire?"

Because he would have prioritized the empire and its people more than his responsibility for his dead brothers and sisters.

The first thing for him is....

‘Guilt.’

Should we say that responsibility lies in second place without first place? In the first place, ‘guilt’ is a type of thing that cannot even be included in the list.

The emperor gave priority to guilt, which he called responsibility.

In the end, he too was just a weak human being swayed by guilt.

“Prime Minister.”

“....”

Ardal did not answer.

The Emperor, who was just watching him in silence as he was breathing extremely hard, soon spoke slowly, as if he was thinking over each word.

“What did Jim say?”

“...under.”

In the end, the story turns around and concludes like this.

The meaning of those words is ‘I will not neglect the empire because it is the empire.’ I don’t know if it means ‘So don’t worry’ or just ‘Shut up and do as you’re told, because this is the empire’, but either way, the conclusion was one.

According to the Emperor’s will.

Ardal, who was quietly glaring at the emperor, searched through the files stored in the bookshelf, took out one of them, placed it on the desk, and swiped it.

“...I have already prepared it. “The characteristics of the area mentioned by His Majesty.”

“ ....”

“Do you think I’ve only seen Your Majesty for a day or two?
“I had some expectations.”

What decision will you make and what route will you take if you go to war? entire.

[The burden is the empire.]

If someone other than ‘Edoardo Desert’ had said these words, Ardal would have left without mercy even if the other person was the person who took him away.

Usually, the person who says this is an unanswerable tyrant who will be remembered in history for a long time, and there is no way such a tyrant could rule the country properly.

But Edoardo Desert....

“Whatever you do, do as you please. Anyway, I’m not good enough to stop your Majesty...”

As long as you don’t abandon the empire, I’ll turn a blind eye to it in most cases.

I quietly swallowed my words. The emperor, who was flipping through documents, raised his head and made eye contact, as if he knew what he was thinking.

‘...okay.’

You know.

If you let go of the empire, you will no longer be the emperor.

As for me, I will do everything in my power to cut off your head and hang your head on the wall.

Ardal looked the emperor in the eyes and then quietly averted his gaze.

There was a heavy silence.

On this day, the empire declared war on another kingdom on the border, and several kingdoms, who had been suspicious of the empire's continued attempts to wage war even though the other kingdom had clearly done nothing major, seemed to realize something and quickly entered a wartime mode.

It was a moment that predicted a bloody storm would blow across the continent.

***

Currently, there are four official heroes in the Empire.

Three heroes who appeared against the backdrop of the Eight Year War, and a fourth hero who was recognized as a hero for his additional achievements afterwards.

The three heroes of the eight-year war are those who appeared countless times and were called heroes, but eventually died and were forgotten, and they survived until the end and preserved their name.

As such, their contributions were significant.

At the beginning of the war, the first hero rose to the position of commander-in-chief based on the emperor's strong support and led the battle. The second hero distinguished himself from the beginning of the war, cutting down enemies without hesitation and building a mountain with his corpse. The third hero took the lead from the beginning and middle of the war, showing his true cruelty by not leaving behind a single unharmed body

.

Stigma Primiro was the second hero among them.

"The Kingdom of Ireon has already surrendered?"

"yes."

"If that was the case, I don't know why you provoked me.
"You bastards."

Disgust flashed in the eyes of the man, who was wearing cool clothes that were a bit far from imperial attire.

It was an inevitable reaction for someone who hates weak things.

He lowers his crossed legs as if he doesn't want to waste his attention on the losers who have already finished processing.

He turned the bloody sword he was roughly holding upside down and slashed it down, then placed both hands on it and rested his chin on it. A soft voice continued.

"So, why did Your Majesty call me?"

"He told us to prepare for war."

“War? The war is not over yet... no way.”

The man’s eyes widened.

Although he was surprised, he twisted his lips for a moment as if he was convinced of something.

“Khaat.”

“....”

“Khahahaha!!”

A refreshing sound of laughter spreads across the sky.

The man who had been laughing for a long time touched his lips with a still smiling face.

“As expected of your Majesty.”

at las.

Stigma let out a few more laughs while muttering inaudibly to himself.

It was expected that the emperor would not end the war like that. His movements during the Eight Years’ War seemed to have the conquest of the continent in mind.

The emperor’s move to conquer the continent itself was not something he was happy about. Stigma was happy about the fact that he could participate in the war.

To be precise, I was able to make a contribution.

‘This time.’

In return for his merits, he will ask for the extinction of his family.

Just like that guy back then.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 84

Deon Hardt, the third hero of the turbulent (4) Empire.

Stigma asked a question, making no secret of his favor towards him.

“Is my junior coming to that war too?”

“If it were Honorary Count Deonhardt, I think he would probably join the war even if it were late.”

Well, there's no way the emperor would save such a good card.

“I wish I could meet you soon.”

Stigma liked him.

When awarding awards to war heroes for their contributions, the order was in the order in which they distinguished themselves.

Therefore, like Nemeseus, who answered the emperor's question about what he wanted, Stigma answered nothing in particular and received the title of marquis and a large territory in the south, as well as a considerable amount of money and jewels.

I was satisfied at the time.

That is, until I found out what Deon Hardt, who had requested a private meeting with the Emperor, had requested.

‘I’m asking for permission to destroy the family with my own hands.’

It felt like I had been struck by lightning. How can you come up with such an idea?

I felt not only shock but also joy.

At the same time, I developed a crush on Deon Hardt, whom I had never had a conversation with.

Of course, it was a little disappointing. It would have been better if I had known there was a way to do this before talking about rewarding merit.

“But isn’t Honorary Count Deonhardt the Marquis’ junior? “I heard that he lived in the mansion since he was young until the war.”

“Because we are the same hero. “I am the second and he is the third.”

He chuckled and stood up, using the sword he was holding as support.

As I stand on the uneven ground, I feel a slight movement beneath my feet. Stigma’s eyes glanced downward.

“Oh my.”

He was still alive.

Just in case, I look around and occasionally see people who are still alive.

For some reason, the chair was uncomfortable.

I took out the sword that had been stuck on the floor, or rather, in someone's stomach.

Stigma ordered coldly as he stabbed the writhing creature in the neck.

"There are those who are still alive, so make sure to find them and kill them. No, there is the problem of infectious diseases anyway... it would be better to just set fire to it."

"yes."

Well then, since this is a long-awaited war, let's go get ready. Since everyday life is a battle anyway, there isn't much to prepare for.

Stigma walks out with his sword dripping with blood.

Behind him was a mountain of corpses.

The chair he sat on... Flames rise from the pile of corpses. Then, flames began to rise here and there.

Stigma Premiere.

The second hero of the empire to receive the title of marquis.

The territory he received was the southernmost part of the empire, where wars were fought every day with the Barbai tribe, called barbarians.

It was not because the emperor disliked him that he bestowed it on him. This was what Stigma, who was from the southern part of the empire and had a lot of regrets toward barbarians, wanted.

How powerful must be his power, which grew relentlessly by fighting epidemics and barbarians in the humid and harsh south under the emperor's tacit permission for massacres?

Stigma, who had already formed a warlord in the south, happily ordered preparations for war as if he had been waiting for this moment.

***

Uh....

I was looking at Devellania, who was rolling her eyes from the carriage and gesturing for her to get on, with a shocked expression on her face, and then I looked back at the Demon King who had come out to see me off.

For some reason, the smiling face as always is that of the Demon King... Ah, the Demon King, right?

"Of course I can't give it up..."

"Of course I can't."

"Resignation...."

"Just kidding."

shit.

Feeling like a cow being dragged to the slaughterhouse, I forced myself to take a step that seemed stuck to the ground.

The magic stone necklace around my neck was swinging, showing off its presence, as if to warn me of an uneasy future.

....

It was about 30 minutes before leaving for the second city that I felt uneasy.

This was the time when Ed, faithful to his role as adjutant, was conducting the final inspection before departure.

“The 2nd Corps commander says he will go with the 2nd Corps. Daemon, are you still planning on not taking the 0th Legion with you?”

For some reason, Ed, who had been fully arming me, tied the knot of the dagger sheath around his thigh tightly and opened his mouth.

“It’s enough for me to go with you to the 2nd Corps.”

No, it’s actually overflowing. I’m just going to buy clothes, but if one corps comes out as an escort...

Moreover, there’s no reason for Develania to try to kill me, so there’s no need to take 0 corps with me, whose sanity is diminished just by looking at it.

If this was the human world, I would never be sure, but this is the demon world... no, it is the devil castle.

Unlike humans, who are under the same monarch but are constantly divided by those who follow the monarch and those who do not, and who fight for power among themselves, demons, especially the corps commanders of the Demon King's Castle, do not do such things and only follow the demon king.

That's why he takes it upon himself to do such a foolish thing as kill the same corps commander and reduce the Demon King's power.

Of course, when he gets angry, even if he doesn't kill me, he makes it right before that, so I can't live comfortably...

'I happened to see a fight between corps commanders, and it was so bloody.'

If you attack me like that, I will definitely die.

As such, he has always been careful in all his actions, so he would not have offended Develania and would not do such a thing again. So there is nothing to worry about...

But why?

"Is that so... It looks like the 0th Legion is only a hindrance to Demon."

"...yes?"

"It would be more convenient for you to go alone, Demon..."

"...?"

"I need to increase the intensity of my training."

Is this what Ed's reaction looks like...?

"Of course, it won't catch up with Master Demon, but it won't hold you back..." "

..."

This was the first ominous sign I felt.

The second was Lirinel.

She came into the room with her eyes shining brightly, holding a familiar-shaped necklace in one hand, and immediately began speaking with an excited face.

“Daemon, I heard you’re leaving the Demon King’s Castle again?”

“Yes, I am going to the second city.”

But why is that...?

“Why do you just say that? “I heard you were going around the outskirts.”

“Yes...”

So why is that...?

“As the leader of the Demon Cult, I can’t stay silent after hearing news like that! So I prepared this!”

A familiar necklace was thrust in front of my eyes.

No, I think I heard something strange before that...? What kind of school?

This must be pointed out. If you just pass by, you will definitely regret it.

Lirinel was one step faster in opening her mouth, faithfully following the instinctive warning to shout...

Without waiting for the few seconds I had left to clear my mind of the absurd words, she placed the necklace in my hand and said proudly:

“Just like last time, it’s a necklace with a protection spell engraved on it! “It will respond to life-threatening attacks. In addition, once it is worn, we have added a function that automatically recognizes the owner and returns automatically even if it is removed or lost.”

“Thank you. But just now...”

“Oh, and a function that automatically summons me when the necklace breaks is also added...”

Wow...

You should never wear it.

“...I tried to do it, but I couldn’t because the Demon King scolded me for wasting my energy and wasting my magic. “I’m sorry...”

“Thank goodness... this is enough. Thank you.”

“What. Now, go ahead and try it on!”

I paused for a moment, but it was only for a moment.

Fortunately, it didn’t seem to have any annoying features, and there was no reason for Lyrinel to harm me... so I immediately put the necklace around my neck.

The necklace that recognizes its owner glows for a moment and then becomes quiet. Only then did I get a chance to speak, so I quickly opened my mouth before the player was taken away again.

Ririnel’s statement that has been lingering in my mind for a while.

I missed the timing of the conversation that followed and let it slip away, but it was so intense that I couldn't forget it.

"Rather than that, I think it was called something... a cult leader... but what is that..."

"Ah, a demon religion?"

"Cough."

oh my god. You didn't hear wrong! From the very name of Demonism, I can tell that it has something to do with me!

To calm down, I quickly took the glass of water Lirinel held out to me. After taking a sip, I feel like my heart calms down a little.

"Are you okay?! "You need to call your doctor...!"

"no. it's okay. Rather than that, it's called Demonism...."

"It's an organization created to worship Demon!"

"Puhup-"

It was only for a moment.

I wanted to drink a little more, so all the water I had in my mouth came out again.

Holy shit. You moved on to prayer.

"Cough, cough, cough!"

"What should I do! After all, the attending physician...!"

"Oh, cough, no, it's okay... Cough, cough!"

I can't stop coughing so damn easily. I need to calm down quickly....

I hurriedly reached out and held Lirinel, who was scared, as she stood up and said she would hurry to call the doctor. After coughing a few more times, I finally calmed down and raised my head and looked at Lilinelle.

For some reason, she was looking at my hand holding her collar with thrilled eyes.

...Maybe it's my mood?

"Lirinel?"

"yes? Ah yes! "Are you okay now?"

"Yes... by the way"

Demon religion... There are not many stupid people who would believe in a religion with such a bizarre name and purpose.

Contrary to my belief that it would disappear soon, I was unable to ignore my ominous instincts and curiosity and eventually opened my mouth.

"How many people believe in demonism?"

"First of all, it can be said that almost all users of the inner voice believe it, and about a third of the outer voice users probably believe it."

There's more than you think, right?! A rootless religion is encroaching on the Demon King. What on earth is the Demon King doing?

"Actually, the Demon Lord also showed interest."

Of course it is.

What monarch would just sit by and watch a pseudo-religion grow in power?

After all, the devil. It wasn't like he was just sitting still....

"He asked if there was any position for a vice principal."

"This is crazy."

"yes?"

"no."

I definitely didn't just sit back and watch. You did something crazy.

So, it doesn't mean that the Demon King is the vice-religious leader now...?

To prepare for the shock that would follow, I gently put down the water cup I was holding on the table. There's no need to make a fuss again just because you missed it.

"But if the Demon Lord came in, Demonism would become an official organization with political implications, so I had no choice but to give up in the end. "He seemed very disappointed."

Well...

it wasn't a shock other than what I had expected...

'...'

I gave up thinking.

That shouldn't have happened.

I should have thought again about why Lirinel gave me the necklace, mentioning the fact that she was going to the outskirts.

And the third time I felt an ominous sign was when I found out that Ben was accompanying me.

To be precise, in the scene where Ben, who had joined to follow the Demon King's orders, gets into a fight with the 2nd Corps commander D'Vellania.

As time ran out, I arrived at the first floor and saw Develania with her arms crossed, blocking the entrance to the carriage, and Ben looking up at her in a crooked manner.

"I thought I was going alone with Demon-"

"It's the Demon King's order. And it's not like we're going alone, right? "What is the 2nd Corps?"

"Anyway, it was planned to be just the two of us in the carriage."

"Is that so? That was so sad. However, since I don't know what will happen to Demon's health, it is natural for me to accompany you. Rather than going straight to the second city, don't you take a 'outskirt' route?"

It is also 'outskirts' again.

I wonder why everyone is saying that there is a problem with going a little further to the outskirts. Doesn't it just take some time?

I glanced down and checked the state of the armament beneath the roughly draped robe.

The six daggers were clearly worn because Ed had armed them well, as if sending them to war.

‘Something doesn’t seem... right?’

I don’t think I’m going there just to buy clothes. Should I back out and say I won’t go now?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 85

85. A vacation that is not a vacation (1)

While I was seriously contemplating it because I was belatedly doubting it, someone suddenly appeared next to me.

He was wary – in fact, startled – and took a step back, not even casting a glance at the other side, but instantly ending the seemingly endless war of nerves between the two.

“Yes, Develania. “You have to prepare for any unexpected situation.”

“...Tsk.”

Develania clicks her tongue and steps back, and Ben lowers his head as if it were natural.

Only then did the Demon King turn his head and look at me. When our eyes meet, the white and black colored eyes are slightly curved.

“You said you wouldn’t take Legion 0?”

“...yes.”

“Is it because you’re in the way? Or is it that you don’t want your share taken away?”

“yes?”

The alarm bell that had been sounding quietly before began to ring randomly.

When my instincts warned me that it was too late, I cursed under my breath and slowly retreated without being able to reply.

Going shopping for clothes is just an excuse, and no matter how you look at it, it feels like going to a fight. Should I jump out now?

But my feeble attempt immediately went to waste.

“Then hurry up and go. “Everything is ready, all you have to do is set off.”

Whether by accident or design, a white hand with impressive black nails was placed on my shoulder. I looked at the hand and then looked at the Demon King with an expressionless face.

And once again, Demon Lord, who noticed my presence and waved his hand telling me to get on board.

“Of course I can’t give it up...”

“Of course I can’t.”

....

For the first time after departure, nothing happened.

It’s just that I was quite tired after watching the nervous battle between Develania and Ben.

Rattling.

In the badly shaking carriage, I was busy withstanding two types of attacks: motion sickness and a fight between two demons.

“Doctor, why don’t you get off and run now?”

“I’m sorry, but the attending physician must be within distance to take care of the patient at any time.”

“Then why don’t you go up on the roof? “If something dangerous happens, I’ll give you a signal-”

“The carriage is spacious, so I wonder if it’s really necessary to go that far.”

Never mind. It has nothing to do with me. It’s nothing to worry about. So ignore it... wow, motion sickness.

‘Oh God.’

Why are you putting me through this ordeal...!

For your information, I am an atheist. These evil bastards make an atheist cry out for God.

Devellania, who was completely upset and unaware of my feelings, folded her arms and spoke with her characteristic drawl.

“You must be very arrogant to say that you were once the Demon Lord’s personal doctor, right?”

“I am currently the doctor of Commander 0 Corps. “It’s natural that I have a high standard of opinion.”

“The commander of the corps has the right to summary disposition, but if you don’t want to be the target, why don’t you come to your senses?”

“If you are confident that you can safely touch the doctor of the Commander of Corps 0, why not give it a try? “I will tell you how scary your doctor is.”

Oh, can you please stay still? I’m already feeling nauseous and my head hurts like crazy.

Contrary to the ominous omen, I was relieved at first because nothing happened... but now I really wish something would happen.

Anything is fine, so someone please get me out of this mood. please.

-Kwagwagwang!!

“Daemon, Develania! “It’s a monster!”

Not like this.

‘No matter how bad it is, can’t it be something I can handle?’

I quickly opened the window and checked outside.

A wave of black monsters rushing in. Fortunately, the ankles were cut off by the thread thrown by the 2nd Corps members and the body collapsed, but it can be seen at a glance that this alone is not enough.

As I was looking around at the situation outside, I found a particularly large monster crawling on the floor and was able to easily recognize the identity of the roaring sound from earlier.

‘It would be strange if a big person like that fell and there wasn’t that much of a loud noise.’

If I fight there, I will definitely die. There doesn't seem to be a hole to escape through, right?

I looked around inside the carriage wondering what to do, and for a moment my expression hardened.

Develania, leisurely looking out the window, and Ben, who was rummaging through the bags he had packed, were so calm that they did not suit the current situation.

As if I had expected it.

'...aha.'

Judging the situation was quick. I gritted my teeth gently.

Is this what it meant to go back to the outskirts? Like a damn devil.

For some reason, the reactions from the moment I left were strange. If I had suspected and thought a little more, I would have been able to notice.

'No, actually, I wasn't even expecting it.'

Hoping it wasn't the case, I just pretended not to know and said, 'No way.'

They said that the number of monsters is increasing day by day. Even before I came to the Empire, there were so many people that we had to fight to defend the city, but what about now that time has passed?

If it increased, it would increase, not decrease.

And since he was the commander of the 0th Corps, one of the news that he constantly heard even when he was confined to his room came to mind.

‘After the city defense battle, a corps commander was stationed there.’

And it was said that the movements of the monsters had changed.

There are still monsters knocking on the city walls, but they instinctively sense difficulties and move to seek easier prey, invading the territories of other races. It is said that because of this, there were protests from the heads of different races.

Monsters are lumps of error born from the power of the Demon King.

So, of course, the responsibility lies with the devil.

I guess I had to clean it. Circling the edge of the demon territory to prevent the demons from invading the lands of other races.

The border that borders the territories of other races. If that isn't the 'outskirts of the demon world', then what is it?

Now I was moving around the edge of the 'Demon World'. To clean up monsters!

‘When I told you to turn around and go to the outskirts of the Demon King, I meant to ask you to clean up the monsters on the way.’

Being naive, I quickly accepted this. Shit.

‘I can not.’

Look at that. That's almost at the level of a monster wave. Black waves are rushing this way at random, and you want me to deal with them?

I can never do it. No, I don't.

The conclusion was reached without even thinking.

'Let's just bounce.'

If you go straight towards the second city without looking back, there is a good chance of survival. You might not know the horses of the human world, but the horses here are not horses but closer to monsters.

The problem is how to convince the dangers in this carriage and make them jump out of it... I was wondering how to express my opinion.

Devellania, who was looking out the window and playing with a transparent thread in her hand, grinned and jumped up from her seat.

"Then I will go out and deal with them first, so Demon, please come out slowly."

"...yes?"

what? No wait...!

Without any time to say anything, the carriage door opened and closed.

I froze, reaching awkwardly toward the door.

As I turn my head, I see broken monsters falling down every time something sparkles outside the window.

...Yes, the 2nd Corps Commander's main weapon was a thread pulled from a monster's skin. That's cool. It's cool, but... damn. This ruined my plan to ignore everything and race to the city.

I withdrew the hand that was still outstretched and looked back at the person remaining in the carriage. Our eyes met and there was an awkward silence.

"...."

"...."

Ben was the first to break this awkward atmosphere.

He naturally looked down, rummaged through his bag again, and spoke in an indifferent voice.

"I understand Demon's feelings."

"...."

Probably not.

First of all, it's definitely not a good idea to say something out of the blue in this situation.

"Since it was a long-awaited battle, you probably wanted to dominate it. However, the number of monsters is sufficient, so I don't think there is any need to stop the 2nd Corps Commander."

See, that's not true. I wasn't even expecting it in the first place.

I was just watching Ben's actions with a look that said, "Okay then," and as if he had found what he was looking for, he took something out of his bag.

My eyes shook slightly for an instant as I confirmed the identity of the object.

“Of course, I’m sorry that Demon-nim’s excitement was ruined because of that. So I prepared this to help you get excited.”

What was in his hand was none other than alcohol.

With a blank face, I looked at the drink and the visitation bag in turn. I swallowed down the words that seemed to come out at any moment.

Why... is it out there?

“This is all there is to drink anyway, so I won’t say anything no matter how much you drink. All you have to do is eat as much as you want and feel better.”

Well... looking at the current situation, it seems like this damn battle can’t be avoided, and if that’s the case, it might be a good idea to have a drink to relax... With complicated eyes, I looked down at the glass being filled in my hand

.

...Well, even if you die, it’s not impossible to die with a sober mind, right? It won’t hurt.

I drank it all at once.

***

The attending physician, Ben, tenaciously followed Demon Arut, who had left behind his adjutant because he wanted to go alone with the 2nd Corps Commander D’Vellania.

This is because he received orders from the Demon King.

The ostensible reason was for his health, which could deteriorate at any time, and the secretly received order was...

“The demon may show signs of hesitation in battle.”

“...Are you talking about Demon?”

“okay. Of course, if he thinks it might be dangerous, he will change and wipe it out, but even if he is usually moderate, he is too moderate. To be honest, rather than being gentle, I would rather call him gentle... No, it would be better to call him weak rather than gentle.”

“That...”

It's true. Unless there was a special reason, such as drinking or fearing for his life, he always avoided battle.

Needless to say, if demons who didn't know his true nature saw him, they would probably see him as food.

Ben couldn't reply and just licked his lips, and the demon king sitting at the head of the table smiled silently and waved his hands.

The servant who had been standing the whole time quietly walks over and sets down the tray he was carrying in front of Ben.

As I naturally followed it with my gaze, a liquor bottle came into view.

“It's clear that he likes fighting, but he usually endures more than necessary even though there is no reason to endure it.

But at some point, even the smallest thing can cause an explosion, causing more blood than necessary.”

So wouldn't it be better to make sure they solve it when they can?

His contradictory actions flash through my mind. The Demon King spoke softly to Ben, who was silent.

“Maybe if we had more time like during the last city defense, but right now, time is too precious to wait until we can move on our own. But I don't want to intentionally put myself in danger either.”

“....”

“So I order you.”

In a dark space bathed in soft moonlight, the Demon King rested his chin and tapped his temple with his index finger, grinning.

The lips, the only ones exposed under the moonlight, rise in perfect symmetry.

“If you feel that the demon is hesitating to fight, give it a drink.”

Ah, Ben closed his mouth.

In the end, he too was a demon lord.

The Lord of the Demon World who utilizes what is available to the extent possible.

In front of the smooth smile that was hard to tell, Ben just lowered his head and quietly took the bottle.

‘Actually, I was a little worried, but...’

It would be a big problem if they went on a rampage without distinction due to the lack of commanders of the 0 Corps. When his drunkenness reaches its peak, there is no danger of disaster.

However, the Demon King seemed to have anticipated his concerns and even told him the exact standards.

Even if fed, only up to 5 bottles of alcohol with an alcohol content of 25%. If you go beyond that, drunkenness begins.

And now again.

“It’s alcohol...”

Exactly. Just right. Just right. Just right.

White fingers tap the carriage seat at regular intervals. A strange smile lingers on the corner of the mouth, and a red eye that is different from usual flashes.

The cup he was drinking from was thrown onto the floor of the carriage at some point.

Deon, who had been twirling the bottle with his gaze down, tilted his head crookedly and slowly raised his eyes to look at Ben.

The moment our eyes met.

Just right.

My fingers stopped.

“ .... ”

“....”

The silence is so persistent that even the air seems to be oppressing it.

Deon, who was looking at Ben motionlessly in the suffocating silence where he couldn't even breathe, grinned.

At the same time, all sorts of unpleasant emotions began to overflow from his blood-red eyes, as if the suppressed madness exploded.

He said.

“Did you use your brain?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 86

86. Vacation, not vacation (2)

Deon Hardt's drinking capacity is five bottles of alcohol with an alcohol content of 25%. To be exact, my memory stops after I drink the last of five bottles.

I'm the type of person who gets drunk all of a sudden, so up until that point, I didn't have the slightest sign of being drunk and my mind was always fine.

It has never changed from the moment I first drank alcohol.

Not once.

Then why does his personality change even when he's not drunk?

Deon chuckled as he lifted the bottle of alcohol in his hand to his mouth.

'If you put the key back into a locked door, it will inevitably open.'

Alcohol and drugs are a kind of 'key'.

On the battlefield, Deonhardt gave himself two extremely divided personalities in order to survive and to maintain his sanity. The medium for that process was none other than alcohol and drugs.

It is natural for a wall built with alcohol and drugs to become weak due to alcohol and drugs.

Because of this, when Deonhardt drank alcohol, even in small amounts, he could not control the two personalities I had shared overflowing over the wall.

In the end, 'quantity' was not the problem, but 'alcohol' was the problem.

I never really tried to hide it, and it's not the kind of thing that can be hidden, so it's understandable that others notice and try to take advantage of it, but... 'I never thought it would be this blatant.'

At first glance, he must be the devil.

I didn't really think about why I did this. Because it's obvious.

It must have been a waste of time. The emperor was moving boldly and faster than expected, and the time for the hero's birth was getting closer. In addition, the monsters are increasing faster and faster...

However, if you ignore the monsters and let them increase uncontrollably, you will be caught by the ankles when you really need to move.

Even now, protests are coming in from other races asking us to do something about the monsters, so what can we do?

The only way to do this is to send Deon to deal with it and return as quickly as possible to minimize the hole in the standby power.

So, Deon Hart.

'I was taken advantage of.'

He was used by the devil. And in a very unpleasant way.

I feel bad, but there is nothing I can do in this situation. Deon, who had skillfully put aside his thoughts about him, lowered his eyes.

'Now that Develania moves like that, there's only one thing I can do.'

Open the door like this and go out and deal with those monsters.

That's what the Demon King wants, and the board has already been made perfectly.

But before that.

Wow!!

He threw the empty liquor bottle onto the floor of the carriage and pulled out his dagger. Ben's body was pushed against the wall of the carriage, stepping on sharp pieces of glass that shattered and bounced wildly.

Deon, with his left arm pressed against Ben's chest and the dagger in his right hand aimed at his throat, looked straight into his eyes and growled.

"You've earned the credit and effort you've put in, so let's look at it just this once. "There is no next time."

“...”

“I decide when to step out.”

The bright red eyes, soaked in the unique energy of a crazy person, shine with blatant displeasure.

I'd rather swing it myself, and I have no intention of letting someone else swing me.

Deon's eyes seemed to contain murderous intent at first glance, as the feeling of being exposed like this, not willingly, was worse than expected.

Ben's eyes twitched as he instinctively felt that his life could be in danger if he touched it wrongly. Even if that wasn't the case, I couldn't even react when a dagger was pointed at my throat a little while ago, so my stiff body gained even more strength.

Deon glared at him with fierce eyes, then shrugged and slowly backed away.

“Think carefully whose doctor you are.”

Even though he is the doctor handed over by the Demon King, in the end, Ben is currently Deon's doctor. Otherwise, what doctor would recommend alcohol to a weak patient?

He actually caused harm to the patient he was supposed to be caring for.

As if he belatedly remembered that fact, Ben's body stiffened. Deon, who was looking down at his face as he stiffened in shame and shame, snorted and stepped back.

“Well... I wasn't expecting it in the first place.”

Ben's eyes widened in shock, but Deon opened the carriage door and left without even looking at him.

An enormous number of monsters are seen rushing in like a tide on a wide plain. Due to the activities of the 2nd Corps, many monsters are being turned into pieces of meat, but even more are coming in.

Develania, who discovered him, lifted the thread that had embroidered the air and raised her voice.

"Daemon, it was a calculation mistake! There are more monsters than you think! What should I do?"

The red eyes go down, see the remains of the falling monster, and then go up again.

Just like that, Develania once.

"You should step down first, right? The second city is close by, so why not go there? At this rate, it seems like it will be difficult to escape, but...."

"...."

One more look at the monsters.

The corners of his mouth went up.

"So... are you going to risk a lot of damage now and go through these monsters and get to the second city? "Do you just leave it to us whether they come after us or not and whether the remaining monsters cross the territory of this race?"

"Oh, that's not what I meant..."

If you run away as she said, you will sustain the damage, fail in your mission, and end up sending a bomb to another city so that you can die together. Then, when even that city becomes dangerous, it is truly the worst.

Devellania faced bright red eyes and waved her hand with a pale face.

“There is a corps commander in the second city! Oh no. Sorry, Daemon. I was short-thinking. “I stopped because I was in a hurry...”

“I heard that a corps commander was stationed in the city as well.”

However, because one corps commander was in charge of two cities, the corps were divided and deployed. No matter how great the corps commander is, how much help a corps that has been cut in half can do against such a large number.

“Why are you looking for a solution there?”

“yes?”

“Ben has a communication seat, right?”

“yes? Ah ah yes!”

Ben, who got off the carriage and was looking at the situation, nodded in surprise.

I clearly remember because when we were leaving, Edgar packed our bags right in front of our eyes, threatening us rather than threatening us to take good care of Demon. So, the communication seat around here... ah, I found it.

“Here it is!”

“Can I use this to send video communication to the Demon Lord?”

“yes? It’s possible, but... it’s a medium and you have to use magic separately...”

“Why is that?”

“The Demon King has issued a ban on magic.”

Deon’s head tilted to one side for a moment as he let out a short exclamation.

“Even though it’s an emergency right now?”

“...I will bet.”

“I’ll go and deal with the monsters. “The situation looks a bit difficult...”

Develania, who was watching, jumps into the mess again, and Ben casts a spell on the communication table. Soon, the devil’s face appeared in the air.

-Ben? What’s going on? The guy you’re using magic against is... a demon?

“There is a problem.”

-A problem?

“Give Demon Lord Ben some light over there.”

Ben obediently changed his angle. The Demon King, seeing the endless waves of monsters, kept his mouth shut.

“There are more than we expected.”

-So... I thought one corps for two corps commanders would be enough.

“What should I do?”

-I can't just leave that alone... I'll send support. Just hold on for 15 minutes. You can do it, right?

“I'll try it. “The location is...”

-Okay, I'll take care of it.

Communication was cut off. Deon turned his head and looked at the monsters.

There are so many that it is disgusting to look at them again. The number is so high that even surviving, let alone killing or defeating them, is a long shot.

I have to stay here for 15 minutes.

The sight of monsters running and filling the wilderness, as if they were excited by the long-awaited appearance of their prey, was enough to make me feel despair and collapse, but Deon smiled as he strengthened the hand holding the dagger again.

‘It's been a while since we've been in a situation like this.’

If I had felt this much despair and given up, I would not have survived the eight-year war.

Even in an even more desperate war situation, Deon survived in the end.

The situation is no different from then, except that the opponent is a monster. No, monsters are easier opponents than humans.

Deon was confident he would survive this time too.

Jerk.

I walked calmly without even flinching.

As if to provide cover, D'Vellania retracts the thread she was swinging and silently lands next to her. But Deon didn't go on a rampage right away.

'If I jump into that situation regardless and become isolated, I will definitely die.'

Being crazy and understanding your capabilities are two different things.

He was crazy to live, not crazy to die.

'think.'

Even now, the front line is being pushed slowly but steadily.

My specialty is creating fear, not killing. Monsters that are faithful to their instincts will run away as soon as fear overpowers hunger.

'Is it really a good thing for monsters to run away?'

It's good to be able to live right now, but it's never good to think about the future.

Bright red eyes quickly scan the battlefield. My head spun and I made calculations in an instant.

We must hold out and tie the monsters here until help arrives.

Deon, holding a dagger in both hands, called out to Develania in a voice that feigned calm.

“I’m going to set a trap. “Tell this to your legions.”

....

It’s called a fish trap. The entrance is shaped like a funnel, so it’s easy to get in, but it’s hard to get out. Even the direction of the current is a literal trap that helps fish coming in and suppresses and captures fish trying to get out.

Monsters are fish and currents at the same time.

“Develania.”

“Start!”

The 2nd Corps unfolded their threads in unison. Each thread is woven and intertwined to form a huge shape.

Since it is a thread that cuts when touched, stupid monsters do not even know what it is, but as if they only know that if they go to a certain location, their bodies will be torn to pieces and they will die, so they naturally follow the thread’s guidance and enter the only entrance.

After a while, they will feel that something is strange. But by then it was too late. Because the only exit is blocked by monsters that keep coming.

Deon, who was watching the situation from inside the trap, slowly walks forward. He looked back at Develania to see how many steps he had walked and drew a straight line on the floor with his foot.

“Randomly set up threads around here. The purpose is to prevent monsters from entering where you are standing. “We also need to have a safe space.”

This is Bae Su-jin. Monsters can’t escape this trap, but we can’t escape either.

This place, meant to trap monsters, could actually become a place to be eaten by monsters.

So, we should do this at least.

“I don’t think we’ll be able to keep even one animal out because there isn’t enough thread...”

“There’s no need to install it too tightly. “The gap is just enough for us to come and go.”

“yes? “Don’t do it...”

De’Vellania, who read Deon’s intention to deal with monsters by going back and forth between inside and outside, expressed his disapproval.

“Unless you are a skilled person, it will not be easy to find the installed thread... Of course, I am not doubting Demon’s skills, but it would be troublesome to worry about such things in a melee...” “I will take care of that.

”

“Uh oh....”

How?

Even though she seems to be stubborn, she actually knows how to stretch her legs based on the atmosphere. Develania swallowed down the question he was about to ask without thinking and gave orders to the 2nd corps he had brought with him.

In today's situation, asking questions carelessly can lead to death.

Devellania, who was about to move quickly before being criticized for her rudeness, stopped when she received an unexpected reply.

"I'm lucky."

"yes...?"

It was a stupid question. Instead of answering, Deon grinned, fixing his gaze straight ahead.

The excitement that could not be concealed was overflowing in his bright red eyes, where the film of calm had been removed, as if reason was no longer a luxury.

It jumped and jumped towards the monsters. Meanwhile, the threads set up by the 2nd Corps naturally pass by, point out the most formidable guy, and rush at them.

Deon suddenly thrust the dagger he was holding into the guy's face and smiled with the corners of his mouth stretched out. A laugh that could not be called normal escaped naturally.

Normal people would have needed extreme concentration to find the thread, but Deon didn't need that.

'If this is luck, it must be luck.'

His eyes, which were naturally weak to light and heat, were accustomed to darkness rather than light as he had refrained from exposure to the outside world.

What does it mean to be unaccustomed to light?

This means that it is sensitive to light.

Therefore, he was able to sensitively catch the moment when the threads of the 2nd Corps minutely reflected the moonlight, which would have been overlooked by ordinary people.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 87

87. Hyuga, not Hyuga (3)

There was no hesitation in his actions as he knew the location of the thread. Rather, they went beyond avoiding the thread and used the installed thread.

He flexibly moves across the thread, leading the monsters to be cut off, or directly chopping them up, controlling his stamina. As I got used to it, sometimes I pushed the monster in at the moment the nearby 2nd Corps members swung the thread.

Ben's expression gradually changed strangely as he watched the situation while holding his visitation bag tightly.

'The tide has changed.'

The behavior of the monsters that had been charging recklessly without regard for direction became passive. Due to Demon's characteristics, the attitude of those guys was like setting the stage for them to go on a rampage even more.

'But it's not enough.'

Still, it is not enough. Even though they killed so many, there didn't seem to be much difference in the number of monsters.

When will support come? Was 15 minutes this long?

“Cough!”

“Daemon!”

“Do not come!”

Deon stopped Ben, who was trying to rush towards him, and stepped on the dagger between the monster’s eyes, pushing it deeper. Deon used the recoil to throw himself backwards and enter the room.

The monster, unable to overcome its running speed, is cut by the thread and falls with a patter. In the midst of the pouring debris, Deon quietly wiped his mouth with the back of his hand. It was covered in something I couldn’t tell if it was the monster’s blood or my own blood.

“I hope you’re okay....”

“It’s no big deal.”

I tried my best to avoid a head-on collision, but it seems like the shock eventually piled up inside my body and exploded like this.

Deon coughed out the blood that had accumulated inside him once more and suddenly stopped moving as a thought crossed his mind. damn. Cursing words suddenly burst out.

‘I just had to hold on a little longer.’

The atmosphere that had been barely brought about had changed. The being that seemed the strongest showed blood. Deon gritted his teeth as the monster’s attack, which had faltered, became stronger again... no, stronger than before.

‘I think the 15 minutes are almost up.’

I roughly gathered myself, pulled out a new dagger, and walked out of the room. He grabs a nearby monster and randomly stabs it with his dagger as if taking out his anger.

Even though it seemed like they were hacking at random, they were deliberately hiding it. We have to be more cruel to them in order for them to wince. Only then can we bring the flow back.

“But... Demon, you don’t seem to be feeling well...!”

“ ....”

“If it’s enough time to get a medical examination, you can earn enough with the 2nd Corps Commander and the 2nd Corps, so it’s better to get a medical examination and move on...” “....”

“

Demon sir!”

Deon turned around without hesitation and threw his dagger. Sigh! The dagger grazed Ben’s cheek and became lodged in the carriage wall.

Blood trickled down his cheek and Ben quickly closed his mouth.

It’s not just because of the dagger, but because the red eyes staring at me are shining with a dark and slimy life.

“shut up. “It’s disturbing.”

“....”

“I would have definitely said it was no big deal.”

Even though there is a distance, a low growling voice clearly touches the eardrums.

The monster’s blood seemed to be covering his face and blocking his vision, and his narrowed eyes were clearly focused on him, unable to hide the overflowing madness even in that state.

“You didn’t expect this anyway, right?”

“...!”

The arm holding the visitation bag trembled. Ben’s eyes shake violently, as if there was an earthquake.

Deon, who looked at him with a cold expression as he couldn’t answer and just pursed his lips, quietly opened his mouth.

Rather than anger, an emotion closer to patheticness was evident in his voice, as if it was not worth getting angry about.

“Behave properly.”

Don’t be clumsy.

“....”

“....”

There was a short silence against the noisy background, and Deon was the first to look away.

He started moving again, expressing pure satisfaction that the annoying voice had disappeared, but it didn't last long.

“Daemon!!”

There was no answer anymore. Deon turned around and raised an eyebrow as if he was really going to kill me this time.

back!! behind!

Ben was rushing towards him, screaming and calling out to him.

As if he was in such a hurry, he used his visiting bag as a shield and rushed out, trying to figure out where the thread might be, before he could reach Deon.

Suddenly,

blood splattered.

Deon, who had just turned a monster into a rag, slowly looks back. There, another monster was stopped with a dagger stabbed in a vital spot.

Deon, who realized that the monster's hand was reaching towards his head, tilted his head as if he was interested, then smiled brightly and took a step back. Soon, cuts appeared all over the monster's body and blood began to splatter.

“...under.”

A monster that became tattered in no time.

It clearly resembled his hand, but it was definitely not his work. Deon realized who was coming and called the other person's name with an unexpected smile on his face.

"Silua."

"Hello, Daemon! "It's been a while!"

***

I woke up to a shocking sight. In a daze, I looked back and forth between the miserable corpse of the monster and the woman in front of me.

A cool, short bob haircut. A dagger in both hands. In addition to the vertically slit pupils that accentuate the seemingly lost spirit, the inside of these cruel hands!

My head screamed that I should never have anything to do with that demon, but sadly, I already knew her.

7th Corps Commander Silua.

He uses a dagger and is the corps commander in charge of the border between the human world and the demon world along with the 9th corps commander... Is it okay for him to be here now?

"I hurried over after hearing that Demon was enjoying a party alone in a place like this!"

"...Where did you hear that?"

"The Demon King told me!"

"...."

I looked around quietly.

A thread that takes on a specific shape and forms a space. A swarm of monsters flowing endlessly into it.

It's a trap. It was also a trap with us as bait.

Although my memory was temporarily lost due to the alcohol, I can assure you that this was not a party.

'Demon King...!'

The rest are struggling to survive, but it's a party...

no, it's not. It would be more likely that Silua just accepted it as a party of her own accord.

I didn't know how that crazy demon would react, so instead of getting angry, I suppressed even a sigh and muttered as if I was lamenting.

"How did you get in here?..."

"Oh, it's no big deal. Like this—"

Silua swings her dagger, locates the threads, and then presses one of them with her dagger to open up space. There was a crack in the dagger, but she ignored it and slipped her body into the crack to escape the trap and smiled brightly as she looked at us from the outside.

"You can do it like this."

"...I guess I'll have to install it tighter next time."

Does it make sense that the threads used to trap and cut down enemies are stretched even a little?

Devellania, who was watching from a little distance away, glared at his corps members.

Anyway, as I was belatedly realizing the uncomfortable state of my body and removing the unidentified pieces of flesh that had stuck to me, Silua, who had come back in and was looking at my blood-soaked and shabby appearance with sparkling eyes, cautiously opened her mouth.

“Oh, by the way, Demon. There’s a monster behind you...”

Pow!!

Patter.

“...?!”

“...there was.”

Wow! what’s this!!

I put aside Silua’s somewhat disappointed voice and quickly turned around.

A sound of something being smashed was heard from the rear left, and debris of something came pouring out! Before I had time to shake off the red flesh that had stuck to my body, I turned around and saw a pale Ben come into view.

He was desperately avoiding my gaze, wondering what was bothering him so much.

I looked at him curiously, then lowered my gaze a little... and saw a blood-stained visit bag.

I think that was clearly clear in my memory...

‘Yeah, he was crazy too.’

Given the circumstances, it seems like the monster’s head was smashed with that hard visiting bag. Maybe it’s for me.

I'm grateful... but it's scary.

"I'm sorry. Demon, that's..."

I didn't say anything yet.

I just stared at Ben, who looked at me with a pale look on his face, started talking gibberish, and then closed his mouth. Her closed lips were trembling.

'Why are you apologizing after protecting me as much as I can?'

The question couldn't come out of my mouth. Because Silua had grabbed him by the collar earlier.

The vertically slit pupils glared fiercely at Ben.

"If you know you did something wrong, you should kneel. How dare you ignore Demon?"

"...."

"Do you think Demon didn't know that?"

Why are you suddenly so angry? awfully.

And ignoring it. I'm not ignoring it. Thanks to you, I survived.

'If I had known there was a monster behind me, I would have jumped away and avoided it long ago. I wouldn't have stood idly by.'

As expected of a corps commander, his body was so violent that he naturally cringed, but Ben was no slouch either. He even flinched for a moment, then raised his hand and grabbed Silua's wrist, which was holding her by the collar, and looked straight into her eyes.

“The person I apologize to is Demon, not the 7th Corps Commander.”

“...You arrogant. Is it because he was once the devil’s personal doctor? “If I keep doing this, I’ll be rude to Demon.”

“...So I was apologizing for my rudeness. “Let go of this hand.”

“Stiff all the way. “What if I get really angry and kill you?”

“Are you going to break the restrictions? My person in charge is Commander 0 Corps. “It means that only the Demon King and Demon, the commander of the 0 Corps, have the right to punish me.”

Basically, attending doctors are restricted from killing people carelessly unless they fail to perform their duties properly. If the patient performed his or her role properly or not, it is up to the patient in charge to decide whether or not he or she deserves to die.

This will be the basis for Ben to attack other corps commanders.

As the patient in charge, I am not brave enough to treat him carelessly, and other corps commanders cannot kill him due to restrictions.

‘....’

If you get involved in their fight, you won’t be able to get rid of even a single bone. I kept my mouth shut.

Silua, who was raising her dagger in annoyance, glances at me and then lowers her hand and wheezes. It was clearly visible that Ben was trying to suppress his frustration, but he didn't let it go and opened his mouth again.

"The reason you were angry in the first place was not because you ignored Demon-sama, but because you couldn't see Demon-sama tearing the monster to death."

Stop that. What are we supposed to do in a place full of monsters now?

Even while those two were fighting, Develania and the 2nd Corps were moving hard, but for some reason, the spirit of the monsters was coming back to life.

It seems that Develania also felt that fact. He suddenly threw the broken pieces of the monster between the two and let out an irritated voice.

"Aren't you going to do it? What about boundaries? Is coming here like this just a fight? "Are you here to disturb me?"

"Ah, was Develania also there? I left the boundary line to my adjutant. Even the Demon Lord said it would probably be okay. "You said the Empire has no time to attack here."

"So you came here because the Demon King sent you?"

"yes! "I've been communicating with the Demon King for the past few days, whining that I'm bored, and he sent me this."

I was whining to the devil...

Anyway, is it really okay for this to happen? Like her, I heard that the commander of the 9th Corps, who is in charge of the border line, has been sitting in the devil's castle even before I came.

This means that there is currently no corps commander on the border with the human world. What are you going to do if someone who is really a 'hero' attacks you?

Devellania seemed speechless as well, so she pursed her lips for a moment before sighing and stroking her hair.

"Anyway, if you don't want to help, why don't you go back?"

"Of course I will help! Ah, before that, I will help you after seeing that Demon-sama has just defeated one monster!"

"...yes?"

Why am I suddenly...?

I was startled and reflexively looked at Silua, and our eyes met.

And I was able to witness in real time the eyes that were sparkling with crazy excitement gradually turning dull and dying.

Silua, who quickly lost her vitality and became droopy, muttered in a very disappointed voice.

"...It's not Demon...."

"...?"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 88

88. A vacation that is not a vacation (4)

“You are not the demon I wanted...!”

“ .... ”

“It was clearly ‘that’ Demon just a moment ago...! why? why?”

...I really don't know why you react like that.

Silua, who had been running wild for a while as if she didn't feel my gaze as if she was looking at me like she was crazy, suddenly grabbed a nearby monster. And the actions that followed left me speechless for a moment.

A monster thrust right in front of your nose. Eyes that are bloodshot and full of things that I don't know whether it's anticipation or hope, and even hint of madness at a glance.

“Now, Demon. There is a monster here! “Hurry and grant me the rest of death with that dagger!”

“ .... ”

After the silence, there was a step back.

This time there was no need to hesitate in carrying out the action.

Ben was also backing away with a tired look on his face, and Develania immediately made a disgusted expression and ran away to deal with the monster again.

“Daemon? Why do you avoid it? Please show ‘that’ side again!”

I don’t know, man. I don’t know what you want, and even if I did, I don’t want to show it to you.

Of course, you can’t say that thought outright.

I cautiously opened my mouth, desperately avoiding the gaze of Silua, who was breathing heavily in anticipation. Something that can somehow avoid this crazy situation right now.

“First of all....”

“First of all?”

“This is not the situation right now....”

“Ah! “You must have been annoyed by the noise around you!”

That’s why the excitement was broken!

Silua’s face brightened as if she had received a clear answer.

The two daggers spinning in my hands were sheathed, and my empty hands lightly clashed together.

match.

—People holding daggers like her came out from all directions.

....

“...You’re crazy, you’re crazy. “No matter how much support we provide, what if they throw away their boundaries and come here?”

“You didn’t throw me away and come here? “You left your adjutant behind?”

“Do you think that all you have to do is leave your adjutant behind? You brought the whole army with you! I feel sorry for the 7th Corps Commander’s adjutant. “You must be going through such a hard time right now....”

“Thanks to you, it was solid support. The attending doctor only thinks about the patients in charge, right? “Demon, can’t you see that you don’t look well?”

...I guess I should say thank you for taking care of my facial expressions in the meantime.

I was taken aback by the arrow that suddenly flew at me, and for a moment I could barely hide my shocked expression.

The seemingly endless horde of monsters, which seemed to make a big difference between having one corps and not having one, was quickly cleared up when Silua’s 7th corps joined.

Of course, thank you.

‘Thank you, so please leave now.’

The entire time she was clearing out the monsters, Silua was anxious because she couldn't give me a weapon. I told him to catch this monster and kill it whenever he got the chance...

If Ben, who was worried about my health, hadn't stepped forward and said that Demon-sama should rest now, I would have stood there motionless in front of that hideous monster.

After watching the few remaining monsters being cleared away, I hurriedly walked to the carriage and opened the door.

Silua, who had been looking at me the whole time while working, tilted her head.

"Are you coming in? Are you not going to deal with those monsters? I left it on purpose to give it to you, Demon..."

Was it on purpose?

After a moment of pause, I pretended not to hear anything and got into the carriage. Develania approached Silua with a bright smile.

"We've sorted things out to a certain extent, but why don't the 7th Corps commander just leave?"

"Are you going to use it like this and then immediately throw it away? "I haven't seen it that way, but Develania is also colder than I thought."

"What are you saying?" We're going to the second city. "Do you know who is guarding the second city right now, Commander of the 7th Corps?"

Silua's face frowned as if she was remembering someone.

"...Commander of the 10th Corps."

Outright contempt and disgust.

Silua spat, as if he was displeased with the fact that he was a corps commander like me, and gestured towards his corps members.

"I'm sure it would be better to get out of here than to meet a guy who doesn't even look like the commander of the corps. See you later."

"okay."

"...I think the work is over, so please take this thread away."

"Oh, I'm sorry. "It came in easily like a loach, so I thought it would take care of itself when it left."

"It's not difficult to get in and out, but I wonder if I have to go out inconveniently."

Quickly. The sound of teeth grinding was heard.

Develania, smiling with a strong jaw as if gritted teeth, holds out his hand. As if they had been waiting, the threads that had been tangled together were unraveled and returned to their respective owners' hands.

It was a neat finish that put to naught any worries that it might get tangled in the middle.

"Thank you. "Okay then."

" ...."

I thought he would stick around a bit more, but he turned away really calmly.

If you're the 10th Corps commander, you're probably referring to Geisitel, so why that reaction?

My doubts were resolved when I entered the second city where he was said to be residing.

'Wow... crazy.'

Perhaps most of the monsters had flocked at that time, but since then no monsters on that scale have appeared.

Thanks to this, I was able to solve the problem with just Ben, who was going crazy with Develania and the members of the 2nd Corps, and I also arrived at the second city at the right time, so I was relieved— '...I can't believe they're attacking me like this.

,

Did you take advantage of the moment I let my guard down? It was a great psychological warfare, Commander of the 10th Corps.

When I arrived at the second city and got off the carriage, wearing the robe Ben had given me on behalf of my lieutenant Ed, who had not followed me, what I encountered was none other than fluttering

.

—It was colorful luminous paper powder falling against the night sky.

"Do do do star..."

As I was looking at the sky blankly, Develania clicked her tongue as if it was pitiful next to me.

I was about to look back at her, but the sound of the drums continued and I fixed my gaze straight ahead again.

Demons line up to form a path, and in the middle of them, a demon with large bat wings walks with a palanquin behind him.

He came right in front of me, who still hadn't adjusted to this situation, and bowed politely.

"long time no see. Demon."

"Ah yes."

"I heard you were coming here so I quickly got ready. How do you feel? It may be quite inadequate since it was a hasty investigation into the civilization of the human world, but..."

For some reason. For a moment, I wondered if there was something like this in the demon world.

It seems like I worked hard, but if I were to give my honest opinion...

'I'm embarrassed.'

All the demons around are just looking here. My face is so hot that I can't raise my head. At least it was like this because he was wearing a robe. If he had no face, he wouldn't have been shamed.

It was clumsy and even excessive...

Then the personality of the 10th demon corps commander in front of me came to mind.

‘He... he was a bit servile, wasn’t he?’

As Silua said, he is a corps commander who is not befitting a corps commander, as he is always observant.

It was Devellania who spoke on behalf of me, who was silent as I didn’t know how to react.

“What is that thing behind you...?”

“Oh, this is a kiln. It is said that people of high status in the human world ride on it. “Daemon is human, so I thought he would miss you, so I prepared this.”

no. I’ve never ridden that thing. Before that, why are you so sure that I am of high status?

The kiln is used in the ‘South’. I even heard that it is almost completely closed these days, and only royals ride it briefly during certain events.

‘Usually, when you’re a corps commander, you often secretly go out to the human world, right...? If so, you would be able to tell the difference between the North and the South.’

At least Develania seemed to know for sure, turning her head to the side and shaking her shoulders. If you know, please tell me.

I quietly touched my forehead.

‘...How do I fix this?’

“Daemon!”

“...?”

At that time, Ben, who was standing still, pushed the demons away and rushed out.

Develania, who had suddenly been pushed along with me, looked at me in confusion, but he didn't pay any attention and fidgeted in front of me, looking at my magic stone necklace over and over again.

"Daemon! Do you have a headache?! Please be patient, I'll treat you quickly... Damn, there's no reaction, right? That means...!"

I don't know what you're thinking, but it's probably not that.

I slowly lowered the hand that was on my forehead.

I was just about to explain that I was fine, thinking that the situation would escalate further.

"Huh! Do you have a headache? "There's a palanquin here, so hurry up and get on it!"

Geisitel, commander of the 10th Corps, did not miss the opportunity and suddenly colonized Gama. Faced with the extravagant palanquin, I could not bear to face reality and quietly looked away.

'...I think my head will hurt more if I ride that.'

As a result, I was able to attract the attention of all demons in this city.

Yes, I rode it.

'I'm so glad I wore the robe.'

...I'm so glad.

***

The man wearing a black robe and sitting on an ornate palanquin was more alien than anything else.

It's not that they don't fit together. The palanquin, which may have seemed comical, actually made the man stand out by carrying him.

Naturally relaxing, leaning back against the backrest. The posture of putting one's arm on the armrest and resting one's forehead as if something was bothering him.

The appearance, which added to the imagination by not being able to see the face with the robe hood pressed down, caught the attention of the city demons who flocked to see the news of the 0 Corps commander's visit in a different way.

'I can't feel any magic, so I'm sure it's a human...'

'A human with that kind of vibe?'

'So you're the commander of the 0 Corps?'

Among the demons, the number 0 had great meaning.

A person who created a position that didn't exist and recruited him without even adding a number to the end. Although the proud corps commanders who brought me in by placing me above 1st Corps Commander Jaycar are attaching meaning to the numbers I have, in reality, the numbers they have do not have much meaning. There is an atmosphere of respect up to 3, but the only number that actually has meaning is the 1st Corps Commander, who is qualified to serve as the devil's representative.

Therefore, the higher number '0' attracted the attention of all demons in the demon world.

What was the devil thinking when he gave him that position?

Why did the other corps commanders accept him?

What is his role? And what are his abilities?

—What on earth is he worth?

The contributions he made at the time of recruitment were enough to make him a corps commander, but there were some doubts about giving him the position of corps commander.

It is not enough to stop the hero from committing suicide and kill the 7th Corps commander before that. Wouldn't it have been okay to just give him the position of 13th corps commander?

So we gathered together. I wanted to see the face of the famous Commander 0 Corps and answer my questions.

'I understand now.'

'I think I understand without having to find out the reason.'

As a result, although I did not see the face, the mystery was resolved.

I think I understand why other corps commanders accepted him without any complaints.

The atmosphere is unique.

When compared to Geisitel, the commander of the 10th Corps who came to protect the city, the gap was even more evident.

If Geisitel is a scoundrel, Demon Arut is the leader or right-hand man of the underworld. Even compared to 2nd Corps Commander Develania, who had a much heavier presence than Geisitel, the difference remained.

Even now, isn't Develania acting as a guard and attendant, and Geisitel fawning next to her? In a way, they are also the same 'corps commander'. The commander of Corps 0 doesn't even react to Geisitel's flattery.

At the moment when the demons were admiring him as he sat silently on the palanquin and fixed his gaze on the front, the Commander of Corps 0, who was holding his forehead as if he was tired, had a headache, or was annoyed, opened his mouth.

"...."

"Yes? "Daemon, what did you say?"

As expected, Geisitel, who was waiting next to him, did not miss the opportunity and approached quickly and listened.

The invisible gaze inside the robe seemed to glance at him, and then a small voice came out.

Everyone listened, and Geisitel, who heard him closest, kindly recited the content in his voice.

His voice spread widely in the quiet space.

"...-."

“turn off?”

“...—.”

“lose. Get out. I said ‘get out’....”

“....”

“....”

A short silence passed by for a moment.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 89

89. A vacation that is not a vacation (5)

While the entire city fell into silence, Geisitel was the first to come to his senses.

After being dazed for a moment, he seemed to realize his rudeness and hurriedly slapped himself in the face, then turned around and shouted at his corps members who were walking along with the palanquin, making a path around him.

“What are they doing! Hurry up and turn off! “The demons around you seem to be bothering you. Get rid of them quickly!”

The expressions of the corps members changed subtly in an instant.

‘...I don’t know much about Commander 0, but no matter how I look at it, I think he’ll be more bothered by Geisitel than over there.’

Because they keep talking nonsense and flattery that doesn’t work. Even if that wasn’t the case, I think he had a headache, but when he started talking next to me...

Of course, I didn’t say those words out loud.

The corps members, who did not feel the need to get caught by telling their superior information that was not clear to their subordinates, simply answered quickly and approached the surrounding demons as if they were herding sheep.

The demons, who had already heard Geisitel's remarks, looked annoyed and quickly retreated. He didn't forget to curse with his eyes.

'Should I be satisfied with having seen the rumored commander of Corps 0 in person?'

Most people thought this and retreated obediently, but they thought, 'Looks like I'll be staying for a few days, so I guess I'll just hang out near where I'm staying. Then maybe we can at least see the face...'

Some people thought this as they watched the colorful palanquin starting to move again from a distance.

Develania, feeling these gazes, chuckled.

"Hel is going to have a hard time."

***

Get out.

This was never what I meant. This is force majeure.

Those were words that came from deep within my heart without me even knowing.

As the palanquin moves, Ben on the left asks intermittently whether your head still hurts or if you are in any other discomfort other than your head. On the right, Geisitel asks if you are comfortable in the palanquin or if there is anything you don't like. Daemon is in the palanquin

. How could I not go crazy when he is giving me mind-blowing flattery, such as saying that it feels like a halo is shining from behind when he sits down?

'Please get out of here, you bastards... I'm fine, I'm fine...'

So I unintentionally let out a moan-like whisper. Get out of here.

I had no idea it would grow this big.

"What are they doing! Hurry up and turn off! "The demons around you seem to be bothering you. Get rid of them quickly!"

no. There's no need to go that far.

Are you planning to make the entire city's demons my enemies? All you have to do is go away, just you!

I can feel the stinging stares. As I slowly rolled my eyes, I saw the demons' distorted expressions.

It was dizzying. They were retreating, swearing with their eyes at the absurd order of the 10th Corps commander.

First, I looked at the 10th Legion members who were kicking them out, then at Geisitel, and then the place where my gaze settled was none other than me.

'...I don't feel comfortable living in this city.'

haha. ha ha ha. Ha ha ha ha ha.

Anyone can see this situation right now, it looks like it happened because I gave an order. Of course he felt annoyed with me. If I continue to stay in this city, I don't know when and where there will be people looking to stab me.

So I holed up in my lodgings – a splendid mansion that Geisitel had taken from the city manager.

...Why?

Oh, and thinking about it again, the kiln was really the worst.

To what extent, you can tell by looking at me now.

'...Fuck.'

I was lying blankly in my room, and as a memory suddenly came to me, I quietly pulled the blanket up to my head.

Then, using the blanket as a medium, I struggled with all my might to escape the embarrassment.

Puk puk puk!!

"Ugh fuck!"

I sprained my ankle.

I sprained my ankle while kicking the blanket. I can't even talk about it.

I was rolling around silently, groaning and clutching my ankle, and then boom! And the door opened. I quickly straightened my posture and turned my head, but I couldn't help but be startled by the figure that caught my eye.

There was a doctor there who radiated tremendous energy.

Ben looked around the room with his eyes shining brightly, then walked towards me with long strides and started talking rapidly.

“Daemon, what’s going on! Do you have a headache again? Or is it a surprise attack? No, there’s no way you’d let out a moan just because of a surprise attack... If that’s the case...!”

“it’s nothing!”

I quickly stopped talking for fear of another misunderstanding. Even so, Ben narrows his eyes and looks at me, as if he still doesn’t trust me.

...As I look at his face, yesterday’s events come to mind again. Yes, go. I was riding in a palanquin...

I was embarrassed and lowered my head, but they started making a fuss about it, asking if I had a headache, how much it hurt, what the aftereffects were, etc., so I had to raise my head again and fix my eyes straight ahead.

As I was wondering how to let him know that I was okay, Develania stuck his head out from the hallway beyond the open door.

“Ben, when you look at him, it seems like you are looking at Mr. Demon too weakly?”

“...Isn’t it natural since he is the attending physician?”

“Anyway, it’s ‘that’ Demon.”

“....”

“Well, it doesn’t matter to me anyway. Rather than that, it’s a demon-.”

She lightly shrugs and looks back.

The voice was more sinister than usual, so I suppressed my body from jumping up and barely answered. The soft voice returned as if it had been waiting.

“There are curious rats snooping around outside. Are you feeling uncomfortable? For example, you didn’t want to go out to buy clothes because it was annoying...”

“That...”

Even if that wasn’t the reason...

“Did you say you didn’t want to go out to buy clothes?”

Where did you come from again?

Geysitel suddenly appeared from the ceiling, unfolding and folding the bat wings behind his back as if asking me to look at him, and clapped his hands twice toward the outside.

Chrrrrrr.

Chrrrrrr.

“ .... ”

“Oh my?”

“Maybe you’re annoying! So I called the designers in advance! ...Actually, that is the only reason to come to this city with the commander of the 2nd Corps...”

I can hear it all.

Develania's clothing purchases are also famous here.

I looked around the room at the designers who were smiling with their faces turning pale and the corners of their mouths quivering. It was obviously empty except for the bed and closet table, but it quickly filled up with clothes.

If the first city was a 'city of entertainment', the second city was a 'city of shopping' or a 'city of trade'. There are certainly many different types of clothes. In the human world, you can see everything from northern-style clothing to southern-style clothing.

'...But strangely, it looks more southern.'

Now that I think about it, I think the southern culture particularly caught my eye in this city.

The new clothes that Develania gave me when I just arrived in the Demon World, as well as the clothes hanging here in addition to the damn palanquin.

'Well, was there a passage connected to the south discovered somewhere?'

Oh no way. The Demon King doesn't go out of his way to tell me unless it's something I need to do, so even if that were the case, the empire would have already known and taken action, so there's no way the news wouldn't come to me.

'It's probably just a coincidence.'

***

The empire, no, the emperor is going crazy. It is said that after leaving internal affairs to the Crown Prince, he personally went into battle and wielded his sword.

The king of a small kingdom in the south, who was on high alert due to the situation, touched his forehead and sighed at the new news that followed.

Sadly, it seems like heaven is about to give our kingdom a trial.

“The border with the demon world has been discovered?”

Here in our kingdom?

“Why, in this situation...”

Under normal circumstances, he would have reported this to the empire and discussed a plan together.

The empire was implicitly in charge of matters related to the demon world, and other kingdoms, who did not want to waste their attention or energy, accepted this without much opposition.

But I can't do that now. In a situation where the empire is running rampant for no reason, isn't it a situation where if we conquer the kingdom we are currently facing, the next opponent might be our kingdom?

We cannot hastily hand over such important information to a country that may be our enemy.

The King, who had been leafing through documents while sighing, twitched his eyebrows as if he had discovered something.

“No major accidents?”

Demons have come over and are wandering around here and there wearing clumsy robes, but there are no major incidents.

“Yes, they are mainly seen snooping around markets and places where small festivals are held, and other than the occasional theft of clothes or items, they do not cause any serious trouble.”

“So there have been no serious crimes such as murder yet?”

“yes.”

“Whoa, okay. First of all, I guess I should say that I am fortunate about that alone.”

For now, we will have to increase our own surveillance and vigilance and hold off on informing the empire. The current empire cannot be trusted.

The king, who had been skimming through the documents, thinking that this fact should be kept a top secret because he could not add more anxiety to the kingdom’s citizens who were already anxious due to the war, stopped when he read the report on the demons’ clothing.

Without exception, all demons are different from humans in some way. For example, it would be a horn or a tail, or if we take the Demon Lord as an example, it would be ‘eyes’.

So, if you want to come to the human world, you have to cover your teeth well, but these clumsy demons...!

‘If you have a tail, you should cover it. Why cover your face?’

If there was a tail in the world, it should be hidden mainly by the tail. Why is it so obsessed with the robe hood? Why does a guy with horns pull the front of the hood tightly when talking to people? Don't the horns stand out!

Fortunately, since it was a festival at the time, it was considered nothing more than a prop, and they almost made it known that there were demons roaming around here.

'Do these guys have any intention of hiding it?'

It felt like fatigue was already building up at the thought of having more things to worry about.

***

"First of all..."

I looked around at the clothes that filled the room.

...Well, it's also burdensome.

"Let's put these away first."

"yes? "Are you sure you don't have any clothes you like at all?"

Geisitel's eyes widened in surprise and soon turned sharp and turned to look at the designers.

The designers' faces turned white as if they had been squeezed. Even though it wasn't pale, it became even whiter, so it was almost like being coated with flour.

I hurriedly waved my hand in fear that he might be bothering the designers.

"No, no. "It's not that..."

“It’s not that?”

“....”

Despite Gaisitel’s question, I trailed off and just kept my mouth shut.

How can I just say I’m not interested in clothes? There is a demon next to me listening to the conversation with his eyes open and blue.

When I glanced at Develania, my eyes met surprisingly. She must have read something in my gaze and nodded and opened her mouth.

“Thank you, but I think Demon wants you to go around the store and look at the clothes in person. “When you come to a city, it’s fun to walk around and see things.”

“Ah... I was foolish. “I’m sorry, Demon.”

“Oh yes... well....”

...I don’t want to go out. Let’s leave that mess behind...?

Develania’s eyes narrowed as she was unable to speak and just mumbled as she willingly left.

She kept looking out the window and at me with her arms crossed, nodding as if she understood something. Then she opened the window of her room, put one leg over her, and smiled.

“Then I’ll take care of the rats outside first.”

“yes? “No, wait!”

When you say rats, you're referring to the demons wandering around nearby, right?

I quickly stopped Develania and sighed, fearing that I would create another needless grudge relationship. I guess he thought the reason I was mumbling was because of the demons outside.

Damn it. Okay, I'll go out. I'm leaving.

"There is no need to do that. "Let's just get out."

I waved the designers away and took the robe from Ben's hand and put it on. Ben, who doesn't leave me alone on a day like this because I look like such a child, naturally reaches out and straightens the hood and ties the knot of the robe tightly. It was a very skillful and natural touch.

'...Why can I feel Ed's touch in this guy's touch?'

Since Ed is a lieutenant with nothing to do, he said he would do this. Even so, why is he doing this?

Since the two of you encounter each other so often, have you unintentionally become similar?

As I stood there in a daze, thinking that if either Ed or Ben heard anything, a fight would immediately break out, shocking words pierced my ears.

"Ah, are you trying to leave? Then, take the palanquin..."

"You're crazy... no, no need... um, it's okay."

The rejection engraved in my spinal cord jumped out immediately. I had a bit of trouble expressing what was supposed to be a swear word in a friendly way, but judging by Geisitel's reaction, it seems to be okay.

If you look at the face, it's not an angry expression, but a pale, tired face.

"Bah, I just swore..."

Haha, that's right. There's no way it's okay.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 90

90. A vacation that is not a vacation (6)

Gaisitel opens and closes his mouth several times as if he is quite shocked, but then slowly kneels down. There was a solid red line on his neck that wasn't there until a moment ago, and I don't know when it first came about.

Drool – The blood that had formed along the solid line pools and flows down.

Only then did I discover the existence of the thread touching Geisitel's neck.

“...I apologize if I offended you in any way. sorry.”

Develaniaaaa!! What are the same corps commanders doing now?

For some reason, Geisitel is even apologizing instead of getting angry! Why are you apologizing?

In the meantime, it was a bit absurd to see that they did not think that the kiln was the cause, but it was more embarrassing than that.

Debellania, who had a string around Gaisitel's neck, took a stance as if she was about to pull it. “

What should we do, Demon?”

—Because I was smiling.

Wasn't he a corps commander like you? I was sure that killing one another was considered self-respecting, right?

Or maybe—

‘I can't believe Gaisitel's treatment was strange.’

Was it judged to be unhelpful to power? Would it be better to replace him with a corps commander?

The Demon King is like the father of all demons. As long as they are born from the power of the Demon King, they will most likely not do anything that will harm the Demon King.

So, there must be a reason for treating the ‘corps commander’, an important force, this way.

Otherwise, just as not all children listen to their parents and grow up properly, there may simply be some demons who go astray, and one of them is Debellania.

Regardless of which answer was given, the thought I had at that moment was none other than ‘I'm screwed.’

‘That means I can kill as many people as I want!’

As I got used to it, the tension that had loosened became tighter again.

Still, I thought there was some safety device, but it was shocking to see that it was bare body. Wasn't it literally like I was walking on a tightrope with my bare body on a cliff?

I once again saw Develania's smiling face. If I make a mistake, I'll cut my head off with that expression on my face.

You have to get involved before that happens. For a brief moment, my head was spinning.

And Geisitel, whose head looked like it was about to be cut off, came into view.

Ah, I got the answer.

"Let's go out."

When I noticed that Ben's hand that had been adjusting my clothes had come off, I hurriedly walked towards the door.

D'Vellania asked, loosening the strength in her hand that was holding the thread, as if the words were completely unexpected. The usual loose face was everywhere, and the innocently blinking eyes as if he hadn't heard anything was creepy again.

"...yes?"

"Would it be okay to kill the same corps commander? Gaisitel did nothing wrong, so let's just pick up the thread and leave."

How to increase Develania's favor towards you and how to avoid incurring Geisitel's resentment.

'Going out' under the pretext of 'buying clothes'.

It may be a bit of a struggle, but if it means you can have a better future, why sacrifice your life?

Everyone paused for a moment at the sudden change of topic. As expected, Geisitel was the first to act.

Using a skill that I don't know where he honed his skills, he took advantage of the slack in D'Vellania's strings and rushed over, opened the door, and waited.

Develania blinked for a moment and looked at him, then smiled and took the thread.

"If Demon says so."

"...."

"More than that, Demon, you are humble as expected. "He knows his position and is the 'same' corps commander."

Well, actually, it's a lower position than that. ... hmm?

"Humble" for a moment? Not 'arrogance'?

I am a human being, and the '0 Corps Commander' position I got was created by creating a position that did not exist, so it must be an honorary position, and even so, I do not have a proper role... I said that I was 'the same' as other corps commanders on that topic, but was it not arrogance but humility

?

"Daemon's position is implicitly similar to that of the 1st Corps Commander."

"I am saying this because there is no 1st Corps Commander, but since everyone is more nervous when dealing with Demon-nim than with the 1st Corps Commander, shouldn't it be said that Demon-nim is actually higher in rank? "The Demon King is also more careful with Demon than with the 1st Corps Commander.”

I didn’t know. I just thought everyone respected me because I was a parachute brought by the devil himself.

So, no matter how low my current position is....

the devil > 1st corps commander = me > the rest of the corps commanders, right? You’re crazy.

The 1st Corps commander also serves as the devil’s agent. I’m in a similar position to that guy? Even that is the lowest setting.

But still, there was nothing I could say.

“...Let’s go out.”

I have no choice but to repeat what I said.

....

The feeling of being a dress-up doll was terrible, but seeing the city was quite interesting.

As a city of trade, there are a variety of fruits and weapons. Even the types of fish available in the market were diverse. Somehow, I see a lot of them from the South, but I just pass them over because they’re trendy.

I looked around as I took the sweet fruit Gaisitel offered me.

“Daemon! “Shall we go that way this time?”

“Daemon, this fruit here is called mango. It grows in the southern part of the human world. Would you like to try it?”

Demon, Demon, Demon... That damn Demon! I want to take a look, but the two corps commanders won't let me go.

If Ben had done the same, I would have really had a headache, but fortunately, he seemed to have noticed my condition and kept his mouth shut, following me silently as if I was not there.

Oh, and Geisitel's recovery was quick. At least until I left, I thought he would be depressed or burning with anger, but he appeared cheerful, rubbing his palms together as if something had just happened, and claimed to be a guide around the city.

Following his guidance, I circled around until I was near the castle gate, and muttered inadvertently as I watched the people coming and going through the gate.

“The monsters' attacks must have intensified, but the gates are still open.”

Although it contained doubts, this was clearly self-talk.

After talking with the gatekeeper guarding the castle gate, the familiar sight of demons leaving outside did not suit the current situation, so I just muttered that.

“Oh, actually, this city originally had its gates closed. But the border with the human world was discovered not far away... Wow!”

“...?!”

Geisitel gave an unexpected answer.

No way....

The hypothesis that had been occupying a corner of my head all along inflated its presence as if it had been waiting.

“The southern part of the human world?”

“How did you do that...! “No, no, that’s what I mean...”

Was it true?!

Geisitel belatedly denies it, but the sight of him dropping the southern fruit he was holding and waving his hand doesn’t seem very believable.

I’m not the only one who didn’t know this, right?

Ben and D’Bellania turned around to see if they knew, and saw D’Bellania shaking his head with his forehead and Ben with his eyes wide open.

At least Ben didn’t seem to know.

‘thank god. ‘I wasn’t the only one who didn’t know.’

At that time, Ben, who had been gaping with his mouth open, frowned and asked a sharp question.

“Does the Demon King know about this?”

“Of course, report! ...I meant to....”

“You mean I didn’t.”

“...When will demons who have to stay in the city go to the human world? “I happened to find a border line nearby, so I wanted to have a little fun...”

Since we were going back and forth secretly, we established rules between ourselves and forbade any accidents or fighting there...

Geisitel's voice gradually becomes quieter. The head gradually lowers, and the bat wings behind the back are folded tightly against the body.

And at that moment, those who had just left the gate returned again.

Very urgently, with a cloud of dust behind my back.

"Close the door! "Close the door quickly!!"

"It's a monster!!"

Wow. If I do well, I'll be trapped in this city, right?

It's hard to see because it's covered in dust, but just looking at the scale of the dust, you can clearly see that the number is no joke.

Unlike me, who was inwardly shocked, the gatekeepers were calm.

Although he was confused for a moment, he skillfully took out the communication box and sent a message somewhere. Then an alarm sounded and the huge castle gates began to slowly close.

'Wait a minute, I don't think they can come in?'

The gate is almost completely closed, but there is still some distance between the gate and the guys running.

I naturally looked at them wondering if that was okay, but then the two of them kicked the ground. And then the sliding!

In! I ran that distance and got in in one go!

‘But why is the monster suddenly... ah.’

The thoughts that were flowing through my consciousness reached something and stopped. At the same time, cold sweat ran down my spine.

Now that I think about it, after going through a lot of trouble on the way here, all the monsters I encountered were driven back inside the border. In fact, I didn’t even intentionally try to drive them out. After killing them for a while, there was nothing they could do because those who felt their lives were threatened ran away first.

‘But it was too much of a waste to do that again...’

Also, setting up a thread and attracting monsters to deal with them is not efficient because the number of them is insufficient.

It wasn’t a huge number like in the beginning, so I thought it wouldn’t be a big deal if I ran away... but my thoughts were short-lived. Where will the chased monsters go? The only place nearby that has life is this second city.

‘This... it’s clearly our fault no matter who sees it.’

But don’t these guys get stabbed?

I glanced back at Develania, who had the same attitude, and Ben, who was only focused on my condition.

Develania, who did not miss my gaze, gently nodded her head and called out Gaisitel.

“It would be difficult if I couldn’t leave the city. “Shouldn’t you fulfill your mission, Commander of the 10th Corps?”

“The 10th Legion is always ready to defend the city.”

As soon as the preparations were complete, Gaisitel appeared, dragging a horse unique to the Demon World with black air currents fluttering about.

Likewise, the members of the 10th Corps were fully prepared and stood behind them, each holding the reins of their horses.

If the 2nd Corps led by Develania’s specialty is attacks using thread and setting traps, the 10th Corps is ‘horseback riding’.

It’s a bit of a strange combination since the commander has wings and his specialty is horseback riding, but it’s none of my business.

I knew that the demon horse they had was a meat-eater, so instead of saying something, I quietly took a step back.

Then Ben stepped forward as if speaking for himself.

“Are you avoiding questioning like this?”

“...You are persistent on the topic of your doctor. “I don’t think it’s up to you to step forward.”

“Well, I heard something from the Lieutenant of Commander 0 Corps, who is not here. “Daemon usually talks little, so I told you to keep an eye on him and listen closely to find out in advance what he wants to say.”

...huh? me?

“In that sense, I will speak on behalf of Demon. As the situation is dire, I will let you go, but no matter how Gaisitel comes out, the matter regarding the border will be reported to the Demon King.”

Why are you speaking on my behalf? Can't you just say that's what you're saying?

As expected, Geisitel's harsh gaze turns to Ben and then to me. It seems like the gaze directed at me is closer to observing rather than glaring, but of course I'm mistaken.

He holds the reins tightly, bows to me once, and mounts the horse. Likewise, members of the 10th Legion on horseback followed Geisitel and stood in front of the castle gate.

Then a powerful voice fell.

“Open the door.”

The mission of the 10th Corps commander is to protect the city. The door opened without a word.

The 10th Legion, riding black horses, sortied through the half-open door in preparation for monsters coming in.

Doo doo doo doo doo!!

‘oh... It's pretty cool...?’

I was staring blankly at the scene where the black air flowing out from the horse stretched like a tail and then later dispersed, and then I glanced at the door closing again.

And I couldn't believe my eyes.

It's not because a monster came in. Fortunately, the monster didn't come in. But...

doo doo doo doo doo!!

'What are they doing...'

The 10th Legion that had just left came back.

Just before the door closed, the last corps member came in, and the sound of the door closing with a thump followed by the screams of monsters echoed from beyond.

Gaisitel, who was out of breath with a pale face, suddenly grabbed Develania by the collar.

"There are too many!"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 91

91. A vacation that is not a vacation (7)

"Oh my? But why are you grabbing me by the collar? "It's not even my fault."

"Fuck shit. This doesn't work. "It's too much for our corps alone."

"A corps commander who can't do his job like that..."

"How can I help you..."

"Why me?"

It seems my prediction was correct. I'm stuck in this city like this.

'...that's terrible.'

I have to stay with these guys in this city? I already miss my room in the Demon King's Castle. Even though it was located in the Demon King's Castle, it was quite comfortable as no one came in unless there was something important to do.

As I was thinking about this and that about the bleak future, one fact suddenly popped into my head.

If the monsters came all the way here, wouldn't there be some who escaped to the human world? Coincidentally, there was a border with the human world nearby.

'...What do we do.'

If it's the southern part of the human world, it's not an empire, so I guess I don't have to worry about it. No, it's still the human world, right?

Perhaps because the empire's territory is so large, most of the boundaries so far have been found within the empire. So there was no need to worry too much, but why did it show up in the wrong place?

'No, first of all, if it is true that the border is connected to the south, the priority is to check which region of the kingdom it is connected to. To do that, you have to check it yourself....'

"Haa...."

"!"

I tried to hold back, but I couldn't help but sigh.

How do you break through that? I also gave up on the 10th Corps. I guess I'll just stay stuck in this city until it goes away on its own.

I was just turning around thinking that. Devellania, who had been looking at me with a start since I sighed, shook her head as if there was nothing she could do and took a step forward.

"Since Demon wants it, I'll help you just this once."

“?”

“Let’s go, Demon.”

Ben stands next to me, swinging his visit bag.

I’m not sure what this conclusion was based on, but in the end it turned out as I had hoped, so I shook my head and walked away.

The gate opens and a moment later.

In an atmosphere that was no different from when I had just arrived here, I was able to reach the border by stepping on the corpses of monsters.

As I stood there in a daze, in a place where day and night were clearly divided, as soon as my spirit that had run away from home for a while to go through hell returned, I realized something and opened my mouth.

Obviously I didn’t say anything...? How did you know that I wanted to come here...

“Daemon, you must have wanted to go there in person at least once to report, so I stopped by while I was out like this... Did I make a mistake...?”

“Oh...no... thank you.”

“Thank you.”

If you think that way, I will feel comfortable and happy.

Before crossing the border, I first looked at my attire. Regardless of whether it is imperial territory or not, it would be difficult for my identity to be discovered.

Meanwhile, Devellania, who was looking at me with wide eyes, turned her head and looked at Geisitel.

“Is the 10th Corps going back now? “You must not forget your mission.”

His expression darkened slightly at the words, which were completely correct.

“But as for guidance...”

“Daemon, you are a human, so would you need guidance? Well... if you really need guidance, I think it would be better for me to do it than you. “I was the one who told you that beyond here was the ‘South,’ right?”

Come to think of it, Develania went to the human world a lot, at least for missions. I think he is probably the most knowledgeable in the human world than any other corps commander except me.

‘Anyway, it’s ridiculous to think about it again. Even so, I wouldn’t have guessed that even Develania was silent about the existence of this place.’

Ben also looked at her with an expression on his face that looked as if he had a lot to say, as if it was absurd, but he narrowed his eyebrows instead, as if he didn’t want to say something similar again.

Gaisitel, overcome by logic, turns around with a sullen face. Develania didn’t stop there, and only after sending her legion back did she approach me with a relieved look on her face.

“Daemon, are you ready?”

“Yes, what...”

He nodded, fiddling with the robe hood that covered his face.

Fortunately, my clothes were neat. I didn't lift a finger the entire time I was here, so it was natural that I wouldn't be disturbed. Mentally, I was incredibly tattered, but I could ignore that and say something. There are two corps commanders here, so you didn't have to bother showing up yourself?

“Then shall we go?”

“Yes...”

At this time, I was so lost in my thoughts that I overlooked an important fact.

Not only should I care about my clothes, but I should also care about their clothes.

Unlike me, who is clean, they are covered in the blood of monsters.

***

“You come over to the human world with seven layers of blood?!”

These crazy demons!

The king of a small southern kingdom could not overcome his rising blood pressure and grabbed the back of his neck. The knight, who saw his body falling backwards, quickly threw himself down and caught him.

“My Highness! Calm! Calm down! “Deep breath, deep breath...!”

“Whoosh whoosh....”

What should we do with these damn demons? I wonder if they have any intention of hiding it or not!

Did they commit a murder somewhere? Fratricidal war? No, since he appeared while dealing with monsters, the blood probably belonged to the monster.

As he thought about that, the king’s expression changed subtly.

Should I be grateful for this? Whatever the intention, they dealt with monsters on behalf of the kingdom.

How dizzy I was when I suddenly heard that monsters had started coming from beyond the border. It was something that could have turned into a really big problem.

“...I heard there was an unusual demon among them.”

“Ah yes. Wearing a black robe—”

“Look... Almost all the demons that come here are wearing robes. “The proportion of black robes is 90%.”

“Ah... But it is said that he was the only one among them who had a clean appearance without a trace of blood. “The spirit he exuded was extraordinary, and the other demons who came with him seemed to respect and serve him, so I guess he must be a high-ranking demon.”

As the explanation continued, the King’s expression gradually hardened as the image of someone came to mind.

Black robe, extraordinary spirit and high status in the demon world.

Of course, it is highly likely not. It shouldn't be. Why would 'he', who rarely comes out of the Demon King's Castle unless it is important work such as a battle, come here?

but.

"majesty! Here's a new report! One of the demons who crossed over to the human world is Develania, the commander of the 2nd Corps of the Demon King's Army! They said it was easy to figure out because their faces weren't covered...."

"Damn it."

He wasn't covering his face. In that case, at least it means that 'Black Robe' is not the commander of the 2nd Corps.

I heard that the demons who came with me took an attitude as if they respected and served the 'Black Robe'. How many people can the 2nd Corps Commander respect and serve?

As his confidence gradually strengthened, liberation and resignation appeared on the king's face.

"...Commander of Corps 0."

"yes?"

"The black robe. "He's probably the commander of Corps 0."

"That kind of thing!" Why is he here...!"

"I don't know. "It could have been reconnaissance or spying due to news of the discovery of a new border."

Either way is not good.

But even so, there was no way to touch it.

They are busy paying attention to the empire's rampaging actions, but if they get into trouble with the Demon World, the fate of this kingdom will be in jeopardy.

"Where are they and what are they doing now?"

"They say... it's heading to the market."

Like that?!

I don't have anything to say about going to the market, and I can't say anything, but I hope you check out their outfits before you go.

We can't just leave it like this. If we are not careful, the kingdom will be turned upside down and the eyes of the empire will fall on this side.

As the king did not want either of them, he had no choice but to give an unwilling order while touching his forehead.

"Hide it."

"yes?"

"Hide their identity somehow. The method doesn't matter, but proceed in a way that causes as little fuss as possible.

"Okay, it would be best to give him a clean robe first."

"yes. But whether they will accept it obediently..."

"You have to think about that."

"...yes?"

I don't know, just handle it yourself. I don't want to worry anymore.

The King waved his hand, pretending not to notice the other person's gaze filled with confusion and bewilderment.

***

For the first time in a while, the human world was sunny, as if to say, 'This is what it means to have a sun.'

Thanks to this, after facing the sun for the first time in a long time, I reflexively pulled on the hood of my robe to cover my face, and then slowly began to look around.

As if there was some rule, the border line that always existed in a sparsely populated area was, without exception, connected to an area in the mountains that is unlikely to be easily visited.

D'Vellania grinned, stepped aside, and stretched out one arm.

"Where do you want to go from here, Demon Niim? A downtown area with lots of people? Or a place with few people?"

"...a place where you can get to know the daily lives of the residents here...." "

Then, of course, it's a market. "This will be your first time here, so I will guide you."

"however."

Ben, who had been making an expression as if something was bothering him since he came here, looked somewhere and opened his mouth.

“You saw a few rats, but you couldn’t have noticed them, so are you just going to leave them like this?”

“Oh right. Because they’re the type of guys that don’t really cause any harm. I thought it would be more troublesome if I took it out, so I left it alone, but that’s only if Demon-sama bothers you. What should I do?”

This isn’t home, there are just rats on the mountain, so there’s no reason to waste time catching them when they don’t cause any harm.

It was annoying, and I didn’t even know it existed.

No, actually, I still don’t know. It’s so quiet. Where are the rats?

“If it doesn’t cause any harm, let’s just go.”

“Okay then, come this way.”

As if he had been there once or twice before, Develania began to expertly go down the forest path.

We followed her and moved carefully so as not to hurt our ankles. Before long, we were able to meet a human at the entrance to the forest.

The problem is that those people are ‘knights’.

Two fully armed knights wearing unfamiliar armor that looked active stopped us with stern faces.

As I was very nervous and ready to jump at any moment, they spoke to me.

“Are you the mercenaries? I heard the story. “You killed the monsters that came here.”

“...?”

“Thanks to you, I was able to overcome a major crisis. “On behalf of the Knights Templar, I would like to thank you.”

“No, well...”

I don’t know what it is, but I’m glad you misunderstood me like this. I was worried that we might have to take armed conflict into account.

Ignoring the pricking conscience and answering hesitantly, one of the two rummaged through the luggage they had brought with them and took out two robes and a money pouch.

His eyes were still focused on me.

“It’s a small fee, but it’s a gratuity and a robe. “I prepared the robe because I thought it would probably splatter a lot of blood while killing the monster, but it seems like I prepared it well.”

ah. Only then did I realize Develania and Ben’s condition.

My condition wasn’t the only thing to worry about.

The two were in a mess because they had been fighting all the way to the border, and although they had gotten used to seeing Ben all the time, Ben’s appearance, with snake scales covering part of his face, clearly did not resemble that of a human.

However, he came to the human world without a single robe.

I'm crazy. Damn it.

'...But you're giving me a robe? Rather than arresting them or immediately disposing of them?'

Now that I think about it, I didn't look at Develania and Ben during the whole conversation.

I wondered if the two of them had become invisible demons without me knowing, but in reality, that doesn't make sense, and there's only one hypothesis that comes to mind right now...

Oh, no way.

'Are you deliberately pretending not to know? No, this goes beyond pretending not to know and is at the level of hiding your identity?'

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 92

92. Vacation that is not a vacation (8)

Why?

I stared at their faces. Unlike general imperial citizens, their skin color is slightly darker. And an unfamiliar form of armor.

When was it? Yes, I saw it during the Eight Years' War when there was a conflict with a kingdom in the south.

'After all, this is the South.'

Although I'm not sure yet.

As soon as I realized that this was the South, the rest naturally came to mind.

Of course, there is something to check before putting confidence in the hypothesis that has emerged.

Anyway, the people in front of me wouldn't be able to react right away no matter what they heard, so I called Develania without hesitation.

"Develania."

"yes."

“Was this boundary discovered before or after the branch change?”

I know that the demons refer to the periods of my coming and going as ‘quarters’.

Was the boundary discovered before or after I came to the Demon World?

Even though he paused for a moment, the answer came back with an inexplicable smile, as if he had never done it before.

“It was before the quarters changed.”

I hid it for a really long time. When on earth were you planning on reporting this?

Anyway, thanks to you, I found the answer.

An empire that does not know that a border with the demon world has been created in the south. On the other hand, seeing as the knight is here, the kingdom is definitely aware of the existence of a border line.

In other words, this kingdom deliberately hid the existence of the border.

The reason is....

‘The situation in the empire has been quite unusual these days, hasn’t it?’

Let’s start a war on an empty day.

He must have been afraid to let people know because the situation was so bad.

So, in order to hide our existence, they are giving us money for robes and hoping that we won't get into trouble.

Anyway, I don't have a platform to make an accident and I'm just going to quietly watch and then go back, so there's no problem.

I watched Develania and Ben putting on their robes, then looked at the money bag in their hands.

'I have benefited.'

"Oh, and I'm telling you in case you don't know."

"...?"

"Things... are not stolen, but bought... with money."

"...."

"...I'm a mercenary, so in case you don't know...I'm also a being who wanders around the continent a lot...I was really, really just in case..." The voice was rumbling, as if it wasn't true even though he was saying it. gets smaller and smaller.

After silently listening to his desperate words, I quietly turned my head and looked at Devellania.

You bastards...

what on earth and how much did you steal?

...Let's go back.

This was a conclusion that came shortly after arriving at the market.

Where should I start explaining? So, just as I arrived at the market, I was wondering what to do with this newly acquired information.

Important information that the Empire does not yet know. Should I immediately contact the empire and report this, or should I just pretend not to know?

Regardless of the deepening concerns, the conclusion had already been decided.

‘...I belong to the Demon World now.’

There is no need to think about the empire now.

In the Demon World, you only have to think about the Demon World and in the Empire, you only have to think about the Empire.

The moment I raised my head after concluding once again the conclusion that had already been made, something happened.

What kind of place is the market? Isn't it a crowded place? It's a place where people bump into each other while walking.

The only thing I didn't expect was that this body was annoyingly weak and that there were time bombs around me.

Pow!

“Ugh-”

My body stumbled greatly.

Unlike a bump, the body hit really well and fell backwards. Thanks to Ben's support, the body was able to avoid an unsightly appearance, but the impact it received was unable to be done and was completely vomited out of the mouth.

Blood spilled on the market floor.

"Uuuuuuuuuuuuuuk."

"Oh my god! Are you okay?"

"You bastard!!"

The roles of the two changed for a moment. Why is Develania watching me and Ben is holding him by the collar?

The two must have realized that fact too late and quickly changed places.

Ben hurriedly adjusted his position to prevent the blood from spilling, and D'Bellania grabbed the guy's collar as if nothing had happened and looked like he was pondering what to do with this.

Just when I thought that this was really going to lead to a chase for murder, the knights appeared.

"How dare you start a fight in the middle of the market?"

Even though no one in particular came forward to explain, there was no hesitation in their actions as if they knew everything.

Two knights grab both arms of the guy.

"Now sleep... what is this..."

“Take it with you.”

“No, why, King- Wow!”

“You talk a lot.”

“Why are the Royal Knights here!!”

watch! Call the security...

I looked at them with vain eyes as they disappeared from sight in an instant, and then turned my head.

It's ominous from the start, but I guess it's just my mood. It's just a coincidence.

What is... This was the beginning.

“Where are the bran guards going and why...!”

“let's go.”

“Help me! “I won't do that again...”

Even when I almost got pickpocketed.

“Oh my, Nari! “I did it to make a living!”

“let's go.”

“lily! “Nariiii!!”

Even when I almost got the fruit I picked at the market exchanged for bad quality fruit.

“Kolokkolok-!”

“What is this! “Is it poison?”

“Poison. Drag it...”

“No!”

You’re crazy, you crazy bastards!

What should I do in this situation? I have to go back before I cause more trouble.

It looks like the knights will keep chasing them until they return. From their point of view, they may be trying to end things on their own before the demons cause trouble, but for me, it feels like it’s making things worse.

In the meantime, he hugged the picked tea leaves tightly in his arms and quietly called out to the two.

“Let’s go back now.”

“Oh already?”

“Yes, I got all the information I needed.”

The tea leaves I am holding right now are Deusa tea leaves, a tea circulated among nobles at a very high price as it is difficult to obtain not only in the empire but also in other kingdoms.

This was on the market at a relatively cheap price. What does that mean?

‘Among the southern kingdoms, this kingdom is big enough to sell this precious tea on the market.’

There is only one such kingdom that I know of.

Although it is small, it is a tea kingdom that survives by exporting tea leaves.

Taehon soup.

"I... the top of the den contacted me again regarding the distribution of Deusa tea leaves..."

"Ah! I told you I wouldn't! Why are those bastards so persistent?!"

"It seems like there is a lot of passion because it is a relatively new top. "I really want to open a distribution network."

"Okay, let's take a look and see what these bastards are doing. "Tell him to come."

It is certainly. The only kingdom that creates such a situation with Deusa tea leaves is the Taehon Kingdom.

I looked around the noisy space and looked at Devellania. She seemed to have read my desire to go back and nodded lightly.

"If you are satisfied... then I will guide you."

"yes."

Let's go back quickly.

I pulled on my hood again and quickened my pace.

***

"...After observing, it was determined that the black-robed demon was not the commander of Corps 0."

"Huh..."

The King quietly touched both temples.

It was nice to hear that the black-robed demon was not the next most dangerous person after the demon king – the commander of the 0th corps – but even so, he couldn't help but laugh.

He vomited blood over something that was nothing, so he definitely wasn't the commander of the 0 Corps.

“Then who on earth is he?”

“Well...”

A weak demon served by the commander of the 2nd Corps.

Who on earth could there be such a demon? To begin with, the Demon World is a place that runs on the logic of power, so the proposition makes no sense.

If you are weak, there is no way the 2nd Corps commander will serve you. However, the reporter clearly said that the 2nd Corps commander was ‘serving’ him.

No matter how much I thought about it, there was no way I could come up with an answer. In the end, the king's nerves were so tense that he pressed his bloodshot eyes and muttered in a relieved voice.

“...Should I be satisfied that I returned without causing an accident?”

I hope it doesn't come over again.

He just sighed as he realized that the amount of hair falling out had been increasing recently.

“I want to do a ritual or something...”

***

After returning to the city, I couldn't resist Ben's careful urging and immediately contacted the demon king.

Contrary to concerns, the Demon King did not impose any punishment on Develania and Gaisitel for hiding the existence of the boundary line. I just thought, 'Really?' and ignored it.

I was momentarily taken aback by the very carefree response, but I soon came to terms with it.

Because the devil pursues thorough 'consequentialism'.

No matter what you do, as long as the results are good.

Although the existence of the boundary line was hidden, as a result, no problems have yet arisen, so there is no reason to punish.

So, even if the commander of the 9th Corps, who was supposed to be guarding the border, returned to the Demon King Castle and sat down just because he was bored, there would be nothing to say.

'As soon as a problem arises, the 9th Corps Commander's head will be blown off.'

-Oh and Demon. When I come back, I want to go back to the outskirts...

"...Yes...Yes?"

-don't worry. I'm not asking you to force yourself to come back. I still remember that scene too. There were more of them than expected. I'll send the 5th Corps to meet you, so we can meet in the middle and return together.

The moment I was about to reply that I understood, I suddenly felt a sense of discomfort, so I stopped and closed my mouth.

‘5th Legion...?’

If it’s the 5th Legion... uhm...

I guess I know why he’s sending the 5th Legion out of the many legions residing in the Demon King’s Castle.

I opened my mouth again, which I had hastily closed.

I tried to ask if another corps commander could be sent, but unfortunately the Demon King was one step faster.

-Okay then.

“ .... ”

-I guess we can be quiet now.

Pop. Communication was cut off.

I stood there dumbfounded, unable to accept the situation, and quietly covered my mouth.

Blood poured out suddenly.

“Demon!!”

***

The empire was in the midst of a war, and new news was pouring in every day.

For example, several kingdoms formed an alliance to fight against the empire.

While advancing south from the eastern part of the empire, the imperial army was pinned down by an infectious disease that spread and a kingdom army engaged in guerrilla warfare in such an environment, which was thoroughly defeated by the second hero, Stigma Primiro, and his troops.

Or that Cruel Hart, the fourth hero in the western part of the Empire, sentenced his enemies to checkmate.

News of Nemeseus, the first hero who oversees and promotes the southward advance from the center of the empire, etc....

Yes, as you may have felt at this point, the empire is currently at war with several kingdoms at the same time.

Each hero takes charge of each region and fights against each kingdom. This may be truly crazy, but unfortunately, it is reality.

The emperor had already completed almost all transfers with the crown prince, went to the battlefield with his sword in hand, and released the hero candidates who had the hero fragments he had collected.

Surprisingly, the empire was steadily expanding its territory despite the absurd situation of being at war with several kingdoms at the same time, wondering if all the efforts to gather talent had been in vain.

‘I think I’ll eat half of the continent in just two months, or even just one month.’

The duke put aside the report he had been reading silently, placed his hands on the desk with his hands clasped together, and lost himself in thought.

...Anyway, when that happens, the game itself changes. This game, too, will change into something other than a land grab.

What should I do then?

‘The cards I currently have are:’

Public opinion worsened toward the Salvation Church, the emperor, and the revolutionary army.

Purple eyes turn to the paper on the desk with information about the revolutionary army. The duke reached out and picked it up.

His indifferent eyes seemed to be reading the text, but soon became distorted with irritation.

Daniel, the leader of the revolutionary army who went to Ireon, returned. Even with new power.

‘I wish you would just quietly follow my wishes.’

The revolutionary army does not need to gain any more strength. It should not be obtained.

The revolutionary army’s goal is to kill the emperor, but the only thing the duke wants from them is to reduce support for the emperor.

I was in a position where I wanted to prevent anything more than that.

‘Now that they have gained power, the revolutionary army will move. If they all decide and follow Daniel’s command, they might really kill the emperor.’

The Duke's expression hardened as he remembered their unusual leader.

The emperor must not die at the hands of the revolutionary army.

The power of the revolutionary army must be reduced.

In order to do that....

the endless thoughts stopped.

As he lowered his eyes and considered the possibilities, he unclasped his hands and called out to the woman who had been waiting to one side.

"Saerin."

"Yes, Duke."

"Reduce the number of revolutionary troops. "It would be better to separate people. You could also use the emperor."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 93

93. Deceived, deceived, exploited and overcome (1)

She would have figured out what I wanted.

As expected, a clear answer came back without any hesitation.

“All right.”

How capable is this?

I turned my head and looked at her. Blind eyes met gazes.

...I know she likes me.

The Duke slowly stood up from his seat.

He comes around the desk and stands in front of Saerin, bending down slightly and holding her hand in a gentle gesture. Their gazes met and their purple eyes opened beautifully.

Then his head lowers, his loose purple hair brushing the back of her hand and creating a curtain around him. Meanwhile, the Duke's lips landed on the back of my hand.

Courtesy towards a noble lady.

It was natural for Saerin, a commoner, to widen her eyes. As I was frozen and just rolling my eyes, not even able to pull my hand away, the Duke calmly raised his head.

The smile that seemed to be painted was aimed solely at her.

“Thank you always.”

“...No, it’s natural.”

As Saerin hurriedly left to complete her duties, the Duke, who had been watching her, quietly adjusted his clothes.

Saerin will succeed. He will cause division among the revolutionary army and send some of them to the emperor. Unless they have a head like Daniel and overwhelming numbers, they are just prey for the emperor.

However, there are things that happen just in case, so you can’t just sit back and relax.

It’s not that I doubt Saerin. The person he suspects is none other than the Emperor.

‘It would be difficult if I even died in their hands.’

The emperor has always lived without being able to die.

The key is the emperor’s desire to survive. You have to make him want to live, even just a little bit.

‘I heard the emperor returned to the palace not long ago.’

The emperor cannot remain empty of the imperial palace day and night.

No matter how well the crown prince was handling things, the current emperor of the empire was Edoardo Desserte, so he would occasionally quietly return to the imperial palace to check how things were being handled.

So, if you go to the imperial palace now, you will be able to meet the emperor.

Prepare the carriage immediately without delay. The early duke walked out of the office.

***

If we had to be honest, Saerin was a supporter of the revolutionary army.

The barrier of status as a commoner in one's feelings for a duke. In such a situation, the ideology of the revolutionary army, which claimed to abolish the caste system itself, was truly fascinating.

However, that fact was never expressed externally.

She supported the revolutionary army because she loved the Duke.

Because she loved the duke, she was on her way to destroy the revolutionary army.

Because he, who loves me so much, is hoping for that.

"Hello, Mr. Iden."

"Ah, Saerin."

"I heard the leader is back? "Where is he?"

"It's obvious. "I must have gone to see my mother."

There was a clicking sound at the end of the sentence, as if he didn't like it.

"The situation is bad, but I can't even come to my senses and just leave the room."

"I know, right."

I think I can use this and eat it. Saerin's eyes sparkled.

Well then, let's think about it. What was Aiden's personality like? Was he a greedy person? If you are greedy, which would you rather be: wealth or power? For what purpose did he join the revolutionary army?

Is it easy to use and is it worth using?

"When on earth is he going to commit suicide?"

"I do not know. "How long do you plan on putting it off?"

"this. The duke seems to be hoping that the revolutionary army will soon move. "Isn't this the leader's arbitrary choice that has nothing to do with Mr. Aiden's opinion?"

"of course. "We are going crazy with frustration."

"Do you know the reason for delaying the coup?"

"The reason is always the same. "I wasn't ready or the timing wasn't right."

"This... seems closer to an excuse."

He cups one cheek, tilts his head, and asks a question as if muttering in an ambiguous tone.

“Mr. Aiden, have you thought about it? “Why is the leader postponing the rebellion?”

“...I don’t know because I haven’t thought about it deeply.”

He kindly pointed out questions that I had ignored.

“I’ve been thinking about it, and I think it’s because the leader is sad to lose his current position.”

“So...”

“Isn’t that so? A huge alliance made up of people from numerous kingdoms. The head of the federation. “It’s a shame because if the emperor is dealt with, the power may be blown away by a new wind.”

Whispering poison.

Aiden’s face distorted. The firewood of dissatisfaction catches fire and creates another negative emotion.

Saerin didn’t stop there and hurriedly fanned the fan as the fire was about to go out.

I learned about Aiden through conversation and also remembered what was recorded on paper.

He is a greedy person regardless of money or power. The reason he joined the revolutionary army was because he wanted to kill the emperor and because the revolutionary army had a high chance of success.

If the revolution succeeds, the goal is to enhance one’s reputation by emphasizing their participation. As your reputation grows, more things will follow.

He is an easy character to wield, and is worth using in that he leads a fairly large force in the revolutionary army.

Then it's time to move.

What? Tongue.

"So, how about Mr. Iden deal with the emperor and become the center of the new country?"

"Everyone in the revolutionary army is equal...."

"That's a good thing to say. But where could such a dream-like world exist? In the first place, it was an absurd argument to eliminate the throne itself. "No, even if it is possible to eliminate it, we ultimately need key personnel to lead the country."

The 'brainy' Saerin is a 'commoner'.

The good brain and commoner origin twisted the given ideology and brought it down from an 'ideal' that did not take into account the 'evil' that all humans have, to a 'reality' that included more human desires.

An ideal is an ideal only.

I don't know who came up with this idea, but it was probably an aristocratic scholar somewhere who grew up without much hardship, or a positive person with a flowery mind.

As Saerin, who was a commoner and felt the big and small malice of humans in everything she encountered on the street in the market, she could not help but be negative about the possibility of it going as intended.

Human greed is endless, and that applies even to those who started a revolution and participated in it.

“Lead Mr. Aiden’s forces and kill the emperor. And thanks to that, he became the center of the revolutionary army, abolishing the caste system, and was included in the leadership of the country.”

“....”

“Shall we talk a little more explicitly? We are creating a world where everyone is equal except the leadership. If Mr. Iden makes good use of the ‘situation of killing the emperor,’ he may even be able to select the leadership.”

For example, mentioning, ‘The people who helped me a lot in succeeding in this work are...’ These are the words of the person who led the emperor to death, so they will probably be generally respected.

Surprisingly, all of this was something I thought of on the spot.

“The duke is also hoping that the coup will be accomplished as soon as possible. So, even if he can’t actively help, he will save the emperor to some extent.”

Of course, the possibility of Iden killing the emperor—

“...a confirmation is needed.”

0%.

Saerin smiled brightly.

“I will get the emperor’s schedule.”

This is it. Saerin quietly smoothed the back of her hand. The place where the Duke's lips had touched still seemed to be warm to the touch.

The duke still respected her enough.

...The duke knows that she likes him.

If I had thought of it as something to be used once and thrown away, I would have dragged her into the bedroom as soon as I noticed her feelings. Because it is much easier to use that way.

In fact, among those who had feelings for him, he would drag those he considered to be throwaway losers into his bedroom, regardless of gender.

Sometimes I was jealous of them for no reason, but I knew for sure who the duke valued more.

Without hesitation, Saerin abandoned the brief dream she had.

***

The sudden request for an audience was quickly accepted as if it were a given.

While the servants of the imperial palace were surprised, the duke expected that the emperor would definitely do this, so he accepted this for granted and walked forward following the guidance of the servant.

Because it would be better to listen to any nonsense than to not listen to your political opponents.

Furthermore, if you are confident that you will not be pushed into psychological warfare, it is also an opportunity to find out what the other person is thinking.

There was no way Emperor Guangwu could avoid this.

“Glory to the Empire. Shin Starbe Illuster meets the present-day Empire.”

“Yes, Duke. “What’s going on?”

Instead of answering, the duke looked at the emperor. To be exact, just below the face.

The emperor, who was sitting at an angle with his arms on the armrests as if tired, was looking down at the arrogant duke, who only showed the bare minimum of courtesy, as if he were displeased, but the duke paid him no mind.

There was something more eye-catching than the emperor’s harsh eyes.

“How did your hands get like that?”

“No need to worry about the ball.”

The white bandaged left hand, which was hanging on the armrest, gently clenched into a fist.

The duke narrowed his eyes and examined the figure.

‘Did you get injured on the battlefield? ‘How on earth have you been running around so wildly?’

I examined him carefully to check the extent of the wound, but the clean white bandage, which did not show a single drop of blood, probably because he had changed the bandage on his arrival, completely concealed the extent of the injury.

‘...Well, there’s no way I could show weakness this easily.’

When a faint smile appeared on the Duke’s lips, a cool voice called to him.

A voice that holds your gaze as if it doesn’t want to just watch you obediently examine the wound.

“Are you here to look at Jim’s wounds, Duke?”

“...no. Excuse me. your majesty.”

Okay, now it’s your turn to talk.

To prevent the emperor from dying at the hands of the revolutionary army, and to prevent them from killing him who said these words, his eyes, which had been closed for a long time, opened. The Ja-an, which was looking at the floor, slowly rose and seemed to stop at the emperor’s chest, then rose further and faced the Golden Eye directly.

The golden eyes resembling a wild beast were still fierce, but the shadows under the eyes contained a fatigue that could not be hidden.

The emperor did not allow him to show his face, but he did not scold the duke for arbitrarily raising his head and seeing his face.

However, the entire throne room was filled with low-level living.

It was a life that would have been difficult for a duke who was far from a sword, but he persevered in the end and brought out the truth that had been buried deep inside.

“Do you remember the death of the former 1st Prince, who was the father of the current Crown Prince and the Princess and the older brother of His Majesty?”

A man with a gentle personality who was the only one among the many brothers who took care of Edoard Desert.

Fortunately, the emperor did not immediately get up from his seat or draw his sword.

He simply patted the back of his bandaged left hand, frowned, and softly ordered those around him to leave.

“Let the police go away too.”

“Yes, Your Majesty. General...”

“I will tell Nemeseus myself.”

“....”

“Do you think Lord Illuster can kill Jim?”

“...I’m leaving.”

The emperor, who had even had his guard bitten, looked at the duke. A lower voice came out calmly.

“Are you referring to the incident that was said to have been caused by the Duke of Gradis, but was actually killed by the Duke?”

“You know very well.”

“You’re crazy.”

When the truth was discovered, the emperor had to cover it up.

Because the Gradis duchy has already become extinct. The name of the family was completely erased because of the assassination of the first prince, but now it was impossible to say that it was not true.

If this fact becomes known, not only the Emperor will suffer, but the Duke will also have to sacrifice his life. But to admit it right in front of my eyes like this?

“I don’t understand why you’re mentioning it now. “What on earth are you planning?”

“Aren’t you curious about why I killed him?”

“....”

“I did it to get to a higher place.”

Did you think he would be satisfied with the position of duke?

If you ascend to the throne, you will have the position of emperor. If you ascend to the throne of emperor, you will have a unified continent at your feet.

Stabe Illuster was that kind of person.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 94

94. Deceived, deceived, exploited and overcome (2)

"The situation at the time was that the 1st prince, the eldest son, was almost confirmed to be the crown prince. So what would happen if I killed him?"

"...Other princes and princesses must have run amok to take that empty seat."

"Yes, that actually happened. "I was planning to select one of them who could be used as a puppet and place him in the king's position, but..."

A blatant laugh was heard.

The duke, who had lowered his eyes as if reminiscing about the past, paused and looked up. The emperor was looking down at him with scorn.

"That's funny. "Did you think things would turn out as easily as you thought?"

"...That's right. "It was my arrogance."

Edoard, the evidence of arrogance, looked at Desert blankly and then smiled.

“Who would have thought that the 9th Prince, who had no presence, would stand out?”

To be precise, I went crazy.

The 9th prince, Edoardo, believed that the 1st prince's death was due to a fight for the throne, so he killed all of his brothers who had attempted to take the throne and took the position himself.

There was no mercy. Even their children were killed to destroy the seeds of rebellion.

The duke watched all of this in silence.

Edoardo, who ascended the throne, named the kingdom 'Empire' and recognized the first prince's children as the crown prince and princess.

And laughed. Who are you asking to protect whom?

“...That's strange. “Why is the ball so provocative today?”

The emperor raised one hand and touched his forehead as if he had a headache.

“From mentioning the 1st Prince carelessly to admitting to the murder charge that I was unaware of and revealing my dirty greed.”

“...”

“What on earth is your intention?”

I'm tired even if I'm not, so I don't know why I bother to come and scratch my stomach.

Memories of the past that he had buried due to his busy life came back to him again, and the emperor gently gave strength to the hand holding the armrest.

[I will be back. It won't take long.]

[In the meantime, I'll ask for Elpidius and Alethea.]

If I had known it would be his last, I would never have sent him.

I should have caught him when I sensed something ominous.

When I heard the news that he had died, I should have investigated it instead of taking the sword.

No matter how disgusting the brothers who were aiming for his vacant position were, they should not have taken aim at their swords so easily.

He should not be easily swayed by the somewhat credible rumor that his other brothers had killed him to take the throne.

'ah.'

head hurts.

A ghost sticks its face in front of me and giggles. It goes down, circles around the Duke, and is placed over his face.

He wanted to pull out his sword and strike his neck right away, but the emperor gritted his teeth instead of hastily expressing his emotions.

I can't make the same mistakes I made then.

“Due to the murder of the 1st Prince, Deon Hart instead of Cruel Hart entered the Eight Years’ War. Salvation Church.”

“....”

“There was always a ball behind every incident. “There’s no way the ball is talking nonsense, so I’m starting to be wary of what he’s planning to do this time.”

“Of course. Even if you think about it, you won’t know right now.”

The emperor raised his head. He had a rare expression of surprise.

By saying those words just now, the duke was admitting two facts.

That he was involved in all the incidents the emperor mentioned, and that he was plotting something this time too.

Among them was a story that would have turned the world upside down if Deon Hardt had heard it.

[The Duke is the main culprit behind Deon Hart’s participation in the Eight Years’ War instead of Cruel Hart’s.]

Originally, the Hart family was supposed to have Cruel Hart participate in the Eight Years’ War. Even if the documents weren’t changed in the middle, it probably would have been like that.

The emperor also learned of the fact that the documents had been changed during a business trip after the war.

To be precise, when Deonhardt wanted the family to be exterminated, he felt something strange and investigated it.

—The documents were changed and Deon Hart was forced to participate in the war. In response, the Hart family submitted documents requesting corrections to the imperial palace several times in the beginning, but all of the documents were missing along the way.

Even though he knew all the truth, he pretended not to know and closed his mouth and closed his eyes and accepted Deonhardt's request, but he was also trash... The emperor glared at the bigger, thicker trash in front of him.

"Are you acknowledging all of that now? "The minimum punishment would be the death penalty, but it looks like Kong is truly crazy."

Putting aside the fact that he killed the first prince, the fact that he admitted to being involved in all other major incidents makes each and every one of them a serious crime.

The duke grinned at the voice filled with a deep sense of death and threat, as well as a question that could not be concealed.

"I told you this before. "Your Majesty cannot kill me."

He looked around with an exaggerated gesture, reminding everyone that the emperor had been bitten.

"There are no witnesses or evidence. "Do you need further explanation?"

"...."

The First Prince assassination incident cannot be tampered with because it is already over, and the omission of documents regarding Deonhardt's participation in the Eight Year War is a huge blow to him unless there is evidence that the documents were stolen directly from the imperial palace. It doesn't work. The duke just messed with the count family, and the count family has now lost its power, so who can say anything now?

Moreover, there is no clear evidence that the Duke was involved in the Salvation Church, so the emperor had no justification for beheading the Duke.

"Of course, Your Majesty, even if there is no evidence, you could personally end this life. But you probably don't want to do that. "If you kill me without any justification, my honor will remain intact, and Your Majesty will become a narrow-minded tyrant who killed the duke out of fear or discomfort with his power."

"You're talking so well..."

Suddenly, the gold armrests were distorted.

The Emperor slowly leaned forward, looked down at the Duke, and smiled as if showing his teeth.

"How long do you think you can live by destroying all evidence and hiding it?"

—Yes,

"Just try to hold on until the end. "The moment the gap is revealed will be the day of your execution."

It will also be the day when everything you have built up falls into the abyss.

The meaning of life, which had been fading at every moment, becomes clear again.

The purpose of life is strongly engraved in me, and I begin to feel some lingering regret about this life that seemed like it would not matter when I die.

Until the moment when Duke Stabe Illuster destroyed everything he had built and was brutally killed.

The emperor vowed not to die.

***

Daniel, who had no idea what was happening while he was away, stopped in front of the closed door and looked at his outfit.

Fortunately, I changed my clothes first, so the tattered look I had when I just came back was nowhere to be seen. The injuries sustained in the battle there were hidden under clean clothes, and the faint scent of blood was also covered up with perfume.

It is perfect.

Daniel's face was slightly crumpled for a moment as he remembered the melee with the murderous knights waiting in Ireon, but he quickly calmed his expression.

Because I can't look good in front of my mother.

-smart.

"mother. "This is Daniel."

"Come on in."

When I opened the door and entered, the first thing I saw was a woman smiling and extending her hand.

It was probably a welcoming gesture, but Daniel walked up to her, knelt down on one knee in front of her, held her hand respectfully, and bowed his head to place his forehead on hers.

Instead of removing her hand, the woman lifts her other hand and gently strokes his head. A soft voice sounded like flowing water.

“Are you hurt anywhere?”

“Yes, I came back safely.”

“You sprayed perfume.”

“yes.”

“I don’t think I normally use perfume.”

“I tried it once this time. Do you like it?”

“son.”

“... ”

Daniel, shocked, raised his head.

Taking advantage of that opportunity, the woman naturally withdrew her hand and cupped his cheek, making him raise his head. Eyes that looked exactly like each other met in the air.

The woman did not delve further into the loopholes in his words or reprimand him.

I just stare blankly.

After a short but long silence, it was Daniel who bowed first.

“...There was a conflict with the Murderous Knights in Ireon. I suffered some injuries in the process, but the injuries were not that serious and I didn’t think I would tell my mother. sorry.”

“Okay, how can I scold my son?”

“No...!”

The rebuttal to the sighing words could not be finished.

Daniel lifted his gaze blankly at the feel of the cozy cloth wrapped around his neck. The woman who tied the finished scarf around his neck was smiling faintly.

“Winter is almost over, but since it is finished, I thought it would be better to give it to you.”

“...This...”

“No matter where my son is or what he does, this mother will not say anything. Because you don’t deserve it. “If I could just say one thing as a favor...”

A warm voice that melted the snow settled in my ear, as if announcing the arrival of spring.

“Be careful not to catch a cold, son.”

Wherever you go, don’t get hurt, don’t get sick, and especially don’t die.

Take care, son.

This mother still keeps the gift her son gave her.

***

“Are you sure you want to leave right away?”

“okay.”

“You didn’t even change your clothes.”

“The duke was planning something again. “Looking at what you said to Jim confidently, even if you investigate now, it will be too late to do anything, so it would be better to hurry before something happens.”

You can change your clothes upon arrival.

The emperor crosses the hallway with wide strides, still wearing his cumbersome attire. The Prime Minister, who was following behind, spoke as if he was worried.

“The escort....”

“It’s just annoying, so that’s enough.”

“You’re wearing cumbersome clothes and moving around without an escort. Besides, isn’t the destination a battlefield? “Are you really sane?”

“I don’t know. “It would be better if I just died.”

“your majesty!”

“It’s a farm. “What if I become prime minister and can’t tell the difference between seriousness and jokes?”

There was a blatant sigh in a voice filled with obvious laughter. The Emperor glanced at the Prime Minister, then returned his gaze to the front and mumbled the words.

The mouth that had been smiling slightly became stiff again as if it had never been like that before.

“What is the king’s position? There was something the brothers said in an attempt to impress their father. “I still remember it.”

“ ....”

“One sister said she wanted to make the kingdom rich, and another older brother said he wanted to make it a kingdom that no kingdom could ignore, an empire. “I don’t remember who it was, but there was also a brother who had grand aspirations of unifying the continent.”

“ ....”

“I’m so glad you have so much greed. “Thanks to you, Jim is living such a busy life.”

Dry laughter echoed through the hallway.

The emperor, who has just left the building, leaving his smile in the hallway, does not stop walking and strides forward without hesitation on the well-maintained lawn. The voice continued.

“I plan to burn fiercely until the end. So, you don’t have to think about pointless deaths like suicide.”

It may be an inevitable death that he cannot control, but he has so much to do and responsibilities that he will never die voluntarily. Right now, I don’t even feel like I want to die thanks to anyone.

The emperor, who had just arrived at the stables and was brushing the bridge of his horse's nose, suddenly exclaimed, 'Ah.'

"Thanks to you, I remembered something I had forgotten. "I should have told you a long time ago."

"...?"

"I do not place any value on the soulless body. So, if I die..."

"Your Majesty."

The Prime Minister, sensing something ominous, hurriedly called him.

I wanted to stop him from talking. It was even more so because I felt like I knew what was going to be said.

But his call did not stop the emperor from speaking.

"I hope we don't waste our troops just to get that piece of meat."

"your majesty!"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 95

95. Deceived, deceived, exploited and overcome (3)

The Prime Minister could not easily continue speaking.

I opened my mouth to speak several times, but closed it again and repeatedly wiped my face to get rid of the shock.

I don't know where to start. Should we point out the assumption of death, or should we point out the dismissal of the emperor's body as a 'piece of meat'?

The Emperor assumed that his death would not be normal. Perhaps he was thinking of the situation when his head falls off on the battlefield.

'What should I say...?'

There were a lot of words stuck in my throat.

Your words are too extreme. Why are you considering death? Didn't you say that you are an empire? etc.

However, the words that finally came out after the silence were something different.

"At least... take off your cloak and leave it behind. It's not a combat cloak, is it? "It would draw attention and be a distraction."

The emperor chuckled. He was fiddling with the hem of his red cloak with the imperial emblem engraved on it, then hopped on his horse and spoke softly.

“Why did you have to throw away the little proof you had as an emperor so easily?”

....

The emperor, who was riding alone on horseback, leaving the palace with a sword in hand, and running skillfully through the forest, glanced at a certain place with a glance. A sneer appeared on his lips.

I slowly pulled on the reins of the horse I was holding.

The horse that read the emperor's will gradually slowed down and soon stopped. The emperor jumped down, patted the horse's back, then walked up to the tree and sat down as if he wanted to rest.

He crossed his legs, looked at the sky for a few seconds, leaned the back of his head against the tree, closed his eyes, and opened his mouth.

“Have you ever been told to beware of forgetting?”

“....”

“People who forget the past are bound to repeat the same mistakes. “Jim also didn't live that long, so he only understood it in his head, but recently he started to feel this with his own skin.”

He lightly swept the wild flowers on the floor with his hand and muttered in a dry voice.

An empty voice was scattered through the trees.

“It was truly amazing. “If those who experienced the eight-year war directly are still alive and well, I would never have thought that those who have already been eaten by the monster of oblivion will appear.”

There hasn't even been a generational change yet.

Citing the arrogant kingdom of Ireon as an example, the emperor, who had been squeezing the corners of his eyes, uncrossed his legs and placed the sword he was holding on his knees. The left hand, wrapped in a white bandage, is placed on the grassy floor, and the right hand goes into the arms and comes out holding a dagger.

The moment ‘they’ could not react to such a natural behavior, something happened.

Phew!

“...!”

A feeling of agitation was mixed into the silence.

Confusion appears in the eyes of those who see the dagger piercing the back of the hand of none other than the emperor himself, and not at any of them.

No matter the emotional state of his enemies, the emperor simply drew his dagger with an expressionless expression and muttered lowly.

“...It's better now.”

The white bandage that had been changed so neatly turned red again.

Pain was a thing of the past.

An expression of unmarked satisfaction appeared on his face as the black ghosts that had been blocking his sight the whole time disappeared.

He puts the dagger back into his arms and stands up. He walks around the area as if he were taking a walk, holding a sword sheath in his right hand while leaving his left hand dripping with blood.

Red marks appeared on the floor as if his steps were leaving a mark wherever he passed.

“How much did we talk about? Yes, I was talking about the dangers of forgetting. So, let me ask you this now. —Do you know how Edoard Desert ascended to the throne?”

I stopped walking. I raised my bleeding hand and touched the flowers blooming on the tree.

Blood appeared on the pretty flower petals, and questions continued.

“Do you know who one of the leading figures on the battlefield that led to victory in the eight-year war was?”

Who is the other nameless hero with the warrior’s fragment and

“Do you know why he doesn’t have a secret guard?”

See, forgetting is such a scary thing.

If you know the emperor during the rebellion, if you remember the emperor during the Eight Years’ War, if you have at least done some research on what the emperor is like on the battlefield today.

If that were the case, they wouldn't have dared to come after the emperor so clumsily.

The emperor smiled lowly as he touched the flower, which had lost its original color after drinking so much blood.

"This guy and that guy."

The hand that was touching the flower petals goes down to the stem connected to the tree.

What color was this flower originally? It was purple.

...Yes, purple.

The stem was snapped off without hesitation, as if cutting off someone's neck. I put my nose to the flower as if to smell it, but all I could feel was the strong scent of blood.

The emperor, who had lowered his eyes as if smelling the scent of a flower, slowly moved his gaze in that position. Unlike the dark shadow under the eyes, the vividly sparkling golden eyes face straight ahead and stop exactly somewhere.

Amidst the tense tension, a voice that sounded like an animal growling came out softly.

"—Is your luggage funny?"

Tuk. The battle began with the signal of falling flowers.

The emperor, with his sword drawn like lightning, tramples the fallen flowers and moves forward. The empty scabbard was lying on the ground and blood was gushing out somewhere in the forest.

The head of one of the enemies fell off.

The panicked people quickly responded with the weapons they were holding, but that only served to postpone death.

A blood-red cloak flutters. No, maybe it really is blood itself. If you see a flash of red in your vision, someone's head has definitely fallen. Then again, a red color filled my vision and a fearful death burst out.

"Now wait a minute..."

"That outfit, that pattern. I know for sure. It was a revolutionary army. From what Jim remembers, the head there wasn't that stupid. Is he arbitrary? "There will be no need to worry about the revolutionary army from now on."

Suddenly.

"Ah, ah, ah...."

Only then did they remember.

His talent was hidden by the titles of 'emperor' and 'tyrant'. The name of a person whose talent was particularly outstanding among those who possessed the fragments of a warrior.

"Ah..."

"Save me..."

His swordsmanship was unstoppable, fierce, and exciting at the same time.

The freedom of holding and swinging a long sword with one hand. A powerful force that seems to cut down even if there is a mountain in front of you.

Every time the sword moves, somewhere on someone's body is cut cleanly and blood sprays into the air. The sword moves lightly as if riding the wind, but is swung with great force in every movement to cut down the opponent. Even though it cut down many people, it boasted a clean silver body without a single drop of blood.

If you were a spectator, you might have felt catharsis from the coolness. However, all those who were looking at the emperor now were his enemies.

"I think I know why the duke said that today. Was it also related to the revolutionary army?"

A plan that doesn't seem to have been what the leader intended. Nevertheless, the emperor's schedule fell into their hands.

It's a peacock. Unless they were dukes, there was no way these clumsy people could get their hands on the emperor's schedule.

Nevertheless, the reason they risked their lives to provoke me...

'I guess it was because they didn't want me to die at their hands.'

Despite his contradictory actions, the emperor somehow seemed to know what he was thinking.

In order for the duke to achieve his wish, the emperor must not die at the hands of the revolutionary army. The duke is aiming for a higher position and power, not wanting a world where everyone is equal.

So the 'revolution' should never succeed. At the same time, in order to control the growing power of the revolutionary army...

I laughed out loud.

"...How dare you use luggage?"

But there may be no physical evidence for this either.

He laughed viciously and swung his sword again. The emperor moved easily while wearing cumbersome clothes.

Someone mustered up the courage to reach out and pull his cloak, but instead of stumbling or being dragged away, the emperor dragged the opponent back to the station and stabbed him with his sword.

When he pulls out the sword that stabbed him deeply, blood spurts out and his cloak flutters, floating and sinking in time with his movements.

"There is no need for someone behind the scenes. "I think I would know without having to interrogate you."

There is no reason to keep him alive and I have no intention of keeping him alive. I have no intention of letting go even if I run away.

So the only way for them to survive is to kill him.

—I don't know if it's possible.

On this day, 1/9 of the revolutionary army's strength evaporated.

Leader Daniel, who received this news belatedly, silently touched his forehead as the strength he had replenished was back to square one.

[There's no way he could have saved the emperor's schedule on his own. I don't have that level of ability.]

[Research. Who did he meet before doing this?]

[...Saerin?]

There is suspicion, but there is no conclusive physical evidence.

This incident ended with the arbitrary actions of a foolish executive who left only Daniel's personal suspicions without any physical evidence of his connection to the duke.

As a result, this became an incident that halted the revolutionary army as the duke had hoped.

***

"Daemon, look at this. I got it during my travels, and it's a fishing tool from the human world. Really?"

"Yes..."

"The thread is so weak that it breaks easily, so I don't understand how you can catch a fish with it. "Why did you have to use such weak thread?"

"It may be a weak thread in the demon world, but in the human world it is quite strong and tough."

"why?"

“Because the demon world and the human world are different.”

“How is it different?”

“Ha...”

This is why I didn't want to run into the 5th Corps commander.

5th Corps Commander Ohel She is not particularly threatening physically, but she is a very threatening corps commander in other ways.

Just looking at it right now, it's taking a huge toll on my psyche and stress, so what further explanation is needed?

How could it be that the Demon King also threw her out of the Demon King's Castle under the pretext of 'patrolling the entire Demon World'? It's all because it's hard to handle her curiosity.

This is not a strict guess. When he told me that he would send the commander of the 5th Corps to meet me, the Demon King clearly said this before cutting off communication.

[I guess I can be quiet now.]

...Then me?!

“Oh, and Demon, look at this too. “It is a communication stone of the human world and is called a ‘communicator.’”

“Ah...”

“I guess you knew. Isn't it amazing? “This is clearly a magic stone, but why is it being used in the human world?”

It's a communicator... how did you get it?

If you thought that magic stones were only used in the demon world, you would be greatly mistaken. Did you think the emperor was sending hero candidates to the demon world for no reason?

Magic stones are treated at the highest level in the human world as an offering and tool for magic. The communicator is one of the tools of the human world that uses the magic stone.

'You can think of it as the same as the communication stone of the demon world. Of course, there are some differences.'

To use a communication stone in the demon world, you can pick up any magic stone and cast a spell, but to use a communication stone in the human world, you have to split one magic stone into several pieces and cast a spell on them.

If you divide one magic stone into two pieces and cast a spell, only two people can communicate, and if you divide it into three pieces, only three people can communicate... and so on.

Even worse, if it gets smaller than a certain size, the spell itself won't work, so if you split it haphazardly, the cost you spent may evaporate.

In a situation where the magic stone itself is difficult to obtain and a shaman is also difficult to find, the communication device is inefficient, so there are only a handful of people in the human world who have a communication device

. Probably not? I looked at Oel with suspicion.

Actually, I have one too.

'I'm sure of the source. Because the emperor gave it to me.'

I made a shocked expression as I remembered the communication device that would be kept in my mansion.

The wolf-eared demon who had been standing silently behind Orel the whole time seemed to have interpreted my expression with a different meaning, and quietly opened his mouth.

"Oel, I think it would be best to do something like that."

"why?"

"Daemon is bothering you."

"Really? Why?"

"Having to constantly answer endless questions can be frustrating for some people."

"why?"

Maybe it's because of his position as an adjutant, or maybe it's because of his personality...

Dernivan, the wolf-eared demon, answered Orel's questions, which were probably boring, without showing any emotion.

Come to think of it, I heard you two were dating?

When I first heard it, I didn't think it would fit at all, but now that I see it, it strangely suits me.

Of course, he must have had trouble coming up with an answer, so he kept his head straight and said something else.

“We’re all here.”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 96

96. The time has come (1)

When we arrived, the gates of the Demon King's Castle were already right in front of us.

We are finally liberated...! I thought my ears were bleeding.

"Daemon, blood is coming from your ears...?!"

What was it that was really bleeding?

When I wipe my ear with my finger, there is blood. Ben, who was watching next to me, called out to me with concern.

"It will take time to build up immunity, so you should get on the carriage first for treatment."

"Oh, me too!"

"...."

It was natural that I was speechless.

Even though I got off to get some fresh air, I had to get back on the carriage not long after, but my mood didn't change in a positive or negative way.

The commander of the 5th Corps, who was next to me outside and chirped, followed me inside the carriage. Only the location changed, but the situation did not.

Sitting in the carriage were me and Ben Geer, who had come in to examine me, and Orel and her adjutant Dernivan, who had come in after me to chat. The carriage itself is very wide, so it doesn't feel particularly crowded, but the problem is my eardrums.

"You know. Demon, I heard that humans create and give birth to children directly from within the womb. I heard that this is not something you want to do, but that it is possible with a certain probability if you 'love'..." "..."

"

... A child created that way is said to be a 'blessing.' I also want to receive a blessing, so I go to Dernivan...."

I can't finish the sentence!

Although it hasn't been long since receiving examination and treatment from Ben, there are signs of bleeding from the ear again.

I quickly wait for the carriage to stop and the door to open, just to quickly free my eardrums. What is this?

Crunchy.

"...!?"

The carriage stopped, but instead of opening the door, it tore off!

And then a wild beast the size of a house jumped in through the open, or rather torn, entrance. The beast that attacked so fast that an afterimage was left, fortunately, did not aim at me, but attacked Dernivan in no time...

“...?!”

“What are you doing, Commander 9th Corps?”

“Let’s spar!”

Oh, it wasn’t a wild beast. I was mistaken because I only saw an afterimage.

The person who has now jumped into the carriage is Trover, commander of the 9th Corps. He claims that ‘magic’ is his specialty, but in reality, he claims that martial arts that are used by training the body to the limit is ‘magic’... He is a very strange corps commander.

‘...Fuck.’

I quietly retreated to the corner of the carriage.

Fortunately, Trover was unaware of my existence. Until Dernivan, who casually blocked his fist, spoke in a voice as dry as his expression.

“The commander of Corps 0 is watching. Please refrain from acting.”

“ah?”

The eyes of a wild beast... no, the commander of the 9th Corps landed on me.

At that moment, I saw his eyes light up like an animal that has found its prey.

No, wait a minute... Why did you have to risk me...

"Excuse me, Demon. It's also great hiding. "I couldn't feel its presence at all."

"yes? No, I've never really been in hiding..."

If it's hiding, then it's the 2nd Corps Commander.

As if he didn't want to get caught up in Orel's barrage of questions after joining the 5th Legion, he looked shocked as he remembered Develania sitting alone on the roof of the carriage.

That traitor.

'Now that I think about it, you must have seen Develania before Trover came in. Why did he come right in without touching her?'

As if to answer my question, Trover tilted his head while snooping around inside the carriage.

"Now that I think about it, I saw the 2nd Corps among the troops deployed outside. Didn't the 2nd Corps commander follow you?"

"...wasn't it on the roof of the carriage?"

"yes? yes."

"...."

"...?"

This little girl... where are you going to go and leave me alone?

While I was swearing all sorts of things towards Debellania, a note slipped in through the window of the carriage and landed on my lap.

[Daemon, something suddenly came up, so I'll go first. Sorry for not being able to see you until the end!]

"...Fuck, oh my..."

It really jumped out!

The hand holding the note is trembling and he is quietly shocked, but for some reason Trover hesitates and retreats. Then he quietly avoided eye contact and spoke in a muttering tone.

"I thought you must have been tired from traveling a long distance, so I tried to sign up for a sparring match, but I couldn't do it either..." He looked busy and in a bad mood...

His voice got quieter. Rather, I focused on the shocking content I had heard earlier.

Couplet? Daeryeon? With me too?

"Of course not...!"

He hurriedly stopped talking.

I almost said the words that came to mind without thinking. Since this is the Demon World, I have to think about it before speaking, but I was a little surprised and excited.

Trover's left hand, with its black, jagged fingernails and a truly hideous appearance, came into view belatedly. When I kept my mouth shut, my doctor, Ben, who had been watching me next to me, stepped forward as if speaking for me.

“It’s not worth answering.”

No wait.

“If you have traveled a long distance, shouldn’t you keep in mind that your opponent will be tired before sparring? Not all demons have monstrous physical strength like the 9th Corps commander. Of course, our Demon is human!”

“Are humans different from demons? “How is it different?”

“Physically, humans are weaker. Of course, our Demon is special!”

“How is Demon so special?”

“Oel, I don’t think it’s appropriate to ask that question here.”

“why?”

A mind-blowing conversation goes on without knowing its meaning or purpose.

Meanwhile, Trover, who had been silent for a moment and seriously thinking about something, raised his head and looked at Ben.

“Then... is it okay if I ask you to spar tomorrow?”

“To completely relieve fatigue, you will need to rest for a week. Especially due to the nature of Demon’s body, which still has aftereffects...”

“Okay, one week!”

“....”

Why is my sparring schedule being set arbitrarily...?

It is right to refuse right away, but my senses are warning me that if I express my intention to refuse, something worse will happen.

‘If I refuse for no reason, there may be a misunderstanding and things may turn out strangely. ‘Because it’s always been like that.’

After leaving me speechless and unable to refuse, Trover turned to Dernivan again. Dernivan was watching the situation unfold with an expressionless face the whole time.

“You’ll be okay, right?”

“I’ve told you this many times, but my specialty is archery, not martial arts.”

“Still, we sparred well. Are you going to refuse?”

You asked with an expression as if you were going to do something if I refused. Actually, you have no choice.

Dernivan was silent for a moment as if he had read that in Trover’s expression, then glanced at Oel and slowly shook his head.

“no. “I will spar.”

“Well...”

“But not right now.”

Trover, who was about to drag Dernivan somewhere, stopped.

Dissatisfaction is clearly reflected in the face that looks back. As if he was not afraid of the wrath of the corps commander, Dernivan said what he had to say without any hesitation.

“I have to sort out the miscellaneous things that Oel brought with me, and I also have to clean up after the 5th Corps that fought several battles.”

“What a mess! “It might come in handy someday!”

“Anyway.”

“Then when is it possible? “A week for you too?”

“I know you won’t wait even if I call you for a week.”

Dernivan took off his outer clothes and folded them neatly on one side of the carriage. He unbuttoned a couple of buttons on his shirt, which was stuffed all the way to the point of being stuffy, and stretched out two fingers.

“Please wait two hours.”

....

The 2nd and 5th Corps were disbanded respectively. Ben, who had completed his duties, went back to his room, and I, who had finished reporting to the devil at the communication table before departure, went straight to my room without going to see him.

...I tried to stay stuck.

“Now, the judgment is for Demon.”

“....”

Why am I here?

I sat blankly in the prepared spot and quietly washed my face.

Yes, I will make a hundred concessions and understand that I am here as a referee for the sparring match between Trover and Dernivan. But those two are not everything. Why is everyone gathered here?

“Who will win?”

“Well, normally I would have predicted Trover, the commander of the corps, to win, but... as you know, the situations between those two are a bit different.”

“Well, the first time I was offered the vacant position of commander of the 9th corps was to Dernivan before Trover...” “

Normally, everyone would accept the corps commander offer without even moving on to the next one, but this time, unusually, many people turned it down. ?”

“Yes. “The first one to receive an offer was Ed, the adjutant of Commander 0 Corps, and then Dernivan, and when that was rejected, I went to Trover.”

“Yes to Ed, but why did you reject Dernivan?”

11th Corps Commander Lirinel, 3rd Corps Commander Ashild, 2nd Corps Commander Develania, 4th Corps Commander Idelia, and 1st Corps Commander Jaycar.

Are you kidding me? It's like almost all the corps commanders residing in the Demon King's Castle are gathered here. Aren't there things to do like that?

'Besides, when Develania runs away just because she's busy...'

I secretly glared at the demons sitting on one side of the training ground.

I can't sleep because my heart is pounding. In the meantime, Jaykar looked at me and said, 'Aside from Ed,' so I must have been surprised. I didn't feel embarrassed or startled, but I thought my heart stopped.

Fortunately, his eyes didn't linger on me for long. Lirinel, who looked very excited, answered right away.

"Oh, you still didn't know? "Oel and Dernivan are lovers."

"...Dernivan is dating?"

And with OL?

It felt like I was hearing words that I couldn't say before.

Lirinel did not bother to answer the meaningless question. I just raised my finger and pointed somewhere.

There was Oel approaching Dernivan.

"I read a romance novel in the human world, and it said that the knight who goes to sparring would offer victory to the heroine."

"Is that so."

"huh. So, win over Dernivan and offer your victory to me."

"All right."

"Yes, this is a reward given in advance."

Oel wraps his arms around Dernivan's neck and lifts his heel. Dernivan grabs her waist and supports her tightly as she clings to me, and soon their lips meet and separate.

A blatant friction sound rang out.

-side.

The expressions of the corps commanders who saw that scene turned strange.

Anyway, Dernivan, who was indifferent to everything, and Orel, who was trapped in his own world, continued their conversation.

"How about Dernivan? "Do you feel like your heart is racing?"

"My heart was beating from the beginning."

"No, not like that. "Do you want to do something more special?"

"It doesn't seem any different from usual."

"Oh, then it's difficult. They say it's love only when the heart beats. Only then can we have a baby..."

Even Jaykar's face, which had been maintaining its own expression, collapsed.

With a distorted expression on his face as if he didn't know what to say, he was silent for a moment and slowly spoke while D'Vellania was rolling on the floor laughing in the distance.

"Those two... don't they know that demons can't have children?"

“Even if Orel said that, Dernivan would know. It’s obvious. This is not the first time Dernivan has matched the rhythm of Orel. “I didn’t know that matching the rhythm could even lead to ‘love.’”

Idelia responded by tapping the corner of her mouth with a folded fan.

Demons are born from the power of the Demon King.

This means that no matter how much the two love and mix as humans, a demon child will never be born between them.

‘...It would be good if I started quickly.’

Why do I have to sit here and listen to their love story?

The more I look at that, the more my stomach turns.
Because I’m jealous? No, because I’m jealous.

Orel and Dernivan’s journey, which was difficult to see with both eyes open, could only end when Trover, who had been waiting, shouted, asking if they would not start.

In a barely organized situation, Dernivan and Trover stand face to face and the hall becomes quiet as if it had never been so noisy.

In it, I could clearly feel the numerous gazes directed at me.

Yes, I know I have to speak up since I’m the referee, but...

‘What should I say?’

Were the rules for sparring in the human world and sparring in the demon world the same?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 97

97. The time has come (2)

The sparring of demons is different from that of humans. I can use magic and transform my body, but how could the rules be the same as the rules I know?

For a moment, I just nodded and nodded because I felt like I would get so annoyed by them if I applied the rules of the human world for no reason.

'First of all... even if it's the Demon World, one of the Dalians is the corps commander, so killing him wouldn't be possible, right?'

Okay, let's say something first and let's see. The silence is getting longer and longer.

Feeling pressured to say something quickly, I couldn't even process the words and just spit them out raw.

"...It's not as bad as killing them."

At best, these words were said in consideration of their personalities and habits, but the atmosphere was somewhat cold.

The corps commanders looked at me with slightly stiff faces, and I heard whispers.

It was natural to notice that something was wrong.

“As long as you don’t kill them, after all...”

“...That’s scary. reading.”

“Then, does it end when one side surrenders or becomes unable to fight?”

“Will Demon-nim admit to surrender...?”

I turned the volume down to avoid overhearing my ears, and several people were talking at the same time, so I couldn’t tell the content, but at least I knew it was mine.

‘What’s wrong? Was this really a fight to the death? ‘Is that why you do that?’

The moment I was worried about whether I should change my words right now out of anxiety, a loud laugh erupted from one side.

“Fuhahaha! okay! It has to be that much to be fun! As expected, Demon, you know something! How about Dernivan? Are you going to do it the same way?”

“It doesn’t matter.”

“Okay, this is it! Dalian should have been like this! “I’ll show you the magic I’ve practiced, so take a close look!”

Trover, who was making incomprehensible noises, looks at me with a smiling face.

His sparkling eyes clearly expressed what he wanted, so I was able to give him the answer he wanted without difficulty.

“Start...start.”

Trover raises his foot as if he was waiting and then hits the floor roughly. A strange cry followed.

“Earthquake!”

Quaaaang!

The floor of the gym splits around him and the shaking spreads.

I tried to regain my balance by relying on the hand holding me, but I couldn't overcome the absurdity and let out a sigh.

‘What kind of magic is that! ‘You just hit the floor so ignorantly!’

No, in the first place, when demons use magic, they don't even say the name of the magic, so what is that unheard of spell...!

By the way, who is the demon who captured me?

“Are you okay?”

“Oh Ed? Why are you here?...”

“I heard that Demon has returned. Wouldn't it be natural for me to come visit him?”

yes? Because he's a lieutenant. What about other lieutenants?

I didn't know what to say, so I just looked at him blankly and then secretly turned my gaze back to the training ground.

Meanwhile, Dernivan, whose claws had become sharp, was rushing towards Trover. Trover also did not sit still and watch.

He raised his index and middle fingers and suddenly tried to stab Dernivan in the eyes.

“Blind!”

Even during that time, I didn’t forget to shout out the magic name.

Is it okay to do that and that?!

Before my silent astonishment could be expressed, Dernivan lowered himself to catch his finger with his forehead. Trover, who had recovered his finger before that, tightened his fist and shouted.

The muscles in my forearms bulged.

“Strengthen your body!”

“...I just gave my body strength.”

Trover throwing a threatening punch with a lot of force, or Dernivan dodging it again...

I shook my head.

‘Just don’t even think about it. It’s easier if you give up.’

I was watching them with an empty attitude, then suddenly turned my head and looked at Ed.

He, who was standing there nervously wondering if the aftermath of the battle would affect me, immediately turned his head to face me as if he sensed my gaze.

Seeing that he was ready to listen, I asked a question without hesitation.

“Ed doesn’t spar with Trover?”

“yes? “If it were an order, I would do it, but my skills are not suited to sparring, so I am avoiding sparring as much as possible.”

“...?”

“It’s hard to control it so you don’t die.”

As he said that and rubbed the back of his neck sheepishly, I got goosebumps. It was all the more so because its appearance was so ordinary.

Yes, he was a demon too. His appearance was similar to that of a clean-cut human, so I was mistaken for a moment.

‘...Let’s just stay quietly in the corner.’

He quietly sat down and hugged his knees with his arms as if curling himself up.

Ed, who had no way of knowing what I was feeling, took half a step back, as if he was trying to get behind me, and raised his head again towards Trover and Dernivan, who were still sparring.

“You know what? “The 9th Legion Commander did not have so little magical power that he could not use magic from the beginning.”

“...then?”

“The problem was my personality of pursuing fun without end. The magic power consumed by magic cannot be recovered, so it must be used appropriately when necessary, but magic was wasted simply for fun and interest.”

Just as witchcraft requires a sacrifice, sorcery requires magical power.

Just as the sacrifices used in magic cannot be recycled, the magic power consumed in magic cannot be recovered.

That alone is reason enough to conserve magic power, but Trover didn’t even have a large amount of magic power to begin with.

As soon as I heard that, there was one word that came to mind.

“Mi...”

“Yes, he’s crazy.”

“...I didn’t say that.”

I almost said it, but

Ed didn’t seem to think it was a big deal, but I felt pricked and hurriedly asked another question.

“So the 9th Corps Commander cannot use magic for the rest of his life?”

Fortunately, Ed obediently focused on the question asked.

“That’s not it. “Even if a demon has no magical power, there is magic that can be used in the end.”

“what...?”

“You probably know the origin of the birth of demons.”

I know.

“The power of the devil.”

“Yes, if you look at this from another perspective, the bodies of the demons are made up of the power of the demon king.”

If you replace the power of the devil with another word, it becomes magical power.

Magical power that is more powerful and pure than that of any other demon.

“It’s about using that magic power.”

“Then... you won’t die?”

“Yes, so the magic used then is usually the most powerful magic that can be used in a demon’s life. “It is reasonable to consider it as the price of one’s life.”

It was then. Trover, who was fighting Dernivan out of the corner of his eye, lifted the rock that was lying on the edge of the training ground.

I was so startled that I stopped talking to Ed and looked at him. I was afraid that someone might think he was crazy, so I stepped on the thought and threw that ugly thing without hesitation.

“Ryaaa! “Meteo!”

Dimly, I could see Dernivan’s fingernails becoming sharper and the backs of his hands becoming covered with gray fur.

Kwaaaang!!

A cloud of dust obscured the view, and debris flew in all directions.

What happened? At first glance, I thought I saw a rock being smashed. Is Dernivan alive?

As I coughed at the dust bothering my bronchi, I saw a piece of debris the size of a human head flying into my field of vision. When I see the fierce speed, I automatically think of my future where I hit the ball and go straight to the goal.

‘...Fuck.’

I had to avoid it quickly, but after sitting for a long time, my legs got cramps. To make matters worse, he started coughing without stopping, wounding his neck and starting to bleed.

“Chokkolok... Wow! “Cuckoo!”

Have you ever experienced a vicious cycle where a cough that starts because of dust ends up coughing because of a cough?

What if the blood from coughing causes nausea and the nausea causes blood?

“Daemon!”

Ed, who had lightly swatted away a fragment of an unusually large size that threatened to threaten his life, looked at me urgently.

It may be surprising, but the danger of my life is nothing to these guys.

Just when I was about to feel a little helpless, Ben came running towards me and pushed Ed away.

He waved his hand to blow away the dust, then covered my nose and mouth with a wet handkerchief and burst out in frustration. Fortunately, it wasn't annoyance directed at me.

"What is this dust! Who brought Daemon into this crappy environment?! This is why I vomit blood! Are you crazy? Do you have no head? Is this a new assassination method? "It seems like pouring sand on prayers is not enough!"

Um... Most of the people in this position are corps commanders...

It seems that as the attending doctor, he really didn't like the dusty environment here. No, this is just disgust.

Trover is startled by the anger-filled words and wraps his arms around his neck, while Dernivan quietly returns his hands to their original state.

Even the commander of the 3rd Corps, Ashild, who had nothing to do with it, quietly swiped my head for no reason.

Even after silencing the two who had shown off their tremendous fighting power just a moment ago, Ben's anger did not subside and he searched for another victim.

"Ed, what on earth did you do! I can't believe you left Demon unattended in such a dusty place! "Are you sure it's the lieutenant?"

"...."

Ed's expression distorted mercilessly.

It was understandably unfair. Honestly, what could be wrong with him? All he did was come here when he heard I was back.

If I were to make a crime, wouldn't it be that you didn't take me out of here right away? However, since I was the referee, it would have been difficult for him as a mere deputy to do it.

Before the resentment turned into anger and turned towards me, I quickly intervened between the two.

"I'm fine. "It's not Ed's fault."

"but!"

"Ed came a little while ago."

"...Let's go back to your room first. "The environment here is not very good."

Fortunately, Ben seemed to think that getting away from this place with me was his priority, but he took a step back with a grumpy expression on his face.

I was hurriedly standing up, forgetting that I had cramps in my legs, in case he caught another evil demon, but I had no choice but to stumble wildly, gritting my teeth from the terrible muscle pain.

Ed, who immediately caught me and helped me when I almost fell, looked down at my legs with a stern expression.

"Did you hit your leg with some debris?"

"No...."

"Me! "I'll take you on a wooden horse!"

...what?

“Because it’s my fault too. “Meteor was only meant to be used on the battlefield... I will be careful in the future.”

Before I could believe my ears, Trover immediately reached out and lifted me up onto his shoulder.

I looked around confusedly for a moment to understand the situation, then realized what I was doing and my expression hardened.

Put it down you idiot.

“My legs are fine.”

“I know it’s all a lie!”

“It’s true!”

“You don’t have to be considerate of me.”

“It’s real!!”

Why are this kid’s shoulders so wide?!

I try to jump down somehow, but it’s not easy because my shoulders are wide, and Trover is holding my legs so tightly that I can’t even jump.

I gave Ed a look of salvation, but he didn’t know what I was thinking and only spat out shitty words.

“Seeing that you are speaking informally, it looks like your injuries are at a fairly dangerous level. 9th Corps Commander, can you please hurry?”

“Once again, I use respectful language. Just do what you do.
“Because it gives me goosebumps.”

“How can I, a mere adjutant, speak informally to the commander of the corps?”

“It’s not fun.”

He grunts but speeds up his walking pace. After that, Ed and Ben followed, and I, who was whining to get down somehow, noticed the shock and fear in the eyes of the Demon Castle users and quietly buried my face in my hands.

I want to die of shame.

“...Oh wait a minute.”

A thought suddenly occurred to me, so I raised my head and looked back. Even though the distance from the training ground was increasing considerably, the eyes of the corps commanders were all focused on me.

You must be angry. At least he would have been annoyed.
The long-awaited attraction was ruined because of me.

I quickly opened my mouth, thinking that I had to appease them somehow before I left.

Trover, who I wasn’t expecting, stopped noticeably, so my voice was able to reach them just in the nick of time.

“For now, let’s call it a draw today. “We will continue after this.”

After seeing their expressions change, I immediately turned my head back to the front.

After roughly reviewing the current situation, another worry came to mind.

9th Corps Commander Trover. This crazy guy.

He even saw me spitting blood, so I guess he won't pester me when we spar in a week.

'...no way.'

I didn't even notice because I was so nervous as a shiver ran down my spine.

The changes in the expressions of the corps commanders who heard my words were not very positive. Trover twitched the hand that was holding my leg.

A whisper coming from behind.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 98

98. The time has come (3)

“For now, let’s call it a draw today. “We will continue after this.”

The moment they heard those words, the corps commanders forgot to control their facial expressions and unconsciously showed an expression of disgust.

Fortunately, Demon Arut, the commander of the 0th Legion, turned his head away without looking at their expressions anymore, so it was a disaster, and they almost got into a big trouble.

The silence of the training hall, which was so quiet that even the sound of breathing could be heard for a moment as the corps commanders froze when they realized their mistake, was broken as soon as Demon Arut disappeared.

The first person to speak was Jaykar, the 1st Corps commander.

“...Does this mean that I will have to see one of the two get harpooned?”

“I think I got it wrong, Dernivan?”

“ .... ”

Develania's taunts didn't work. Without answering, Dernivan brushed the dust off his clothes and went to stand behind Orel.

Just when there was another awkward silence, OL brought up another topic, perhaps by coincidence or intention.

"Daemon, didn't you definitely ask me to get off? But why is Trover alive? If I really hated it, Trover would have died for disobeying Demon. Oh, is that really it? Even if you don't like it with your mouth, your body..."

"Oel, that's not the word to use here."

"Is that so?"

"yes."

Develania rolled over, holding his stomach as the conversation struck a goal. She laughed for a while, not caring whether the other corps commanders around her frowned or not, but after some time had passed, she barely stopped laughing and wiped the corners of her eyes.

A languid voice tinged with laughter gave an answer a beat late.

"Demon-sama is usually moderate, so even if he hated it, it wouldn't have been to the point of killing him. Oh no. If you didn't like it, you wouldn't have gotten caught by Trover in the first place, so maybe you just liked it? I guess what Orel said is right. Even if you don't like it with your mouth, your body..."

"Stop. "What are you going to do, Develania?"

This time, it was again the responsibility of the 1st Corps commander to control the corps commanders who were so unique that they could not be controlled.

Jaykar, who was the only one to receive recognition from all corps commanders except for corps commander 0, which was unusual, skillfully organized the situation as always and dispersed the gathered corps commanders.

There are no specific regulations on meetings or exchanges between corps commanders, but these people are a group that only causes accidents the more they gather, so it would be better to disperse them at least right now.

***

Fortunately, my worries about what would happen if Trover asked me to spar a week later did not come true.

On the one-week anniversary, the devil called me.

“Come on.”

When I arrived at the office, he stood up to greet me and naturally led me to my seat. Whether by mistake or on purpose, his hand touched the area around my neck.

I felt a subtle sense of discomfort that I couldn't just ignore, so I rolled my eyes and looked in the mirror on one wall of my office, and saw a black stigma that wasn't there before I came here.

“...?”

“Are you surprised?”

Of course...

I know that engraving this is an implicit sign of intention to send it to the empire. I had a vague feeling that it was time to go.

But this suddenly?

While I was standing there unable to hide my embarrassment, the demon king sat down again and pushed a separately colored map in front of me.

“Before I explain, would you like to look at this first?”

On the map, the empire and several surrounding kingdoms were painted in the same color. When combined, the areas are almost half the size of the continent...

‘Half the size?’

already?

I raised my head in surprise. I made direct eye contact with the Demon King, as if he had been watching my reaction the whole time.

The reverse eye, which I couldn’t read from the first time I saw it, smiles as if to show off. The Demon King just touched the map with his fingertip.

“It certainly appears that the empire is an empire. Soon we will eat half of the continent. No, it really will happen that way.”

“....”

“The kingdom we are currently attempting to conquer is Esperanes. It is the smallest kingdom on this map.

Considering the size of the empire, I think it won't be long before the gates are opened."

"...."

"Now then, the problem. "Will the empire be satisfied and stop here, or will it advance with momentum?"

There was no one here who did not know the answer.

The Demon King leaned back against the backrest. Place your clasped hands calmly on the desk and tilt your head toward the ceiling.

"I've never met the emperor in person, but I know his general personality. Perhaps the emperor will not stop. I will conquer each kingdom, unify the continent, and turn the lost tip of my sword to the demon world. "There is no reason for me to just sit there and watch."

"...."

"Now you know what I'm going to say, right?"

I nodded slowly.

He is trying to intrude into the Empire's game, which was shaping up to be superior.

By overturning the board and changing the game itself.

If before it was a battle for territory within the human world, now it is a war for the survival of the human world and the demon world.

'The emperor will be quite angry.'

The Demon King predicted interference in the empire's war of conquest.

Now it is time to be on the side of the empire again.

The Demon King grinned while waving his hand at me.

"Go ahead. You don't have to bring any gifts or anything this time. "Even if you bring it, you can bring only your own."

For example, something like 'information'.

Unlike the heavy content, the tone was very refreshing.

***

Deon walked away and the Demon Lord stretched out his body and swung the chair he was sitting on.

This situation in which the Demon World moves will be felt as a challenge to the emperor. Given his personality of not avoiding controversy, he is probably preparing for an all-out war against the demon world.

My pensive eyes stare endlessly at the ceiling. A low murmur filled the quiet office.

"Now we must use Deonhardt with caution."

My useful but dangerous card.

As I was thinking about him, I suddenly started laughing.

'I don't want to let him go, but...'

If you weigh the gains and losses of sending him to the empire, it is safer and better not to send him.

But that's against the rules.

This is a psychological battle and a battle of pride between the Demon King and the Emperor, with Deonhardt in the middle. Whoever holds him back or kills him would be a coward and a loser.

As the Demon Lord, who didn't want this fun game to end too early, he couldn't keep Deonhart tied up in the Demon World.

"I'm going to be very tired from now on."

I raised my hand and pressed the area around my eyes. Unlike the covered eyes, the exposed mouth was clearly smiling.

The chair that had been spinning came to a halt in front of the desk. The Demon King took his hand away from his eyes and looked down at the map.

Where his eyes landed, there was the smallest kingdom on the map.

"Well... old history doesn't determine the size of power."

We have seen time and time again how long history and tradition are shattered by new forces.

So, no matter how old the kingdom on the map is, it will eventually fall before the empire.

In any case, what we need to focus on right now is the Empire. I stretched out my hand and touched the communication seat.

-Yes, Demon King. It's Trover!

“Now go back to the border.”

-yes? Oh no, I understand.

In the first place, he abandoned his mission because it was boring and boring. Since nothing had happened yet, nothing much was said, and Trover knew that if there had been any problem, his head would have been blown off right away.

In such a situation, how would you dare to question the devil when he tells you to go back?

9th Corps Commander Trover, who usually acted as if he had no thoughts, had no choice but to quietly pack his bags at this time.

***

The devil is trying to intervene in the emperor's game. There will definitely be a collision. It is obvious that my work will increase.

Wouldn't there be a situation in which one would not only receive information but also directly engage in combat with weapons?

'Do I have to stuff a cloth in my mouth again and say that shit?'

Blood pouring out of the mouth all the time is a weakness.

In particular, during the eight-year war when there was no one to lean on, to hide this, people stuffed cloth inside their mouths and wore masks to hide their appearance. There was a time when I nearly died from suffocation.

‘No, no. Now, everyone knows that I’m not in good shape, so it doesn’t really matter.’

I’m sure everyone will think about it carefully.

Such as the devil’s curse or the aftereffects of preventing the hero’s self-destruction.

“Ed, I’m going to the human world.”

“Ah yes. “Are you going alone again this time?”

“yes.”

“I will prepare.”

Ed immediately stood up, walked quickly, and opened the door. I ran into Hien holding a strange plant in her arms.

“....”

“....”

The door slowly closes. A foot entered the door before it was completely closed.

“Take it out before it gets cut off.”

“Now, please take a moment, Demon...”

“Tell me.”

“Then, if you could just tell Demon this....”

Geez.

The dark red flower I saw for the first time let out a shy cry. Ed’s expression became irritated when he saw it moving slowly.

“What is that strange flower? Are you planning to give something like that to Demon?”

“I planted the seeds that Demon gave me and grew them.”

“It’s a very pretty flower.”

“....”

“....”

No, wait a minute. You planted the seeds I gave you and grew them? That?

What I gave you are rose seeds. There is no way I could ever raise it.

While I was at a loss for words in confusion, Ed glanced at me, looked at the flower once again, cleared his throat loudly, and stepped to the side.

“...come in.”

Hien carefully stepped into the room, paying attention.

Ed, who was examining him with a disapproving look, bowed towards me.

“Then I’ll go get ready.”

“....”

Don’t leave me alone.

My silent cries did not reach him. After Ed left the room and I was alone with Hien, I carefully rolled my eyes and examined the plants in the pot.

When I looked closely, it looked vaguely similar to a rose. The petals look like roses. Let's pretend we didn't see any dawdling.

How on earth did they grow this?

"That's..."

"Oh, you recognize me as expected! The seeds that Daemon gave me have finally bloomed! Normally, seeds sprout within three days when planted, but the seeds Demon gave me were somehow different, and they barely sprouted after a week!"

So that means it can't sprout.

"Actually, I couldn't let the seeds that Demon gave me go to waste, so I injected them with a little magic power."

"Ah, so such a strange creature...."

"Huh?"

"no. But wasn't the use of magic prohibited?"

"I didn't use magic, I just injected magic power into it. Fortunately, he accepted it well and grew up quickly."

Hien, who had said that, looked at me with his eyes shining. Seeing his longing eyes, I spoke in an uncertain voice after a moment of silence.

"Well... thank you for your hard work."

"yes!"

“....”

“Oh and take this! This is my reward for allowing me to grow your precious seeds!”

Geez.

If I’m going to repay you, shouldn’t I give something nice? Why is this happening?...

I looked at the flowers on the table with confused eyes, then reached out my hand and pushed the flower pot. My fingertips were trembling as if I could touch the flower for once.

“it’s okay.”

“yes? Why... Oh, don’t worry. This flower will not attack you, Demon. “I made sure to educate them.”

Are you an animal?

“I heard you’re heading to the human world. Don’t you think you’ll need an escort to take care of those annoying guys down below?”

“...What do you eat with this?”

“Oh, that’s... Actually, I don’t know. When it comes to eating, it seems like I eat all kinds of things, but I don’t think it matters if I don’t have to eat something...”

“This and that...”

“Like monsters and human demons.”

“It’s okay too.”

They eat humans! No matter how well I trained them, what if they try to eat me?

Hien suddenly became sullen. It's not that I don't know his efforts and sincerity, and I feel a little sorry, but my life is more precious.

As I desperately looked away from him, I heard a knock on the door.

"This is Demon Ed."

"Come on in!"

As soon as Ed came in, I jumped up from my seat. Ed's puzzled gaze falls on me.

I looked him straight in the eyes and pointed at Hien with my eyes. In short, it means this.

'Let's take turns.'

I'm going to run away for a while... No, I'm going to leave, so you can do something with him.

"I'm going to go to the bathroom for a moment."

"yes?"

"then."

I quickly went into the bathroom attached to my room.

I ignored the perplexed gazes following me behind my back.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 99

99. It's time (4)

Ed put down a bag commonly used in the human world and glared at Hien. His mind was quite complicated.

It's clear that Demon-sama has sent a sign telling me what to do with this guy... but what should I do?

'Kill me?'

No, if he was going to kill him, Demon would have killed him long ago.

If you can't read even one look in the eyes, you're disqualified as an adjutant. Ed's mood sank.

Anyway, I can't just waste my time like this. Another assumption came to mind.

'It looks like they've had all the conversations they needed to have, so I guess that doesn't mean they should be sent out.'

Even if that wasn't the case, I had to leave again because I had more luggage to take care of, but it worked out well. Isn't it possible to leave Hien alone in a room where Demon-sama is also away?

“Go back now... what are you doing now?”

“ah.”

A low voice growls. At the same time, a painful groan rang out.

Hien was putting that strange flower into Demon Arut’s bag.

It probably won’t work anyway, but maybe it’s an intention to harm Demon. Ed’s eyes were suddenly filled with murder.

“Explain. “Is this an action approved by Demon?”

My wrist, which was held as if it was about to break, trembles in pain.

Hien closed his mouth for a moment as if to relieve the pain, and then spoke slowly.

“It’s an escort plant. It’s a flower that bloomed from seeds that Demon gave me, so I think I should use it for Demon. “I also told Demon.”

The answer was no.

But Daemon needs someone to weed out the scoundrels. The mission itself was confidential, and the possibility of that ‘someone’ becoming a burden was greater than the possibility of making Demon’s movement easier, so he did not take him with him.

‘If it’s a plant that’s relatively small and easy to carry around, it’ll be fine.’

I know it’s presumptuous. Even if Demon finds out about this and cuts off my head, I have nothing to say.

However, whenever Daemon visited the human world, he always came back with dark shadows under his eyes.

Hien suspected that this was because he was carrying out a confidential mission alone and dealing with monsters that would attack him without even knowing the subject while he was on the road, so he wanted to give him something to relieve his fatigue.

Ed, who narrowed his eyes and examined the authenticity, soon relaxed his grip.

While he was massaging his wrist, feeling a sharp pain, he reached for his bag and reached for the flower pot. Contrary to concerns that it might be thrown away or destroyed, the flower pot was placed in a bag in a safer condition.

“...It would be difficult to add anything since there is a flower pot. “I should put the food bag in my front pocket.”

I wondered for a moment whether I should at least cast an illusion spell, but the ban on magic had not yet been lifted. Ed, satisfied with having carefully closed the bag entrance, turned his head.

“Is it okay now? If you want, get out.”

Ed dragged Hien outside and slammed the door.

In the quiet space, the bag placed on the table shook and soon became quiet.

***

It is late spring again. I can't believe I passed by like this without even experiencing winter, let alone snow.

Even in the future, such peace will be difficult. The sound of clashing weapons reminded me of a dark future filled with red and bloody smell everywhere, and I sighed deeply. There was strength in the hand holding the bag.

‘Ah, a bag.’

It’s scary to even think about it again.

It was long after I had crossed over to the human world that I opened the bag. The magic pouch containing essential items such as food pouches was in the front pocket of the bag, so there was no need to open the bag separately, but I never thought it would come back in such a big bag.

‘He said he felt uneasy for some reason.’

Ed always brought me a bag with camouflage luggage, saying that there might be people who get suspicious when I go back with a light body, so I assumed it was like that this time too.

Checking my baggage was a waste of time for me, whose priority was to escape the demon world full of monsters and set foot in the human world I missed.

But I never thought you would give me such a big treat.

‘No. Is Hien the culprit?’

No matter who put it in, it doesn’t change the fact that it gave me a big treat.

As soon as I open the bag, a terrible flower cries out at me, and it gives me goosebumps...

I want to throw it away right away, but due to the nature of demonic creatures with persistent vitality, I doubt if this flower will die, and if it doesn't, it will be quite difficult. It's impossible to release such a strange creature into the human world.

Fortunately, Hien was right and the flower did not attack me.

'So what should I do? I have to take it with me until I return to the Demon World.'

I gave up on killing.

Just in case, I stabbed him with a dagger, but he grabbed my dagger with a leaf on the stem and twisted it!

It was a very strong plant.

I didn't give up and tried to burn it, but the flint I took out nearby was blown away by its whip-like stem, and when I tried to light it and throw it in from a distance, it hit my hand that was outstretched toward the flower pot. It was canceled.

'This is why the plant is so quick-witted...'

One intention to kill it may be shocking, but it stays still when picking up a flower pot without much thought, and only responds when you reach out to handle it.

So I finally gave up on trying to throw myself off the cliff.

'I'm going to take care of it, so please be quiet.'

'Geek.'

'...'

I raised my head while massaging my throbbing wrist. The entrance to the count's residence came into view.

I feel the security guard looking at me suspiciously. He smiled and walked in front of him and pulled back the hood he was wearing.

Regardless of whether the guys who recognized my identity were panicking or not, I looked up at the mansion and strengthened my stomach. A loud cry shook the count's mansion.

"Remember!!"

Why on earth did you put seeds in my bag! Of course, I was the one who gave it to Hien! still!

"Why?"

"Count Bae!"

"Come to your senses!"

My vocal cords couldn't handle the loud shouting.

I lowered my head and vomited blood and gritted my teeth.

Oh, it sucks.

Fortunately, I didn't faint. As I watched Remember silently setting up the car, I quietly breathed a sigh of relief.

Maybe at other times, I shouldn't have fainted like that.

I still have a bag full of strange creatures. What would happen if someone opened my bag while I was passed out and offered to pack my things?

It's scary to even imagine.

"...Ah Remember. "Let's use tea leaves instead of those."

"Aren't those... Deusa tea leaves?"

"Please leave two glasses for four. One is Remember's."

"...All right."

I thought he would refuse, saying it was the duty of a butler, but surprisingly, he obeyed obediently.

The car was completed without any problems. While the car was being prepared, someone came in for a moment...

[This is Count Dan.]

[Come in.]

[I heard that you have returned and came to say hello. You were just preparing tea. I am...! Ah....]

When I noticed the Deusa tea leaves on one side of the table, I quickly became glum and left.

Why on earth did you come?

Come to think of it, as soon as I found the tea leaves, he had hidden something behind his back. When I left, I took a quick look...

'Deusa tea leaves?'

How did you get it here?

"I'm glad you came back safely."

“ah.”

I suddenly raised my head. Remember, who was sitting across from me and quietly drinking tea, was looking at me.

The silver-blue eyes that were looking at me go down to my feet and then narrow. A questioning voice continued.

“But why didn’t you leave that bag with the attendant?”

“Remember.”

Thanks to you, I remembered it.

I pushed the bag aside with my foot and looked him in the eyes.

“There were a lot of things that made me question why I had put them in my luggage.”

“I took it with you just in case.”

“Flower seeds?”

“yes.”

“What kind of flower seed was it?”

“It’s a rose.”

It seems you didn’t give me strange flower seeds on purpose. Was Hien’s infusion of magical energy the cause?

However, the question of the inclusion of flower seeds and other useless items was still not resolved. I looked at Remember with suspicious eyes.

“What on earth is Remember?”

“He is the butler of the hero Deon Hardt.”

“Not that one.”

“If not... are you saying you are from Esperanes?”

“Ah Esperanes... Esperanes?!”

[The kingdom we are currently attempting to conquer is Esperanes. It is the smallest kingdom on this map. Considering the scale of the empire, I think it won't be long before the gates open.]

The Demon King's voice passed through my head like an auditory hallucination.

There is no way Remember doesn't know this. I stuttered to open my mouth to him who calmly lifted his teacup and moistened his lips.

“...Are you...okay?”

“What are you talking about?”

“Isn't the empire attacking the mother country?”

“Oh, it's okay.”

The answer that came back was as calm as his attitude.

“Esperanes has more to lose in the process of conquest than to gain from it. In the future, we will have to devour more kingdoms, but Your Majesty will not stand by and watch this happen. “It will probably not be long before he changes the direction of his army.”

“ .... ”

“And if it is truly conquered, the empire will have to cross swords with other powers on the outside and deal with Esperanes on the inside. “It would be very annoying.”

A strong sense of faith in one’s country is evident from the words.

What did I know about Esperanes? A small kingdom located in the center of the continent. A natural fortress surrounded by mountains on all sides. Just about that much.

Sensing my curiosity, Remember narrowed his eyes and whispered secretly.

“Will this old man explain to you about that place?”

“ ....”

I was fascinated and immersed in the topic of the mysterious little kingdom.

It was when I returned to the room after the conversation that I realized this wasn’t right.

This sly butler...!

I hurried to find Remember, but what greeted me was a communication device given to me by the emperor. It’s also connected to the emperor!

“Remem...!”

-Count Hart.

“your majesty?!”

-I contacted you after hearing that you were back, but was the timing bad?

“Is that possible? Glory to the Empire. God Deon Hart...”

As I hurriedly paid my respects, I heard a low laugh.

-‘Glory to you’... Yes, it’s appropriate to say hello.

“Perhaps I made some kind of mistake...”

-No, I didn’t say that. It’s appropriate to say hello.

Wasn’t that a joke?

I thought my heart was going to drop.

-Jim is not in the imperial palace right now.

“Ah...”

-Yes, unfortunately, it seems difficult to talk directly face to face. Instead, let’s get the report like this.

The emperor’s voice, referring to the ‘report’, sank low.

The time has come to be nervous. I straightened my back.

***

The emperor placed the communication device on the desk and quietly touched the back of his left hand. It’s a recent habit I developed because the bandage was frustrating.

People around him tried to stop him, saying that the wound would only get worse, but when did the emperor ever care about such things? Regardless of whether blood was seeping through the bandages or not, I did not stop moving my hands and listened to the voice on the other end of the communicator.

The words that came out after hearing the brief report that the Demon King had moved contained a faint smile.

“...This is what happens in the end.”

-....

The table has been turned upside down.

In order to deal with the demon world, the human world must come together. At the very least, no one should interfere with the empire fighting the demon world on the front lines.

Other kingdoms have become unable to attack the empire, and the emperor, who knows what is more important, must now turn his eyes away from them and face the demon world.

The eating away is over now.

“Is there anything else I need to report?”

-What are the criteria for ‘what needs to be reported’?

“It means there is something.”

-....

Deonhardt does not answer what is not asked.

Originally, the standards were loose enough to easily answer a few conditions, but it was natural for them to become stricter as the war with the demon world was imminent.

Seeing each other is over.

'Now we can properly fight this way as well.'

Psychological warfare and a battle of pride.

Emperor Edoardo has no intention of backing down. In his opinion, 'Emperor' means not backing down when facing something and moving forward.

So, the one who becomes a coward will be the devil, not me.

He shook off his distracting thoughts by tapping the back of his left hand and slowly opened his mouth.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 100

100. Hunting Competition (1)

"There is something, but seeing as he doesn't speak up and asks for standards, it probably doesn't have a direct connection to the Demon Lord."

-....

"Is that report directly related to the Demon World?"

-What is the standard for 'direct connection'?

"It is done. "If you keep asking about the criteria for 'direct connection,' it probably means it's ambiguous."

It is not directly related to the Demon King, and it is difficult to say that it is directly related to the Demon World, but it is still an important report that the Emperor must know...

There is no doubt that the information is important, given that Deonhardt has kept it in his head.

The hand that touches the back of the hand becomes rough. Red blood showed through the bandage.

The emperor was constantly shaking his head and muttering words.

“Is it a monster problem?”

The fact that the Emperor needs to know even though there is no ‘direct’ connection to the Demon King of the Demon World shows that this issue is a problem for both the human world and the Demon World.

A common problem between the demon world and the human world. Monster (monster).

-no.

“Then it must be a boundary issue.”

-A border line connected to the Demon World has been discovered in the Taehon Kingdom.

answer.

The emperor’s head tilted to one side.

“Isn’t the border directly related to the demon world?”

-In the current situation, the ‘direct connection’ I judged was ‘information related to the war’ or ‘information related to demons’. sorry.

“done. “I had a rough understanding of it.”

That’s why I was able to come up with the correct answer without difficulty.

If it were the Taehon Kingdom, it would be a southern kingdom, but there is a border in the south... Do they really know?

‘It doesn’t matter whether you knew it or not.’

If you knew, you'll get an immediate answer as to why you didn't inform the empire, and if you didn't know, that's the end of it.

What is important is 'the existence of a borderline'. It was important before, but in the current situation with the war against the demon world approaching, it is undoubtedly very valuable information.

The Emperor smiled as he moved his hand from fiddling with the back of his left hand to the handle of his sword.

"Good work."

***

As always, important reports passed by in the blink of an eye. Not a metaphor, really.

-It will probably be during the hunting competition that Jim will meet you in person.

What, when did the report end? I blinked once, but time flew by so quickly.

It is clear that the report has been completed. The emperor's words had already turned into a casual conversation before ending the conversation.

As I was still dazed and could not answer, a voice filled with doubt came over the communicator.

-It's not like he doesn't want to participate in the hunting competition.

The priority is to answer the emperor's words. I opened my mouth calmly.

“no. I will participate. When will the competition be held?”

-A week later. An invitation must have already arrived at the mansion.

“All right. “I’ll see you in a week.”

-I’m not looking forward to it. Oh, I hope I don’t come back with my white clothes dyed red like last time. I don’t really care about the luggage, but it seems to be quite scary in the eyes of the weak-hearted nobles.

Ah, back then... I was scared too.

I had just returned to the empire and was on my way to the imperial palace to report. On the way, I was attacked by a revolutionary army, and as if that wasn’t enough, I lost consciousness. When I woke up, I found myself in front of the emperor with blood all over my body.

Was I more scared than I was back then?

-If you want to wear blood, wear clothes of a color that makes the blood less noticeable.

“yes yes?”

-In that sense, Jim sent me some clothes. It would be nice if you could wear it on competition day.

“yes?”

-It’s red, so you can bleed it as much as you want.

No, I don’t think this is right...

- You don’t like it?

“no. Thank you....”

Power was a bully.

A week passed by in an instant. My attempt to punish Remember for daring to throw me in front of the communicator connected to the emperor collapsed in front of a mountain of documents.

Calling out Remembrance, he opened the door with great force and went in, but when he saw the documents lying on the ground, he turned around with great force...

“Aren’t you going to let go of this...?”

“If we keep doing this, even old people will be defeated.
“You must fulfill your duties.”

“You always say old man, old man, but honestly, Remember is healthy, right? The person who also overthrew and subdued the revolutionary army....”

“You missed the point of what you were saying. “You must fulfill your duties, Count.”

“...Help me.”

“How dare I try to harm the Count? I’m scared that someone will hear it. “Come here now.”

I was caught like that for a long week.

And now, as I smoothed out the dark shadows that filled my eyes, I sighed.

“I don’t want to go....”

“You’re talking about big trouble. The host of this hunting competition is His Majesty the Crown Prince. “If you don’t care about your life, please refrain from saying anything.”

This hunting competition is intended to deal with the increased number of monsters and to show off that the empire has enough leisure to do such things even while fighting a war.

The person who carried out this on behalf of the emperor who was busy going to and from the battlefield was none other than the crown prince.

I heard that the emperor will probably come around the middle or latter part of the competition.

‘When the emperor comes, of course he will talk to me.’

I hate to admit it, but I am one of the Emperor’s favorite swords.

So what will the topic of conversation be? Of course, it’s probably related to the demon world. Since this report was conducted via communication rather than face-to-face, you may want to add or hear more.

“I don’t want to go any further... eup.”

“I’m sorry for touching you carelessly. But I really feel like the Count’s head will fall off if this continues.”

I later noticed that the hands of the maids handling my clothes were shaking.

As I closed my mouth and looked around, Remember, who had bitten the maids with a wave of his hand, approached me. As he adjusts the clothes the emperor gave him, he says something bordering on lament.

“These days, you often make the old man’s heart sink.”

“....”

Instead of responding, I looked into the mirror and looked the other way.

Red clothes with a design similar to a uniform.

I felt anxious that I might actually see blood on the way, but soon my stream of consciousness went somewhere else.

Red blood and... war.

Yes war.

“As expected, I will have to resign.”

A war between the human world and the demon world. It was obvious that I, caught in the middle, would be in trouble.

Up until now, we were just bickering with each other and seeing the passing, so we were able to endure, but from now on...

“Is that so? Now here’s the last one. “Put on this cloak.”

“Ah yes. Rather, my resignation letter....”

“If it were the Count’s resignation letter, it would probably not have been written in advance. Because this old man threw it all away. Would you like the mask to be red as well?”

“It seems strange. Just do what you normally do, wearing a white mask. Rather, you threw away all your resignation letters? Why... no, it doesn't work. “I'm going to write a new one, so get paper and pen right now....”

“The shirt is white, so it's not strange to have a white mask. Now, we are ready. Please go quickly.”

“Yes... no, Remember!”

Why do you keep interrupting me?

“sorry. But there is nothing we can do to protect the Count's head.”

“ ....”

I know, too. If you resign, you will actually die.

Even though I say I'll quit whenever I get the chance, I don't give up right away when I get rejected. I did that because I knew that if I sincerely insisted on resigning, the other person would kill me.

Regardless of the fact that the Emperor and the Demon King care about me, they are monarchs and I am well aware of my danger.

In short, the resignation story is just a statement of hope. It's almost like complaining... something like that.

‘Rather, if you accept it, you should be wary.’

I sighed. Anyway, I had to leave, so I picked up my bag and walked towards the door, but as if trying to lighten the mood, Remember opened the door and spoke to me.

“We have plenty of time. Why not stop by the top of the altar on the way?”

“Has Dan... dressed up?”

I remembered the man who had visited Deusa a little while ago and then left.

I wondered where they got the Deusa tea leaves, but was it really one of the items covered at the top? He has good skills too.

“Your name is Dan Top.”

“No, obviously... I think it started with teaching swordsmanship, but why did it end...” “

In the first place, talent is discovered by trying various things. Thanks to this, the count's finances are very wealthy.”

Originally, there was no shortage.

It feels strange that the person I brought in happened to be successful and is helping me. There is no special bond between him and me.

He followed me and I let him stay at the count's house. That was it.

‘Oh, I happened to make some investments.’

I got on the carriage. I felt a vibration as if Remembert, who had come along to guide me, told the driver of my destination, sat down across from me, and started off.

“But are you still going to carry that bag yourself?”

“yes.”

Anyone can see that it contains life forms that are not from the human world.

I desperately tried to avoid Remember’s gaze.

The top that arrived shortly afterwards was quite a spectacle.

To put it in a good way, it is informal. To put it in a bad way....

“Customer, our top always handles only the highest quality herbs. “It will be difficult if you insist like this.”

“Why is this like this? I’m a girl from the academy. “Do you think I have no eye for medicinal herbs?”

“Sir, can you guarantee that this herb is really ours?

“Hanging all your hands?”

Is this a gambling place...?

At the center of this chaos was Dan.

“Sangdan lord! They say the Jukhund Bridge has collapsed! What should I do? Lewece’s goods come in through that route...”

“Has the Bergen Bridge collapsed? “Change your route there.”

“Sangdan lord, this is the truth...no, please do something to the customer! “Speech doesn’t make sense!”

“There will be a pay cut later. “Let’s bring it inside first.”

I can feel Remember laughing next to me.

After observing the situation in silence for a moment, I slowly moved after Dan. Perhaps thanks to Remember, everyone recognized me, so the move was easy.

‘Are we here?’

I quietly put my ear to the door and concentrated.

“Look at this. I bought these from the top, but they are all in terrible condition. Please change it or give me my money back.”

“Turmeric, goji berry, dandelion, black pepper... they are all southern herbs. “There is no record of these being sold at once.”

“Because I bought it separately!”

There is no problem with listening.

“Well... even so, there are some parts that are a little suspicious.”

“Ha, do you have any proof? “Do you have any proof that I didn’t buy it here?”

“I am not a sick idiot. Come to think of it, there were quite a few people who were wary of our business, which was growing rapidly recently. “Aren’t you trying to bury it in the pasture before it gets bigger?”

“Ha ha ha ha ha. “I’m writing a novel.”

“great. I’ll bet my wrist that you didn’t buy your herbs here. “If you’re scared, just go back.”

The voice was relaxed. Dan continued.

“If you go back now, I won’t ask you anything. But if you continue to hold on and what you say turns out to be false, then the place you will return to will not be home, but heaven.”

Was he always that good at speaking? No, rather...

I focused on something else. No longer calling the other person a customer.

Dan had already made up his mind.

“Where is this guy selling drugs now?”

“The person who was so energetic has gone somewhere and only his long tongue remains. “Are you running late?”

“Run after me? Hahahahaha! Okay, I...”

“Now wait a minute!”

If this continues, someone is going to be in big trouble. I quickly opened the door and stormed inside.

Dan sees me and gets up from his seat. The customer, who looked at me to see something, also got up with a white face.

“Count!”

“Honorary Count De Deonhardt....”

“I’m sorry, but I was listening outside. Couldn’t it have been resolved with words?”

“We were just resolving it verbally.”

“that is?”

If that’s something you can solve with words, what about actions...?

As I stood there speechless, I heard Remember’s voice from the door.

“It looks like the customer is about to leave. Is it okay if I send you away?”

I don’t know how long it took to get there, but the customer was struggling in front of Remember, who had blocked the door.

Based on his personality, I thought he would push away at least one old man with force, but I was surprised.

The moment I thought that, I saw the customer’s shoulder. To be precise, Remember’s hand was pressing down on his shoulder.

“ ....”

“The deacon was there too. Please just send it to me. There are a lot of people like that these days. Looking at the count’s clothes, I don’t think this is your destination. Where are you going?”

“I want to participate in a hunting competition.”

“If it’s a hunting competition...”

Dan’s face, who had been thinking about something, brightened as if he had come up with an answer.

“I heard that you can also bring assistants to hunting competitions.”

“Yes, that’s true, but...”

I don’t plan on taking anyone with me. I have a bag containing plants from the demon world.

I’m planning to wear it on my body throughout the competition to prevent accidents while I’m not looking, but do I need to have someone nearby?

“Could you please take me as an assistant?”

But what should I do if he asks me a favor with eyes full of anticipation?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 101

101. Hunting Competition (2)

News has arrived that Deon Hart has returned.

The Duke, who was suspiciously wary of Deonhardt, had been receiving detailed reports of Deonhardt's movements ever since he heard the news.

They left about 3 hours and 30 minutes before the hunting competition began, stopped at the top of the den, took a man with them, and headed back to their destination.

'But why... aren't there any orders?'

Cruel's nerves frayed.

At this point, a normal order should have been given. An order to send someone, either a revolutionary soldier or an assassin.

Nevertheless, he was so quiet that he was so nervous that he watched the duke's every expression, but eventually he could not overcome the silence and slowly opened his mouth.

"Are you... not sending someone?"

The Duke took his eyes off the letter he was holding and looked at Cruel. After a short gap, a smile spread across his expressionless face.

“Yes, there is no need to send someone now. “Just a few more hours will lead to a situation where it will be much easier to kill and manipulate death, so why bother going to the trouble?”

Hunting competition.

Cruel’s eyes sank.

“It would be better to send them off a little more prepared by then.”

“ ....”

“In that sense, there is a place I would like you to visit.”

Even though the duke has finally moved, his tense nerves do not ease easily. As always, Cruel lowered his eyes and waited for further words.

***

In the end, we decided to go together.

I looked at Dan, who was sitting next to Remember across from the carriage, with wide eyes. Those black eyes are shining and looking at me.

‘...It’s burdensome....’

Should I have refused after all? But even Remember was urging him to take Dan with him. Even if that wasn’t the case, you said you were going to tell me about assistance as soon as you arrived.

Of course, I also did not go along with it and quietly expressed my intention to refuse.

[Dan's swordsmanship...]

[I've learned it to the point where I can use one hand!]

[That's right, Count. How about checking to what level you have risen to now?]

[....]

Damn.

I reflexively strengthened the hand holding the bag. Perhaps it was frustrating, but I heard a 'Geek' sound from inside.

Dan, who was looking at me, tilted his head.

"huh...? "Didn't you hear something just now?"

"I don't know."

"Gyeeeeeh...."

Boom!

I quickly opened the window. Surprised eyes turned to me.

"I think I'm hearing a strange noise outside."

"Ah... is that so?"

Dan nodded, as if he still had doubts, but agreed.

It's all good... Is it still too early to feel safe? You're snooping outside to find the source of the sound!

If this strange plant makes any noise even once more, it will be caught right away without being able to escape. I quickly called him.

“Ugh... how did the upper part get so big? “What on earth did you do?”

“Ah, we distributed various goods, mainly medicinal herbs and war materials.”

“War materials cannot be distributed unless the empire allows it...”

“When I told them that I was serving Honorary Count Hart, the administration took care of it.”

Did you sell my name?

This is a problem, but the administration that handled the matter is also problematic.

“If you were lying, why did you get so angry...”

“Ah! Of course, it wasn’t handled right away. “They asked me to come back in a week because they needed time to investigate the authenticity.”

If so, I’m glad.

The carriage stopped. Remember, who was watching us with happy eyes, checked out the window, opened the door and said.

“Im here.”

Remember got off first and Dan followed him. I was the last one to get up, hold Dan’s hand, and look up at the strangely quiet surroundings. Everyone was looking at me with surprised eyes.

“...?”

What’s wrong?

Puzzled, I followed their gaze for a moment and let out a short sigh inwardly.

‘...ah.’

ruined.

This wasn’t the Demon World.

I quietly let go of Dan’s hand and straightened up, pretending nothing had happened.

“....”

“....”

There is silence. At the same time, cold sweat broke out on my back.

Was this... a trap for me? Some kind of guided interrogation?

In the demon world, as long as you hold the outstretched hand, they do everything from start to finish, so it has become a habit. On the contrary, if I didn’t confront him, something more troublesome would happen, so I couldn’t refuse.

But why did he hold out his hand? Don’t you know this is an insult? What is Remember doing if he doesn’t resolve this situation...

‘...No, Remember. What is that frustrated expression? ‘Is it true that you taught me everything and then forgot it?’

I wanted to point it out right away, but due to the situation, I tried to keep my expression as if nothing had happened.

“step.”

“Yes, Count.”

A blank face as if he knew nothing.

Yeah, there’s no way he did that on purpose. I couldn’t say anything about something that wasn’t intentional, so I looked for the softest words possible.

Say something to explain that what you just did was wrong.

“...Did I look that unwell?”

The people you grab when getting off the carriage are usually children and women wearing cumbersome skirts.

It is an insult to a person to catch a grown adult who is not wearing a skirt and is not uncomfortable in any part of her body.

‘You look so weak that you can’t even control your body.’ It means degree.

‘It’s true that I’m weak...’

Usually, you can’t do this to me openly. After all, I am the ‘hero’ of the empire.

“...yes?”

Dan, who does not understand what he is saying, puts a question mark above his head.

For a moment, I thought about whether I should explain it more directly, but I felt that the attention of those around me was still focused on me, so I chose to cover him.

“You’re quick-witted. “I didn’t feel well today, perhaps because I was tired.”

Remember can point out mistakes later.

The first thing I need to do now is to hold his hand and wrap it around him so that I don’t feel funny.

As if he sensed that the situation was settled, he raised his head and gave a wink to Remember, who was preparing to return to the mansion, telling him to teach him well later.

The glances that had been passing by, pretending not to happen, quickly dispersed.

***

Rien Reiner, the leader of the Murderous Knights, who was waiting at the hunting ground here according to the crown prince’s orders, was astonished.

Dan made a big mistake. It probably wasn’t intentional.

Considering that he has a Southern appearance and is from a village far away in the mountain valley, the assumption that he made a mistake due to ignorance about this area is supported.

Even when receiving training, commoners would never escort someone, so they would have only scratched the surface and learned about this.

A person wearing a child's skirt reaches out to someone who is unwell. Well, just like that?

'I think the master probably knew that the curse had weakened his body and extended his hand...'

The consideration was good, but the other person was a 'hero'.

Even if he were an ordinary man, he would reach out to a hero when some people would consider it an insult and be offended.

This is an act that not only insults Deon Hardt but also tarnishes his reputation as a 'hero'.

'Usually ignorance is not a sin, but... it depends on the situation.'

In her judgment, this was a sin.

Even if the lord's face is tarnished, isn't it because he was insulted not by someone else but by a subordinate who brought him in personally?

However, the moment Deon obediently held Dan's hand and got off, Lien was impressed. To be precise, what he said afterward.

"You're quick-witted. "I didn't feel well today, perhaps because I was tired."

Dan tried to calm the situation by pretending like nothing was wrong, holding hands and getting off, and directly mentioning that he wasn't feeling well.

The tense atmosphere, knowingly or unknowingly, is relaxed.

How could you react so kindly in a situation where everyone would understand that you just slapped away the outstretched hand and got angry?

Lien gave a triumphant expression to the quietly admiring imperial knights.

‘He is our lord.’

Well, now that the owner has arrived, I have to greet him.

I turned my head and checked the wild dogs. Where did they get from telling them to be quiet? They were slowly approaching the Imperial Knights standing nearby with mischievous looks on their faces.

Blood appeared on Lien’s neck.

“Why don’t you come here right now?!”

And in a place where Lien’s eyes can’t reach.

There was Dan quietly looking at Deon with an unknown expression.

***

‘Why are you here...?’

These were the words that filled my throat as soon as I first encountered the murderous knights.

Somehow, I felt that it was a simple start that did not fit with Remember’s tendency to always make minimal preparations whenever he went to the imperial palace.

Aside from the fact that the coachman and Dan joined in the middle, it was a humble start with only a few escorts. That can't be possible.

'It was all because I was here.'

I see the murderous knights. Riendo is scolding them for another accident.

Lien, who was angry with a blood clot in his neck, raises his head as if he belatedly realizes the situation. Her face brightened as she found me without difficulty.

"Master, are you here?"

"yes. "It's been a while, Lord Lien."

"You must be tired from the long journey, but are you feeling okay? "Please give me your luggage."

"This bag is fine. I will take it. "I feel fine... a little tired, but not too bad."

My physical condition is the same as usual, but let's just pretend I'm tired today.

"But..."

I trailed off and looked around. I've been thinking about this for a while... but there's something strange about it.

Why does it seem like we are the only ones? Isn't there a hunting competition today? Seeing that the Imperial Knights are there, I don't think it's an illusion... Could it be that it's already over?

"Are there no other people?"

“yes? “Didn’t you know?”

“yes?”

what. I think I’ve been in this situation before.

When was it... Ah, yes, it must have been when I had just returned from the demon world and headed to the imperial palace where the banquet was being held without knowing anything.

‘Everyone else knows, but I don’t...’

Just as my expression became subtle, I heard a familiar voice from behind.

“I called early because I was embarrassed. “It must have been written on the invitation, but I didn’t know about it?”

“His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hua.”

“It’s been a while, Count.”

The crown prince smiles and waves. I hastily bowed down.

“Glory to the Empire. God Deonhardt beholds the Empire of the Future.”

If I had known it would be like this because it was written on the invitation, I should have read it.

I thought what the emperor said would be enough. I didn’t think there was a need to bother reading things like invitations and times since Remember would take care of it without me having to worry about it.

Even so, I was so fed up with type after doing paperwork over the past few days that I didn’t want to read type again.

“okay. I called you early because I had something to ask, but I apologize if I was offended. “I’m sorry.”

“Oh no. I’m just a little embarrassed, so there’s nothing to apologize for. What would you like to ask more than that?”

The crown prince adjusted his expression as if he had been waiting.

The golden eye glances towards the murderous knights and then looks at me again. His eyes narrowed as if he was assessing something, and his cautious voice continued.

“Do you know what we mainly hunt for in the hunting competition that will be held soon?”

“I heard it’s a demon monster.”

I almost said it was a monster.

“that’s right. But you never know what might happen if you just hold a hunting competition. So, for safety’s sake, we plan to first wipe out the monsters and hold a hunting competition with the remaining remnants...”

“That’s a great idea.”

“I appreciate compliments. Anyway, what I want to ask is this. “I’m planning to bring in the Imperial Knights and the Murderous Knights here. Is that okay?”

“...Do you mean the Murderous Knights...?”

I wouldn’t be able to handle it.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 102

102. Hunting Competition (3)

"Yes, while you were out on a mission, they destroyed the building again. "It's a price, but I think I still have to get permission from the owner."

"...."

"Of course, it's not compulsory, so if you don't like it, I'll just use the Imperial Knights to handle the matter."

The crown prince's attitude became cautious, as if he had interpreted my decaying expression differently.

It's not because of that... these bastards caused an accident again? Destroy the building?!

Damn you guys.

A voice as cold as the expression came out.

"Use it to your heart's content."

"Okay... if you don't like it, there's nothing we can do... hmm?"

"I don't know if this will be able to repay all of their atrocities. I am grateful for Your Majesty's generosity and gladly offer up my leadership. "You can use it as much as you want."

You can just take it and throw it away.

The crown prince's expression changed subtly. He was holding a sword and arguing with the members of the Imperial Knights. He looked back at the mad dogs being dragged away by Lien, then turned his head again and smiled at me, pretending not to have seen anything.

"What are you talking about? The whole world knows that you are the only one who can control them. "You're making a joke out of it."

"yes?"

"It must have been quite a hassle, but thank you, Count, for willingly agreeing to join us."

So... those crazy dogs and I are in the same group, right?

Damn it.

....

I thought while riding a horse.

'Oh, my butt hurts.'

Considering this vast forest, it is natural to ride a horse, but even that is not easy for a weak body. The good news is that I didn't have to step forward.

'No, no. 'I have to get hurt, but it doesn't work if I don't come forward, right?'

I got hurt and have to go home!

That was the decision I made when I had to be tied up with the crazy dogs and dragged away.

You can't avoid it, so you'll get hurt and fall out!

If you wipe out the monsters in the first round like now, a hunting competition will be held. Then I should participate too. After suffering and exhaustion there, you may have to face the emperor.

In that case, it would be better to get hurt here and go home.

If I were to bleed, I wouldn't have to go through the complicated process, but it's not something I want to do...

'I'm hurt. 'You'll definitely get hurt!'

His eyes sparkled with enthusiasm.

"Hey Count, look at his eyes."

"Wow... that's a little scary... are you angry?"

"Isn't it because you've never been able to use a sword on a monster?"

"It's a bit creepy... Isn't that what makes you roll your eyes?"

It seemed like people around him were whispering something, but it didn't sound like he was overly nervous.

I chose the former between the fleeting physical pain and the continuous mental pain, and made up my mind to move forward...

'Why can I already see the end?'

The subjugation has now reached its end.

I blinked as I looked blankly at the knights preparing for what seemed to be their last battle.

“...Lord Lien.”

“Yes, my lord.”

“Why are you so good at escorting...”

“That’s too much praise.”

No, just do it in moderation. Don’t be proud.

All the way here, Lien did not allow a single monster to reach me.

Ah, it looks like my remarks just made Lien angry. A solemn determination appeared in her eyes.

‘don’t do it. ‘I don’t know what it is, but stop.’

“I will make sure that my lord will never draw his sword in this battle either.”

“Ah...”

“Please watch.”

“No... there is no need to go that far... I should try using the weapon once...”

“I may not be trustworthy in your eyes. Still, I can do this much, so please believe me.”

“ .... ”

Shibure.

At this point, confusion arises. Yes, I will definitely come forward and hurt you.

Lord Lien walks away from me to check on the mad dogs. As I looked at her back, I started shaking my head with impatience.

In most cases, they won't even give you a chance to face monsters. Looking at Sir Lien's current state, it seems difficult to see even a single hair of the monster.

"Count."

"...If it doesn't work out, you can pinch the horse's butt and fall off the horse..."

"Count?"

"Yes? step?"

"Yes, Count. "No, no."

Dan, who was looking at me with a complicated expression, quickly shook his head and spoke.

I think it's because I feel like I'm deliberately ignoring it because I think I'll get tired if I find out.

Dan nodded his head with an expression that told him to say something quickly, but his expression changed as if he wanted to get to the point. I saw something glancing at me in my field of vision.

"I was told that my behavior a while ago was seriously rude."

“ah.”

Did you hold out your hand when you got off the carriage?

It seems that Remember explained it well. I wish I knew by now. He smiled and waved his hand.

“What about something that has already happened?”

“But...”

Once you understand the meaning, there is no way you can move on with ease.

Dan glances at my face. A cautious voice continued as if he was watching.

“Are you... not angry?”

“So, it’s already passed...”

I was about to answer casually, but then stopped. My eyes narrowed.

...It feels like he’s expecting me to get angry, but maybe I’m mistaken.

I looked at him in silence, feeling uncomfortable. When there is no immediate answer, he flinches and rolls his eyes.

The black eyes looked into my eyes, examined my expression, and then turned back to the floor. It looked like someone was watching me, but it seemed like they were measuring something, so I took a little more time and then slowly opened my mouth.

“You...”

“You’re a monster!!”

The remarks that followed were drowned out by shouting from one side.

My homecoming certificate! Dan is not important right now. I turned my head around to see where the shout came from.

One, two, three people who would become the perfect homecoming certificate that no one could refute... Anyway, they were rushing in.

‘...It’s a bit much, though.’

Well, it’s still not comparable to the Demon World.

The reason they came over here in the first place was because they were so numerous that they were pushed out to the human world. Those who were pushed out were probably those who were driven out because they were weak even among monsters.

This means that it is the largest group of monsters I have encountered so far, but it is not at a threatening level.

Trusting this information and trustworthy knights, I quietly drew my dagger. If you pretend to do it in moderation, you end up getting injured and get out.

As I took a step forward with my horse, a loud shout right next to me shook my eardrums.

“Imperial Knights ready for battle! “Everyone line up!”

“!”

What a surprise. I reflexively grabbed the dagger that I almost lost.

At the leader's shout, there was random movement. An exclamation of exclamation suddenly burst out.

Wow that's cool. I've already seen it several times on my way here, but it's still cool to see it again. Can't our kids do that?

"The Lofty Knights...."

"Wow!!"

"The one with horns is mine!"

"...Okay, do whatever you want."

Lien's liberated voice was heard.

Well, it can't be possible either. I laughed in vain as I saw the wild dogs rushing towards me in large groups. I really had vain hopes.

'Then now I too...'

I scanned the situation with my eyes and chose an appropriate person to glare at.

The dagger in my hand spins, and my thumb stretches and folds as if to use the handle.

As soon as I started moving my horse without realizing the hand signals that had become a habit, I heard a familiar voice.

"Milan!!"

Kletter is pointing his finger at me and blaming Milan.

"Stop the Count!"

“...Yes?!”

***

Sometimes I think like that.

How could a vanguard made up of poor people and commoners who could not even master the meager swordsmanship survive the eight-year war? Was simply going on a rampage really enough?

‘No way.’

No matter how rampant the sheep is, if the opponent is a tiger, that is the end.

If you find it annoying and annoying to deal with and turn your attention elsewhere, it’s fortunate, but if not, you’ll die like a fly.

There were quite a few tigers on the battlefield, and there were many moments when we had to face them. At times like that, they had to rely on the help of their leader, Deon Hardt, to survive.

‘To be exact... through sacrifice.’

Cleter, a member of the Murderous Knights, laughed bitterly as he rolled words in his mouth that were so harsh that they seemed like they would cut him.

Their captain, now an honorary count, is surprisingly capable of accurately assessing his own physical condition. It means accurately understanding the physical ‘limits’ of my body.

Considering that other people don't even understand the state of their bodies and roll until they break down or give up before reaching their limit, it was clear that this was also an incredible talent.

Deon Hardt applied this talent in a slightly twisted way.

'Knowing my physical limits means I can cross that line at any time if I want to.'

With just one hidden shot to kill an overwhelming enemy.

In order to catch the opponent off-guard and kill them in an instant, they instantly surpass the speed that their legs can produce and the limit of the power that their arms can produce. Afterwards, the bones and muscles were damaged and a considerable recovery period was needed.

Cleter thought it was like a bee attack.

Once you attack with all your might, you become completely defenseless.

'Of course, recovery over time is different.'

Ah, it can be said that being able to endure the poison and pretend like nothing is wrong is also different.

Of course, it is impossible to attack or defend at all.

'But that!'

Are you just trying to use it to subdue monsters?!

"under."

It's so absurd that I can't even laugh.

Meanwhile, Milan, who was oblivious, seemed to be trying to repeat without even thinking, and then tilted his head.

“What the Count said... huh? “Not ‘take care of it’?”

“Shut up and stop me!”

Of course, the meaning of Deon Hardt’s hand signal was ‘please take care of it’, but no matter how much you think about it, that’s not true.

Is it necessary for the Count’s body to be damaged in a non-emergency situation?

“Well... then... stop the Count!”

“Stop the Count!”

“Stop the Count!”

Those who heard Milan’s voice repeat it and move, and others who heard that voice repeat it again. It took no time for the order to reach all members.

“What are you doing, you bastards...!”

“No, Count!”

“I don’t know what it is, but I can’t!”

“Let go, you bastards! “I’m going home!”

Cleter, who was watching Deon struggling while being held by the members, quietly breathed a sigh of relief.

I’m glad that hand signals have become a habit for both him and me. Otherwise, it would have been a mess by now.

Deon Hardt mainly uses hand signals on the battlefield. Because of this, Cleter, who was the most calm, took on the role of observing and reporting his hand signals.

The hand signal from a little while ago means, 'I will use that, so please take care of me as I will be defenseless.'

"What is this...."

"Haha...."

Cleter smiled awkwardly at Lien, who had a puzzled expression, and was shocked as he looked back at the subjugation, which was completed without any major problems, apart from the chaotic scene.

Dan's face, distorted with anger and irritation, looked fiercely at Soran.

***

The first round of subjugation is over. Now all that remains is the hunting competition.

I haven't done anything, but I'm exhausted. I crossed the outdoor social hall with a tired face. Every time I passed by, noble ladies and ladies covered their mouths with fans and whispered, but I didn't want to pay any attention to them, so I ignored them.

tired. I need to go into the tent, even just for a little while.

"Master, are you trying to come in?"

"Yes, Lord Rien. "Take care of the situation appropriately and tie them up well so they don't cause any accidents."

"All right. "I will let you know when His Royal Highness the Crown Prince gives his opening speech."

"And Dan..."

"Yes."

"You're free until the hunting competition, so do whatever you want. ... Don't follow me."

"...Yes...."

Dan stopped following me. His face looked a little glum, but he waved his hand away and came inside.

I put the heavy and cumbersome bag on the table, ordered outside to not let anyone in, and carefully took out the flower pot. When I faced that procrastination, I started to sigh.

"How can I really handle this?..."

Do I have to keep taking care of it like this until I return to the demon world?

However, if I participate in the hunting competition like this, I will have to go with Dan... won't I get caught?

"I want to go home..."

He lamented the twisted situation and poked the strange creature with his finger. He didn't seem to like it, so he wrapped a leaf around my finger and broke it.

"Ugh, this crazy bastard...! Let go. Won't you let go?!"

"Count? What's going on!"

“Don’t come in!”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 103

103. Hunting Competition (4)

I barely got my finger out and stopped the movement that seemed like it was going to come in at any moment. I carefully wrapped my throbbing finger.

Damn it. Look at my red, swollen fingers. You handed me such a dangerous plant. Hien, you damn bastard...!

Meanwhile, the guy who pointed my swollen finger towards the stem rolled up a leaf and lifted it up, wondering what he was so proud of. My blood pressure soared at the sight of the thumbs up.

"What did you do well...!"

"Gyeeek."

"Don't make a sound... huh? "Are you going to use this as an excuse to leave?"

"Okay."

An even quieter answer came back. My expression became subtle.

No... I'm grateful, but I still have the dignity of a hero. There's no way I could go home with just a finger injury.

Rather than that, is it because you really care about me?
Aren't you just annoyed because I keep poking you?

It seemed like it was busy outside, but in the end, it seemed like the noise inside couldn't be ignored. Her voice was heard along with urgent footsteps, as if she was bringing Lien with her.

"My lord! I heard there was some trouble! "Can I come in?"

"Now wait a minute! It's not possible! please wait for a moment!"

"...."

Damn it. I told you not to come in, so why are you bringing Lien?

I hurriedly stuffed the flower pot into my bag.

It may not have been the answer I was expecting, but there was silence for a while, and as I was struggling with the door of my bag that wouldn't lock properly, the solemn voice came back.

"It is true that there is a problem. "I'm going in."

"!"

I haven't fully locked my bag yet!

...let's just put it in the corner. I quickly pushed the bag with my foot. It was almost at the same time that the cloth covering the entrance was removed.

Lien strides in with his sword drawn, opens his eyes sharply, and looks around the inside. After confirming that there was nothing wrong, her eyes fell on me as I stood awkwardly covering my bag.

“Are you okay?”

“Yes, yes....”

“My lord, you always answered like that. “I won’t believe it.”

If that’s the case, why did you ask?

Unrelenting eyes scan me thoroughly. His gaze, which had been examining me with the intention of tearing out every strand of hair, finally landed on my slightly swollen fingers.

Her expression turned grim.

“After all, an assassination attempt!”

“Why does this have anything to do with an assassination attempt! “It’s just a sprain!”

“If it had been nothing special, you wouldn’t have rushed to stop the guard or me trying to come in! “There must have been an assassin!”

“....”

I have nothing to say...

I couldn’t say I did it because I had something to hide, so I kept my mouth shut, and a confident voice continued as if I had accepted it as an affirmation.

“I understand your desire to resolve this quietly, but in the first place, the sentry and I exist to protect our lord. “It will be difficult if you keep trying to hide it like this.”

“....”

“I heard that one of the types of assassination involves stabbing a person with a needle dipped in poison. “I’ll call a doctor right away.”

“No wait... wait a minute...!”

“Don’t stop me! Isn’t your finger this red and swollen already? “We need to treat it before the poison spreads further!”

What are you scared of? It’s like a runaway carriage!

Even if it’s embarrassing, I can never let you call a doctor. I stretched out my hand to catch Lien, who seemed to be leaving at any moment. The large hand of a man with thick joints that was completely different from hers was grabbed.

...huh?

“Did you say poison?!”

When did you come in? No, before that, can you please let go of my hand?

Cleter seemed to have heard Lien’s cries from outside and stormed in. I was suddenly grabbed by the hand and shoulder and was shaking helplessly as he moved, but I came to my senses late and had rotten eyes.

“What if they come in without permission...”

“Where are you?” Where were you poisoned? Could it be poisonous?!”

“No....”

“Then where is it!”

“Nowhere...”

“Cleter. I’ll punish you for your rudeness later. “Bring a doctor right away.”

“All right!”

No! Stop now!

I quickly caught up with Cleter who was trying to run away at any moment. But this guy just moves? For your information, I still have him.

As his body stretched and seemed to fall to the floor due to his movements, Cleter, who was so embarrassed, forgot that he was going to leave and hurriedly helped me up.

“Why are you stopping me?”

“It’s not poison. “Lord Lien just misunderstood.”

He blinked, then let out a deep sigh, as if relieved, and flopped down on the floor. Tangled! At the same time, I also fell down.

You bastard... I lifted my head while rubbing my nose and still heard a voice full of doubt.

“Then why are your fingers swollen?”

Lien was standing with his arms crossed, looking at me with suspicious eyes.

“I said it was sprained.”

“So what I’m saying is, how did you end up like that?”

“...Do I even have to tell you that?”

You just sprained your finger?

Even if my mouth is torn, I cannot say that I was harmed by a plant. Because it's dangerous? No, I'm embarrassed.

Lien also cleared his throat and shook his head, probably because he didn't think it was necessary to say that.

“no. “I'm glad it's not poison.”

“Yes... Lord Rien.”

“yes?”

Eyes full of doubts turn to me.

I'm just throwing this out because it came to mind after seeing her. I blurted out the words indifferently.

“I want to go home.”

“Oh, I heard from the deacon that you must be tired due to a lot of paperwork. It's not possible.”

“...?”

As expected, he is resolute.

No, isn't the back and forth of words more strange than that?

“Your Majesty is coming too, but you can't go back first, right? “If the reason is that you don't want to participate in the hunting competition, you don't have to force yourself to catch monsters, so just stay in your seat...”

Her eyes inadvertently raised her head and met mine.

She pauses, uncrosses her arms and straightens her posture. His expression, which had relaxed slightly, became stiff again as if it had never happened before.

“Master, would you please raise your head?”

“?”

“Cleter. Lift your head, lord. “Make it look good to me.”

“Do you... mean like this?”

Cleter grabbed my chin and lifted it towards Lien.

“Master, would you please remove your hand?”

“....”

“Cleter.”

“yes.”

shit. Cleter grabbed my hand that was covering his lower body and lowered it.

The warm liquid that was flowing under my nose ran down to my chin, condensed, and dripped onto the floor.

“You’re having a nosebleed!”

“Oh... was it a nosebleed?”

Me again. I thought it was a runny nose and tried desperately to hide it.

...No wait. Nosebleed?! Why at this timing?

I raised my trembling eyes and looked at Lien. Sure enough, there was fire in her eyes.

“Of course it’s poison...!”

“no! “I fell down because of this bastard earlier...!”

“When did I... ah ah?!”

Cleter, who had been jumping up and down reflexively, stopped as if he remembered something. It was clearly visible that the pupils were shaking.

Yes, while he was helping me, he felt relieved and sat down. Thanks to you, I also fell down.

Shall I drag you along? I shook my head excitedly and called out to Sir Lien, who asked with his eyes. Because I covered my nose with a handkerchief, I made a slight nasal noise.

“Cleter.”

“Yes... Count...”

“Why did you come?”

You have to listen to the reason and bring it out.

There was no way that this guy who was supposed to be flirting with crazy dogs some distance away from here happened to be in front of this tent by chance.

Cleter seemed to belatedly remember the purpose of his visit and straightened his posture with a short exclamation of ‘Ah’. I was reflected in his serious eyes.

“I heard that they are taking Dan as an assistant to the hunting competition.”

“It did.”

“Could you please take at least one more person? “I’m a little nervous about being alone.”

“Why...?”

The maximum number of assistants that can be taken to a hunting competition is four. Oh, since only the royal family can make four, I guess it’s three to be exact.

I don’t have any particularly passionate plans to catch monsters, so any further assistance would be a luxury... At first, I was planning on participating alone without a dagger.

Cleter spoke hastily, as if his expression showed that he was not very moved.

“Dan’s eyes look a little suspicious.”

“what?”

“During the subjugation a little while ago... the way you looked at the Count...”

“...?”

“...Um...So... passionate irritation? Creeping doubts? Burning anger?”

What kind of spell are you memorizing?

“Anyway, it was very suspicious.”

“Yes... that’s right... then Lord Lien.”

Pull it out.

Lien, who was standing still, walked forward and grabbed Cleter's arm.

I just had to catch it.

"Count Bae?"

"...Lord Lien? "Why don't you hurry up and drag him away..."

"I don't know anything else, but I agree with the opinion that we should bring another assistant."

I will go. The firm eyes were speaking.

...I appreciate your concern for me, but... it can't go any further than this.

I've been swayed like this once or twice. I am also a person with some ability to learn.

I rolled my eyes to avoid the burdensome gaze.

"It's not possible."

Not even because of the strange creature in the bag.

What catches me more than anything is her personality. Dan doesn't know, but it seems like the worst situation imaginable will unfold the moment he gets caught by her.

After confirming that the nosebleed had stopped, I folded the handkerchief, put it in my pocket, and quietly grabbed my bag.

"Get out. "I'm going out too."

"Master?"

“It’s not possible. “No way.”

“Count?”

“no. “It’s my heart.”

“Is the Count young? “Why are you going out of your way without any valid reason?”

Oh, I don’t know. no. I said no. Originally, I was going to go alone.

If I’m going to be pressured like this here, I’d rather just go outside. He came out, pushing the backs of the two humans.

And I regretted it.

“Why is an honorary count called ‘Count’... Tsk.”

What happened to my luck?

As soon as I came out, there was a fight. I looked at the person arguing with me with a bit of admiration.

Since he proudly boasts about his status as ‘Earl’, he must be a person with a title. Did you recently become the head of the family? He’s very young.

But it looks very mean. As I stared at the face that seemed to have put forth all its effort to express its shining personality, Cleter, who could not help but notice the prolonged silence, came forward.

“Excuse me, but may I ask who you are?”

“Get out of the way. “He is not someone like you who would dare to talk to me.”

and.

If the owner is unlucky, then the attendant is also unlucky.

Cletor closed his mouth and grinned.

‘Hey... Hey, take your hand off the sword. hurry.’

No matter how annoyed you are, what if you put your hand on the sword? What should I do if he is a noble whose status I cannot protect?

I looked at him with tired eyes and then found Lien. This guy must have been watching Cletor put his hand on the sword and didn’t stop him...

‘Uh... right... I guess we tried to draw the sword together...’

Then, the man’s words and actions were ‘Master’. It touched on her ‘chivalry’ related to.

Still, you must not draw your sword. Know who your opponent is.

I blocked the two people with a wave of my hand and quietly looked at the arrogant man.

What did you say earlier? Oh yeah. I said, ‘Why is an honorary count called ‘Count’?’ Honestly, I don’t have anything to say either.

‘It’s not wrong.’

My official title as ‘Honorary Count’ is ‘Honorary Count Hart.’ It’s right to call it that to prevent unnecessary confusion.

however.

“Who are you...?”

Who are you to start a fight like this?

The man who made eye contact with me trembled and answered in a raised voice. The shout came back, more of an attempt to hide fear rather than an arrogance.

“This is the ‘real’ Count Hart! “I’m different from a fake like you!”

huh?

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

Silence fell.

In the quiet space, I slowly blinked.

What did I just hear? Let’s think again.

Um... again.

again. Again. Again.

....

“...Aha.”

At that moment, the man in front of me blushed and took a step back.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 104

104. Hunting Competition (5)

Cruel said he refused the earldom like that, but in the end, the position was given to an unheard-of collateral bastard like that.

'There was a collateral system. If I, a direct relative, didn't know, I would almost be like a stranger.'

You've managed to become the head of the family.

Well, it wasn't unexpected at all. They say that the Hart family was 'extinct', but since there were two direct descendants bearing the Hart family name alive, they were not left out of the noble lineage, and 'at that time', all the vassals were not dead, so they were in a state where they could make a comeback.

...Can this really be called a 'resurgence'?

I laughed. My facial expression right now is probably one corner of my mouth turned up. I couldn't even see the sidekick stammering about how dare you laugh at me, building up your pride.

I just closed my eyes, smiled, and spoke sincerely.

"That's right."

“....”

“Congratulations.”

Even if they do not have titles, the official heroes of the empire are basically respected. It cannot be compared to a specific title because the area is completely different, but if the emperor cares about it, cares for it, and even gives it a maintenance fee on a regular basis, then everything is said.

Treating a hero like that so rudely? Needless to say, he is an idiot.

There's no way this idiot could have sat down as the head of the family on his own, and it's probably because the greedy vassals of the Hart family broke the idiot who was easy to get hold of and manipulate.

So I laughed.

The Hart family collapses like this.

I was so happy.

***

“Why is an honorary count called ‘Count’... Tsk.”

When those words were heard, the nobles quietly took a breath. I don't know why I bother to argue with him. Does that man even know that he is bringing on his own anger?

Why is ‘Honorary Count Hart’ called ‘Count Hart’? Isn't it a sign of respect?

This is the second time that the title ‘Honorary Count’ has been so long.

Deonhardt is a hero of the empire, the emperor's beloved sword, and a margrave with territory bordering the border. That was enough of a reason.

The nobles, who did not want to offend a man with various scary nicknames by calling him an 'honorary count', called Deonhardt 'the count' without any complaints.

"Who is that man?"

"This is a guy I see often in social circles these days... but I'm not really interested in him, so I'm not sure."

"Well... looking at your behavior, I don't really want to be interested in it because it's so shallow. Could it be a noble from a distant region?"

"well. I don't know who it is, but it's stupid. "Do I really want to see blood?"

The opponent is the vampire count, the master of the murderers.

The nobles' attention was focused on the small commotion.

Deon Hardt, who was quietly looking at the arrogant man who was not shaken by the sudden argument, asked a question softly. When asked about his identity, the identity of the man no one was interested in was revealed.

[The 'real' Count Hart.]

Only then were the nobles able to find out what was going on.

Since the direct descendants of the Count Hart family, Cruel Hart and Deon Hart, were not interested in the family, a collateral line took their place.

‘Well...’

‘The fact that that foolish man became the head of the family means that the vassals are also in the same boat.’

‘Even if that man who trusts his precious position and runs wild is annoyed and wants to take it back, it is too late to do so now...’ It will be quite a hardship.

There was interest in their eyes.

How will that cruel hero react? Are you getting angry? Or will they go further and claim to have suffered a hardship and try to take that position away? Either that or he might draw his sword.

However, contrary to expectations, Deonhardt was not angry. He said with a bright smile, even folding his eyes as if it was just ridiculous.

“That’s right.”

“ .... ”

“Congratulations.”

It was an attitude of blatant disregard.

The ‘real’ Count Hart’s face turns bright red. He was approaching with great strides, as if he would explode with anger at any moment, but then he saw something, became astonished, and retreated.

“You... that...”

“...?”

The nobles who were watching the situation exchanged puzzled looks.

Deon Hardt doesn't seem to have done anything yet, but the finger pointing at him is trembling.

The foolish nobleman's spirit, which had been soaring high in the sky, died. His eyes fluttered endlessly, but the moment Deonhardt took a step closer, he turned around and disappeared.

There was a dull silence.

“...What is it?”

“Couldn't Honorary Count Hart have done something?”

“But he didn't do anything.”

“Perhaps... I was overcome by momentum? “There is something called the spirit of a hero who stirs up the battlefield.”

“Oh, I guess that's right. To chase the opponent away with just momentum...”

They were so absorbed in their own speculations that they had pushed Deonhardt out of their field of vision and didn't even see him.

Deon Hardt shaking a bug off his shoulder. And shuddering and muttering something.

***

“Ugh, that's gross. “What kind of bug is this big?”

Thanks to my war experience, I am immune to bugs, but I am not so squeamish that I wear something like this on my shoulder.

I expressed my gratitude to the guy who was arguing with me and shook my shoulders again.

‘Anyway, it looks like he also wanted to participate in the hunting competition... Is that possible?’

With that mentality?

A face that was contemplative of a bug came to mind.

It looks like he grew up quite well, but he wants to hunt monsters?

Even though they were initially cleaned up and are weak enough to be pushed out from the demon world to the human world, they are still monsters. There was no way a guy like that could easily catch him.

‘...Well, I don’t need to worry about it. If you die, you die.’

The thought stopped there. I fixed my head on the podium when I heard a call from His Majesty the Crown Prince to say something.

While the nobles bow their heads, the crown prince walks gracefully and climbs onto the stage. Finally, the word was given to me to raise my head.

....

Don’t you want the competition to start sooner?...

I scanned the scene unfolding in front of me with rotten eyes. A pink, passionate atmosphere was coming from all directions.

“Lord Lien.”

“Yes, my lord.”

“My lord, you are going to a competition and you don’t have a handkerchief?”

“yes. “I have no doubt that my lord will win even without any of those things.”

Oh yeah...

the words ‘even if you don’t have any of those things’ pierce my heart... but I’m still thankful...

“Mad dogs... what about the knights?”

“Do we have such a thing?”

“Even if I have it, I can’t give it to you. “I don’t want to cause unnecessary misunderstandings.”

shit. Everything goes out.

He motioned for the knights to go and leaned against a wall in a corner out of sight. Are there 8 minutes left until the competition starts? I think it will be the longest 8 minutes in the world.

The crown prince’s speech, which seemed like it would be a long speech, as usual for those in power, ended short. I hope he can enjoy it without any major injuries, I think he meant something like that.

‘Maybe it’s because you’re young, but you have good sense. The shorter the speech, the better.’

The problem was next.

10 minutes to give a ribbon or handkerchief to your lover, family member, or close friend!

A high-pitched laugh is heard, like a lark chirping. You can also hear the sound of a brief kiss being exchanged. How are you? Did they just kiss and fall asleep?

‘Fuck.’

Give a ribbon to someone you love as a lover, and a handkerchief to someone who simply prays for their safe return without any such emotions.

Since the opponents are nobles of the empire who were trained under the tyrant emperor, hunting monsters is inherently dangerous and involves risking one’s life. Therefore, even though it was a hunting competition, there was no sense of discomfort when handkerchiefs were passed around just like when going out to the battlefield.

Of course, I didn’t receive the handkerchief that everyone else received.

“I want to go home....”

“No.”

I know, I know. I’ve heard enough. Your Majesty is coming, but you can’t be left out in the middle of it. So I’m trying to go home.

Meeting with the Emperor. The interview that follows there. And the drifting clouds of war.

‘...’

I rolled my eyes.

I can predict to some extent what the emperor will say when he meets me face to face. That it would be an order that would cause me trouble.

It is not a war with another kingdom, but a war between the human world... no, a war between the empire and the demon world.

‘Knowing everything.’

He clicked his tongue lowly.

“As expected, I’m resigning...”

“Yes?! Are you saying you’re going to resign because you didn’t get a handkerchief?!”

“no. “It’s not like that, so speak softly.”

I hate war. I don’t even want to participate in the war. Especially since this war is a war against the demon world.

...No, let’s leave out the words ‘especially’ and ‘especially’.

‘I don’t like it because I’m afraid I’ll explode in a whale fight, so it’s just an excuse.’

I just haven’t escaped the nightmare of war yet.

I became conscious of the weight of the bag slung over my shoulder. I lifted my gaze from the floor and faced Lien.

“Lord Lien.”

“Yes, my lord.”

“Did you... participate in the Eight Years’ War?”

“yes?”

Perhaps it was an unexpected question, but the puzzled voice returned for a moment and said,

“No. “My brother fought in the eight-year war.”

“okay. “Then, if another big war breaks out, will Lord Lien’s brother be involved in the war as well?”

Sir Lien, a knight, participates in the war separately as the Lien Guard?

The emperor would be very pleased...

“No. never.”

“?”

Lien’s face was stiff as she said that.

“At that time, I was not a knight, so I had no choice, but not anymore.”

“ ....”

“My brother will never have to go to war again.”

“What...”

I quickly stopped what I was about to ask if there was something going on. This is my first time experiencing a situation like this.

Have I ever had an interest in Leen Reiner outside of work?

To me, she is a capable paratrooper sent directly by the emperor, a trainer of mad dogs, and a knight with a spirit of chivalry that is rigid and inflexible, bordering on standard.

Thinking was fast.

‘Let’s not ask questions.’

I happened to have a relationship between a lord and a knight, but I can’t afford to pay attention to others when I can’t even take care of myself.

There is no need to ask questions and find out about her private areas...

“My brother is weak.”

“Uh...”

You don’t have to say it.

“Originally, I wanted to fight in the eight-year war, but my parents cared so much for me that my brother went to war instead. I am better at using a sword and have better physical strength, but why should my brother, who has a weak body...” “

....”

“That’s why I became a knight. “If I become a knight, my parents won’t be able to object.”

Because the things that were put forward as reasons for opposition will be torn to pieces.

“So your brother will not participate in the war. “Because I am there.”

“...This sounds very similar to someone I know.”

Although the ending was different.

I turned my head. I see people carefully checking their weapons and getting on their horses. I also got on the horse that Dan was leading.

The sweet time is over. Now it was time for the hunting competition.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 105

105. Hunting Competition (6)

[Deon Hardt hates places with a lot of people.]

[Even in hunting competitions, he will probably move to a place with fewer people and less people.]

[We will install a crossbow. I'm going to put Deon Hardt there.]

[Isn't it time to put an end to that tough life?]

Takkak. Just right.

Chess pieces go back and forth. The thick, bony fingers stretched out comfortably grabbed the pieces of both sides and moved them alternately.

Since the duke is actively involved, there is nothing we can do about it. Never mind. Now is not the time to think about that.

'Did you say that the frequency of hemoptysis in the mother of the leader of the revolutionary army increased?'

Just right.

The black king appears in front of the enemy with only a few guards.

‘The leader still doesn’t know that fact.’

Takkak.

The white camp paid attention to the black king.

‘I’ll find out soon enough. Should we ask for closer surveillance?’

Just right. Meanwhile, a secret movement occurred in the black camp.

‘More than that, hemoptysis. It’s hemoptysis...’

My younger brother Deon Hart also often suffered from hemoptysis.

The hand that was moving the words suddenly stopped. Cruel, who seemed to be unable to concentrate, was holding a black bishop between his fingers and lowered his green eyes as if lost in thought.

‘The duke knows Deonhardt well.’

I prepared for the hunt well and thoroughly prepared.

‘On the other hand, Deonhardt does not know the duke.’

He went to the hunting competition without any preparation, not even knowing that the duke was targeting him.

A well-prepared hunter and a hunter who knows nothing.

The result came to mind naturally.

[How can a person who has been weakened by a curse do something like this?] They made sarcastic remarks to those who came out and installed the crossbows in the name of supervision, but they only twitched their eyebrows, and like skilled assassins, they installed the crossbows without wavering.

If it hits them, it will literally turn into a hedgehog.

Cruel sat in the tent and quietly snapped his fingers after hearing the news that the hunting competition had begun. A chess piece held between the index and middle fingers hits the desk at regular intervals, making a crashing sound. The green eyes darkened.

‘There are a lot of peacocks at the hunting competition. If we use them, we can easily guide the child’s movements.’

The skill of the assassins is also formidable. Even if it is not a crossbow, he can die at their hands, and even if Deon survives, he will be guided by their guidance and will reach the crossbow.

If that happens...

exactly. My fingers stopped.

‘....’

Degurrr. The chess pieces roll miserably on the desk.

Cruel stood up holding his sword and put on his robe. His subordinate Senzer, who had been watching him the whole time, asked.

“Where are you going.”

“Hunting competition. “I have to prove my worth.”

“ ....”

“I will offer my victory to the Duke, so you can go and spread the news that I am participating.”

***

I got off my horse and walked through a deserted place. It was my own consideration.

It was so uncomfortable that everyone who encountered me took a deep breath and glanced at me. We didn't plan on getting too excited about the hunt anyway, so we kindly left the place to make each other feel at ease.

And then I got attacked.

“Count!”

“Ah... crazy.”

I slowly got up from Dan's arms.

That sucks. So... something happened. Oh yeah. I met the 'real' Count Hart. The bastard got into a fight and chased me persistently when I kindly walked away. Then... he pushed Dan and rolled over to the other side. A dagger stuck where I was and I trembled.

“omg.”

Dan rolled his eyes, looked around, and muttered to himself, regardless of whether he stopped breathing in surprise or not. This is all because I didn't get a single handkerchief. No one prayed for my safe return, right?

“...Damn it.”

Out of the corner of my eye, I saw a bag lying around that I had missed.

The flower pot wasn't broken, right...? At least the dirt seems to have been spilled, but is he dead? No, if he had died that easily, I wouldn't have even thought about bringing him here.

‘It feels like my bag is shaking...’

...I guess it's my mood.

For now, let's ignore the situation as it is a situation.

I forced my gaze away from the bag and took a step to the left. The blade fell into the floor again without a sound.

Rather...

“Why are you sticking with me?”

“You talk so arrogantly!”

With the ‘real’ Count Hart at my side, I have no intention of falling.

If you had fired a signal because you were scared, you would have quietly stayed in a corner until help arrived. Why did you stick to me?

Ugh it's frustrating.

“If I couldn't protect myself, I shouldn't have participated in the hunting competition.”

“This is not hunting!”

“On topics that make me think about bugs and such.”

“you you...!”

Anyway, I’m in danger of dying because of you! Take responsibility and protect me! The guy squeaked.

I looked down at him with pitiful eyes, grabbed him by the back of his neck, pushed him away, and moved a couple of steps further. Is this something strange?

‘It’s as if I’m being hunted...’

Ugh.

Before I could even finish assessing the situation, my head, which was supposed to be spinning, turned white.

“Uweek...cough...!”

The aftereffects of the first time I was hit on the floor by Dan surged.

It somehow betrays its owner’s will to suppress and swallow, and flows back down the throat and out of the mouth. Red liquid dripped and wet the floor.

At first glance, it seemed like the writhing of the bag, which was lying around shabbily, was getting worse.

Of course, my gaze, which had briefly touched that direction, was withdrawn again. Because the damn raiders showed up and started attacking us.

The swordsmanship went back and forth like crazy. No, it was unilaterally directed at me.

Fearing that they are the ones killing people, they all target only the most important points of attack. I had no choice but to stop it in order to survive.

Sadly, it doesn't give you a chance to attack. Every time I block an incoming attack, I realize that my life is at stake.

'Fuck, save me.'

It's scary.

I shrugged off the memory that was coming up my throat in horror and took two steps back. And then, a small noise was heard.

"!"

"It's over."

For a moment, the world slowed down.

Numerous arrows can be seen rushing from where the noise was heard. As I rolled my eyes again, I saw the assassin stabbing his sword from below, aiming for under my chin.

It was too late to avoid it. To avoid one, you have to give up the other. Whichever one I give up, the end will be my death.

Do you become a skewer or a hedgehog with a piercing from under your chin all the way to your brain?

That time when I hesitated for a moment about a decision that I couldn't make easily.

Phew!

“...!?”

“....”

“Ugh... no, wait a minute...”

What the fuck is going on?

Once again, I was rolled around on the floor in someone’s arms, trying to focus my spinning vision to understand the situation.

At that desperate moment, a plant stem burst out through the assassin’s chest. Before I could be shocked, someone grabbed my body and rolled on the floor, out of range of the arrow.

Plants... well, that’s it. First of all, I believe it won’t be the case. Who is this person who saved me? Is it Dan?

‘A little while ago, he rolled me around roughly and made a mess inside me, but this time, he was very careful and caught me without any shock...?!’

It’s not Dan.

When I raised my head, my eyes met the green eyes under the robe. I immediately turned my head to hide it, but I wasn’t about to let that moment pass by.

I feel like my blood is running cold.

“you.”

“....”

“What are you planning?”

I grabbed the collar of the guy who was trying to leave me without a word and walk away.

He put his face close to me, bared his teeth, and growled.

“Do you think you wouldn’t recognize me even if I was wearing a mediocre robe like that?”

Cruel Hart.

Explain why you are here.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

There was silence. Cruel, who firmly kept his mouth shut, looked down at me. I, too, did not give up and glared at him with his incomprehensible eyes.

The silence that seemed like it would last forever was broken by the sound of a crash being heard again and the sound of urgent footsteps coming from afar.

“I got a red flag! I hope you’re safe! What is that?!”

“monster? Is it a monster?! “This is my first time seeing a plant-type monster?!”

Plant type... monster...?

With an ominous feeling running down my spine, I quickly turned my head and looked for the plant-type monster the voice had mentioned. And I was shocked.

‘What is that?!’

That's the plant Hien gave you, right? Could you walk with roots?!

A creature resembling a black rose walks on the ground, wriggling its roots! The stem was moving freely and had raiders attached to its end.

Perhaps because it drank blood, it grew to a terrifying size.

'He took care of all the attackers... Yes... thank you...'

It's true that the life-threatening situation is over... but why does it seem like it has become dangerous in a different sense?

Please don't pretend to know me. I turned my head and prayed in my heart. I tried to question Cruel again, but...

'Nothing?'

It just popped out! Damn you!

This alone was annoying enough, but there was a voice that made my blood pressure rise even more.

"That monster belongs to Deonhart! I saw it! "That monster comes out of Deonhardt's bag!"

"...."

I quietly held the back of my neck.

Suspicious eyes are directed at me. Yes, I guess so. I understand. Because I am the 'master of murderers'.

In fact, I am a normal person and the people below me are crazy people, but from the outside, I, the owner, will look like the same person.

“That monster saved Deonhardt from raiders! “It’s clear that Deonhardt was controlling it!”

But what does this idiot believe?

Aren’t I scared? No matter what the truth is, the reputation that appears on the surface must be terrifying.

I was at a loss for words at the sight of the despicable figure beyond imagination, but I quickly realized the reality.

In any case, the current atmosphere is turning against me. I have to do something to remove doubt...

‘Should I kill that monster?’

You may not be able to kill it, and even if you do, you may think it is cutting off its tail.

What do we do...?

Just when I was groaning because I couldn’t find an appropriate way, the guy moved.

‘Why... why are you coming?’

Do not come!

The guy approaches, wriggling his roots. When I tried to retreat, he stopped me by wrapping his trunk around my ankle, which caused me to almost fall, and gently grabbed my back and climbed up my leg.

An intense fear came over me.

‘Fuck you.’

Please save me, I’m scared, hey!

This is why you shouldn't bring plants with black heads.

With all his survival instincts, he swung the dagger he was holding in his hand. I was easily suppressed. Oh please.

"Geeeeeeek."

Uh...uhh okay...you're nice, right? Can you please let me go? No, don't grab the neck... hehe!

The stem wrapped around my neck. It looked like it was going to suffocate and kill at any moment, but fortunately no force was applied as the goal was to fix it. No... isn't that 'fortunate'?

"Big!"

I felt a dull shock in my abdomen.

sick. what? Was my stomach pierced like the attackers? But it's not that kind of pain. If I had to compare it, it was as if someone had hit me with a fist...

At that moment, another stem lightly pressed down on my chin. As questions filled my mind, the smell of blood rose from my stomach.

"Cough."

Sigh... I express my admiration for the emperor's foresight in sending the red clothes. I gritted my teeth with blood streaming out of my mouth.

Now that I think about it, I realized I had coughed up blood once a while ago. Even if that weren't the case, how could something like this not happen if you vomited blood once and the shock hit your sore stomach?

Something hot rose up inside me again. It's not blood this time.

This... this...

"This bastard!!"

Suddenly!

"...uh?"

I think I was so angry that I forgot that I was being suppressed and just waved my hands. But why does he collapse? When did my hands loosen?

I couldn't understand the situation, so I blinked blankly for a moment.

The monster plant, as if dying, is slowly collapsing and rolling up its leaves. In human terms, it was only through the act of raising a thumb that I was able to understand what was going on.

'This is what I intended.'

For my own sake, knowing I was in trouble.

He pretended to attack by deliberately wrapping his arms around his neck and squeezing him. I deceived the eyes of the viewers by shocking my abdomen and making me vomit blood. It must not have been difficult for my weak body to spit out blood even at the slightest impact.

So, whether out of survival instinct or anger, the moment I swung my arm as I could, I released my hand and touched my vital spot.

And died.

“Ha...”

“Gwae... are you okay?”

“....”

“Honorary Count Hart Baek...?”

“....”

You have good hair.

Somehow I couldn't say anything.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 106

106. Hunting Competition (7)

Dan is about to follow disaster.

By any estimate, Deonhardt is a disaster.

So Dan follows Deonhardt.

'What if Deonhardt isn't a disaster?'

So what should I do?

While Deonhardt was away on a mission, Dan did a lot for him.

The title was changed from Master to Count. He obediently followed the deacon's words that he should be called 'Count' even though he was following 'Calamity' and not 'Honorary Count Hart'.

I learned the sword to be by his side without restrictions. I have reached a level where I can escort someone.

He set up a business to raise money separate from the count's funds. It was natural.

'If he starts acting like a disaster, it will be difficult to use the funds accumulated in the Count's mansion.'

Dan knew that almost all of the occupants of the count's residence were the emperor's people.

I have done all of this. But what about you?

'I did this, but what did you do? 'Is it really a disaster?'

It's not enough that an old shaman called you that. It's time to prove it again.

and insulted him.

I really didn't know, so I thought I was escorted when I got off the carriage. Dan wanted to see his anger.

'An anger worthy of disaster.'

...On the contrary, I ended up receiving his kind consideration.

Reasonable doubt raised its head.

'You are not.'

Is it really a disaster?

And now that doubt is gone.

What kind of person can control a monster? This is impossible without a disaster.

In a desperate situation, a plant-shaped monster moved. It pierced the attacker and drank its blood to grow in size. Then, it walked around using its roots and dealt with the remaining attackers with its freely moving trunk.

It's a bit disappointing that Deonhardt didn't handle the arrow himself, but that an unknown person came forward to save it...

‘Are... are your hands shaking right now?’

Like an animal that almost lost its cub, the fingertips of the opponent who held Deonhardt in his arms trembled slightly.

Was there anyone who cared about Deon Hart that much? From what I understand, his interpersonal relationships seem to have been extremely narrow and dry.

‘...Well, it’s none of my business.’

Dan, who was looking at the unidentified opponent and Deon Hart alternately with indifferent eyes, soon turned his gaze to see the strange creature and smiled faintly.

I’m a little sorry that I pretended not to know his danger just to watch this scene, but it’s okay since I saw the proof.

‘When I go back after finishing my work...’

I have to follow him faithfully.

From now on, Dan will never doubt Deon Hardt again.

‘Just watch this for now.’

I watched the exciting situation unfold.

Support arrives and an unidentified Rob hides himself. The self-proclaimed ‘real’ Count Hart, whose spirits were revived, aimed at Deon Hart and the plant moved.

Wrap their ankles to block their movements and hold their hands to suppress them from attacking. He wrapped his neck around his neck and acted as if he was going to kill him at any moment, and when blood poured out of Deonhardt's mouth, he died in his hands.

Dan was impressed.

'I can't believe I escaped suspicion like this!'

They make it look like they are attacking me and kill me. It was a clean tail cut.

"No, well! "That monster is controlled by Deon Hart?!"

"The monster you mentioned attacked Honorable Count Hart."

"It's a self-made play!"

"I even vomited blood to say that."

The doubt was cleared.

Deon Hardt, who neatly sheathed his dagger with a simple gesture, walked leisurely and approached Dan. Their eyes met and Dan froze.

Bright red eyes, corners of the mouth raised as if laughing. The eyes that seemed to be looking down at the other person from a high place were asking with mercy.

"Are you satisfied?"

"...."

You knew. haha. Dan laughed.

Are you satisfied? That's right.

"Of course Master."

***

Deon turned his head and looked at the stupid and annoyed sidekick.

There is no living. There is no blood-soaked madness. However, when Bang-gye, who instinctively felt an ominous look in his eyes that was obviously different from usual, hesitated and retreated, he clicked his tongue and walked up to her and placed his hand on her shoulder.

The guy trembled as if bitten by a wild animal.

“If you are the head of the Hart family, you must be staying at Count Hart’s residence.”

Honorific.

Bang-gye raised his head in surprise at the friendly politeness that popped out in an atmosphere where he seemed to be speaking informally, but nodded for a moment.

Isn’t it natural for the head of a family to live in a count’s mansion with a long history? Cruel Hart and Deon Hart didn’t even go there anyway.

Are they trying to steal it now? Wary eyes turned to Deon.

Deon looked him straight in the eyes and smiled broadly. It was a smile so beautiful that it took your soul away.

“It looks like they cleaned it up properly.”

“Uh...uh what?”

“It was covered in blood so bad that you cleaned it up.”

“...!”

“Weren’t there a lot of spirits wandering the hallways at night?”

So the rumors were true! The collateral matriarch’s face turned white.

Deon Hart really killed all the people of the Hart family! And that too in the mansion where I am currently staying!

Deon smiled in satisfaction when he saw him bleached white and lost.

There was silence for a moment as the pleasant laughter fell low. Deon was looking at him with an expressionless expression, as if he had never laughed before.

“It would be good to be fair.”

Unless you want to die.

***

[I... I want to live in another mansion. Are there any other villas nearby?]

[Yes? No, Count, what is that... Count Hart is the symbol of the family head. Otherwise, they are in an unstable state because they don’t have the ‘Hart Territory’, the core of the Hart family, so you’re going to stay in another mansion.] [I don’t know... They say they ca n’t live because I’m scared and uncomfortable, but what does that matter now...] [

Huh? what did you say? I didn’t hear you clearly.]

[It's nothing! Anyway, you'll be staying in another mansion, so take care of it! If I don't have it, I'll make one and stay somewhere else!]

[Count, Count?!]

I chuckled, casually listening to the conversation between the subordinates and vassals coming from afar.

Seeing her in fear makes me feel relieved. I don't think I said anything, but I'm a little curious as to why he was so scared.

"They say Honorary Count Hart controlled a plant-type monster."

Ah, this is not pleasant at all. Damn collateral guy.

If you're scared, you should keep your mouth shut. He was so light-hearted that he easily fabricated what I saw and spread it as if it were true.

Honestly, it's pathetic. What even demons cannot handle are monsters. Of course, it wasn't a plant-type monster, it was just a plant, but in any case, other people knew it as a 'monster', so who would believe that...

"If you're the honorary Count of Hart, you deserve it."

"I guess the rumors about him being a vampire are true."

Do you believe it?

"I heard they brought in a plant-type monster and caught it to win the hunting contest."

"They say they used that monster to get rid of those who bothered them."

“Is it true that we have been secretly dealing with plant-type monsters behind the scenes for a very long time?”

I’m so dumbfounded.

No, it doesn’t make sense in common sense. Why on earth do you believe this? Even the rumors are ridiculously exaggerated!

I swallowed the laughter that was about to escape and pretended not to listen to their voices, but a huge figure approached me.

“Ah...”

I reflexively shook my shoulders.

A strong presence. Heavy and sharp atmosphere. It was obvious without needing to see who the owner of this presence that was weighing down people was.

At first glance, a red cloak appears in the field of vision. Before I could make eye contact with the fierce golden eyes, I quickly got down on one knee and bowed my head. I felt the nobles who discovered him belatedly kneel down one by one.

“Glory to the Empire.”

“Get up.”

The emperor, whom I had seen for the first time in a long time, looked quite emaciated, as if he had a lot of work to do. Is it a problem or a good thing that the gauntness made the impression sharper rather than sad?

From the emperor's point of view, you could say it's fortunate that it doesn't look ridiculous, but for me, it's a problem.

'You've become more scared...!'

Even if it wasn't, I was scared!

Tired, beautiful golden eyes scan the nobles. Everyone who caught his gaze shrank like a startled snail as his eyes became more fierce than before.

After a short silence, the emperor broke the silence.

"...Okay..."

It was a sigh-like voice filled with deep fatigue.

"I was busy so I couldn't participate, but it looks like things went well. "It looks like the crown prince did a good job."

"I am honored."

"I'll let Jim take charge from now on."

The Emperor, who fluidly took over the baton from the Crown Prince, raised his gloved hand and pressed his ever-distorted eyebrows.

"Let's hurry up and announce the results and conclude. Please give me the results sheet."

A sheet of paper listing the shapes and sizes of monsters passed into his hands.

What rank am I in? Because of the title of 'Hero', I couldn't go back empty-handed, so I only caught two monsters that I saw on the way, so I guess that's just average. It seems that the average number of monsters hunted by nobles was two.

Since I have no intention of attracting attention, I am satisfied enough with the fact that I did not damage the hero's name value.

The emperor seemed to be in a very bad mood, so he should just stay silent and disappear like this. In the current situation, if I stand out for no reason, I may not have a neck left.

"Third place. Cruel Hart."

"?"

When the fuck did he participate?

The results of his hunt are piled up in front of everyone.

Because it is cluttered and there is not enough space to place all hunting results in one place, only the first to third place results are placed in the center in hunting competitions to prevent suspicions of ranking manipulation. In short, if you haven't caught this much, don't complain.

In that sense, Cruel's ranking was annoyingly understandable. Four monsters. I definitely caught quite a lot by the average person's standards. That's rough considering he's a hero with a hero's fragment. Unlucky.

The ranking announcement continued.

"Second place. Elpidius Desert."

"...?"

I was surprised in a different way. No, the crown prince participated, but there was a human who won first place without giving up? What kind of crazy person are you?

Five monsters. Even if you don't intend to make any concessions, it will be difficult to capture more than that. The crown prince said it was possible because he had four good assistants, but it wouldn't be easy for an ordinary person without even the fragments of a hero to surpass that.

I really did this with my teeth clenched, but I'm really curious about who it is...

"1st place. Deon Hardt."

It's me.

I was that crazy person who gritted his teeth.

"...?!"

why not? why?! I only caught two monsters...

Three monsters piled up in front of me in confusion. Not two, but three. Among them, my expression fell into an indescribable form when I discovered a monster with a familiar appearance.

"I caught a plant-type monster. "It must have been quite difficult as it was my first time seeing this type, but you did a great job."

"No... no..."

I barely answered. It wasn't picky at all. Because this guy died for me. I deliberately left it behind, even if it was because of my conscience.

What kind of guy brought this guy?

The softened golden eyes take a look at me, then harden again and face the front. A step behind him, another Geum-an who looked like him smiled softly at me.

‘Prince...’

Why are you smiling? At first glance, it seems like it’s meant as a compliment.

But I won’t take it literally! Because I learned that the social world is a place where people wear the mask of laughter and exchange swords of words.

So that smile probably means a warning. For example, ‘How dare you defeat me? ‘Your future will be very tiring.’ Or something.

‘The crown prince looks at me hatefully...’

...If he’s really hateful, he should escape to the demon world forever. The empire, not the human world, is bad.

“Then let’s say the hunting competition ends here and I have something to tell you.”

The emperor attracted attention again.

He frowned and waved his hand in the air as if there were a fly in his eye, then gently closed his eyes and then opened them with a light sigh. His eyes, which had become even more harsh due to the dark shadows under his eyes, were aimed directly at me.

“It looks like we will be going to war with the demon world.”

“!”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 107

107. In fact, they knew (1)

“The devil declared war. “War is inevitable.”

There is no way to resolve this peacefully. The open space suddenly became noisy.

I understand. A war with the demon world while we are already in conflict with other kingdoms. How will the lost troops be replenished and what will be the funds? What about the mental strength of soldiers devastated by successive wars?

‘Furthermore, even if we manage to win the war against the demon world, there is no way other kingdoms will just stand by and watch an empire that cannot afford to fight any more wars.’

Since relations with other kingdoms have already reached their worst point, the downfall of the empire is preordained.

In a situation where he had no choice but to walk, even though he knew it was the path to downfall, the emperor spoke calmly.

“We have to focus on the demon world, so all wars within the human world will be halted.”

“Excuse me, but Your Majesty, will the kingdoms that were at war accept you obediently?”

“It has to be that way. “Because this empire is the only country in the human world that can deal with the demon world.”

And the emperor fell silent for a moment.

He stopped talking there, but I could tell what he was trying to say.

‘They would rather support the empire.’

If the empire falls, will the demon world really stop there?

No way. If the empire falls, the human world will soon fall.

In this situation, the most the other kingdoms could do to express their dissatisfaction would probably be not to support the empire. Even if the situation becomes dangerous, active support will have to be provided.

‘But there is no need to fight a war with insufficient support from the beginning. ‘He must have swallowed those words.’

In the current situation, there is no need to offend other kingdoms.

The emperor must have judged that way.

‘But...’

His opinion is premised on one assumption.

Assuming that no kingdom joins the Demon World.

My head suddenly tilted. We have seen a lot of human greed and selfishness during war. Is there really no chance that a powerful person with a lot to lose will join the side of the demon world for his own safety?

‘The Demon King accepted me as a human.’

This means that there is no special hostility or prejudice against humans. So, he would choose to accept it instead of rejecting it.

It’s easy once, but then it’s a battle of wits. Those in power will rush to betray the empire and offer their country to the devil. What is the importance of race? What’s important is my safety.

‘Well, there’s no need to say something I’m not sure about.’

It’s still a distant future. I don’t want to incur hate by saying something that wasn’t asked.

I don’t know. I never thought of something like that. I buried the thoughts that came to my mind and looked at the emperor with a calm face. He was once again nailing the story.

“So just be aware. From now on...”

“!”

The fishy scent of blood passed the tip of my nose.

A vivid bloody scent that is completely different from the scent of blood that comes from a monster that has been caught for some time.

Damn it. What kind of situation is this again? Before I could even turn around, I heard a clear voice right behind me.

“I guess I got the timing wrong.”

Could you please step aside for a moment?

Uh huh? The owner of a voice that could be considered a model of an aristocratic tone gently pushes me away and passes by. The thick, bloody smell followed behind, leaving a trail.

Holding a blood-soaked wooden box in one hand, he walks with restrained steps, neither fast nor slow, and stops in front of the emperor. He raised his head straight, without bowing an inch, and made eye contact with the emperor.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

After what seemed like an eternity of silence, he slowly bent one knee. He put down the red-stained wooden box next to him and bowed his head.

His green hair flowed down as he moved, and his neat voice came out again.

“Glory to the Empire. New Stigma Primiro sees the current Empire.”

Stigma Premiere. The second hero of the empire.

No matter how much of a hero he is, it's too much for him to come in with such a strong bloody smell. Can't you see that the nobles around you are frozen?

...although his clothes are strangely neat.

'I feel a strange sense of déjà vu... I guess it's just my mood.'

I feel like I've been through a similar situation with a different main character and location, but I guess that's just my mood. Let's ignore it.

"Get up. "What is the box next to it?"

"I prepared this out of regret as I cannot participate in the hunting competition due to circumstances, but... I don't think I can give it to you because the timing is not good."

"Tell me the content."

"It's the enemy's head."

Oh... as soon as they declared a halt to war in the human world, they came carrying the enemy's head.

But it's not the stigma's fault. I didn't know, so what can I do? The Emperor's words will be known from today onwards, so for now, all he can do is carry out his duties faithfully.

The emperor was silent for a moment and then waved his hand at a nearby attendant. Stigma obediently hands over the box to the attendant who approaches him, and after receiving the box from the attendant, he opens the lid.

The scent of blood carried by the wind became stronger.

"...Good work."

The answer from the emperor who cared about heroes was as expected.

As if Stigma had expected this, he slightly bowed his head and expressed his gratitude. The emperor handed the box back to the servant and walked forward.

“Orders will be delivered soon. “The war within the human world will stop and we will prepare for the war with the demon world, so prepare in advance.”

Stigma quietly retreats and asks the nobles around him who won first place in the hunting competition. He slightly widened his eyes and then smiled elegantly, as if he had answered sincerely despite his hesitation.

With that, the official monster hunting first place was Deon Hart, and the unofficial human hunting first place was Stigma Primiro, and the competition came to an end.

It would have been nice if...

The hunting competition is over, but it is not over. What does it mean? It means I can't go home.

After the hunting competition hosted by the imperial palace, an after-party and social gathering is held. It would have been better if I hadn't been able to go home because I was attending the banquet.

“I heard something happened. “Are you feeling okay?”

“it's okay.”

It's okay, so please just let me go now.

As soon as the emperor announced the end of the hunting competition, he grabbed me and dragged me into a quiet forest.

Actually, I didn't drag it, but it's the same as dragging it to me anyway.

[Wouldn't you like to take a walk with your luggage?]

Who would dare refuse when the emperor makes such an offer?

I followed him with a miserable feeling. Even after a long time had passed, his mouth opened and the words that came out were about the commotion that had occurred at the hunting competition and his regards to my body.

"I'm glad you're okay, but something went wrong at the tournament held by the imperial family, so I guess I'll have to take responsibility. "I will send an additional amount to the prize money to be sent to your mansion."

I felt like they were trying to subtly use money to get away with it, but I just went along with it.

Anyway, even if you tell me what you want, there's no way they'll grant what you really want, and other than that, I don't really want anything else.

"thank you."

"And... the plant-type monster you caught."

I was shocked for a moment here.

I'm sure the emperor didn't hear that ridiculous rumor either. I'd like to have some hope that it hasn't been long since it started to spread and the Emperor hasn't heard about it since he arrived.

But is that possible? Knowing full well the emperor's intelligence, I immediately threw away my weak hopes.

'Do you have any doubts?'

The emperor might be suspicious.

But I really didn't control it. ... I happened to bring him here, though.

"I will send someone soon, so I hope you can help us keep records of the attack method and response method."

"All right."

He sighs languidly, as if satisfied, and touches the back of his left hand. A hand wearing a glove came into view.

Now that I think about it, it's strange. I remember that the emperor usually didn't wear gloves. Didn't you hate that your fingertips felt numb when you held and moved the sword?

As I was inwardly tilting my head, the emperor softly called my name.

***

"Deon Hardt."

The guy's mood changed, as if he sensed that he was about to move on to an important story.

Red-red eyes quietly look at me, revealing heavy power. I feel this every time, but the ability to judge 'which side' is the story that should be heard is truly top-notch.

'No, in this case, we should first see it as sharing what we have heard and what we will remember.'

But it can't go on like that forever.

It doesn't matter because it's not important right now. The Emperor, who was looking into Deonhardt's eyes, opened his mouth leisurely, without any haste.

"You too will participate in this war."

In the war within the human world, I was sent to the side of the Demon King, but not this time.

Deon Hart must take up the sword and deal with the demon lord's army. Maybe I will stand in the Demon King's camp and cut down the imperial army.

"So, I think we need to decide for sure now."

One step. I narrowed the short distance further and placed my hand on his shoulder. The moment has come when everyone must face what they had ignored with tacit consent.

The emperor.

We know Deon Hardt is neutral.

The Demon King would also know this. That's probably why Deon Hart is still alive and well.

A war of nerves with the Demon King and the Emperor's Deonhart in the middle. The rules implicitly formed there were truly strange.

[Do not oppress Deon Hardt.]

Don't let him remain in a below-competent position for fear of information leaking out.

For the same reason, do not detain Deon Hardt when he tries to cross over to the opponent's camp.

It is also a monarch's ability to place Deon Hardt in such a position and not reveal confidential information to him. Moreover, he answers questions honestly, so there is no need to torture him.

Games played under these rules were quite interesting.

[Who uses Deon Hart more effectively?]

[Who attracts Deon Hart first?]

[If Deon Hart decides on a camp, how quickly does the opponent realize this and take action?]

In the third case, Deon Hart Hart will also be actively participating in this game. The stake will be your own life.

So, I understand that they are desperately trying to remain neutral.

"You are a human."

I can't wait any longer when the situation has reached this point.

"I was born and raised here, and all my stepping stones are here. "If you were born under the sun, there must be a reason, but you can't live your whole life in a place where the sun doesn't exist just because you are weak to the sun's light, right?"

"...."

"Stay here."

Curses will disappear if you kill the Demon King.

The voice that said that was unexpectedly soft.

The person who caused this whole situation simply looked up at the emperor with mysterious red eyes.

Deon Hardt.

Because I am neutral, I know that the Emperor and the Demon King will not kill me.

It was intentional. It was to live.

If you refuse the devil's advice to join the devil's army, you will die. However, he couldn't betray the emperor and side with the devil. Because he had work to do when he went back.

So it became completely neutral.

If someone holds a sword and hurts someone, they blame the 'someone' holding the sword, not the 'sword.' Similarly, in a situation where an opponent takes my sword and cuts me, there is no fool who gets angry and says, 'The sword betrayed me.'

Deon became a 'sword'.

'Is there another owner of the sword? The one who holds it in his hand is the owner.'

The two monarchs, who had no way of knowing his intentions at first, astutely realized the situation as Deon went back and forth between the two camps once more.

There is no clear physical evidence, but I am confident. At that time, the Demon King looked at me with an interesting look and smiled, and the Emperor looked at me with a strange look and laughed as if it was funny.

It must have been embarrassing. But it would be a waste to kill him.

It's not on my side, but it's not on the other person's side either. I don't necessarily say anything I haven't asked first, but I answer obediently when asked. Although he never takes the initiative, he faithfully follows orders. In addition, although there are some misunderstandings, his skills are also excellent.

As long as you attract it, it becomes a useful hand.

With the implicit consent of the two monarchs, Deonhardt was able to host a game with me as the prize.

'The participants are the Demon King and the Emperor.'

'The host is Deon Hardt.'

'The product is also Deonhardt.'

'The prospective participant is also Deon Hardt.'

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 108

108. In fact, they knew (2)

that the stake in the game for survival was their lives. What kind of comedy is this?

Still, I'm satisfied because it ended up being as calculated.
—I was satisfied.

Until the Emperor tried to destroy the balance he had managed to achieve.

'Yes, it lasted a long time. I knew that the time had come for this situation to come. But...'

I never thought it would hit me right away like this.

This is a question that cannot be answered directly. The emperor seemed to know this, too, as he let go of his hand on his shoulder and took a step back, pretending to be generous.

"It will be sudden, so I will give you time to think about it. "I hope you think carefully before answering."

"...Thank you for your consideration."

"okay. "I guess I won't stay long this time."

That way it would be fair.

It doesn't matter whether you report these actions to the Demon King or not. Even if Deonhardt doesn't open his mouth first, any demon lord he knows so far will recognize it right away.

Rather than feeling displeased with the game, he will probably urge and tempt Deon Hardt in the same way.

What are the things that the devil has given him and can give him, and what better things can I give him? Among them, what I can give you right away is....

"...In recognition of your hard work, I will elevate your status to honorary marquis. "All documents will probably be processed by tomorrow."

"...."

There would have been strong opposition from the nobles as it was sudden, but there was no question about whether you would be okay with the current situation. There wasn't even a word of thanks, but the emperor passed on without any problem.

It was natural. Because I can't possibly or hope to be grateful for actions that clearly show my intentions. He simply added.

"Let me say it again. You are a human."

The emperor waved his hand, indicating that he should go away. Deon, who had seen his back turned, quietly walked away.

And then stop.

“...What happened to Esperanes?”

“It is no exaggeration to say that it is a fortress blessed with heaven.”

You failed. Realizing once again that Rememberbert was not lying, Deon resumed his halting steps.

***

I made a mistake. The princess bit her well-manicured fingernails.

Since it was known that he liked Deon Hardt, he should have given him a ribbon before the hunting competition. They should have at least given me a handkerchief.

‘Of course, at this important moment.’

How can you completely forget that fact?

Uncle Emperor took him with him and moved away. Even though she didn’t know everything, her ‘sense’ that went beyond imagination was telling her what the situation was.

The intention is to securely tie him, who seemed to be floating alone without settling down anywhere, to this place. Perhaps, given your uncle’s personality, it would be difficult to appease him gently. Even if you pretend to be soft, your hard and sharp essence will soon be revealed.

‘I could have helped.’

My uncle is closer to a tyrant than a saint, closer to a king. A strict and charismatic monarch, not a friendly and gentle one.

Conciliation or persuasion from such a person produces extreme results. If you accept, you will faithfully serve your uncle as your master, but if you refuse, he will become your outright enemy.

The way to keep him peacefully is to get married. Although it is old-fashioned, it is a method that is effective enough to be used to this day, so it would be the most worth trying...

At the outdoor banquet hall where she arrived late, the princess picked up a wine glass to quench her burning throat.

‘Let’s stop making meaningless assumptions.’

I learned that when it’s time to look back on the past, think about fixing it.

Because of the war, because of my uncle’s worries, because of internal affairs, because of my brother’s worries... There were many excuses, but what does that matter now?

We must capture Deonhardt in a finite way, with as little damage to our uncle as possible.

‘Because there is some groundwork that has been laid so far...’

If we push forward, we will be able to overcome the suspicions regarding this matter somehow.

I spotted Deon walking between the trees on one side and ran towards him.

“Count!”

“Her Royal Highness.”

“Oh my god, I heard something happened at the Count’s hunting competition? Are you hurt anywhere? I...”

“Thank you for your concern. “I’m telling you this because I’m worried that this story is going to be long, but if it’s not rude, would you mind if I change seats?”

“...?”

Was this intentional? Before revealing his feelings publicly, he interrupted the conversation exquisitely.

However, it would be a big mistake to think that this was easy enough to be easily overlooked. The princess smiled brightly and answered in a loud voice.

“I’m willing to go anywhere if it’s just the two of us!”

“...Thank you for willingly accepting.”

Since I pretended to be considerate of the fact that my feet hurt because of my shoes, I can’t ask for it now.

I took a hit. Even though it was only for a moment, the look of frustration that crossed his face seemed to prove that he was human, so she smiled happily and took her feet away.

—She knew that the Deon Hart in front of her was not the usual Deon Hart.

I walked, avoiding the uncomfortable groans I occasionally heard from the grass, and arrived at a charming garden with flowers in full bloom.

The princess, who was sitting gently on the bench, raised her head and saw Deonhardt. He took a step to the side and stood at an angle, as if to avoid being rude.

Instead of opening my mouth right away, I waited quietly, waiting for the moment his gaze caught my eye and smiled brightly.

“It’s better to see it alone. “What do you want to say?”

“...I moved to my seat to better listen to Her Majesty the Princess.”

“Oh, that’s right! “How much did you say?”

“At the hunting competition, I...”

“Oh, that’s right! You’re not hurt anywhere, right? “I was upset that I couldn’t give you the ribbon, but I was so surprised that you were attacked...!”

“I am okay.”

“Still, I feel very uncomfortable. There was no good reason and I accidentally forgot...”

“I’ll say it again, it’s okay. “It’s easy to forget.”

It was just a remark meant to express the princess’s empty-headedness, but Deonhardt slightly raised one corner of his mouth as he pointed out something.

The princess, facing his laughter, froze. It feels like a bug called goosebumps is crawling up my body from below.

What does that smile mean? jealousy? Disappointed?

‘No way.’

I swallowed the laugh that was about to escape. When I saw that smile, my head wasn’t clear enough to think of feelings related to dating.

It had a clear appearance of ridicule.

“It’s natural to forget.”

he laughs This time, a normal smile with both corners of the mouth raised.

—No, can you call that normal laughter?

It is not a clean, pure laugh. He conveyed the meaning of his words with a smile. Your Majesty is smart. So I’m sure you can read this too.

[It’s natural to forget.]

Before interpreting the meaning, the princess had to check whether her mask was sturdy.

[Your Majesty.]

[Me.]

[You don’t like it.]

‘...I knew it.’

My face heated up, but it only lasted for a moment.

Hiding one’s emotions and responding with shamelessness is a basic skill of the royal family who have to deal with nobles like snobbery snakes. therefore.

‘What do you think?’

Let’s be confident.

In any case, it was widely known that the princess had feelings for Deonhardt, so his marriage path was blocked except for the princess.

So, don't panic and just push through calmly. If tactics don't work, attack head on.

"Honorary Count Deonhardt."

"...."

"How about marrying me..."

"Her Royal Highness."

ah.

The moment the words calling me came out of his mouth, the princess sensed failure.

As expected, she pursed her lips as if asking me to say something, and words fell out that were polite but clearly expressed rejection.

"Don't waste your precious life on someone like me."

Isn't there only one life?

....

The princess could not say anything until Deonhart turned his back and disappeared.

He must have known that it was the last offer. But such a firm refusal.

It's so clean and solid that I don't even think about getting any more messy. Since the current imperial family, which has a close family relationship, rejected the princess's marriage proposal, can we assume that she plans to live alone for the rest of her life?

‘...Now that I think about it, the relationship between women was too plain.’

no way.

The princess’s face hardened as an unexpected assumption came to mind.

I am prepared to live alone without a woman for the rest of my life. An overly plain relationship between women. Perhaps it was a mistake for the ‘princess’ to try to lure him in the first place.

“...Do you like men?”

The princess had a fairly open mind.

***

I managed to survive and return to the banquet hall! This is a miracle!

I was so nervous and distracted that I couldn’t remember everything, but I definitely remembered the most important things.

The emperor...

‘Do I really have to remember this?’

...gave me more time. I think he allowed me to visit the demon world even though I had only been here for a short time.

I don't know anything else, but I do know that I have to go to the demon world again soon. It also seems that in the future, the time spent in either the demon world or the human world will be extremely short.

As for the rest of the conversation and the things I experienced... I don't really want to recall it, so let's bury it in the back of my memory.

'But why do you keep looking at me?'

It feels a little different from the glances I gave at a banquet I had in the past. It seems like he is learning something...

"Series of personal conversations with the royal family..."

"I think I know what the conversation was about with Her Highness the Princess..." "

...He may be a murderer, but he is also a hero. ...."

"You're more handsome than that..."

"...What on earth are you talking about with Her Majesty..."

Her Royal Highness? Why is the story about Her Highness the Princess being told while looking at me?

I don't know what it is, but the gazes directed at me sting. I'm not sure if I can go home, so it's better to stay away for now.

Fortunately, the building was partially open, no different from when an indoor banquet was held. No, there was actually a small but fully equipped banquet held indoors.

It seemed like nobles who felt burdened by the noisy outside came in to rest or have conversations related to work.

‘There were fewer people than outside, so there were fewer eyes... um...’

I guess it didn’t mean much because it became that much more intense.

As soon as I entered the room, I paused for a moment as all the attention was focused on me. I pretended like nothing had happened, put the food away, and quietly took refuge on the terrace.

It wasn’t until I carefully closed the curtains that I felt relieved and sat down on a nearby chair. Only then, as if aware of it, does the stomach, which had been secretly indicating that it was empty, begin to complain of hunger. I was in a daze as I picked up the food I brought and put it in my mouth.

‘I’m tired.’

No matter how long it had been since I returned, I touched the area under my eyes that had begun to darken again and let out a silent sigh.

The emperor and the devil, let’s not think about anything for now. I need to get some rest too.

As I was just munching on the snacks without thinking, I heard a loud noise.

“—So you want to kill them all now!”

Miss, I’m surprised! I hurriedly caught the cookie that had bounced around before it hit the floor.

Who the hell are you? Why are you fighting? I shoved the cookie I had caught into my mouth and turned my head towards where I heard the sound. A voice was coming from somewhere close to the outdoor garden outside the terrace.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 109

109. In fact, they knew (3)

“They are human too! “Now that the war against the demon world is just around the corner, even if we join forces, why kill our fellow humans to increase the number of enemies?”

Correct. It wasn't from nearby, it was coming from right underneath me.

No, why are we fighting here?... I peeked my head out of the railing and looked down. I could barely see the back of a man's head as they argued under the shade of the terrace.

The owner of the back of the head, who had been listening calmly, relaxedly opened his mouth as if he had nothing to do with this situation. The neat and elegant way of speaking was like pouring cold water on the other person.

“You have a big voice. I'm so excited. “If you have blue blood, you should keep your head cold.”

It's not noble.

“Ha, it's okay if I just have a cold head. What about breasts? If you have a cold head, you are only half a nobleman. No, in the first place, I am a blue blooded person who doesn't have to make that effort, so that doesn't matter.”

I was born an aristocrat by nature.

“...You should be thankful that you are the Margrave. “If not, you wouldn’t be alive in front of me right now.”

“How can I be thankful for the position I got through my own efforts? And are you threatening me now? Since you’re probably dead, just try to kill him somewhere. “If you kill a capable margrave under the current circumstances, no matter how much of a hero he is, His Majesty will not let you.”

“I don’t kill you. “I told you.”

I’m so fucking scared! What on earth is this fight?

...But I’m curious. You mean a hero? The owner of the back of the head is a hero? It won’t be General Nemeseus or Cruel, so what about Stigma Prime? He’s a marquis. Who is fighting the hero who is a marquis?

I leaned on the railing and lowered my head to check under the terrace. The back of Marquis Primiro was seen more fully, and the shoes of his presumed opponent were visible on the other side.

“If we continue like this, we’ll just continue to have meaningless arguments. “Let’s get back to the point.”

“...No matter what the Marquis says, my opinion remains the same. The Barbai are human. It makes no sense to kill an opponent with whom one can join forces, and with the war against the demon world just around the corner, one cannot waste one’s forces by killing them. “It is best to use him as a helpful ally by persuading and coaxing him.”

“They are barbarians. They always invaded my territory, killing people and stealing weapons and food. It has been that way ever since I remember being born and raised on that land. Do you believe that people like that can be different now? If it had been possible to resolve it through dialogue, it would have been resolved long ago. Fighting a war with the demon world while leaving them alone is like fighting with someone at your back who never knows when to attack you. “I have no choice but to kill them all.”

“It’s too violent an alternative!”

“You are too soft.”

I think if I lower my head a little more, I can see the other person’s face.

But if we even make eye contact, something awkward will happen. I gave up obediently and raised my head – but it stumbled.

‘?!’

I lost my grip.

Now here’s the problem. What happens if you lose your grip while leaning your upper body over the railing?

‘It’s falling!’

The body spins around the railing and falls.

I tried to hold on to the railing with one hand, but what could I do with my weak strength? Instead of hanging on to the railing, I fell straight down with the feeling that my fingernails were breaking.

Resignation was quick.

‘Fortunately, it wasn’t that high and I avoided falling head first, so I won’t die.’

If I fail, wouldn’t it be okay?

I close my eyes and roughly count the timing. Instead of a hard floor, I felt like I was resting on something solid.

“...?”

“Then let’s do it like this.”

“?! ”

“I’m leaving the decision to this child.”

What the fuck, put it down.

I raised my head in surprise. The Marquis Primiro made eye contact without avoiding it and then gently folded his eyes and smiled. Even though a person suddenly fell from above, he didn’t seem at all embarrassed.

“Hello junior? This is my first time seeing it this close. “I really like your eyes.”

yes? What do you like?

I blinked my eyes blankly, then turned my head to stimulate my brain, which had stopped working. A little distance away, I made eye contact with a man with an absurd expression.

“...Please get off.”

“However much.”

“No, Marquis. “What is this...”

He rubs his face with a sigh. As I was washing my face repeatedly, an irritated voice came out as if it had realized my identity for a moment.

“Isn’t he the honorary Count of Hart? “Junior, what does that mean...”

“It’s a friendly title given by the second hero to the third hero.”

“Then, are you going to call the fourth hero, Cruel Hart, your junior?”

“no. “I only like honorary Count Deonhardt.”

“...Then do you call the first hero, General Nemeseus, ‘senior’?”

“Why should I call him that?”

“....”

The mouth that seemed like it would never give up and raise its voice against it fell silent. I, too, was speechless.

When did you say you liked me just because we saw each other...?

‘Why are you becoming friends alone? Burdeningly.’

Meanwhile, the man, who opened and closed his mouth several times in bewilderment, raised his hand and massaged the back of his neck as if it was getting stiff. A question was suddenly asked with a heavy sigh.

“...Is this what you intended?”

“No way. “It’s a coincidence.”

“You said you were my junior. If so, isn’t that a friendship? It would be unfair to leave the judgment up to him.”

“Have you already forgotten the first greeting I gave him? This is my first time seeing him close enough to talk to him. “This is also our first conversation.”

“...ha good. great. “Let me ask.”

The man turns his head and looks at me. I was startled by the burning eyes and before I could back away, the greeting continued.

“First of all, let’s meet for the first time. This is Tender Amiable. He serves as a count on the southern border of the empire. “I’m sorry to see you like this.”

“Now that I think about it, I see that we haven’t even made a full statement yet. I am Stigma Primiro. He’s a marquis. “I was rude a moment ago.”

“Ah... it’s okay. “This is Deon Hardt.”

“I’m sorry for getting you caught up in such a sensitive issue....”

“We don’t have time and I’m done with the full statement, so let’s skip everything and get straight to the point.

“Youngja, you heard our conversation, right?”

“!”

I reflexively stopped all movement. Fortunately, it wasn’t moving, and it wasn’t something to worry about, so I didn’t notice it...Long shit. The Marquis was smiling.

So, what would you hide from a 'hero'? They probably even knew that I was on the terrace overhead.

Still, I was too sensitive to say yes, so I just rolled my eyes, but when it seemed like he was going to dig deeper, he turned his head and naturally skipped the conversation.

"You must have at least heard the final summary of each other's opinions. 'Let's get back to the point.' after."

I had been listening to it long before that, so of course I did.

"The reason for our argument is very simple. "A barbarian tribe living in the southernmost region of the empire."

"We are the Barbai tribe."

"The name is so long it hurts my mouth. "Please understand."

"...."

Don't fight...

I'm afraid you'll fight in front of me. I am a half-hero in name only, without the fragments of a hero. I'm not sure I can survive the fight between you two.

"Anyway, those barbarians have been a real nuisance for a long time. Since they are a tribe and not a country, they are not marked on any map unless it is a detailed map, but they frequently invade the territory, steal food, and kill people...." "Please don't say anything that will cloud your judgment."

"

“This is not a statement that clouds your judgment, it’s a fact.”

The Marquis, with an elegant smile on his face, walks away a few steps, then turns around and gently spreads his arms. Brown eyes without any smile looked directly at me.

“So I told your Majesty. If you are going to go to war with the Demon World, it would be better to get rid of the barbarians before doing so. Since they are a tribe and not a kingdom, it is difficult to call it a ‘war’ in the human world, right? “I said I would sweep them away myself since I did not want His Majesty’s support.”

If so, the emperor would not have greatly opposed it.

Stigma Primiro’s troops are a bit of a waste, but we can’t forcefully block it and lose the most important thing, Stigma itself.

“But I was against it.”

“It was stupid.”

“Words that affect judgment...”

“Anyway, His Majesty said that he would follow the plan proposed through coordination between the Margrave Amiable and I, whose territory borders the barbarians. “The deadline is 3 days.”

The Margrave of Amiable’s eyes are sinister. Aren’t these two really going to be fighting like this...?

Before anything happened, I quickly raised my hand and received the Marquis’ words. That’s the conclusion.

“Are you trying to leave the choice to me because the two of you can’t narrow down your opinions? “Inclusion or extermination?”

Before entering into a full-scale war against the Demon World, should we exterminate the Barbai tribe and eliminate the Huhwan or capture them and make them another ally to fight against the Demon World?

The Marquis smiled satisfied.

“Exactly. “You’re smart.”

“But...”

I clearly heard and remember the argument between the two. So I couldn’t help but have questions.

I tilted my head.

“I’m sorry if I’m mistaken, but the Margrave of Amiable seems confident that they will not side with the demon world.”

“We are the same human being, right? Even if you oppose the empire, at least you won’t be on the side of the demon world.”

“Is that really true?”

“....”

Is it because they are of high status? The emperor is like that, and Count Amiable is also very pure in his thoughts.

‘No, usually the higher the status, the more corrupt it becomes.’

This seems to be simply because they are closer to honest generals than strategists. The other person is not the emperor and is asking for my opinion, so if you don't know, you should let me know.

I looked straight into his eyes and spoke clearly.

"There is no guarantee that even if they are the same human being, they will always be on the human side."

"...."

Margrave Amiable closed his mouth. The Marquis nodded from the side.

"That is correct. Margrave Amiable You see the world too idealistically. What influences someone's judgment is overwhelming power and hatred. If the Demon Realm is overwhelmingly strong, 'people' will immediately join it. Likewise, there are people who sell their souls to the devil in order to destroy someone they hate. You can sell your soul, but wouldn't it be better to join the devil's side? 'Race' doesn't matter."

Georgie. He is good at saying things like that in a noble tone. No, I think I made a mistake too. It was only for a moment, but if you look at the unpleasant expression on his face after spitting out those words.

I tried to look at his face more closely, but an unperturbed voice called to me.

"As you know, the barbarians have a bad relationship with us. It is better to exterminate them, even considering the possibility of them siding with the demon world. Isn't that right, junior?"

“yes...?”

“That’s an excellent answer. Since my junior has supported this side, we will proceed according to my opinion regarding the barbarians. “I will report to Your Majesty, so the Margrave can just leave.”

I definitely would have raised the end of my sentence.

He couldn’t bear to say anything and just gave him an absurd look, but the Marquis was more shameless than anyone could have imagined.

The Margrave, who was looking at him as if he was being stubborn, gave him a look that told him to go away confidently, and then let out a dull sigh as if he knew that there was no point in arguing any further.

“Then I will leave first. “The two of you...”

“I thought I’d have a more conversation with my junior.”

“?”

Why me?

“Yes, I understand.”

“No sleep....”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 110

110. In fact, they knew (4)

went! I left without even looking back!

A dull silence fell. I quietly rolled my eyes and looked at the Marquis's thoughts.

What on earth do you think you have to talk to me about? As I froze, unable to turn around, wondering if the conversation was related to something bad, a gentle voice tapped my eardrums from behind me.

"Are you mad because I acted like I did?"

"...?"

"You seem angry. However, it is polite to look at people's faces, whether in anger or conversation. Even if I feel like you might want to kill me if we make eye contact."

Is this a joke? You must be kidding?! Who killed whom?!

There was no way I could kill a 'real hero' in the first place. When I turned my head in surprise, the Marquis, who made eye contact, smiled calmly, as if he had just spat out harsh words.

“Would you like to take a walk first? Or even a place you want to go?”

“...How about the outdoor banquet hall...?”

Even if things go wrong, they won't try to kill me in a crowded place. It doesn't seem like it, but people don't know what to do.

...My throat is so dry that I desperately need something to drink.

“It's a banquet hall... I like it. “If you want it, junior.”

Even though it may not be a very good place to have a personal conversation, he takes the lead as if it doesn't matter.

After a while of mindlessly following the footsteps that were not only disheveled but also soundless, I finally arrived at a brightly lit space.

—Outdoor banquet hall. Yes, it's an outdoor banquet hall, but...

‘...damn.’

Light wasn't the only thing that welcomed me there. I felt all the gaze pouring in on me and internally hit my head.

‘I moved to avoid this...!’

Am I a crucian carp head?

The nobles take note of the two heroes together. They glance at each other and whisper to each other, and then quietly approach nearby, interested in seeing what they're talking about and what they're talking about. It wasn't like he was openly interfering with the conversation, but it was also difficult to point out.

These actions were resolved when Stigma took action. He didn't say anything in particular.

He just rolls his eyes, glances at me, and then takes a step forward. He looked at the nobles without saying a word, with his head raised high and confident enough to be arrogant, but with a breathing look. The brown eyes exposed under the light had an incongruously cool glow.

Like the ebb and flow of the tide, the nobles moved away.

"Wow..."

"Why are you doing that?"

"No, nothing. "You have brown eyes."

The last words came out without any thought.

Green hair and brown eyes. I didn't think much of it, thinking that it was a color that reminded me of a tree...

"Yes, it's a very common and vulgar color."

"...?"

"Would you like a glass of wine?"

Even as I unexpectedly accepted the glass that was offered to me, I could not hide my embarrassed expression. Confusion came.

what? The way he spoke was so vulgar that I almost overlooked it, but is that it? A socialite's way of putting a sword in their words! It's a common and vulgar color. Is it because I mentioned brown eyes? Why... ah.

It's over.

'Stigma Primiro was an illegitimate child.'

I heard it came from a maid's stomach. Did the brown eyes belong to my mother, a maid?

...Let's take care of it first. I don't know if it will be resolved, but I will try to resolve it.

"Marquis."

"Call me Stigma."

In the meantime, are you allowing my name? Aren't you angry?

The liquid in the wine glass sloshes uneasily. As my eyes confirmed my unstable mind, I quietly set it down on a nearby table and faced him. The feelings of anxiety and agitation calmed down the moment I made eye contact with him, who was still smiling.

Confidence was gained.

'You're not angry.'

In the first place, I didn't have to worry about whether I should apologize for my mistake or pretend not to know and change the subject.

Because he had already sorted out the situation himself. All you have to do is pretend not to notice and ignore his intention when he asks if you would like a glass of wine.

It was unexpected consideration.

I picked up the wine glass again. As if nothing had happened, I twirled the glass and opened my mouth indifferently.

“Then... Stigma senior.”

“....”

“...?”

Why is there no answer?

When I slightly raised my head, I made eye contact with Stigma, who was staring at me. Why why?

“I said I called you junior first, but I never thought you would really call me that...”

He tilts his head slightly as if he sees something he doesn't understand and mutters softly. It felt like I was talking to myself, but I could hear it all.

...You said you were my junior first. I adjusted the rhythm to that, but is that right? This is ridiculous.

I looked at him with completely cold eyes, and as if he had just finished organizing something, he straightened his head and smiled pleasantly.

“...I guess it's okay to have at least one junior in your life.”

“...?”

“I thought he was a ruthless person, if not a murderer, but I never thought he would have such a naive side. “After all, you can't trust rumors.”

“I can hear everything.”

“So why did you call me?”

I know it’s okay to change words...

but since you were rude first, I’ll just move on. This is why people should not spit out words without thinking.

Realizing once again that ignorance is also a sin, I spoke obediently.

“Your Majesty declared the cessation of war today. When did you suggest the issue of the Barbai tribe to your Majesty?”

“My junior, after having a personal meeting with His Majesty, I came to see him and told him. Actually, it was closer to stubbornness... but anyway, the result was good, so it was okay. “Isn’t that right?”

“Stubborn...”

To that emperor?

“...You are amazing.”

The emperor may say he cares about talented people, but believing that and being stubborn is a completely different story. How is that possible?

Stigma let out a low laugh out of pure admiration.

“That’s amazing. As you know, my junior, His Majesty especially cherishes those who resemble him. “This is a level that His Majesty can accept.”

“yes...?”

“Why are you surprised? My junior, you belong to a special group among those ‘loved ones.’ “I’m guessing that your junior will tolerate a certain amount of arrogance as long as it doesn’t cross the line.”

“yes?”

“...You sure you didn’t know?”

“yes?”

“Oh my... Then, should I explain it here? Just know. “His Majesty especially cherishes those who resemble him among talented people.”

The prerequisite of ‘talented talent’ is essential.

His muttering was ignored. I opened my eyes and looked at him.

So what he’s saying is that I resemble the emperor! Where the hell are you going! If you do this wrong, won’t you be dragged into charges of insulting the royal family?!

“I’m not blonde... but I also don’t have golden eyes...”

“That’s not the problem. To make it easier to understand, shall we talk about our heroes? “My Majesty especially cherishes three of the four official heroes.”

Three heroes... First of all, General Nemeseus and Stigma will be included, and the rest will be me according to his words... To be honest, I don’t believe it. All I remember is being mentally harassed. Last time I saw you, you seemed to hate Cruel, so I know for sure that it’s not Cruel... but didn’t you just mistake the fact that you care about two heroes for three heroes?

Stigma, who had no way of knowing that I was suspicious, held up three fingers. I explain it by folding it one by one.

“A person who came up from below with skill.”

Is this the story of General Nemeseus?

“A person who does not recognize his or her own status and is obsessed with proving it.”

I’m not sure, but given the circumstances, this seems like Stigma’s own story.

But didn’t the emperor recognize himself as emperor? Just as I was wondering, a voice continued.

“—A person who killed his family with his own hands.”

“....”

I twirled the wine glass in my hand.

As if he didn’t want to miss the moment when his expression changed, he looked directly into his piercing brown eyes and raised the glass to his mouth.

“Your Majesty cherishes you the most. What I like about my junior is the same thing I like. “How can you come up with such an idea?”

Alcohol flowing down my throat.

“Would you like to talk to me about this?”

My memory was interrupted.

***

The emperor raised his gloved hand and nervously pressed the corner of his eyes. He was currently suffering from extreme stress, as if making fun of the idea that everyday life was stressful and nothing new.

I called Deon Hardt first, so let's just say that. I even understand Stigma Primiro. But now it's Starbe Illuster. Even though it's been a while since I came back, isn't this too much?

However, we cannot just ignore the situation that has come our way. He moved his hand, pressed his forehead, and said the name of the person he was annoyed with.

"So... why did you find your luggage, Lord Illuster?"

"I came to ask your Majesty something, but..."

The answer did not come right away.

The duke glanced at the emperor's gloves, trailing off, then quickly put on a natural smile and fixed his gaze on the emperor's face again.

"Are your hands okay?"

For a moment, the emperor's fingertips twitched slightly.

"...I guess you didn't come here to ask that."

"I'm just curious. "I know that those who possess the fragments of a warrior also have above-average resilience."

"Peacock."

Hearing the warning in his voice, the Duke shrugged his shoulders and took a step back.

“Okay then, let me get to the point.”

“....”

“It’s not a very serious question, so relax. “It seems like you’ve been really hot lately, but aren’t you tired?”

“If you keep saying useless things like that...”

“I think it’s time for you to hand over that position.”

I forgot how the emperor growled at his blatantly revealed desire and looked at the duke.

An indescribable face, as if it had forgotten how to express itself. The duke laughed quietly as he looked into the emperor’s dumbfounded eyes.

“You’ve had enough fun eating, right? The war against the demon world is different from the war within the human world. So, I hope that you will flexibly make concessions at this point before things become more difficult.”

“...I guess this is what you were trying to say when you said you were particularly restless today.”

From the way he talks, it looks like he has an assassin waiting nearby.

But the duke can’t do that. Even during this precarious conversation, the emperor was confident that there was nothing around him that could harm him.

That’s right, the duke.

“I want to resolve things peacefully. “Your Majesty knows.”

Not once.

“The fact that I care about a lot of things.”

Because he had never done anything to ‘definitely’ kill or bring down the emperor. At best, it’s just pressure and protests to give up the yellow crown.

It’s not that you can’t do it. The duke was certainly capable of many things. He is the head of the aristocratic faction, has an advantageous position in inciting the people of the empire through the Salvation Church, and also has ties to the revolutionary army. It’s a bonus to have one of the empire’s only four heroes under your command.

Nevertheless, the nobles’ actions to attract the crown prince and princess are suppressed so that they do not cross the line. Incitement against the people of the empire only raises the image of the duke and denigrates the image of the emperor, and is prevented from going any further. They even tied up the revolutionary army’s feet to prevent them from moving actively.

As an emperor, he couldn’t understand.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 111

111. In fact, they knew (5)

“...is it right to covet this position?”

“of course.”

“Then why do you covet this position?”

“Because Edoardo Desert is not a person worthy of the position of emperor.”

The duke had been observing the emperor intently for a very long time.

That's why I saw it. I had no choice but to see it. A child was crushed to death because he could not bear the weight of the yellow crown. The sight of him supporting the weight of the imperial crown at the cost of his life was so vivid that the duke could easily be convinced that he was not an emperor.

How can we recognize a person who has to sacrifice his own life just to have a golden crown on his head as an emperor?

“It's easy to feel guilty and get broken down by it. “An emperor must look forward and move forward, but he only focuses on the past and the things that have been lost. How can he be called an emperor?”

Are you hallucinating? I asked in a whisper.

Before anything else could come out of the Emperor's mouth, the Duke spoke again.

"There is no need to deny it. Because I'm already sure. Of course, don't ask me how I knew."

"...."

"You often touch the area around your eyes and close and open them tightly. The eyes may not be in clear focus or may be focused on empty space as if looking at something. He shows his condition so openly. Even if I don't know, I can't help but notice."

Hallucinations are evidence of guilt. If you put a wrong stamp on a document, many people's lives will be lost. So many lives were lost— people were killed —that it would have been better to go to the battlefield and swing the sword yourself .

Hallucinations increased. stamped. There were more hallucinations. After checking the list of deaths from the war, my vision became pitch black with hallucinations filled with malice.

"...No, that's not it."

The emperor pressed the back of his left hand with his right thumb.

The duke's words were eloquent, but he did not act as emperor with such clumsy resolve that he could easily be swayed.

Therefore I say it again.

“Don’t change words in a subtle way. Jim clearly asked why he coveted this position. “There is no reason why I am not worthy of the position of emperor.”

This time the Duke kept his mouth shut. The silence wasn’t very long.

“...Do you need a reason to covet power?”

“It’s not wrong, but I don’t think that’s the whole reason. “Is that really all?”

The situation has turned around. This time the emperor pushed the duke.

The duke, who maintained a consistent expression even in a not-so-pleasant situation, opened his mouth casually as if he would reply at any moment, but then paused and raised his gaze to look into the emperor’s eyes. The purple eyes that met the golden eyes were hidden under the curved eyelids as if they were closed.

“To protect something, whether a person or an object, you need power stronger than anyone else.”

“...Does someone like Kong have something to protect?”

“well. In any case, the emperor is the pinnacle of power. “Isn’t it natural to covet it?”

Therefore, the duke pledges once again.

No matter who the opponent is, even Edoardo, I will definitely take that position.

“I vaguely understand the reason, but you probably know the ball well. “There’s no way Jim would give up this position with just a few words.”

“....”

“I don’t know why you’re putting in so much meaningless effort and saying meaningless things. “I would rather take the crown from the severed head.”

“—What are you saying such scary things? “God intends to rightfully take over that position.”

Some pressure is inevitable in the process.

He bowed his head gracefully in greeting.

“Anyway, I understand your Majesty’s intentions, so I’ll leave for today.”

Your Majesty wants to enjoy war games more. Is there anything you can do about it? I can’t say anything more here or do anything, so I’ll just leave you to enjoy playing emperor a little more.

The purple snake closed its eyes and smiled.

***

There was something the emperor missed. An inconvenient truth that Deonhardt noticed, Stigma agreed to, and even the Margrave Amiable could not refute.

‘The possibility that other kingdoms will side with the Demon World.’

‘Furthermore, there is a possibility that the Empire’s nobles will betray the Emperor and join the Demon World’s side.’

The duke had already predicted that possibility from the moment the emperor declared war against the demon world.

And I met the emperor, talked with him, and became convinced.

The emperor is ruling out that possibility.

‘Your Majesty is truly naive.’

I feel like I just want to leave it alone and watch the situation unfold, but I can’t.

“I cannot lose ‘my empire’ so vainly.”

Isn’t that right?

I muttered consciously and snapped my fingers. A man dressed in black appeared somewhere in a deserted space, far from the banquet hall.

“Tell Saerin. “Use ‘them’ to spread evil rumors about the demons.”

“Exactly what kind of rumor are you talking about....”

“Anything is fine. I like the rumor that he eats betrayal and lies like he breathes, and I also like the rumor that he eats people. All you have to do is make people not believe in demons, whether realistic or illusory.”

Rumors that spread in the slums soon spread throughout the empire’s citizens, and the rumors that spread among the empire’s citizens were passed on to the nobles through employees. The rumors of the nobles will soon be delivered to the emperor, so there is no way that other kingdoms paying close attention to the empire will miss this.

If that happens, no human would dare to think about joining the Demon World. This was one of the reasons why the Salvation Church was somehow left behind.

After hearing a positive answer from the man, the duke smiled with satisfaction and continued his walking steps. And then it stops.

“...Oh, perhaps.”

“Tell me.”

“Are there any cases where a person with a warrior’s fragment loses their power or cannot use their power in a specific situation or area?”

“As far as I know, none. “If you command me, I will investigate.”

“I think there probably isn’t one, but... still, please do some research just in case.”

“yes.”

Regardless of whether the man with his head down disappeared or not, the duke lowered his head and muttered with his hand on his chin.

“That means... it’s continuous self-harm.”

The Duke knows that the Emperor does not wear gloves.

When was the bandage on his hand mentioned in a conversation with the emperor? The emperor was wary and turned his horse around. And today he came wearing gloves. The answer was obvious.

[The wound did not heal.]

Is it not recovery or is it continuous self-harm?

The emperor is a 'hero'. The hero's fragment is what allows one to overcome all human limitations. In a situation where even life expectancy is included, there is no way resilience cannot be included.

So the answer is divided into two again.

[Has the warrior's fragment lost its strength or is it a continuous self-harm?] There is no way that the emperor, who was stirring up the battlefield not long ago, has now lost his strength. Since the timing is not correct, this assumption is discarded.

So, has the hero's fragment lost its power only in terms of 'resilience'? At this point, the duke blocked his intention to delve into and analyze in more detail.

Is there any need to dwell on things that have low possibilities? The most obvious answer is right here.

'Self-harm... Self-harm... Come to think of it, I pressed the back of my hand in certain situations.'

To be precise, I raised my fingertips and pressed gently, as if twisting. It was probably a wound that had been opened.

'What was the situation?'

—When stress gets worse, when your eyes become out of focus, and in situations where the 'dead person' may come to mind.

...under.

“A terrible human being.”

I can't believe I was holding on to my hallucinations in such an ignorant way.

***

The first thing the emperor noticed upon returning to the outdoor banquet hall was none other than a knife fight taking place on one side.

The green-haired man who took a step back and was blocked by the table lowered his head with a troubled expression. The dagger that crossed over it broke the candlestick decorating the table. Wow! A loud noise rang out and muffled screams erupted from everywhere.

The emperor, seeing white hair flowing refreshingly in the center of this commotion, quietly raised his hand and covered his face.

“What is this...”

***

At that time, just 15 minutes ago, Stigma was looking at Deon Hardt, who was drinking his glass in silence.

Every time he takes a sip of alcohol, his red eyes sink with a look of reluctance, and as he takes another sip, the emotions drain from his normally expressionless face.

He watched this whole process right in front of him and smiled softly.

‘Of course it is. ‘Does the person who made such a ridiculous request to the emperor have any saneness?’

Although he was said to be subtly normal, it seems he was hiding this nature.

I learned something I didn’t expect, but I don’t really care. The reason I liked Deonhardt in the first place was not because of his personality, but because of his actions, such as ‘he destroyed my family.’

Perhaps even if Deon Hardt had been crazier than he was now or a more normal person than before, my fondness for him would still have remained the same.

‘On the contrary, his true nature was revealed, and it was surprising that he was much calmer than I expected.’

By this point, it was time to open my mouth, but there was no answer.

In the end, Stigma couldn’t wait and called Deon.

“Junior?”

“I don’t know.”

“...what?”

Bright red eyes are looking straight at me. Stigma frowned slightly, not understanding that attitude or words.

I’m not drunk, so what? I feel something is out of place. Hasn’t the full nature been revealed yet?

“That’s what my junior asked me to say at a business meeting after the 8-year war...”

“I don’t know.”

A clear signal that questions related to this will not be accepted or answered, so do not ask.

“...So you don’t know.”

For some unknown reason, Deon Hardt is sober and refuses to talk about this topic.

—In that case, all you have to do is cloud your mind.

I gestured to the driver standing nearby and took back the alcohol I had left behind.

“Would you like to have a drink? “There is some alcohol that I stole from my subordinates.”

“...Is that okay?”

“They are my subordinates, so what’s the problem? Besides, this is the type of alcohol I have banned.”

I gestured to a passing attendant, took a clean, empty glass, and placed it in my junior’s hand.

It was said to be alcohol obtained with great difficulty from the North. Stigma’s area of responsibility is the southernmost part, so it must have been difficult to obtain it.

He chuckled as he casually poured the drink containing subordinate A’s bloody tears into a glass. Deon, who was examining the glass with suspicious eyes, probably feeling quite anxious, quietly asked a question.

“If it’s banned alcohol... does it contain drugs?”

“Something like that is on the banned list, but this isn’t, so don’t worry. It’s just a little harsh. Could it be that I give drugs to my junior?”

Do you like strong alcohol?

Stigma smiled seductively. Deon, who was staring at him, took a look at the glass and drank it straight away without hesitation.

...I just made him drink it a few more times.

I shook my head. The dagger struck the spot where the face was, making the sound of cutting through the air. Stigma clearly recognized this and let out an awkward laugh.

There was a clear hissing sound just now. You really tried to kill me.

“Hmm... Junior, why don’t you quit at this point? “If this continues, the banquet hall will be a complete mess.”

“You said you were an enemy...”

“Actually, it was a lie. “Not the enemy.”

“They say they’re the enemy... They say they’re the enemy!”

this.

He took a step back and clicked his tongue softly.

‘If I had known it would be like this, I wouldn’t have lied like that.’

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 112

112. Actually, they knew (6)

it was no big deal. It was one of those very common, trivial incidents where someone drank too much and got drunk, as is usually the case whenever there is a banquet.

Until my junior, who was very drunk and slurping, asked me in a strained voice if I was an enemy.

Mischievous curiosity reared its head. To be honest, if you are asked this question by a drunk person, don't you feel like saying yes at least once? Stigma was simply excellent at execution.

So I answered.

[That's right.]

My junior's reaction was unexpected.

I laughed. I really laughed like crazy. He laughed so hard that I was worried he might lose his breath—and attacked without warning.

I was a little confused at first, but in the end it was an attack by someone who didn't have the hero's fragment and a drunken rampage. No matter how much he was the official hero of the same empire, it was close to impossible for Deonhardt to kill Stigma as long as this gap existed.

‘It would have been a different story if I hadn’t gotten drunk.’

Anyway, things happened and it can’t stay like this forever.

I tried to resolve the matter as peacefully as possible, but there is no sign of things calming down, so what can I do?

‘Suppress.’

Seeing him running around like crazy with a dagger in both hands, I didn’t have the confidence to subdue him with my bare hands, so I pulled out my sword.

I swung my dagger with the intention of just striking it away... but Deonhardt disappeared!

As I looked after the afterimage, I saw Cruel Hart holding Deon Hart in his arms a little distance away. It was almost at the same time that the emperor’s voice was heard.

“Do not kill Marquis Primiro.”

***

My younger brother was born with his pigment taken away. What was so urgent that I was born early? Even at a young age, I clearly remember how the entire family breathed a sigh of relief at having barely escaped a premature birth, even before being surprised by the unique skin color and hair.

Of course, I was shocked by the colors the child saw when he opened his eyes.

The sky took away my brother's color and, as if that wasn't enough, he also took away his health. At the same time, as if he was pricked by his conscience, he left only one thing behind, and Cruel still remembers what the doctor said at that time.

[It seems like all the health that should be distributed evenly throughout the body is concentrated in the liver!]

Even though a lot of time has passed, how can I forget these words? It is the only thing that the sky that took everything away did not take away.

The only health left for my brother Deonhardt.

'...however.'

Don't you dare try to ruin it.

'Swing your sword at my brother?'

This child was so precious that I could never hate him. To such a child. you.

'dare.'

My stomach is boiling with anger. As always, I tried to suppress it, but the emotions that I could not contain came out and the hand holding the child trembled.

Cruel quietly strengthened his arms holding Deonhart and glared at Stigma as if he were going to tear it to death. Of course, Stigma could not help but feel unfair.

However, before I could explain, Deon raised his head and saw the person holding me in his arms, and opened his mouth first.

“Are you...”

“ ...”

Are you planning on asking me if I’m an enemy?

I prepared an answer of ‘no’ and waited for another comment to come out, but Deon, who made eye contact, seemed to be frightened and moved.

“You are the enemy!”

You don’t even ask.

Cruel quickly twisted his body to avoid the swinging dagger. Although he escaped fatal injury, he was unable to prevent a scratch on his neck due to his vital area being exposed and his carelessness.

Deon didn’t stop there and continued swinging his weapon. A persistent attack that seemed to never end unless the opponent died was poured out at different targets. Stigma has long been put aside.

In this position, it was difficult to evade or defend, so I quickly put down Deon and was about to retreat when the Emperor moved.

“Go away.”

Cruel left and the emperor came in right away. Before he even realizes that the opponent has changed, he presses the side of the dagger aimed at Cruel with his hand blade and slides down to grab his wrist and subdue him.

Deon, who belatedly recognized the new person, tilted his head.

“Are you... the enemy?”

“Deon Hardt.”

“Are you the enemy?”

“Come to your senses.”

“enemy?”

“ ....”

“...The enemy.”

The moment I felt something eerie in the last sentence, the wrist I was holding suddenly became heavy and a popping sound was heard. The emperor, feeling an unpleasant vibration beneath his grip, hastily let go.

As if waiting for the moment when his eyes landed on his wrist, his other hand grasps the dagger and raises it vertically. The emperor, who barely avoided it by tilting his head, let out a laugh.

‘...I separated the wrist bone by putting my weight on it.’

It was determined that it would be difficult to remove the captured wrist using pure force, so this was used as bait.

If he had the warrior’s fragment, he could easily support the weight of a person, so no matter how much weight he put on, he was confident that his grip would not lose sight of Deon’s wrist or come down with it, so he used this to separate the wrist bone.

Since the Emperor’s goal was to subdue Deonhardt without injuring him, he would naturally have expected him to let go of his wrist. He took advantage of the moment of panic and attacked.

Since it was an act done while drunk, it was safe to say it was an unconscious calculation.

‘I can’t believe I even calculated how the enemy treats me when I judge him to be my enemy.’

Who can be sure that the enemy will not harm me? In the end, the unconscious was convinced that the opponent was not the enemy.

It’s really outrageous. I use my conscious and unconscious mind as I see fit.

‘Anyway, even my wrists are in that shape, so I guess I shouldn’t delay any longer.’

This time, thanks to his sincerity, he succeeded in subduing the rampaging Deon Hart by pressing him down on the table without causing much damage.

The emperor pressed his free hand and back together with his knees and grabbed his shaky wrist. Even though he was drunk, the body underneath him trembled as if he could clearly feel the pain.

It’s natural to be sick. So who would have done something like that? Ignoring his reaction of pain, I gently turned the wrist I was holding to gauge its location and called his name again.

“Deon Hardt.”

“...Ugh...”

“—Now it’s time to return to reality.”

Puzzle. The bones were put in at once.

“!”

Deon’s mouth opened as if he were about to scream. But no sound comes out.

The emperor, who was quietly watching the scene, removed the knee that was pressing down on his body and uttered a word.

“Breathe.”

“—Huh!”

A gasp came out. He coughed intermittently and was out of breath, then slowly blinked and slowly got up. Red eyes, which seemed to be a little brighter than before, met the golden eyes that were watching silently.

“Are you awake?”

“Your Majesty....”

“Yes.”

“I... I want to resign...”

“I’m not completely broken yet.”

It must have been time to sober up. If you look at the fact that you even made that calculation unconsciously, you’re probably already waking up.

As Deon Hardt was a strong drinker, he sobered up quickly.

“Come to your senses. “This is not a battlefield.”

“Ah...”

“Someone, please bring me some cold water.”

The person who reacted the fastest to those words was Cruel.

Even if what has already happened cannot be helped, there should be nothing more that can cause Deonhardt to be shaken by Cruelhardt’s actions. The Emperor snatched the glass of water from Cruel’s hand as he tried to approach Deon.

...Now that I think about it, Cruel Hart was the duke’s man.

When I came in, I made eye contact with the Duke, who was looking at me with an excited look on his face. The emperor’s face distorted.

“...Tsk.”

Without passing the glass over, I took a sip and held it out to Deon. After watching him obediently take it and sip it, he called a man without even turning his head.

“Stigma Primiro.”

“...Yes, Your Majesty.”

“In the first place, Jim did not place alcohol in the banquet hall that could be intoxicated by Honorary Count Hart. Explain what this is about.”

“There was alcohol confiscated from his men. “Due to the location of my territory, I had to kill a lot of people, so sometimes there were weak people who resorted to alcohol and drugs.”

“ ....”

Deon, who was drinking water for a moment, tightened his hand holding the glass. The only person who saw it was the emperor.

It’s a shame that he came to his senses, otherwise Stigma would have been the target of the attack a while ago again.

Stigma lowered his head, wondering how he could accept the emperor who did not answer.

“I’m sorry.”

“It is done.”

There is no need to escalate something that has already occurred and been resolved. Especially if the cause of the incident was people the emperor cared about.

Actually, that wasn’t why I was silent.

It is up to the general how to handle the troops under his command. The Emperor had no intention of arguing about that, so he called Deonhardt instead.

“Are you coming to your senses now?”

***

“Are you coming to your senses now?”

Yes, a lot.

From now on, I plan to erase all my memories from before, but I hope that other people will also forget about it.

“Count Hart?”

“...sorry.”

Of course that won't happen.

I don't remember exactly what happened. My wrist is throbbing and I keep coughing, but I don't remember what happened.

‘The banquet hall was destroyed, but it probably has nothing to do with me.’

Yes, I guess so.

There was a scene that came to mind in my hazy memory, but I didn't really focus on it because I had a strong feeling that I would regret it.

I took a sip of water, carefully observing the emperor's gaze. And then I made eye contact with Cruel.

“Kuk Utup kkolok kolok! Keck! Ouch!”

“...Palace!”

It's just a joke, but why bother... Ah.

I feel sick. My throat hurt like it was burning. But, as always, this kind of pain quickly slipped out of the realm of awareness.

I looked blankly at the blood on my palm and wiped it off by rubbing it on my clothes. I can't tell you how lucky I am that it's red and doesn't show up even when I wipe it. The clothes the emperor gave me today are doing their job well.

Stigma, who had been standing still the entire time, cautiously opened his mouth.

"What...poison is this?"

"No, it's not poison. At least it's not a glass of water. "Jim confirmed it himself."

Now we are excluding the assumption that it is poison. Every time something happens, he shouts 'Is it poison?!'

My guess is that this is just a combination of stress and various other things. Honestly, it was worth it. You worked hard today.

'Also, I don't remember, but I think I was shocked when I saw throbbing all over my body.'

Gung-ui comes running from the other side, panting. This time I didn't say it was okay. It's not okay.

I suddenly held out my wrist to the palace doctor.

"My wrist hurts."

"yes?"

"I want you to look at my wrist."

"Blood is flowing from your mouth..."

"It looks like you still have the aftereffects of being drunk. Ignore it and get treatment."

That's it if you're the emperor?! My wrist hurts?

But no matter how dissatisfied I look, the Emperor's orders come first. The palace doctor ignored my outstretched wrist, collected the remaining blood in his mouth, dropped it on various sticks, and then began pressing various parts of his stomach.

"Please tell me if you feel any pain."

"...."

There is nothing, you human being. It wasn't like that in the first place...

"Ugh!"

"Are you here?"

"Wait a minute...!"

That's right! That's right, stop pressing! It hurts!

He quickly grabbed Gung Yi's wrist and gave him a desperate look begging him to stop. Fortunately, it must have worked, as he winced and slowly withdrew his hand.

Finally, as if he had finished checking the color change of the stick, he slowly walked away from me and bowed to the emperor.

"Fortunately, it wasn't poison, but my abdomen was bruised because something was pressing hard on it. In normal cases, it wouldn't be at the level of vomiting blood, but..."

"If it's the devil's curse, it might be possible."

The emperor's gaze fell on me. Not the face, but a little bit below.

As I followed his gaze and traced the area around my neck, my hand reached the location of the location tracking brand that the Demon King would have engraved on me.

‘No, wait a minute. Being able to see and touch this means...’

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 113

113. In fact, they knew (7)

and were so surprised that they fastened their collars.

How dare you dress disheveled in front of the emperor? Of course, there have been times when I've been covered in blood and I feel like I've come too far to think about such things now... But there's a big difference between pretending to care and not pretending to care.

...In the meantime, where did the button run away? After trying to open the collar around his neck where the button had disappeared, he gave up and glanced up to see what the emperor was thinking.

Fortunately, he seemed to understand my embarrassed feelings and pretended not to notice.

"Check your wrists too. A bone had fallen out. Jim put it back in, but there might be a problem."

***

The devil's curse weakens the body. It is also because of this that the frequency of hemoptysis has increased. That was the information about the curse that Cruel knew.

Nevertheless, the reason why it moves as normal as before is because the information was incorrect, or is it because of a vicious effort to not show weakness?

Cruel, or rather everyone in the room, including Cruel, was convinced of the latter as they watched Deon Hart trying to quickly cover up the stigma.

‘Even though he was bleeding, he didn’t mention it and just held out his wrist saying it hurt.’

I even wiped the blood on my hands by rubbing it on the hem of my clothes.

The real weakness, hemoptysis, was covered up as casually as possible and a less important weakness was revealed instead. A weakness that has already been dealt with and is of little use even if known.

I wasn’t drunk, and it wasn’t a needless killing. The emperor seemed to have noticed this as well and turned his head away, pretending not to see, and ordered the palace doctor to treat his wrist.

“The bone has already been inserted, so there is no need for any additional treatment. We will apply a bandage, so please refrain from using your wrist for the time being. And...”

There was no further comment. The palace guard, who looked like he was going to say something more, kept his mouth shut and looked at Deon with a tearful face. The way she held his hand tightly with both hands clearly showed that she felt sorry for him.

I understand your feelings, but it’s difficult to do this. Aren’t they revealing everything that each other has been hiding and pretending not to know?

You have to make it stop. But Cruel couldn't move. The duke was watching. He had already done too much to raise suspicion, so it was dangerous for him to move any further, even for the sake of future work.

Instead, he looked back at the emperor. Fortunately, he seemed to have the same thought and quietly called the palace doctor.

"Thank you for your hard work, go away. And you, Honorary Count Hart, would do well to go back and rest."

"...Thank you for your consideration."

Deon turned his back. As if he wanted to prove that he was fine, he even refused the dedicated driver who cautiously offered to help him, and confidently left this space on his own feet.

His subordinate Senzer, who happened to be coming in, glanced at him and then cast his gaze at Cruel. Cruel paused as he lightly clenched and unclenched his fist while keeping his gaze in this direction.

'...I'm not feeling well.'

Should I do it?

It's a plan I made myself. I had someone keep an eye on me the whole time, and finally the opportunity came. You didn't have to experience it to know that it was an irreplaceable opportunity.

Implement your plan or postpone it.

...The worry was short-lived. Cruel looked around to see that the situation had been somewhat resolved and approached Senzer. I could feel the duke looking this way, but he didn't show it.

"Go tell Deon. "Just for today, don't just wander around the streets and go home right away."

he is.

I knew this was an irreplaceable opportunity.

***

Until Deonhardt was subdued by the Emperor's hand and left the banquet hall.

The cause, Stigma Primiro, who was quietly watching all of this, lowered his eyes and fell into thought.

As the situation calms down and I become more relaxed, I see something.

My junior Deon Hardt's drunkenness.

'I'm used to it.'

It feels somehow familiar.

Such extreme drunkenness must be rare. Why on earth does it feel so familiar?

I could have just passed it over, but because it was strangely annoying, Stigma dug into it with a bit of uncharacteristic persistence. I recall the situation from a little while ago, go back in time in my head, and look at each detail one by one.

—There was something that caught me off guard during the emperor's lines.

[Now it's time to return to reality.]

[This is not a battlefield.]

...Ah.

A drunk looking for an enemy. A remark made by the emperor who overpowered him, telling him to come to his senses.

Stigma saw many battles in the South. Among the current official heroes, he is probably the one who has gone through the most battles and is currently going through them. That's how much he knew about this symptom better than anyone else.

'This is not just drunkenness.'

There are symptoms that people who go through war, get injured, kill people, and see people die generally experience.

The range of symptoms is so wide and diverse that it is impossible to describe them all, but to guess at some, symptoms include hallucinations, hallucinations, extreme avoidance of crowded places, extreme aggressiveness, depression, and lethargy.

Among them, there are symptoms of becoming aggressive, where everyone you see appears to be an enemy—or you wander around looking for only the 'enemy'.

Stigma refers to this as 'Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder'. It was abbreviated as PTSD.

‘yes. ‘It’s strange that he went to war at such a young age and was still fine.’

Unlike physical shock, mental shock is an area that cannot be touched. Even the person himself is unaware of the extent and severity of the condition, so it is difficult to deal with, and depending on the person, there are often cases where the shock remains forever and has a strong impact on daily life.

I heard that Deon Hard went to war when he was 14 years old. An age where the mind is not fully matured yet.

‘After all, you were human too.’

There is no disappointment. Rather, I was amazed.

If you interpret the fact that these symptoms appear only when your mental power is weakened due to alcohol, doesn’t that mean that when you are sober, you are suppressing them with surprising mental power?

The more you get to know him, the more interesting he is.

Feeling that his liking for Deonhardt was growing, Stigma smiled visibly.

***

I left the banquet hall as if running away. Lien offered to help him, but he refused. Rather, he gave a different command.

[No, thanks. Rather, I want you to stop others from chasing you. For example, our knights or the corps that are coming over there... Huh? step? Why are you here... Ah, I brought you here.]

[Count...?]

[Follow orders.]

[Lord Lien? No, wait a minute. Count! You left your robe behind!']

[...Please send Lord Lien.]

[Yes.]

This is roughly what happened with the appearance of Dan, who had been forgotten.

Lien, who had obediently sent Dan in front of me, smells the scent and retreats, saying he will catch our knights who are sneaking in. I heard someone a little distance away insisting on following me and getting hit, but I couldn't turn around.

I made eye contact with Dan. Ugh, can you get rid of those sad eyes?

"...It's because of the alcohol. "I didn't do it on purpose, I just forgot for a moment because of the alcohol."

"I see."

"...sorry."

"You don't need to apologize. "Hurry up and put on your robe."

He looks comfortable putting on his robe, as if he is going to help him with his clothes.

I was speechless for a moment as I saw someone familiar in that sight. ...Maybe it's my mood?

“Well... it’s okay, I’ll put it on.”

“no. “I will help you.”

“...Ed?”

“Who is that?”

A strange... or rather, unfamiliar man smells like a familiar man.

I was making a shocked expression as I remembered Ed, the lieutenant of the Demon World, and Dan seemed to be shocked by my expression, but then his expression hardened as if he could not give in.

I hope that such a firm will will be shown elsewhere.

“This is an apology, so you don’t have to feel burdened.”

“Apology...?”

“I dared to test the Master.”

“...?”

I don’t know. I don’t know. What bullshit is that about a test? When did that happen?

Anyway, looking at the atmosphere, it seems like they will never give in. Then you can just not wear it.

“Now that I think about it, I think I don’t need to wear a robe. “It’s night anyway...”

“It’s not that problem. Are you going to go around exposing your chest like that?”

Ah, I reflexively loosened my tangled collar and smoothed it out. There was the devil's stigma around this time.

As I was sweeping it with my fingertips, the voice continued as if it wasn't over yet.

"And what about the striking appearance? "White hair and red eyes are almost like a symbol, aren't they?"

"...Give it to me. "I'll wear it."

"I'll put it on for you."

"...."

Did they put honey on my clothes?

Anyway, I couldn't refuse any longer, so I obediently accepted the outerwear service. It felt strange to be served by someone who reminded me of Ed as I wasn't an employee and wasn't that close to him, but I was satisfied because I was able to chase that persistent guy away with this.

Now I'm barely alone.

'At first, I was embarrassed and wanted to be alone...'

Looking at my messed up clothes and the state of the banquet hall, it was clear that I had done something when I was drunk.

There is a reality in the world that cannot be denied.

I don't remember what happened and I don't have the courage to lift the veil, but whether I knew it or not, the circumstances I could see were mentally beating me up.

It was definitely like that...

‘I’m mentally tired right now so I want to be alone...?’

Only you, you bastard.

If your plan was to distract me and offset my embarrassment, I’d say it was a huge success.

When I think of Dan, my head starts pounding. So let’s think differently. When I was drunk at the banquet hall...

‘Not like this!’

Embarrassment that I had forgotten about comes flooding back. Quickly think of something else...!

...Yes, of the palace. Let me recall the doctor who examined me. Not only did the person examine me, but he also acted somewhat unusually.

‘At first, I did something when he held my hand.’

I wrote on my palm with my fingers. How absurd it was to interpret it.

[I told you to please stay healthy!]

I even wrote the exclamation point very clearly.

Uh... okay... and I also gave him some tonics....

When I saw him in bewilderment, he looked at me with depressed eyes and I got goosebumps. Why is a man who is old enough to be like this?

It’s a shame that the emperor stopped him at the right time. If he had delayed a little longer, he might have punched him.

‘Oh shit.’

Instead of calming down, my mind became more dizzy. I chose the wrong thought to think about.

I wiped my goosebump-covered arms and accelerated my steps. I should hurry back home and rest.

“Honorary Count Hart?”

“...?”

What are you tired? Who are you?

“Hello, my name is Senzer and I serve Cruel Hart. “I came to convey the words of Cruel.”

“....”

What did Lien do instead of stopping this guy?

...Oh, I told you to stop the crazy dogs. It’s not like there are multiple bodies, and it’s worth missing just one guy like this.

It’s Cruel’s message... I wonder what bullshit they are talking about. I nodded my head with the intention of giving it a try.

“He told me not to wander around the streets just for today and to go home right away.”

“...what?”

For a moment, I couldn’t believe my ears.

What, can you be my guardian? What on earth are you planning?

I looked at him hoping he would explain something more, but he disappeared without even answering my question. Because he resembles his superior, his unluckiness is sky-high. Tsk.

‘...Let’s get back to the main topic first.’

Just calm down and think about it.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 114

114. In fact, they knew (8)

Are those words sincere advice or bait to induce me to take action?

Cruel must also know very well that I will not obey his words. So, is it still Judo?

‘When I was young, I often played chess with Cruel.’

Because I was too weak to go out of the mansion, I played several board games with Cruel. The best of them was chess.

Inside the game board, there is bait using chess pieces, and outside the game board, psychological warfare using pieces.

‘I wouldn’t go there.’ ‘Is that really a good choice?’ ‘I was a bit surprised by this.’ ‘An excellent choice.’

Which one is sincere and which one is false? Is that word in front of me really a bait or an imaginary number?

Because we had played chess countless times, winning and losing, we knew each other’s thoughts to a certain extent. There’s no way Cruel would have thought that I wouldn’t think of the possibility of ‘judo’. So is this advice sincere?

'...Then what do you do? Even if I'm worried, I feel bad, and even if it's bait, I feel bad.'

So my choice is made.

'If we're going to follow Cruel's words, it's better to move, even if it's just bait.'

Thanks to you, I forgot about my fatigue. It's been a long time since I ignored the pain, so I take to the streets.

I put on the robe I was carrying and boldly turned around to walk towards the mansion and headed towards the nearby street.

***

It's noisy.

"How long on earth are you planning to put off the revolt!"

"Are you planning on committing a coup?"

It's really noisy.

The type of people who can't see even one inch ahead and squeal with desire. Daniel frowned quietly, as if thinking of these people as the leaders gave him a headache, but then he straightened up as if he had never done that before.

In this situation, raising your voice together will only result in an emotional fight. A voice aimed at persuasion came out calmly.

"The timing is not good. It looks like a war will soon break out between the demon world and the human world, but we can't take down the empire that holds the greatest power in the human world..." "

Is the so-called leader of the revolutionary army taking the emperor's side now?!"

"Every time I tell you to prepare to kill the emperor, which I will do soon, you just repeat that it is not a good time...! What on earth! "Aren't you intentionally delaying the action?"

Quang!

Silence has come. Daniel slammed the table harshly to silence them and lowered his head and slowly exhaled.

The stress and irritation that was rising to the top of my head slowly subsides with each breath. After taking a few moments to catch his breath, he broke the silence and spoke.

"...Before, there were people who ran out and said they would kill the emperor at will."

These foolish fools were completely exterminated by the emperor's hand, to the point where it was laughable that they rushed in so greedily.

"Because of them, all the strength we had gained was lost."

"...."

"Did you think that defeating the imperial army was everything? "If there is someone who really thinks that way, I would recommend that they resign from their leadership position."

Some people flinched as if they had been stabbed.

“It’s not just the Imperial Army that’s the problem. The emperor himself is strong. Very strong! No, before discussing his military power, in order to legitimately succeed in the revolution, you must enter through the main gate of the imperial palace!”

The methods of those before were wrong from the start.

How can a cowardly attack on the emperor when he was alone be called a revolution? That is just an assassination, an attempted assassination of the emperor, and treason by reactionaries.

No matter how many people gather to kill the emperor, their cause is ultimately a ‘revolution’ to create a world without a caste system. Actions that went against it could not be tolerated.

“Do you really have to go in from the front?”

“You are asking the obvious. “If you act like a rat, the only thing you will get is a bad image to match.”

What matters is the image. Entering through the front door is also one of the performances for this purpose.

Whether Sejak opens the door or breaks it in, entering through the front door becomes a symbol.

The public is easily swayed by what they see.

So, no matter how you act in the shadows, let’s act confidently under the sun. We didn’t do anything wrong. Even if something was wrong, it was only for the greater good.

“What do you think our actions until now were for? To undermine the emperor’s power? Of course, that is true, but it is only an additional purpose. The key is to gain the support of the people of the empire and lower the emperor’s support.”

In the end, the purpose was achieved to some extent.

He gained public support by punishing vicious lords and punishing arrogant nobles who looked down on the people of the empire. In the process, there was a conflict with the Order of Murderous Ghosts, and a bomb exploded incorrectly, causing damage to a private house, but all of the resentment was directed towards the Order of Murderous Ghosts.

It was an unexpected benefit that arose because the ideology of the revolutionary army won the favor of the people of the empire and the bad image of the Order of Murderous Knights.

“The meaning of our existence and the legitimacy of our actions come from the people of the empire. “Without their support, we would be nothing more than a group of traitors and not a revolutionary army.”

So we have to persuade the people of the empire. You must convince them and proudly kill the royal family in front of them to be recognized as justified.

Daniel paused for a moment to catch his breath and stretched out one arm.

“It takes a lot of power to reach the emperor through the main gate of the imperial palace, and it also takes a lot of power to kill the person who holds the warrior’s fragment.”

Who was the one who acted arbitrarily and undermined the revolutionary army's strength?

He was the one urging the rebellion just like the people in front of him.

So you have no more say than this. I explained it this way, but no matter how thick-faced they are, no one would dare express their opinion.

—I won.

“The timing is not good due to the power shortage. So let me ask you. “Is there anyone who still thinks that the revolt should be carried out?”

“ .... ”

There was no rebuttal.

Daniel, who had once discouraged the leadership, left the conference room with Paul, who had been watching the situation from the side.

Paul, who was walking down a dark secret passage in quiet silence, quietly raised his head and checked on Daniel. As expected, a deep look of fatigue appeared on his face, as if he had been under a lot of stress during the meeting.

At times like this, he would go to see his mother.

After thinking about that, Paul suddenly stopped in front of the crossroads. Daniel, who was mindlessly heading down the passage back to his dorm, belatedly looked back at him.

“Bye.”

“huh?”

“There is no need for you to lead me down the path I know.
“I’ll go back to the dorm as is, so you can just go straight to your mother.”

Daniel, who was dazed as if he had been hit by an unexpected remark, grinned and placed his hand on Paul’s head.

“You’re all grown up.”

“You’ve already grown up since the first time we met.”

“Okay, okay.”

The playful smile soon turned into a friendly smile.

“...thanks.”

I’ve become quite accustomed to the warmth of others, but it seems I’m not immune to situations like this yet.

Paul, who was completely frozen, muttered that he was saying all sorts of things, and eventually, unable to overcome his embarrassment, he ran away and went back to his dorm. Daniel chuckled and walked away.

That smile didn’t last long.

‘....’

Daniel wandered the streets in a daze. According to the original plan, I should still be with my mother, but I had no choice because I was kicked out.

I feel dizzy. Even though he had gotten angry at his colleagues who were taking care of his mother just a little while ago, his emotions did not seem to subside.

The scene he faced was that shocking.

‘My mother... was bleeding...’

She coughed up blood. That alone is shocking, but this has been going on for a long time. Even though my colleagues knew about it, they hid it under the pretext of my mother’s request.

I understand it with my head. His life revolved around his mother. Even the reason I created the revolutionary army was because of my mother, so what can I say? So, if there was a problem with his mother’s health, it was clear that he would also wander around without being able to focus.

I hope my son doesn’t get hurt. The mental health of revolutionary leaders is important. So it was worth hiding it.

‘but.’

Understanding and feeling were two different things. Is it possible that he devoted so much of his life to his mother and didn’t know about it?

Without thinking, I wandered the streets where the festival was taking place. It was said that it was held to show off the strength of the empire even while it was at war with other kingdoms. If it had been before, I would have clicked my tongue at the waste and bravado of the empire, but right now I couldn’t think about anything.

I feel calm, as if being so excited was a lie, perhaps because I was already so angry. No, rather than being calm, it would be better to say that I was ecstatic.

“...uh.”

As I was just wandering the streets wherever my feet took me, I bumped into someone who was pushed around by the crowd for a while.

The smell of alcohol is wafting in the air. Is he drunk? It was a little unpleasant, but I was about to ignore it because there were so many people.

“Cough.”

“...?!”

The other person cried out and spat out blood. Daniel, who realized this fact half a beat later because the other person was wearing a hood, opened his eyes wide.

Even so, I couldn't escape the shock of the truth I had just encountered, and my pale face became even more pale.

“Look at this. Are you okay?”

“....”

“Come on, come to your senses... Ah, doctor. “I have to take you to the doctor...”

My hands are shaking. Daniel gave strength to the hand supporting the other person.

Calm down, this person is not your mother. So there's no need to be so upset.

All you have to do is stay calm and take them to a nearby doctor. But....

‘Is there a doctor near here? If so, where is it? Wouldn't you waste a lot of time in the process of finding a doctor? And what if this person dies?’

...shit!

I picked up an unknown patient.

He knows he is overly emotional. But what can you do? If someone with the same symptoms as my mother died today, I don't think I would sleep well.

'There is only one doctor I know.'

He is the only doctor nearby who clearly knows the location.

Although he knew it was something he should not do as the leader of a revolutionary army, Daniel, who had already been eaten by his emotions before his reason could think and control him, was moving.

***

What is this?

Passers-by on the street were talking about a festival and mentioned a specific street, so I went there, but someone gave me a strong shock to my back and pushed me, causing me to vomit blood on someone else's clothes.

Then that person picks me up and runs?!

The further I go, the more I go to places with fewer people... Huh? The alley walls crack, the ground opens, and even a secret passage is revealed?

'What is this!'

I rolled my eyes under the hood that half-hidden my face, but when I felt the other person's gaze fall on me, I quickly closed my eyes.

...Let's just pass out for now.

***

I finally committed it.

If others find out, they will discuss his qualifications as leader. Since they are greedy, it is obvious that they will try to bite them in any way possible.

However, it is not yet known and I have no regrets because it ultimately saved the life of the person in front of me. Daniel, who had postponed the treatment, anxiously waited for the doctor's words.

"There is no danger to life. "There is no need to take any action. Just let him rest well."

"But the blood..."

"He was a weak person to begin with. It seems like it was a very stressful situation. "There are signs of other physical shocks, but they are just things that have already been taken care of or that do not need to be taken."

"Ah...."

That's good.

My legs lost strength and I fell down. As I wiped my face with both hands and let out a deep sigh, the old doctor asked me a question.

"Did you know better than that and bring me here?"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 115

115. In fact, they knew (9)

“...yes? “What... do you mean?”

“You didn’t know. “I’m going to pretend I didn’t see it, so it’s probably better to see it in person.”

As soon as I felt relieved, an ominous feeling ran down my back.

I felt like what I had done was a bigger deal than I thought.

I jumped up from my seat and opened the closed hospital room. A man was lying on the bed with his robe exposed and his face exposed.

Palely white skin and white hair. At this point, Daniel couldn’t help but laugh.

“...ha ha ha.”

What kind of day is today? I don’t know why terrible things happen all at once.

I think I know who that guy is. No, let’s not fool ourselves. Daniel knew very well who that man was. I can’t be sure because my eyes are closed, but if my prediction is correct, there are red eyes hiding under those eyelids.

A sigh-like voice filled the hospital room.

“...Deon Hart.”

A person who must be eliminated as a priority for the revolutionary army.

Only then did I understand the doctor's attitude. Also, the fact that he gave me tremendous consideration.

“Why?”

I've already used up all my mental power for today. Any more than this was the limit.

He subdued the leaders of the rampaging revolutionary army, saw his mother coughing up blood, and saved someone who had the same symptoms as her. But now I have to kill that person?

‘no. ‘I can't do it.’

At least today Daniel can't kill Deonhardt. He was sure.

‘....’

I approached him as if I was possessed. The quick-witted old doctor quietly closed the door to the hospital room, and in a quiet space where time seemed to have stopped, Daniel silently sat on the chair in front of the bed.

You don't know how lucky you are. Originally, he would have died as soon as his true identity was revealed to me.

I slowly got up and placed my right hand on the bed. Just extend your left hand and touch the guy's neck. Perhaps because of the lack of blood, I felt a slightly faster pulse.

‘...If he was Deon Hart on paper, he would have opened his eyes and reacted the moment he touched the bed... or rather, the moment he got close to him. ‘I guess I’m not feeling well after all.’

I withdrew my hand. I was about to leave, but belatedly, I noticed his disheveled clothes. To be precise, it was a strangely shaped brand revealed through the disheveled collar.

—Yes, I was told that I was cursed by the Demon King.

Did they say it weakens the body? Nevertheless, because the experience accumulated over a long period of time on the battlefield does not go anywhere, combat ability is treated separately.

Therefore, even though Deonhardt was cursed by the Demon King, he still ranks high for elimination by the revolutionary army...

“Even if I don’t kill him, he won’t be dead for long.”

Look at this defenseless figure who still closes his eyes because even if he stands up immediately and is on guard, it is not enough. Even if it’s not him, I think I’m going to die at the hands of someone soon, so why bother getting my hands dirty?

I woke up rationalizing it like that. I kept thinking of my mother and couldn’t stay here any longer.

As I left the hospital room, I ran into the doctor waiting in front of me. He looks over his shoulder at the hospital room out of the corner of his eye, as if trying to check if Deon Hardt is dead or alive, and then makes eye contact.

Daniel shook his head slowly.

“When he wakes up, send him back without being seen by others. Of course, he shouldn’t have to memorize the route. And this matter....”

“I will keep quiet. “I’m getting more forgetful these days anyway, so I’ll forget it soon.”

“...But please don’t forget about security. “Don’t forget to put on your eye patch.”

“yes.”

I just turned my back and left this place. As I walked down the hallway, I tried to somehow recover my spirit that had passed the limit.

Normally, I would have gone to see my mother and rested, but that is not possible now. Instead of thinking about your mother any more, let’s think about Deonhardt. For example, the devil’s curse.

‘Curse... Curse... Was the hemoptysis caused by the curse?’

Hemoptysis... mother.

Despite Daniel’s efforts, the stream of consciousness that had been forcibly returned returned to focus on his mother.

As I cursed, it suddenly occurred to me that if Deonhardt was cursed by the Demon King, then my mother must have been cursed by the world.

‘After a difficult life, I came back with hemoptysis.’

Every time I saw a weakened body, I felt like I didn’t have enough time. I had no idea that it would come so suddenly and so realistically without warning.

The blood from my mother was warning me. Your mother's time is running out.

'We have to hurry.'

Before my mother dies, I must show her her ideal world.

Only then did Daniel know where his steps were heading. Yes, I already knew. In order to shorten time, you have to meet 'him'.

Daniel calmed his expression and quickened his pace. His faster pace revealed his impatience.

***

Wow, I thought I was going to die.

When that guy put his hand on my neck, I was nervous because I thought he was really trying to strangle me. My heart is still pounding because of that, but thankfully I didn't notice?

I slowly opened my eyes and looked around.

Maybe it's because it's a hospital room, but it looks ordinary on the outside. But I know this is no ordinary place.

I don't know for sure, but considering how complicated the process was to get here, I think it might be a secret organization...

'...Then did I get caught? 'Have you been taken hostage?'

They may have been brought in for treatment purposes at first, but not now.

My appearance must be quite unique. Not only did he just try to strangle me, but after seeing this face, it would be safe to say that his true identity has already been revealed.

‘So let’s bounce.’

I don’t know the way, but wherever I go, I’m sure there will be an exit. I’d better get out of here first.

I slowly raised my upper body, then lay down and closed my eyes. I felt a buzz outside.

Sure enough, the door opened and someone came in.

‘Is this the person from a little while ago?’

The sound of footsteps gets closer.

My nerves were tense. The footsteps, which were getting closer and closer in a strange tension, stopped only when they reached right next to me.

An unfamiliar voice was heard.

“...How long are you going to pretend to faint?”

“!”

I was so surprised that I opened my eyes without realizing it.

An old man with gray hair smiles softly as he looks directly into my clearly visible eyes. A voice without a trace of hostility continued.

“You have to deceive the person you want to deceive. “I am a doctor.”

“....”

“Follow me. “I will take you outside.”

really? You’re taking me outside for nothing? No, rather...

he pointed to the eyepatch in the old man’s hand.

“that...?”

“That’s because it’s a bit difficult to memorize the route.
please understand.”

“ ....”

The old man grinned as if he couldn’t even see my expression.

***

Upon returning to the office, Cruel paused for a moment upon encountering an unexpected person.

“...Your Excellency the Duke.”

Why is the Duke here? If I had something to do, I wouldn’t have called instead of coming.

Even what he is looking at is the chessboard on the desk. Cruel realized later that he had not cleaned up the chessboard because he was in a hurry to leave, so he put his back and hid his hand that was about to flinch.

The duke glanced at him and slowly straightened his back.

“You’re here.”

“What brings you here?”

“I came because I thought we needed to talk about my participation in the hunting competition. “Even so, there are a lot of things to worry about, but I don’t want to waste my time and energy with unnecessary misunderstandings.”

“....”

Of course, we’ll have to wait and see whether that was a misunderstanding or not.

The duke swallowed his heart and smiled.

“Oh, before that.”

“...?”

“Kneel down.”

For an instant, the green eyes shook slightly.

As if wondering if what I had heard was really what he was saying, the green eyes facing the duke met the ever-smiling violet eyes and lowered them as if in resignation.

One knee touched the ground and Cruel’s head was lowered.

An example of a knight to his lord.

Since nothing is certain yet, there is no need to cross the line and be hostile towards him. Since Cruel was an undeniably good force, the Duke was satisfied with that and moved on.

“I participated in a hunting competition.”

“yes.”

“....”

“....”

A subtle silence came.

The Duke looked down at Cruel for a moment as if at a loss for words, then opened his mouth with a sigh.

“great. “I say it straight away without saying anything.”

“....”

“—Did you think I didn’t know?”

Cruel’s eyes trembled. I can’t tell you how fortunate I am to have my head down at this moment. If you were making eye contact with the duke, you would most likely have noticed the shaking.

How much did you notice? How much should I say? It’s unlikely that he even figured out the ‘plan’.

‘Answer...’

I have to answer.

My head spins tightly. The silence was getting longer. Just when I thought this was going to be a really big problem, the Duke continued.

“Why did you save Deonhardt?”

With great generosity, he kindly points out and pushes back on the past that was overlooked at the time.

“They tried to persuade me to request murder when I could have used the revolutionary army, so I gave permission, but they arbitrarily set a condition that they would pay me half of the promised amount even if I was injured..." "...." "Let's see, let's see, so the topic is also He moved without knowing. "Did you think I didn't know that it was to lower the chance of Deonhardt dying?"

Those who move for the purpose of money act more insincerely than revolutionary soldiers who are fascinated by the cause.

Cruel chose the request.

Even those who work for money value their lives. So, if you create a situation where you can get a lot of money just by injuring someone, there is no reason to go out of your way to kill them.

Cruel spent his own money to create such a situation.

"Besides, in this hunting competition, I went so far as to save Deon Hart myself."

What on earth were they thinking and doing such a thing? Does he really want to kill Deonhardt?

"Please explain."

The purple eye light shone brightly. It was indeed a sharp attack, but Cruel felt reassured.

I guess you didn't notice everything.

Since the calculations have been made, there is no need to take any more time. I opened my mouth without delay.

“I wanted to kill him with my own hands.”

“...If that’s the case, you should have said it a long time ago. “You just wasted manpower.”

“sorry.”

“That’s it.”

There is no way the duke’s suspicions can be resolved just like this. There were many loopholes in his answer.

The duke also knew this, but instead of going into detail, he chose a different method.

“I don’t think you would think that your doubts would be resolved to this extent.”

“ ....”

“Therefore, I propose a bet.”

While telling Cruel to get up, the Duke walked leisurely and stood in front of Cruel’s desk. He picks up the black king that was pushed off the chessboard and slowly examines it.

“Deon Hardt must die. “Up until now, I have left it to the Lord and issued orders through him, but now that there is room for doubt, I cannot just sit back and ignore it.”

“ ....”

“Please move to kill Deon Hardt with your light. I will also move separately. Whoever kills him first will be the winner of the bet. “The benefits to the winner... should we leave it to the winner?”

This means that the loser must grant the winner’s wish.

The duke has a lot of money and a lot of people he can spend it on. It was clearly an unfair bet, but Cruel had no choice.

Maybe that's why, instead of the obvious answer, something else came out.

“...Why do you want to kill Deonhardt so much?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 116

116. In fact, they knew (10)

Now, we know that Deon had a hard time knowingly or unknowingly in the Hart family, who were naturally blunt and showed little emotion on their faces and were not good at expressing themselves.

When I went to war due to a document error, I had no idea that there would be a problem and immediately blamed my family, so I couldn't help but realize how little trust my family had in me.

However, while Cruel acknowledged Hart's partial responsibility for the extinction incident, he did not place all of the blame entirely on me and my family. Because there was a more direct culprit for which full responsibility could not be placed.

Peacock.

He sent Deon Hardt to war.

I don't know why or why they did what they did, but they changed the list where Cruel Hart's name was supposed to be on and sent people they couldn't communicate with to pull Deon Hardt out of the mansion.

Even my father's gentle persuasion didn't work. Despite the acceptable alternative of sending Cruel instead, they only looked for Deon Hart, as if they had been brainwashed.

I couldn't understand.

'Because that child did something wrong.'

Cruel, who belatedly learned that this incident was related to the Duke, has been quietly keeping an eye on the Duke from then on.

An unexplained malice towards Deon Hardt. It showed no signs of abating even after the war ended. No, on the contrary, it has become stronger.

That's why I went under him on purpose...

'That's later.'

Now is not the time to think about that.

The duke's head rose at the rare question. There was a faint suspicion in his eyes.

He usually only answered questions without speaking first. Did he really want to save Deonhardt?

As the duke's eyes narrowed, Cruel seemed to realize that he had asked the wrong question, and added a little later.

"I have every reason to kill him. "But Your Excellency, it seems that the reason is not sufficient."

"Is it not enough that, as a representative of the noble faction, I must kill the emperor's dog?"

"...."

“It seems like it’s not enough.”

I have a good feeling.

I’m certainly not trying to get rid of him for that reason alone. Deonhardt is a threat to the Empire.

The duke simply could not ignore such a threat from the perspective of the future ruler of the empire.

Why is Deonhardt a threat to the Empire?

“The reason may be to recall the order I gave to Sir Deonhardt when he was on his way on a mission from the Emperor.”

[If you follow the traces of the revolutionary army, there will be someone watching Deon Hardt’s back under the emperor’s orders. Kill him. And if you have the means to chase after Deon Hardt, check where he is going and then come.]

“....”

“Ah, you don’t know.”

By the time he finished the job, Deon Hart had already left.

I don’t know if he really doesn’t know or is just pretending not to know, but if he had followed Deonhardt and checked where he was going, he would have inferred to some extent that he had something to do with the demon world.

The duke touched the area around his heart and smiled.

“If you don’t know, there’s nothing you can do. “That’s all I have to say.”

He knew that Deonhardt was the commander of the Demon King's army.

If anyone found out about this, they would be curious.

If you are a person with a working mind, you will first consider 'since when?' before asking 'how and why'.

The answer to that is simple.

'From the beginning.'

The Duke returned to his office after refusing Cruel's offer to take him there, sat down and leaned his upper body against the backrest.

A faint sneer appeared on his lips.

'I knew it from the beginning. 'It was because of me that Deonhart came to the attention of the Demon King in the first place and went to the Demon King's Castle.'

Why did the duke send Deon Hardt to the battlefield during the Eight Years' War?

Why did they block the count's request to the imperial family to bring him back, and why did they come up with the opinion that Deonhardt should be sent to the Demon King's Castle as a companion of a warrior?

Why did Deon Hardt, the son of a nobleman, start out as an ordinary soldier, and who made him become a vanguard?

The root of all of this ultimately boils down to one thing.

"A contract with the devil."

Deonhardt was the duke's bait to draw the interest of the bored demon king.

What kind of ill feelings could there have been towards the other person who lived only in the mansion and had no contact whatsoever? It was just bad luck that Deonhardt was dragged into the battlefield.

It's not even malicious intent, it's just bait out of necessity. The Duke put his hand over where his heart was, ignoring the thought that if Cruel found out, he would have clenched his fist to the point of bleeding. I feel like I have the power to defy the rules of the world if I just put my mind to it.

The Duke's heart contains the demon king's contract and the magical power gained through it.

Contrary to my expectations that I could make a contract by simply summoning him, I was so embarrassed when the Demon King refused, saying he was not interested.

[I would like to propose a bet.]

[Bet?]

[Yes, it would be quite interesting.]

In that situation, the Duke thought of a boy he had happened to meet at Count Hart's residence a long time ago when he was visiting on official business.

***

"Red eyes, white hair, pale skin."

"I thought there were no red eyes among humans."

"As far as I know, he is a human. Even young."

“That’s a bit interesting, but what does that have to do with betting? “If you just threw something out there that might pique my interest....”

“That’s not possible. First, let’s listen to the end. “The child is said to have been weak and has never been outside the house since he was born.”

The duke widened his eyes as he faced the reversed white and black eyes.

“If such a nobleman were to go to war, how long would he be able to endure?”

“...Hoo?”

“These are the betting conditions.”

A child known to be human despite his unique appearance.

A cruel bet proposal that threw away my conscience and the uniqueness of having never left the house due to my weak body.

This works. Usually, people who are dull from boredom look for things that are stimulating. Even excluding the special setting of the child itself, none of the Demon King’s contractees, which may not be many, would have made such a bet.

“I heard that the situation in the human world is unusual... but is a war really going to break out?”

“Yes, because our king, who ascended the throne this time, launched a provocation against all kingdoms by naming the kingdom ‘Empire’. “There are already large and small armed conflicts taking place with neighboring kingdoms.”

So what's the answer to the bet?

The Demon King, who was lost in thought for a moment at the unexpected information, nodded.

"good. "I bet on 'survival.'"

"yes?"

'Survival', not 'how long can you endure'.

"You set the condition in the first place as 'how long can I hold out', so you will choose 'death', right? "The deadline is until the end of the war in which the child participated."

"yes? yes."

weird. The story was turning in this side's favor.

He must have clearly said that the child was weak and had never been outside the world.

The Demon King laughed as if he sensed the Duke's confusion.

"Betting is only fun if you bet on the unfavorable side."

***

After that... it was obvious.

Deonhardt must be killed before the war ends. Since the Demon King was watching, the duke was unable to take direct action, and indirectly tried to create a situation in which he could easily die.

For example, having a nobleman's son participate in the war as an ordinary soldier like conscripted commoners.

However, since he did not die, they made him the leader of the vanguard.

It was easy to manipulate documents because issues such as transfers had not been resolved not long after the king came to the throne by force, and war broke out almost immediately after his accession to the throne.

‘It was obviously a hastily constructed vanguard made up of commoners and poor people, so I thought they would die soon...’

Deon Hardt managed to survive. No, rather, it became famous for its cruelty and ‘immortality’.

A vanguard that never dies. These murderers brutally kill as many people as they can, making people reluctant to even get close to them. Master Deonhardt, who commands and leads them.

He became a hero and the eight-year long war was over.

It was the duke’s defeat.

‘The contract... should I give up?’

His theory is that the more power and power the better, and his instinct to rise to higher ground.

It made me want to make a contract with the devil, but that’s okay. It’s a little disappointing, but the contract was just a strength to prepare for an unexpected situation.

Even if I had signed the contract in the first place, I had no intention of using it unless it was a truly urgent situation.

[I’ll put another condition on it.]

Nevertheless, the Demon King extended his hand to him who lost his appetite in disappointment.

[Send Deonhardt to me. Then, I will give you a portion of my magical power.]

[....]

[It is not a complete contract... Yes, it can be considered a half-contract.]

Ah. A smile slowly spread across the Duke's expressionless face.

The bet was a loss, but the duke did not fail. The ground food he had laid was clearly demonstrating its power.

A bait offered to attract the interest of the Demon King. For eight years, the Demon King received news of Deonhardt in various ways, and sometimes used magic to observe him personally. It's not surprising that you become interested in him in the process.

[I think it would be possible with my own strength to send him to the Demon King's Castle, but to capture him...]

[It's my role. know. That's enough.]

And.

The duke insisted that Deonhardt be selected as a warrior's companion and sent to the Demon King's Castle, and for some reason, the Emperor accepted this and sent him to the Demon King's Castle.

He might die on the way, but looking at his luck so far, he probably won't die. Well, there's nothing you can do if you die.

Either way, he will never see Deonhardt again. There's no way the devil would easily let go of something he got his hands on.

I thought...

[The hero's body has been recovered!]

Deon Hart has returned alive. And carrying the hero's body!

On this day, the duke uttered a double curse for the first time in his life.

'At first, I wondered how this happened...'

As time passed, the doubts were gradually resolved.

The commander of the 0th Corps of the Demon King's Army, who gradually began to be mentioned at some point. Deonhardt periodically travels to and from somewhere under the name of a secret mission from the emperor. And the identity of the commander of the 0 Corps is kept a complete secret both in the demon world and the empire.

—Deon Hart is the commander of the 0 Corps. Even though the emperor knew about this, he turned a blind eye to it.

A person who holds a place in the demon world is also considered an important figure in the empire? Dangerous. The Emperor even cared for Deonhardt a lot. What would happen if such a person turned to the devil's side?

'I have to kill him.'

You must put aside the emperor and kill for the sake of the empire.

It was a natural conclusion.

‘I don’t know if I can kill you, but...’

If you keep knocking, you will die someday.

He is a man who went to war and became a hero at a young age, having never even held a sword. I’m a little worried, but I suppress my anxiety, saying that if I keep trying, one day I will break through the shield of luck.

smart.

“Duke Daniel has come to visit.”

There was news of an unscheduled visit by a guest.

....

“I found someone with good writing skills in Ireon. “I plan to use this to sway public sentiment.”

This was what Daniel, who had asked to meet on a whim, said before he even sat down.

“...Are you planning to leave a message on the street?”

“yes.”

“....”

The duke closed his mouth, not knowing what to say.

I can be sure of one thing. The man in front of me right now is out of his mind.

Pale complexion. Eyes trembling as if nervous.

...Now that I think about it, I once heard that his mother had begun to bleed. I heard that they were hiding it from the leader, but as time passed and there was no news, they tried to hide it well, but it seems they were eventually found out.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 117

117. Individual movements (1)

"...I understand your rush, but it would be better to calm down first. "You don't know that it's a bad time to do something like that."

"So I just came up with this line. "If it weren't for that, it would have been inciting rather than shaking up public sentiment."

"Now even that level of shaking poses a great threat to the empire. "You know that there is nothing good about the public sentiment being shaken right now as the war against the demon world approaches."

"...The leadership is shouting for action every day. If you don't do even this much, you'll be in trouble. To what extent are you thinking, Your Excellency? "Do you want me to not move at all?"

"yes."

"...what?"

"It would be best not to move right now. It would be better to stop all the activities you have been doing so far and take a break. In the war against the demon world, the power of the empire is most important. Internal division is poison."

The duke said, brushing aside the informal language that had come out with a wide expression of generosity.

“It would be a good idea for you to cool your head now. “Do you know that you are being too impatient right now?”

“....”

“What is the answer?”

Because I was dealing with Cruel like this, my words came out in a high-handed manner.

I glanced closely to see if the man in front of me had noticed something, but fortunately, Daniel, who kept his mouth shut as if he didn't really care, nodded slowly without showing any special expression.

“...All right.”

thank god. First of all, it seems like I was pressured.

However, his mother's health will deteriorate day by day, and the revolutionary leader's spirit will also be shaken. I don't know how long the temporary button will last.

The Duke, who was looking at Daniel's back, saying he was sorry and retreating, closed his eyes and let out a silent sigh.

***

It wasn't pressed. It was pressed.

As he closed the door and returned to the revolutionary army base, Daniel slowly began to think. His eyes had become cold for a long time.

No matter how crazy I was, it wasn't to the point where I couldn't feel angry even after hearing 'those words'. You let your guard down, Duke.

'Thanks to you, I came to my senses, so I should be thankful.'

It is true that I was so anxious that my eyes were covered. My head hardened and I almost rushed towards my goal. If it weren't for the duke, it was clear that all of his patience would have been in vain.

But that line.

[It would be better not to move right now. It would be better to stop all the activities you have done so far and take a rest.]

And.

[What is the answer?]

Thanks to this, my mind cooled down and I was able to understand the situation to some extent.

The duke does not want the empire to fall. Not just now, it was like that before, and it will be like that again in the future.

It seemed as if the identity of the sense of discomfort I had been feeling before was slowly being revealed.

'Of course it is. 'Who would voluntarily give up the high status of 'Duke'?''

The reason for contacting the revolutionary army may have been to suppress them.

'This is why we have to be careful about joining hands with power.'

It may be beneficial in the short term, but not in the long term. You have to slowly let go.

But how? Now I have too much to lose to shake off the duke's hand. The Duke himself will not suffer any loss, and only the revolutionary army will suffer a major blow. So it's difficult.

"...Daniel?"

"Ah, Paul."

"What are you doing there...?"

"Holding hands with power should be avoided as much as possible. "Afterwards, my ankles will be tied."

"...Are you drunk?"

Daniel stroked Paul's head in silence.

Paul, who was looking up at him quietly, opened his mouth after confirming that there was no one around.

"...I saw Deon Hardt."

"...How did you recognize him? "Are you not wearing a robe?"

"I wasn't wearing it. "The clothes were very flashy."

"...."

"Oh, I was still wearing an eye patch. But aren't the clothes, as well as the hair and skin, quite unique? "It wasn't difficult to find out.”

No, this doctor’s grandfather.

I told him not to forget to put on an eye patch, and he did just that. What if I forget to put on my robe?

I never thought you would prove it like this when you say your forgetfulness has gotten worse.

“The doctor secretly took me outside. Did you bring me here? Why didn’t you kill me? “Why did you just send it away?”

Come to think of it, Paul had a grudge against Deon Hardt.

Angry eyes look up at Daniel. Daniel quietly looked into his eyes and answered while slowly stroking his head.

“I feel like I’ll die even if I don’t have to.”

“I don’t understand.”

Isn’t it possible to obtain information or at the very least be used as a hostage?

Stop. Daniel’s hand stopped. The hand that was resting on Paul’s head slowly slides down.

A faint laugh, like smoke, was scattered throughout the space like crumbs.

“...You’ve really grown up.”

“You’ve already grown up since the first time we met.”

“Okay, okay.”

...okay. It's time for me to prepare too.

It is right to prepare to escape the duke's clutches.

"It's natural that I don't understand. "Because I reacted laxly."

"Why did you do that?"

"I told you, right? I said I backed off. "No one is perfect in this world."

So Paul.

I softly called his name and made eye contact. A silence came, like a forest on a moonlit night.

Daniel willingly broke the seemingly comfortable silence and gently raised the corner of his mouth.

"You will see many strengths and weaknesses in me in the future. Just like now, absorb the strengths and filter out the parts you don't understand, or use them as a substitute teacher. "You are doing very well now."

"...I do not understand."

"what?"

"Why are you taking me with you? Some of the places my brother took me were not places I would go to. It was to teach me, right? "Why are you trying to teach me?"

"I took responsibility for this child because I brought him here. "Education is a natural part of that responsibility."

Lower class people who are busy making a living often ignore the importance of education.

But I learned that you shouldn't do that.

Who causes revolution? It is caused by those who know the situation and the absurdity of it. In short, it means that those who know a lot can cause it.

When a country is acting strangely, you must be aware of it and know how to criticize it. Nevertheless, he said that if the people above did not listen, they should overturn it.

That's why my mother said that education is important.

"Well, that was the reason until now."

"So you're saying it's not anymore?"

"Yes, I also need to have a successor soon. I plan to teach a lot of things in a short period of time. I hope you absorb it well..."

"Now wait a minute! A successor? "Me?"

"Do you have any problem?"

Paul, who saw the naturally virtuous expression, was speechless and just gaped.

After a few seconds, a voice that seemed almost like a sense of obligation to discuss the issue barely came out.

"Why me?! "I was young..."

"When will you insist that you are all grown up?"

"no...! Ha... really..."

In a rare occurrence, Paul bursts out in exasperation and pounds his chest. Daniel, who was watching this, burst into laughter.

Normally, he would have been even angrier, but this time, Paul got angry.

“It was a joke, right?”

“no. “I’m serious.”

“why?!”

“That’s right...”

I wiped the tears from my eyes with my fingertips.

I was still laughing, but speaking first came first.

“Because you are young.”

“...yes?”

“Oh, did I throw it too hard? “I’ll explain again from the beginning.”

The laughter finally stopped.

Daniel closed his mouth for a moment to gather his thoughts.

“You are from the Empire, but you have no affection for the Empire.”

However, we do not love other countries and have no reason to love them.

“The fact that there is no country you love in this place where people from each kingdom that fell at the hands of the empire gathered together will increase the credibility of your fairness.”

“...and?”

“And like I said, you’re young. Thanks to this, flexible thinking is possible. Have you ever heard the saying that the only thing you get with age is stubbornness? In reality, older people are less likely to listen to advice from others. ‘Is the young one trying to teach me?’ This is the underlying thought. And old people don’t like change.”

“But what about the elderly people who joined the revolutionary army? “Isn’t ‘revolution’ itself change?”

“I came here with a desire for revenge. ‘My country has collapsed, so the empire must also collapse’ or something like that. “They will either not pay much attention to the policies after the fall of the empire or will stick to the existing methods.”

Revolution is, above all, a powerful change. It stands at the complete opposite point of stability.

Anyone who is the head of a revolutionary army must pay great attention to the policies that followed the successful revolution, but that position cannot be given to someone who prefers the familiar.

If there is no change in policy after the revolution, how can it be called a revolution?

“Old people don’t want what they don’t know to increase and they love stability. “I’m too tired to take risks.”

Perhaps that is why it is no exaggeration to say that change has almost always been achieved through the hands of young people.

Therefore, it is right for the leader of the revolutionary army to be young.

“Of course, that doesn’t mean you should look down on old people. They were once young people who sought change and lived for a long time and gained a lot of experience.

“Such experiences can become knowledge, so it is right to respect them.”

“What is it... Then what do you want me to do? Do you listen to the old man? “Don’t you listen?”

“Is there really a need for such extreme division? You’ve done well so far. Make your own judgment, filter out what you need and absorb only what you need. ‘Education’ exists to help with such judgments.”

Because you can’t blindly make a choice without any information.

“...great. “Is that why you chose me as your successor?”

“that’s right. Oh, there’s one more.”

“I can’t believe there’s more...”

I smiled, ignoring the vaguely muttering voice.

“You know how to love people.”

“I don’t have a lover....”

“Love isn’t necessarily just love between lovers. Love between friends, love between family... a lot. “Isn’t there something you can point out?”

“...Shiia.”

answer.

Paul furrowed his eyebrows as if he couldn't understand it.

“But doesn't that soon become a weakness? “If only my brother could do it right now...”

Even though he trailed off, it doesn't mean he couldn't predict what was going to happen next.

Well, it's worth it. Just a little while ago, I lost consciousness just because my mother was hemorrhaging blood.

The existence of a loved one is an undeniable weakness. but.

“What is the ideology of the revolutionary army?”

“A world where everyone is equal without a caste system.”

Paul's face changed as he gave his answer.

This ideology itself was created based on thinking about others.

The person who must pioneer a new path with such ideology on his back is the leader of the revolutionary army.

“Knowing how to love someone means being able to be considerate and understanding of others.”

A person who does not know how to love people will inevitably be disqualified from sitting in that position.

“...Is that really true? “You can abandon everything around you and focus only on the person you love.”

“It means that even if it’s not right away, the possibility is open. And to prevent such a situation from occurring....”

“‘Education’ exists? all right.”

Paul shook his head as if he had lost.

“It’s funny that a young man is already claiming heir, but...”

“Paul...?”

“For now, I will listen carefully to what you teach me.”

A rare bright smile turned to Daniel.

Daniel looked blank for a moment and then placed his hand on Paul’s head.

“...okay.”

Somehow, a mischievous smile appeared on his face.

“Then shall we get started right away?”

“Eck.”

“There is so much to teach. Even just in terms of ‘words,’ it is divided into how to persuade or subdue an opponent, how to incite the people, and other policies and laws to be implemented after the revolution. How to deal with the economy, which will be shaken by changes in government. ....”

“...Can’t I just not do it?”

“Yes, no.”

What should I teach first?

Those things are important, but this is the beginning.

I changed the direction I was heading towards my dorm and led the child towards my office and slowly opened my mouth.

“First, shall we briefly talk about natural human rights?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 118

118. Each person's movement (2)

The day dawned and the world changed silently.

Changes and movements that only those in the know know about.

The Emperor quietly looked down at the report that evil rumors about the Demon World had begun to spread rapidly and then called the Prime Minister.

"Do you know what the duke's weakness is?"

"Did the duke also have a weakness? I thought it would be difficult to find because he is someone who hides his weaknesses, but I wonder how you found out about them..."

"You do n't know that you have such weaknesses yourself. "You will never know that Jim is aware of this weakness."

Because this is that kind of weakness.

A cold sneer spread across the emperor's face.

"Of course, even if I knew, I wouldn't be able to fix it. "How can we cure 'arrogance'?"

“...Are you talking about arrogance?”

“They think they are the smartest and look down from above everyone’s heads. “I never thought that someone would be looking at the top of my head.”

Did the emperor really not consider the possibility that someone would side with the demon world? The position where you can’t survive if you’re naive is the throne, right?

That sounds funny. I just knew.

If you pretend not to notice, the duke will come forward as a patronizing act.

“Thanks to this, we were able to save manpower, which was otherwise lacking.”

“...You are truly bold. “Please leave important issues that depend on the fate of the empire to the internal enemy.”

“I entrusted it to you because the empire’s fortunes depended on it. The duke covets this position for the empire. “There’s no way he would let the empire fall.”

In particular, it seems like the duke looks at me like I’m a child... but he took advantage of it, whether it was arrogance or belittling me, so it’s okay.

Putting aside his uncomfortable feelings, the emperor turned the report over.

“One day, the day will come when you will be caught by that arrogance and fall. “I wonder what the duke’s expression would look like then.”

***

Became an honorary marquis!

I expected that the backlash from the nobles would be strong, but it was quieter than I expected, so I looked into it and found that Cruel had become an honorary count.

Yes, the noble faction leader's dog was also given a title, so it's worth complaining a little and calling it a day. In fact, there were many things to criticize from the noble faction's point of view, but the duke, the leader, kept his mouth shut and accepted it, so it was close to being silenced. Honestly, I'm also amazed. Did you make a secret deal with the emperor and the duke?

Well, that's not important. Rather...

"I... I really came back alive..."

"Why are you saying such scary things?"

Remember put his glass down on the table and looked at me intently.

But is it really that amazing? It's a miracle that you entered the secret base of some organization and came out alive. Even his identity was discovered. When I put the eye patch on him, I thought they were going to take him to a quiet place and dispose of him cleanly, but I was surprised to see that he was returned safely to the street.

Unable to explain the eventful last night, I just rolled my eyes and raised my glass.

"Puhup-!"

"Well. Are you okay?"

“Cough, what is this....”

“The imperial palace doctor sent me some medicine again.”

It’s a tonic, but why does it feel like my sense of taste is dying?

Damn I thought it was coffee. I never thought the medicine would come in a coffee cup. There’s no need to develop to this point, old man...

I feel like I have no feeling in my tongue, maybe it’s my mood.

“This is... an attempted poisoning....”

“The poison test has already been completed. “Don’t keep making the old man’s heart pound, and just eat it all the time.”

“ ....”

Damn it.

With tears in my eyes, I took a sip of my glass. Meanwhile, the scent smells more like coffee.

The horrible taste and fragrant smell of coffee don’t go together at all.

“Why does this smell like coffee?”

“I specifically asked for it. “I said the Marquis wouldn’t take the medicine well, so a trick would be needed.”

“Am I a kid?! No, what is the palace doctor who listened to that again...! Phew...!”

“Please remain calm and take deep breaths. Marquis, it is dangerous if your blood pressure rises.”

“Remember, you are doing this on purpose.”

I held the back of my neck, wheezing, and glanced at Remember.

The serpent-like butler just smiled and changed the topic of conversation.

“I heard that you control plant-type monsters.”

“Cough!”

“They have been training plant-type monsters for a long time and use them to secretly deal with those who disturb them at night...”

“What kind of nonsense is that?!”

Ah, there it is again. Even though I knew he was going to change his mind, I fell for Remember’s words again.

I tried to come to my senses even though it was too late, but...

“Oh, isn’t it? Then, the Marquis is a vampire, and the plant-type monsters were born from the Marquis’s blood...” “

That’s a bit of bullshit.”

“Then the rumor is that you are planning to conquer the world....”

“Is there any reason to die for treason?!”

What kind of person is the emperor!

...How can you not ignore it when you say it this way?

Is this what you call age? I was shaking my head, filling my head with misconceptions about the word “age,” when Remember spoke in a voice filled with subtle playfulness.

“Oh, on the contrary, there are rumors that he is plotting the destruction of the world.”

“It’s crazy. “How on earth can rumors spread so much?”

I want to applaud people’s imagination.

At the mention of the end of the world, Dan, who had been working on paperwork in a corner, looked up, but ignored him and clicked his tongue.

Or rather, why is he here?

I looked at him with bewildered eyes and then saw Remember. A grinning face faced me as if asking me if there was some problem.

“...Aren’t you being too partial? Still, he’s not an outsider... he just came here not long ago.”

“There is no need to be on guard since the Marquis has given it to you, so it is natural to give him your heart according to his level of competence. And you brought it in yourself and said it was an outsider. It may be early on, but after organizing the filing system, you completely accepted it, didn’t you? Dan will be upset if he hears.”

“I’m sorry.”

“...Oh, okay... I’m sorry....”

As expected, age is scary.

You can't hit an old man, and it's best not to clash with Milini Remember. He turned his head slightly and said something else.

"I think I will have to be away for a while again to carry out the mission given by His Majesty."

"The medicine will all go bad."

"That was great... that's too bad."

"I'll take care of it for you when I pack your bags."

"...."

I have to throw it away.

I was making ambitious plans for my taste buds when Dan asked a question with a questioning look on his face.

"...Did you say it was your Majesty's mission?"

"okay. "Like last time, I'll be away for a while again."

Thinking about the emperor makes me feel like my head hurts. Not only did I have a headache, but my stress was rising.

As I pressed one hand to my aching temple and took a slow breath to drive away the unexplained stress, Dan, who had been watching, quietly opened his mouth.

"Can I go with you too? "I will assist you."

"Yes, no."

"...yes."

“It’s not okay to secretly follow me. “Either you or I might have to die.”

Because witnesses must be killed.

But since he said he learned some swordsmanship, on the other hand, I might die. It was only once during a hunting competition, but seeing as he saved me from an attack, I guess I can’t completely ignore that possibility.

It would be even worse if I didn’t notice and ended up in the devil’s castle with that guy on my tail. I will die with that guy for the crime of taking in a human.

‘I won’t be bored because I won’t die alone.’

Oh, I’m stressed. He kept his posture with his hands on his temples and quietly recited the words.

But why is it so quiet? There is no answer back.

I slowly raised my head.

‘...?’

Remember and Dan were looking at me with unknown expressions. In particular, Dan’s eyes seemed to be shaking. Maybe he saw it wrong, right?

Unlike my shaking eyes, I felt a strange joy in the eyes I met, so I hurriedly avoided my gaze, so I didn’t have time to look closely.

Dan slightly lowered his head as if he had come to his senses while wiping away his goosebumps.

“I never thought I could make a threat like this even in my normal state...”

“Huh...?”

“I will not follow you.”

“Oh yeah...”

I answered hesitantly and rolled my eyes.

The atmosphere is strange. It was just a light warning.

As if to restore the delicate atmosphere, Remember changed the topic.

“When do you plan to leave?”

“...now?”

If I stayed here any longer, I would have to do paperwork and take bitter medicine.

It would be better to go to the demon world as soon as possible.

“Then I will prepare.”

“please. Oh, and those murderers....”

I did something like the last time once or twice, but at this point, I found another way. I’ve been lucky so far and no one has been injured, but it’s still dangerous. It’s not possible to film a chase every time.

Isn’t there something... a more convenient and easier way?

The quick-witted butler immediately came up with another alternative.

“If the Marquis would delay your departure time just a little, I can give you a sleeping pill with your meal to make your departure easier.”

“It’s resistant to drugs, so most sleeping pills won’t work.”

“This time, I obtained some stronger medicine through Dan. “I heard that depending on how you adjust it, you can put an elephant to sleep within 3 seconds.”

“No... that’s a bit...”

Is there anything wrong with killing people?

...But if you knew about this easy method, why didn’t you tell me sooner? Seeing as the answer came right away, it seems like I’ve known this method for a long time. If getting medicine was a problem, you could have just told me.

Remember, who looked at him full of doubts and immediately read the meaning, smiled.

“It’s fun, isn’t it?”

“...I didn’t have fun.”

It felt like I was crossing between life and death.

I grumbled inwardly and held out my hand to tell them to hurry up and get ready.

After bowing once, Remember turns and opens the door. I encountered a person who raised his hand as if he was about to knock.

‘...what?’

I craned my head and looked at the employee over Remember's shoulder. The guy who makes eye contact is startled and recoils.

The voice, which became increasingly quiet, barely managed to come out.

"His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hwa... has visited."

***

The princess insisted strongly.

"He must like men!"

The crown prince expressed his disapproval.

"no way."

And then I stop and think about it.

A man whose relationship with a woman is too plain. A man who has an extremely uneven gender ratio among those around him and is not more interested in women...!

"It can't be..."

"You know?"

"...."

It's not that there are no women at all. As he was the man the princess was targeting, he knew because he thoroughly investigated and monitored whether there were any women around.

There is an article called Lien Reiner. It was a completely public relationship bound up with the relationship between lord and knight. The crown prince lost interest.

When carrying out the Salvation Church mission, Deonhardt brought a man and a woman from somewhere. Were their names Dan and Ran respectively?

And when the mission was over, the man stayed and the woman left. The man is currently staying with Deon Hart at the Hart Mansion. The crown prince, who was worried that the woman might have feelings for him, relaxed.

‘Maybe I shouldn’t have been at ease....’

I never thought I would like a man.

“So, how about trying to trick you?”

“...what?”

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 119

119. Individual movements (3)

“Because I don’t think I can do it. Objectively, my brother is handsome and has a good status, so if he really likes men, it won’t be difficult for him to fall for me.”

“...Do we really have to go that far?”

“There will soon be a war with the demon world. And Deonhardt remains the Empire’s most dangerous and unstable hero. “My gut tells me so.”

There is no basis for this.

The princess doesn’t even know that Deonhardt travels to and from the Demon World.

The crown prince sighed as he looked with new eyes at the princess, who had only limited information about Deonhardt but had pinpointed him based on intuition alone.

“Of course... now is the right time to tie him to the imperial family.”

If you miss this timing, you never know when another opportunity will come.

The Crown Prince, who had been contemplating for a moment with his arms crossed and his mouth closed, rolled his eyes slightly, looked at the Princess' bright eyes, closed his eyes tightly, and stood up.

"Please don't forget that I have a duty to leave a successor."

"Oh, of course. "After you tie him up securely."

You can meet as many women as you want.

The princess smiles and waves her hand.

So much so that he listened to the princess's claims that would have been laughed off by anyone else.

The crown prince was also an unbiased person just like the princess.

***

"I visited you regarding your becoming an honorary marquis."

"...If it is a letter of appointment, I have already received it."

And what is that bouquet in your hand...?

Now that I look at it, I can see that they put a lot of effort into their appearance, including their hair. Are you planning on going to meet a girl after meeting me?

The crown prince, who was dressed more extravagantly than usual and had his hair down on one side, smiled calmly and said.

"Didn't they just send out a letter of appointment? Because His Majesty was busy, he sent the letter of appointment in a hurry, but he didn't just receive the title and wipe his mouth without going through the process of swearing to the emperor, right?"

"Is that possible?"

Why do you talk like that? To kill someone.

When I urgently shook my head as I felt my life was in danger, he smiled as if he was joking and held out the bouquet of flowers he was holding.

"You can relax because it's fun. Although I came as His Majesty's representative to take the oath on his behalf, His Majesty actually said that there was no need for such ostentation. He said there was no need for an oath that was not sincere. "I came today simply because I wanted to see the Marquis."

what. In another sense, it feels strong.

He pointed at the bouquet of flowers held out and stuttered as he opened his mouth.

"...That flower...?"

"This is a gift to celebrate becoming an honorary marquess and winning first place in a hunting competition."

"Uh... thank you."

"And there are some jewels and money... but that is the winning prize and a reward given by His Majesty to you for your misfortune at the hunting competition."

It doesn't seem like he's upset about losing first place in the hunting competition. thank god.

Thinking of the sincerity of the person who gave it to me, I touched the bouquet a few times, then held it in my arms and turned my head to look out the window. People who appeared to be from the imperial palace were carrying something hard.

If you look closely, you can see that they are carrying several chests, but that is 'a few'...?

"Well... you."

"Ah yes. "Please speak."

I turned my gaze again and faced the crown prince.

A man whose appearance was so flashy that it gave the illusion that his surroundings were sparkling, was hesitating, not being able to speak easily, which was rare.

What on earth is that snake-like man taking a moment to say?

The crown prince narrowed his eyebrows and pondered how to speak, and finally spoke in a noble tone.

"What do you think... if the law changes and same-sex marriage becomes possible?"

"...yes?"

Why are you asking me that? No, it's more random than that. It's not about war. Why are we talking about marriage in these times?

Still, since the crown prince asked a question, I must answer. I suppressed the absurdity that was about to come out and used my head to come up with the simplest answer possible.

“I’m not sure, but I think some people will be happy.”

Are there any powerful nobles who like people of the same sex? Are you trying to attract that nobleman with the bait of changing the law?

It’s definitely a peaceful method. Although this is not something to say in the current situation.

“I don’t know... Are you saying you don’t like men?”

“yes.”

To be precise, I would say that I don’t have the capacity to like anyone.

I’m so busy taking care of myself, how can I care about others? To me, other people are just two-dimensional characters.

There is no need to worry too much or delve into the other person’s story, and it is enough to just treat them as they appear on the outside.

In terms of the play, it’s like a background... Oh, since conversation is possible, it’s a background, isn’t it? Then extra. Or, a being like a character in a book who moves according to a given theme.

“I see...”

A somewhat empty voice touched my eardrums.

There, doubts arose. no way.

‘Was that target me?!’

Were all the baits about same-sex marriage and the fact that you came dressed up neatly aimed at me?

Since the princess didn’t seem to be having any success, the crown prince himself came forward, right? I roughly understood the situation. But...

‘I understand everything, but why are you changing my sexual orientation...’

If the princess doesn’t work, you can just say, ‘I guess the princess isn’t your type’ and find another woman. Why is His Majesty the Crown Prince coming forward ‘in person’?

...Could it be the prince’s tastes...?

It seems like I leaned back without realizing it. The crown prince waved his hand with a puzzled face.

“It’s a misunderstanding.”

“Ah yes. All right.”

I never thought the crown prince would like a man.

Of course, it has nothing to do with me whether he likes women or men. Even if I like a guy, I only briefly think about ‘what should I do about the succession’ and have no further interest... but if that person becomes me, the story is different.

I fumbled and stretched my hand to the side and pulled the rope. No reaction. I pulled again. Still no one comes.

I pulled the string like crazy.

“...The cord you are pulling right now is not a calling cord, but a light cord.”

“ah.”

For some reason, one side of my vision was sparkling.

“I said it was a misunderstanding.”

“Yes, I believe it. “Just a moment...”

I carefully got up, took a step back, and approached the door.

After looking at the prince with a puzzled look in his eyes, he quickly turned his back, opened the door, and shouted into the hallway.

“...Remember! “Remember!”

“No, Marquis. First, calm down...”

“When will the preparations end?”

“marquis?”

The crown prince grabbed my shoulder!

I didn't know when I had come up behind me, but I heard a voice close by, and I felt goosebumps and shouted out the door for the last time.

“You can use that for 3 seconds for an elephant, so let's finish it quickly!!”

“Elephant 3 seconds...?”

I don't know, I'm going to go to the devil world.

If I had shouted at this point, Remember would have heard me. Even if you didn't hear it, other users will hear it and pass it on to you.

So let's buy some time. As if nothing had happened, I turned around, faced the crown prince, and spoke calmly.

"I trust you, Your Majesty. "Of course it would be a misunderstanding."

"...But why are you so close to the door?"

"ah."

"...."

After that, I had to be held by the crown prince until Remember came and listen to an explanation until the misunderstanding was resolved.

Well, in the end, the misunderstanding was resolved.

The crown prince must have been under a lot of stress in that short period of time, so much so that his neat appearance was almost in vain, but he didn't feel the slightest bit of regret.

So who would do something like that? joy.

***

"Let's eat!"

"You crazy guy! "Don't cut in line!"

"...But aren't the revolutionary forces quiet these days?"

"It seems like it, but... damn it. You took care of another thing today. "How long does your Majesty intend to exploit us?"

"We have to pay for the buildings... How many buildings did we knock down?"

"Honestly, it was all because of the bombs the revolutionary army had. You're so busy dealing with them, how do you deal with bombs one by one? "All I can do is throw it into the sky."

"Anyway, the frequency has really decreased these days. Even the kids who came out occasionally were small children. Why? "Is it because of the war?"

"But why are your hands shaking?"

"Never mind. It's an aftereffect. Even so, since I am in charge of dealing with the revolutionary forces today, I need some medicine..."

"Puh-ha! Hey guys! "There's a bastard here who still can't get over the aftereffects!"

"really? "It's been a few years since we used medicine!"

"Oh, you weak bastard. I have to do my best. yes? "I don't have enough uiji."

"You all shut up!"

thud!

"...I told you to shut up, I never told you to put your head on the plate."

“Is this a new eating method? “Eat like a dog without using your hands?”

“I’m not waking up, so I’m not choking and running around like that... Cool.”

“Hey, he’s sleeping. “He had narcolepsy.”

“What are you all doing...”

Boom! Cool!

“ ....”

“...Kahahah.”

“...Even after taking a medicine that is said to make even wild beasts grow taller, I still talk for 10 more minutes before going to sleep.”

How did the Marquis come to gather and lead such crazy people? If this is a talent, is it a talent?

Anyway, I can take stronger medicine next time.

“Tell the Marquis that preparations for departure are complete.”

***

Escape!

***

As always, Deonhardt rode his horse as he was used to and reached the entrance of a mountain range that no one could reach.

Both the Emperor and the Demon King know that there is a border here, but they do not send troops to station there. The small border, barely large enough for one person to enter or exit, exists solely for Deon.

Until Deonhardt's affiliation was clearly determined, the two different yet similar monarchs made an implicit promise to refrain from actions that would prematurely expose the location of anyone by sending anyone to the border located within the mountain range.

That is why those who see them off to avoid being trampled do not follow them into the mountains.

'Until I clearly decide on my affiliation....'

Obviously, if his life is not food, it has an expiration date. Although I was prepared, my rotting heart was something else.

Would the Demon King remain silent if he knew that the Emperor had decided to win? No way.

He chuckled, rubbing the brand with his fingertips.

'There's no way the guy who carves something like this is normal.'

The initiative is still on this side, so it won't be overly forceful, but it's still a good idea to be prepared. The Demon King is not the Demon King for nothing.

I sent my horse back and set foot in the mountains. I climbed the steep mountain path without even looking back, and when I got halfway, I heard a sound that I couldn't have heard.

“Kreuk-.”

The sound of blood boiling. In other words, the sound of someone dying.

I turned my head. A little distance away, there was a man blocking someone’s mouth and pulling out a dagger that had been lodged in his throat.

green eyes black hair. It’s really boring. Why are you everywhere I go?

“Cruel Hart.”

I muttered as if I was talking to myself and pulled out my dagger.

Cruel, who was looking down at the fallen corpse, looks up and sees Deon. Our eyes met and there was silence.

Witnesses must be killed. You may not have been able to see the boundary line due to its location, but the reason for stepping behind it is so clear that it is right to kill it. Especially if the opponent is a subordinate of the duke, the head of the noble faction.

But even though he knew full well, Deon did not move. I didn’t want to move. Deon was currently too exhausted to show hostility towards him.

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

Cruel, who was quietly looking into Deon’s mentally exhausted eyes in strange silence, soon turned his head.

In response to this unexpected action, Deon pretends not to have seen anything, whether he opens his eyes or not, and without showing any signs, leaves the body alone and walks away as if he wants to go back to where he came from.

As Deon, who couldn't understand Cruel's thoughts, he could only frown and stare at his retreating figure.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 120

120. Uncomfortable daily life (1)

Deon Hardt was away during this time. The Duke crumpled the note and frowned slightly.

‘Why now...’

How long has it been since I started betting? At least we need to get rid of it before the war with the demon world really breaks out.

I glanced at Cruel and saw that he was expressionless as always. Looking at the seemingly calm appearance, the duke’s judgment was distorted for no reason, and the corners of his mouth were raised and he smiled.

“At this point, I’m really impressed. Deon Hardt is away by order of His Majesty.”

“ .... ”

“How can I be so lucky?”

Is the world showering its blessings?

If you fail every time and miss the timing, you will start to get frustrated.

“I hope you come back soon.”

Purple eyes shine eerily. Cruel, who was watching this, lowered his gaze without saying a word.

The duke, who was nervously scribbling a pen on a document in a space where they were alone, stopped his hand when a thought suddenly occurred to him.

“Now that I think about it, I understand that there are more people who will be annoyed by Deonhart’s absence...”

The idiots who came to me the evening the emperor announced the war with the demon world and made stupid comments.

I was truly shaken by the Deonhardt vampire theory and insisted that it be investigated. It was so absurd that those people were aristocratic.

Whether Cruel was looking at me with unknown eyes or not, the Duke muttered with a wide smile on his face.

“You’re so... lucky.”

***

The Empire declared a halt to war. The notification that a war with the demon world is likely to begin is a bonus.

This news quickly spread across the continent. Each kingdom’s response to this varied.

“Thank God everything....”

“We survived! “He lived!”

“Uh-huh-huh!”

There was also a kingdom that was relieved and cheered that the fearsome emperor had stopped the war.

“That’s shameless. You start a war on your own and then stop it on your own. “What on earth do they see us for?”

“If they say they will stop arbitrarily, do we have to listen?
“You arrogant bastard.”

“Our kingdom will never provide support to the empire.”

There were kingdoms that put aside the demon world issue and were just angry at their shameless and arrogant behavior.

“I hate the empire, but in the current situation, keeping the empire from falling is the top priority. “We can’t stand by and watch things collide and collapse in an incomplete state.”

“The Empire is the human world’s first and strongest defense wall. If the empire falls, it is the same as the destruction of the entire human world. “The war so far has consumed a significant amount of materials and troops, so we cannot just sit back and relax.”

“Even if you don’t like the empire, you must do it for the empire now. “Something has to be done.”

There was also a kingdom that was a little more clever.

And surprisingly, a commonality was discovered among all these kingdoms. The emperor, who was the first to discover this through the report, smiled softly and showed his teeth.

“It looks like the peacock’s moves worked quite well.”

Among the many leaders of quite a few kingdoms, at least one of them deserves to make that statement.

Surprisingly enough, not even the kingdoms that showed strong hostility to the empire ever uttered empty words such as 'I'd rather be on the side of the demon world.'

***

I threw away the tonic.

Remember really took care of me. I was so ridiculously anxious that the scary butler would find evidence and interrogate me if I abandoned him in the human world that I ended up crossing over to the demon world instead of the human world and abandoning him.

Perhaps because it was a liquid, it was incredibly heavy.

Anyway, we arrived at the Demon King's Castle without any major problems. I check my ID at the entrance and enter with confidence... What is this? As soon as I entered the castle, almost all the demons passing by turned their heads towards me.

I've done this before, but I never looked at him with this burning passion, so what was it? The moment I want to

"Daemon!"

"It's Daemon!"

"Daemon has arrived!"

"welcome!"

"De-se."

“De-se.”

What is it? What is this. What is Dese again?

More and more demons are gathering around. I hesitated and retreated due to the unusual force.

Either way, the demons wearing red heart-shaped brooches on their chests raise their hands and shout ‘De-se’. I’m so fucking scared!

I didn’t have the courage to break through them and run all the way to the inner city, so I just froze and shivered, when the crowd parted and a girl appeared.

“Daemon! welcome!”

“...Lirinel?”

“yes!”

Oh my god, Lyrinel! You came to save me!

Now that the commander of the 11th Corps has passed away, these crazy people will also fall away. As I was looking at Lirinel with that thought in mind, something caught my eye. Something red on my chest...

my brain stopped for a moment.

‘...what? Why is there a brooch on Lirinel’s chest?’

That’s all. The clothes are also somewhat strange.

A red heart shape is embroidered in the center of the black hat that Lirinel is wearing. I’m quite uneasy because I can see red numbers even on the black cloth I’m holding in my hand...

“Master! “It’s the religious leader!”

“Oh, cult leader!”

...are you the head teacher?

Probably not. Probably not. That cute kid can’t do that.
Although they are demons.

Lirinel spreads the black cloth in her hand, lightly stomping on my hope that there was some mistake. A cloth with a red heart engraved in the center fluttered, and at the same time, a tremendous roar rang out.

“Waaah!”

“De-se.”

“De-se!”

After all, these people were Demon Cult believers?!

It certainly seemed normal until not long ago, but when on earth did it become so pseudo-narrative? What was the Demon King doing to get to this point?

I looked back at Lirinel, who seemed to be the culprit of all of this. She was looking at the demons shouting ‘De-se’ with a happy smile.

“Lirinel?”

“Yes, Demon!”

“What is all this? “What is ‘dese’ again?”

“They are people who respect you, Demon! ‘De-se’ is an abbreviation for ‘Long live the Demon!’ How do you feel?”

“How...how is it.... Ah, blood pressure....”

Oh no. Let's calm down. Here, if your blood pressure rises significantly or you vomit blood, your doctor, Ben, will come running. You can't start working again as soon as you come to the Demon King's Castle.

I had a hard time calming my mind and quietly called out to Lirinel.

“What... who told you this?”

“I entrusted the investigation to the commander of the 2nd Corps! “I heard that the religion of the human world is like this, isn't it?”

“It's not wrong at all....”

Debellania!

You have to be playful, too. What if you ruin an innocent child like this?

First of all, I have to get rid of this disturbing group. Since Lirinel is the leader of the cult, I can tell her, right?

“Thank you, but I'm a little tired... Can you disperse me?”

Right Now.

It would be better if we disbanded forever.

“Oh, that...! of course! Sorry, Daemon. “I guess I was too preoccupied...”

Lirinel waved her hand in a panic. As if nothing had happened, the large crowd suddenly disappeared.

Lyrinel looked at the background, which was much quieter than before, and spoke carefully.

“Are you going to the Demon King? “I’ll take you to the door.”

“...please.”

If the cult leader is next to you, those crazy people won’t stick to you.

It was a truly terrifying welcome ceremony.

***

“You’re here. “It came sooner than I thought.”

The Demon King, who was sitting in front of his office desk processing documents, raised his head and smiled.

However, even for a moment, the smile disappears from the Demon King’s face as he meets red eyes. His eyes narrowed as if he noticed something.

He got up from his seat, walked slowly, and stood in front of Deon.

“You...”

He bends slightly at the waist, puts his face close to her, and makes eye contact. The eerie reverse eye looked into red eyes.

“You heard something important.”

what? What is it?

What did I hear that makes this human child so unable to manage his facial expressions?

It seems like he said he was managing it in his own way, but you can't fool the eyes of the devil who has lived for that long.

I reached out and grabbed her chin and lifted it up. He makes eye contact as if he can see right through me and asks quietly, as if he is reciting something.

"Do you want to tell me?"

"...."

"Yeah, probably not. But aren't you worried about how I will accept this situation? "Do you think your life might be in danger?"

There was no answer.

The Demon King was actually able to get a decisive hint from that appearance.

If it was information about the Demon King or Emperor, the Demon World or the Empire, he would not have been this agitated. However, the silence is too blatant to say that they were on the emperor's side. If he was really on the emperor's side, he would have made a convincing case.

So, all that remains is....

"The emperor has thrown a bet."

"...That's right."

"Shamefully."

Well, the timing is right, so it's only natural.

Did he keep silent about this to me because he was shaken or did he just not want me to find out?

Probably the latter. If I find out about this, regardless of the emperor's displeasure, I will also join in.

"If I hadn't noticed, you wouldn't have told me until the end, right?"

"...."

"It's okay. "It's not like I don't understand."

But yeah...

I really need to get this nailed down.

The hand holding her chin slid down and cupped her neck. Naturally, his thumb reached the location of the brand and pressed it firmly, and Deon's body trembled quietly, as if he was afraid of the situation.

"I'm sure you know where you need to be."

Do you think I will let you go if you run away?

No matter how freely you travel between the Empire and the Demon King's Castle, it is difficult to forget this.

[This is where you need to be.]

"There is no answer."

"...."

"Why are you holding onto my pants again?"

He narrowed his eyes and smiled.

I let go of Deon's unresponsive neck and turned around to open the window. An open landscape unfolded with three round moons clearly visible.

"Isn't the moon pretty?"

"...."

"You are weak to sunlight. So choose a place where you don't have to worry about the sun. "It's always night, but the moon rises so brightly, so what's wrong?"

Against this background, he spread his arms out towards Deon and smiled broadly. It was backlit due to the bright moonlight.

"If you stay here, all demons except me will bow to you.
"No, if you want, I will kneel too."

If you were to ask me objectively whether Deon Hardt is a person worthy of going to this extent to capture him, I would shake my head without hesitation.

However, for the Demon King, it was more important than anything else to find someone who could drive away this boredom, and it was also important to win the implicit game he was currently playing with the Emperor.

That's why I was able to speak without hesitation.

"If there's anything you want, I'll give it to you. If I choose this place, I won't make a big deal about going out to the human world like I did until now. "If you want the land of the human world, you can occupy it and give it to you."

Due to his position, the Emperor of the Empire would have many restrictions on giving anything to Deonhardt.

But this is a place where the devil's power is absolute. The Demon King was confident that he could give him more than what the Emperor gave him, no matter what he wanted.

I feel like I want to push a little harder and get a definite answer, but...

'I can only push this far.'

If you push harder, you might lose your mind.

The Demon King obediently retreated.

"So think carefully."

Deon turned around without saying a word when he gestured for him to go.

When they reached the door with just a few steps, the Demon King added to his back as if he had forgotten one thing.

"You are welcome back, but the stigma will not be removed."

"...."

Knowing that he should consider himself fortunate that nothing other than the location tracking function was added to the stigma, Deon answered in silence and opened the door.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 121

121. Uncomfortable Daily Life (2)

"Welcome, Demon. "I'm glad you came back early."

"Ed?"

"Give me your coat and sit over there."

Ed casually took my outerwear from me and led me to a chair that was lying around. As soon as I sat down there, Ben, who was standing in front of me, started looking at me carefully.

I watched him blankly and belatedly called him out with a question.

"Ben...?"

"Yes, Demon. "Please excuse me for a moment."

Ben, who was fiddling with his bandaged wrist, looked at the magic stone around his neck and frowned as if something occurred to him.

"Would you like to lie down?"

"...?"

“Ed what are you doing? “Why don’t you quickly put me to bed, Demon.”

No... As soon as I arrived, I thought, what is this?...

I was lost in the sudden situation for a moment, and then Ed came towards me with the intention of hugging me, so I stood up in shock.

Even if you don’t know what it is, it would be better to just follow it. If you don’t follow them, they will do everything in their power.

‘Rather than experience such shame, I’d rather just comply...’

I walked slowly and lay down on the bed. Ben pressed various parts of his stomach and tilted his head curiously.

“There were definitely signs of internal injury... but you’re feeling much better now.”

“Is that so?”

So it was this serious.

I think the test is over. I’m glad to hear you’ve improved a lot. I tried to slowly get up, but I couldn’t overcome Ben’s pressure on my shoulders and fell back down.

Why are you saying I’m okay? Can’t I just get up?

“Oh, it’s late to tell you. “Daemon, are you okay?”

“Didn’t you just look?”

“I don’t know what the problem is, but strong signals such as hemoptysis are coming, but signals from simple increases in blood pressure or faster heartbeat are not coming in. Should I say that it comes as if the signal is so weak that it is unintelligible?...”

“My body is fine. Rather, is that an error? In that case, I should change it....”

“No, if I change it, the correct signal will come only in the beginning, and after that it will be the same as now....”

Have you already changed it?

Wasn't that my blood? From what I heard, it doesn't seem like it was changed once or twice. When did you take it?

While I was rumbling to myself, I quietly spoke about a hypothesis that suddenly occurred to me.

“Perhaps there is a problem with distance....”

“Absolutely not. “If that were the case, the correct signal would have come now.”

Oh yeah...

I closed my mouth again.

“More than that, Demon, please take care of yourself.

“Every time the signal comes, I can't even go and my heart aches. Do you know how much it affects me?”

Come to think of it, this person was my doctor. And since he is a doctor with a strong professional spirit, it is definitely worth worrying about.

Should I say thank you or sorry...

I didn't know what to say, so I hesitated, but I heard Ed babbling.

"I already tried to escape..."

"I was caught once by the Corps Commander Lirinel and once by the Demon King. Next time, I will definitely escape!"

I'm going to escape and go heal Demon's body!

Even though I was shouting that, I couldn't show any signs of it and was so scared inside. Are you going to come to the crazy human world? no way! Do not come!

'The hidden hero was here...!'

I am shocked that a major crisis has passed without me even knowing. Lirinel and the Demon King. I sent a frantic thank you to the two of them. Thank you thank you.

"You still haven't come to your senses after having a meeting with the Demon Lord."

"Because I am Demon's doctor. "It is my duty to rush to check on the patient when something is wrong with their body."

"There are degrees of that too. You..."

"Oh, you're noisy, Demon." "I have a question about your physical condition. Are you okay?"

Ben, who had blatantly ignored Ed, turned towards me and smiled.

Hey, I'm fine... but are you really okay? Ed is staring at me from behind right now.

Anyway, Ben smiled sweetly as if nothing had happened and carefully asked the question.

“Have you... ever felt a change in your physical condition?”

Physical condition? I’m not sure.

...Oh, now that I think about it, it seems like the frequency of hemoptysis has decreased at some point.

But wasn’t that because of how you felt? The injuries I got from each situation seemed to be milder than expected, but my physical condition didn’t change much, so I thought it was just my mood.

When I told him this to see if it was just a feeling or if it was real, Ed jumped up and shouted with joy.

“The aftereffects can also be cured! I’m so glad! “It looks like it won’t be long until Demon-sama rides the Demon World’s horse!”

“...Did you remember that?”

“It’s a promise I made to Demon. I must never forget it, right?”

No, you can forget it.

Can’t I just stay sick...?

I barely stopped my hand from touching my forehead and clenched and unclenched my fist. Hmm, looking at it again, nothing seems to have changed... Has he really gotten healthier?

As a test, I lightly punched the wall.

“Oh Demon! for a moment...!”

Sigh.

“....”

“....”

...I didn't even use my full power.

I looked back and forth between my throbbing, swollen fist and Ben. Ben, who ran over in horror and looked at his hand, made a sentence with a stern expression.

“It's a fracture.”

“....”

This is the physical condition I know.

That's strange. Is my physical condition going up and down?

As I was looking at my hand with a purple bruise without much emotion, Ben snatched my hand and quickly treated it, sighing deeply and muttering lowly as if reprimanding me.

“It wasn't a change in that sense. I just feel like the signal from the magic stone is getting weaker as time goes by...”

—I thought it might be because something that makes up Demon's body is constantly changing.

Silence came.

“...What is that...”

It was an eerie word.

I wiped my goosebumped arms.

“Are you saying my body is changing without me knowing?”

“It’s just a guess.”

“You’re crazy. “There are things that can be said and things that cannot be said. Are you saying that now?”

Oh, I didn’t say the last word.

These were the words that Ed, who had grimaced in front of me for the first time, said as he grabbed Ben by the collar.

It was so ferocious that everyone watching was shocked, but unfortunately, it didn’t affect Ben. The manly doctor, who would never lose to Ed, grabbed him by the collar and shouted.

“then! Could it be that the magic on the magic stone has become corrupted? In magic, there may be ‘disappearance through time’, but there can be no ‘deterioration’! So what’s left? “The only thing that matters is that the blood currently flowing through Demon-sama’s body is different from the blood used to create the magic!”

“Maybe it’s not a problem with magic, but an error with the magic stone itself!” “

That’s why you said you’ve already changed it several times! You think it’s easy to draw Demon’s blood! “Demon-nim turned a blind eye to it, so I got it every time, but even without that, my conscience is pricked because I don’t have enough blood!”

...I’ve never turned a blind eye to you?

When did you draw my blood, you damn doctor?

“It all worked well in the beginning! “The signal just gradually weakened over time!”

“....”

“This is a reaction that doesn’t seem to be true even though it is Demon’s blood!”

Ben won this time too.

After blocking Ed’s speech, he huffed for a moment, then took a deep breath as if trying to calm down and turned his head to look at me. There was a look of disappointment in the eyes we met.

“...sorry. “I dared to raise my voice in front of Demon.”

“No, well... more than that, it’s about my body changing...”

There’s no way I could be angry about something like that. So stop apologizing and move on.

It’s directly related to me, so I can’t be unaware of it.

Ben carefully examined my expression to see if it was genuine, nodded slightly and said.

“I didn’t even notice it at first. I thought it was an illusion. But since this is repeated....”

“....”

“I will tell you now. Demon’s body has been changing steadily since the day we first met. “Something that I can’t pinpoint is changing very slightly.”

“Isn’t your body recovering?”

“If it was something like that, I would have known right away.”

He seems particularly nervous towards Ed...

He rolled his eyes, looked at the two, and cautiously opened his mouth. Normally I would have kept my mouth shut, but now there is nothing I can do.

“So is it good or bad?”

It’s my body.

Even if I’m so weak that I can’t help but sigh, it’s still my body. Even if you don’t know what’s happening, if it’s a good phenomenon, you’re fortunate. If it’s a bad phenomenon, you have to prepare your mind.

“First of all, it seems like a good thing. Nothing is particularly worse than before. On the contrary, the frequency of hemoptysis has decreased, so it should be viewed as a good thing.”

“If that’s the case, then that’s a good thing...”

Knock.

Everyone’s heads in the room turned toward the door. I also closed my mouth and looked at the door.

It’s good timing to visit when the conversation is almost over. As I nodded in exclamation, Ed, who had been observing me, got up from his seat and opened the door slightly.

As soon as a small gap opened, a hand came through the gap.

“...?!”

What a fucking surprise! I can't help but curse. who is this?

This time, Ed also seemed quite surprised and quickly tightened his grip on the door handle to close the door... and then released it.

As if he had just managed to control his emotions, a calm voice called the other person's name.

“Dvelania, you are joking too much.”

“Oh Ed. “Did you manage to figure it out?”

“What's going on?”

“Now that Demon has returned, wouldn't it be polite to meet him?”

I haven't been out long enough to say hello this time, so why bother?

In an instant, the 2nd Corps Commander Develania bursts in through the crack in the door and taps Ed on the shoulder, then approaches me and grabs my hand. The silent movement like a cockroach gave me goosebumps that were different from before.

“Demon Niim, why is Ben next to you? “Are you hurt anywhere?”

“No, not really.”

“Hmm...”

She narrows her eyes and examines me, as if she doesn't quite believe my answer without hesitation.

If it was going to be like this, why did you ask? No, rather, let go of this hand....

"Oh my god!"

"!"

Why, why again...

I looked at her in surprise at the voice that clearly conveyed my emotional shock. D'Vellania's eyes were on my fingertips.

"You broke your fingernail!"

"...."

"The nails were carefully maintained...."

Wow... this is the first time I've seen him scream. But the cause is my fingernails.

Can't you see the bandage wrapped around the other wrist? A fractured hand would be more visible than a broken fingernail.

As if she felt a rough texture from the fingertips she was holding, she kept fiddling with my fingernails and made a sad expression, then looked back at Ed with a sharp expression.

"What are you doing, Demon, if you can't even take care of your nails?"

"...sorry."

Don't apologize. It was strange that you took care of my nails in the first place.

Ed and DeBellania usually take care of my nails. Ed usually trims it, Develania inspects it, and sometimes he trims it himself.

They made it so obvious that I ignored it, but now that I think about it, it's not true. Why is the adjutant trimming my nails? Why is someone as strong as two corps commanders taking care of my nails?

"The doctor there. What are you doing? "Hurry up and let's not restore Demon's fingernails."

"...I think you are confused about the role of the attending physician, Develania."

"Daemon, there's a crisis with your nails, but that's not the role of a doctor?"

Of course not. If anyone hears this, they will think that their life is in danger.

She looked at Develania with slightly cooled eyes, but as if she knew that was an unreasonable statement, she tilted her head and changed her words patronizingly.

"If it doesn't work out, give me some nutrition."

"...All right."

Ben, who realized that this workshop would never end if he continued to hold on, let out a deep sigh and rummaged through his bag.

"Daemon's hand..."

“Ah...yes.”

I had to look at him with anxious eyes the whole time I was leaving him doing his nails, wondering if he might be upset and do something strange.

This happened less than a day after arriving at the Demon King's Castle.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 122

122. Uncomfortable daily life (3)

Develania appeared like a storm and caused tremendous stress, but running away was like the wind.

It wasn't a big deal, but there was something I needed to point out about Lirinell and the Demon Cult matter, so I began to speak carefully, and as if he sensed what I wanted to say, he just rolled his eyes here and there and muttered an excuse.

[It's fun to make fun of naive people, so stop...]

[....]

[I'm sorry!]

And he was so agile when he threw himself out the window.

When I quickly put my finger on the window frame and looked down, she was already running far away. And when I found him later, he said he was away on a mission...

'Well... okay, I won't be bringing any clothes with me for a while.'

I decided to think positively.

After that, meaningless time passed.

As always, there is nothing special for me to do in the Demon King's Castle. Occasionally, you will receive a mission out of the blue and be called out armed with a weapon, but that is also very rare.

So you can say this is my daily life. There is no need to be anxious now.

"...shit."

I'm anxious!

Before I knew it, I threw the cube to one side and stood up. The soft bed tempted me to lie down more, but it didn't work for me because I was uncomfortable.

For some reason, I don't think I should stay still. I feel like I need to do something right away...

I called out to Ed, who was standing in one corner of the room and rolling his eyes nervously.

"Ed."

"Yes, Demon."

"What do I have to do today?"

"There is a corps commander meeting in the evening."

"Anything else?"

"doesn't exist."

I don't know what to do, so what can I do?

“Fuck.”

Anxiety turns into annoyance, and my emotions are agitated.

Excessive emotions cloud reason and dull the mind. My shitty life sucks. What on earth am I doing? I was muttering all kinds of harsh words, and it was after I muttered, ‘I wish everyone would turn it off’ that I became aware of his presence.

Ed was pale and looking at me with trembling eyes.

“Ah....”

“ ....”

That’s right, watch your mouth. I guess I’m also getting used to the demon world. When I see you being so nervous and even swearing.

‘...I should apologize, right?’

I don’t want to be hated for no reason by demons and no one else. I quickly opened my mouth to prolong my life.

“Ed.”

“Yes... Demon. sorry.”

“Why did you apologize... no...”

I made a mistake! I shouldn’t ask!

I’ve learned from my experience so far that asking the reason for an unexpected apology only makes the situation worse... I guess I can’t help but say things reflexively.

Sure enough, Ed's face became even grayer, his lips trembled, and he barely managed to come up with an answer.

"Because I couldn't turn it off... I made Demon feel uncomfortable. sorry."

"ah."

That's what I heard. Why are you here?

"An apology is okay. Rather, why are you here?"

"I'm sorry..."

"No, I'm not arguing... I'm just asking because I'm really curious about the reason."

He waved his hand vigorously and tried to reassure Ed.

You were usually in your room. Why are you here? Is your room gone? The devil wants me to leave the room?

"The Demon King... told me to stay by Demon's side."

ah. watch.

As he speaks, he checks my eyes to see if I'm being stabbed. Of course, I'm a little annoyed, but I have no intention of getting angry at the poor adjutant. Before that, I wasn't brave enough to get angry at the demons.

Instead of saying anything to him, I kept my mouth shut and brought back the cube I had thrown away. As I was trying to empty my thoughts by randomly mixing things up to suppress the anxious feelings that were still throbbing, Ed spoke carefully.

“If you don’t mind... how about taking a look around the outer castle? “It might help you feel better.”

“Outer castle...?”

Yes, I was too introspective.

It’s been a while since I’ve been to the Demon King’s Castle and I’ve gotten used to it, so it wouldn’t be a bad idea to take a look around at least once.

Oh, of course, you don’t go alone, but on the condition that Ed follows you as an escort. I haven’t grown up enough to walk around the outer castle alone yet. It’ll probably be like that for the rest of my life.

But I should have thought twice before giving my answer.

“Good...”

It was almost at the same time that I gave an affirmative answer that I remembered that there were crazy fanatics outside the castle.

“Nida....”

How great it would be if we could pick up the words. I am experiencing first-hand the dangers of such careless words and actions.

Even if you regret it, nothing will change. Because Ed’s face had already brightened with anger. How can you change your words to that face? I would be happy if I changed my words and my face darkened, but if all of those emotions were replaced by irritation or anger... I suppressed my trembling body. I don't know, I'm not confident I can handle it. I should just go. Shit.

Can not help it. Now that things are like this, I have no choice but to stick with Ed no matter what happens.

"Would you like to change your clothes?"

"Um..."

I didn't answer hastily this time.

First, I looked at my clothes. It's not particularly bad... but I wish it had less of a presence. As far as possible, out of sight of fanatics.

'And it's night in the Demon World.'

Okay, let's just wear completely black clothes. I mainly walk around in the shade where the moonlight doesn't reach.

After making up my mind, I opened the closet and took out black clothes, giving a delayed answer.

"I'm going to change. "Please stay out."

"...."

Why is there no answer?

When I glanced back, I saw Ed looking at me with trembling eyes. No, when I looked closely, I saw that his shaking gaze was fixed on the clothes in my hand.

...why?

"...This will be a clear warning. All right."

“?”

What warning?

Hey, what if I leave like that? I’m getting anxious for no reason!

The door closed without a sound, and I, who was left drowsily, quietly picked up my clothes and glared at them.

‘No matter how I look at it, there’s nothing wrong...’

I felt uneasy for no reason. I should wear something else.

Of course, the idea of wearing black clothes did not change, so I took out another black suit from the closet. Thanks to the fact that the Demon King gave me a lot of black and navy clothes, there was no problem of not having other clothes to replace them with.

The effect of black clothing was amazing!

As if the huge fanatics from before were a lie, no one really came to me. Rather, everyone is avoiding it on their own, but would you really believe it if there was even a demon with a red heart brooch among them?

‘Long live the black clothes!’

I never thought it would be effective in exorcising demons.

I don’t think the robe worked, but is it only clothes that work? If I wear it too often, it may lose its effectiveness, so I’ll have to use it occasionally.

I walked down the street feeling much more at ease.

***

Demon is in a bad mood.

After he wore black clothes and knocked over a plate at a restaurant a long time ago, the 'black clothes' he wore in the Demon King's Castle were recognized as a warning showing that he was in a bad mood.

Pure black without any number or decoration. How would the demons feel when they saw the commander of the 0th Corps wearing those clothes?

'If you catch it, you will die.'

'Let's be unobtrusive.'

'If necessary, I could use all my magical power to escape... Ah, magic was prohibited.'

'Do I die to the Demon King or to the Demon... Isn't that right there?'

'I don't know, but even if I die, I want to die at the hands of the Demon King or another corps commander. No matter how much I think about it, I don't think it's Daemon.'

He is a person who usually stays only in his own room. The fact that they even came out to shout out probably meant that they were going to catch a scapegoat and kill him.

I respect you, Demon, but life is precious. The demons began to slowly avoid him and return.

This was the same for Demonic believers who wore red heart brooches. It was a little different in that the reason was that I couldn't make Demon feel worse.

'I can't be of help, but I can't offend Demon any further!'

‘Let’s hide well. If there is someone among us who offends Daemon, that person will be kicked out immediately.’

‘De-se.’

Knowingly or unknowingly, all the nerves of the countless demons were focused on one side, and his wandering steps without a destination for a long time stopped in the middle of the road.

At the same time, the demons watching stopped breathing.

In the tense silence, the corners of his mouth rose silently.

‘omg.’

Is it because scapegoats are rarely caught? Maybe it was because I found something worth complaining about.

There was a smile on his face that probably didn’t mean anything good either way.

***

Have you ever said that the size of the Demon King’s Castle is like that of a small city in an empire?

It’s not just about size. It was safe to say that the Demon King Castle was a small city.

The Demon King’s castle is largely divided into the inner castle and the outer castle. If we compare this to the capital of an empire, the inner city would be the imperial palace and the outer castle would be a city inside the walls outside the imperial palace.

In the inner castle, there are key figures such as the Demon King, the corps commander, and each corps member, as well as employees who are responsible for the lives of all these people, and in the outer castle, there are ordinary demon soldiers and... 'Oh, I don't know.

,

How do you list all those positions?

Anyway, there are a variety of demons in the outer castle who hold incredibly diverse positions. The atmosphere is like the streets of a human city.

The only difference is that it sells simple food on the street... ah, can't it be called 'panda'? Because there is no money circulating inside the Demon King's Castle.

In any case, even such street vendors are placed in a thoroughly calculated position.

Restaurants, street vendors, bars, open-air training grounds, etc... Everything that exists in the outer castle was placed one by one in the most efficient location by the Demon King in collaboration with the leaders.

'If the enemy breaks through the castle gate, all of this will become a shield blocking the way and a cover for a surprise attack.'

Or it could turn into an offensive weapon.

Whatever the intention, it seems to me now to be an ordinary city street. Since no money is exchanged, it can be considered a better place than the human world.

It must be comfortable since there are no demons around. A smile appeared on my face for the first time in a while.

Ed, who had been quietly observing me from the side, pointed somewhere with his finger as if to divert my attention.

“Demon, since it’s been a long time coming, how about trying something?”

“I’m not hungry...”

“I see. “Excuse me...”

“But I will eat.”

“ ....”

Well. why. what.

That looked delicious.

‘Yum.’

The skewers, I couldn’t tell what kind of meat they were made from, were delicious. Don’t worry about where the meat comes from. As long as it’s delicious, that’s fine.

I looked at Ed, pretending not to notice the black shell piled up in the corner of my vision. He was whispering something to the demon who handed him the skewer.

At first glance, I heard people say things like, “Don’t be nervous,” or “Do you want to die?” I guess he was irritated because he fell too hard when I handed him the skewer.

‘Well, he was shaking so hard even for me to see.’

It was so bad that we almost ran out of sauce.

I thought it was because I was scared of Ed, so I hurried to get it myself, but this heartless lieutenant took the initiative and took it.

Anyway, I thought that if I left it like this, something unfortunate would happen that would cause the poor demon's heart to stop, so I swallowed the meat in my mouth and hurriedly called Ed.

"Ed."

"Yes, Demon."

"I want to look around somewhere else, can you give me directions?"

"Ah yes. All right. "You be careful."

He, who had warned the demons until the very end, hurriedly approached me.

"What do you want to focus on?"

"well... "It would be nice to be able to change my mood."

"If it's a change of mood..."

He thought for a moment and took his step.

After obediently following Ed for a while, he arrived at the open entrance to the training ground.

'Surely we should fight?'

For some reason, I thought I was guiding them normally, but in the end, it turned out like this.

I was sighing deeply in my mind and thinking about ways to avoid a situation where I would have to pick up a weapon, but Ed, who I thought would lead me straight inside, approached the demon who was providing the weapon at the entrance and said something.

The demon's face became troubled as to what on earth he had said.

"Bring it."

"But..."

"I will get permission. So, if you don't want to die..."

No, there. He said it was a change of mood. Why are you threatening other people with their lives?

If I do that, I will really pay for it. I thought I couldn't waste any more time looking for a place to throw away the skewers I had eaten, so I just held them in my hands and walked towards them.

"Ed what now...!"

Jaw. An ominous sound was heard.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 123

123. Uncomfortable daily life (4)

The sound of the toe of a shoe catching somewhere incorrectly. A sign that I am falling.

I reflexively waved my arms to keep my balance. Belatedly, I realized that this might look ugly, so I consciously restrained myself and stretched out my arm to touch the floor, the wall, or something.

“...Ed?”

“Yes... Demon. sorry.”

Ed grabbed one of my arms and lifted it up. I didn't fall because my body was lifted up helplessly by the incredible force... but

I heard the sound of Ed clicking his tongue.

“So, if you don't want me to die, hand it over to me...”

It seems like he's muttering something softly, but I can't hear it clearly. Did you disapprove of me for almost falling? No, judging from the way you apologized to me, I don't think that's the case.

Feeling anxious, I quietly rolled my eyes and made eye contact with the demon who had been listening to Ed's threats just a moment ago. A face that has turned completely white. I glanced up, following the gaze of the guy who was so frightened that it was almost like panic. The arm held up by Ed caught my eye.

To be precise, it was a sharply carved wooden skewer held in that hand.

'...ah.'

I almost stabbed myself when I fell. I almost got in big trouble. No wonder those demons are turning white.

Rather, am I at the end of my life now?

When your life is in danger due to someone else's mistake, your emotional changes usually range from surprise to fear and anger. It seems that the demon in front of me has now reached the stage of fear.

Even if I apologize, will they really accept it?

Ed, who was watching my expression as I was in a life-threatening situation, cautiously opened his mouth.

"I apologize for daring to block Demon's way. But now is not a good time to kill the demons of the Demon Capital."

"...."

"Even the Demon King will not like it."

The last words contained an expression of agonizing over whether it was really okay to say this.

I never tried to kill the demons in the first place. And no matter how sharp it may be, what I hold in my hand is ultimately just a thin wooden skewer. There's no way a demon could die from something like that.

'...What should I answer here?'

Ed moved faster than I could come up with an appropriate answer.

The man who was looking at me blankly said he was rude and let go of the arm he was holding and walked away. It was only after he took the wooden skewer from my hand and glanced at me with anxious eyes under the pretext of helping me take out the trash for him that he turned his head and saw the demon... or rather, grabbed him by the collar.

'...?!'

***

As expected, one of the demons almost died.

I was a little relieved because I didn't have a weapon in my hand, but I never expected to use a wooden skewer.

It is nothing more than a thin wooden stick that breaks easily if you hold it in your hand and apply even the slightest force, but the sharpness of the end can be dangerous depending on where and how it is used.

Demon tried to stick it in the demon's eyes.

'The reason is probably... because they made me wait too long.'

Even if you weren't, you felt uncomfortable, but it's understandable that you're annoyed that your precious time is being wasted with such a useless argument.

Ed himself felt that he should not make Demon wait too long, so he kindly even explained that if he didn't want to die, it would be better to give him up quickly. It's not because I'm worried about the demon in front of me, but because I want to prevent Demon from killing this guy and charging into Demon Arut during the battle.

'Even if it's not as dangerous as when you drank alcohol, you'll be in a dangerous state...'

But before the kind explanation could be heard, Demon moved.

As if his patience had run out, he held on to the leftover wooden skewer and strode towards here, swinging his arm towards the demon's eyes without a moment's hesitation. The swing with weight was quite threatening.

'Should I stop it?'

I don't know how much I thought about it in that short period of time.

Should I do something that offends Demon, who is otherwise uncomfortable, or should I just wait and see?

Stopping the Demon puts one life at risk, but the Demon awakened by killing that guy puts countless lives at risk.

Even though the latter had the advantage of having a higher chance of survival compared to the former, Ed, a loyal member of the Demon King Castle, chose the former.

The guy's face turns white as he realizes too late that he's almost in trouble. When I looked at that pitiful sight, I couldn't help but click my tongue.

"So, if you don't want me to die, hand it over to me..."

...I warned you.

I slowly shifted my gaze and looked at Demon-sama's expression. Are you very upset? You're probably not angry.

Anyway, now it's time to convince him. Ed wiped away the dry needle and opened his mouth with difficulty.

Did the words make sense? There was no response to my sincere words.

Ed didn't seem to have any intention of doing anything more, so he looked around and hurriedly took the wooden skewer out of his hand. Fortunately, I was relieved of my worries thanks to the gentle handing over.

...He won't move suddenly like that.

Rather than having blood on your hands, Demon, who is in an uncomfortable state, it would be better to move here first. After examining him with anxious eyes, he turned around and grabbed the struggling demon by the collar.

***

"Did you see it? Demon is feeling uncomfortable. So, I hope you keep in mind that this is your last chance."

"Now, please wait a moment."

Yes, that's right... I'm already used to people using me as the reason...

I quietly watched the situation unfold.

The demon's actions were fast. It wasn't long before Ed was able to get two sticks from the guy.

...bar?

'It looks simple? 'Did you make such a fuss to get that now?'

It's a real stick. Its appearance is so simple that I can't think of anything other than that word.

While I was at a loss for words due to the absurdity, he approached me and handed me a stick. He opened his mouth as if he was trying to explain something, but quickly closed his mouth.

"Daemon, please excuse me for a moment. It's the type that requires permission from the Demon King..."

"...?"

for a moment. To the point where you need to get permission from the devil? There's no need to pay that much attention...

I reached out my hand without meaning to, but it was already too late. The quick adjutant took out the communication stone and immediately connected with the Demon King before I could stop him.

- Ed? What's going on?

Haha... You're quick to act...

... Damn it.

“Demon is not in a good mood, so I would like to try using a snowflake stick. I would like to ask if it is possible to use it.”

Snowflake stick? What is that name that sounds like a children’s toy?

– Are you in a bad mood? To what extent?

“Uh...”

Ed, who was about to say something, glances at me sideways, as if observing me.

I guess I read something in that hesitation, but I heard the Demon King’s voice again.

– No, no. You probably figured it out and found an appropriate solution. It seems quite serious, so feel free to use it as much as you want. I’ll take care of the rest.

do not do that. You don’t have to give permission.

Why is it that I feel bad? I’m not a kid And why does the devil look after something like this?

There are so many things I want to stumble over, so I end up keeping my mouth shut. When he looked at Ed with eyes that had been liberated and lost his soul, he flinched, held up a stick in his hand, and quickly began to explain.

“Just cut this end with scissors and point it toward the sky.”

“...Then what happens....”

I couldn’t finish my sentence.

– Notify the entire Demon King Castle. 0 Corps Commander Daemon Arut is planning to test out the previously developed snowflake stick. The users of the Demon Castle should not be embarrassed by the sudden climate change and should continue to do their jobs.

Sudden climate change?

The doubt lasted for a moment. Demons not only know how to use magic, but they also make and use magic items in their daily lives. They say the use of magic is currently banned... but since it was developed before, it seems like a magic item.

Since the name is Snowflake Stick, does it make it snow or something?

Naturally, the broadcast announced directly by the Demon King strongly attracted the attention of the Demons.

“test? “Have you already finished all that?”

“Shhh, don’t you know it’s just an excuse just by looking at it? “Demon, you’re feeling uncomfortable, so you’re trying to solve this problem in a peaceful way.”

“I wonder if this will work on Demon....”

“Since you are from the human world, it doesn’t mean there is no possibility at all. Let’s hope it works.”

“I’m going to have to go through a lot of trouble to clean up after myself.”

I can’t hear it clearly, but I know my name is mentioned.

It looks like the devil is tearing apart the words he had just wrapped, but I am so embarrassed that I can’t even look up.

‘I said it wouldn’t be possible... I want to go home...’

If you go to the Count's residence, you will want to come here again. Are you really saying that there is no place where I can be comfortable?

I wiped away my hot face and concentrated on taking deep breaths to calm my mind.

Meanwhile, Edgar, who had received scissors from another demon, cuts off the end of the stick and points it toward the sky. Something erupted from the cut part and exploded in the air.

'Was it a bomb? Well... I'm not particularly surprised.'

The extent of the bomb was within the expected range. Ed won't do anything that will harm my body, so there's nothing to be afraid of. The problem is the reactions of other demons...

It's obvious. If you broadcast it so openly and you suffer harm, of course you won't blame me, right? My lifespan has shortened again. haha.

It had been a long time since I had been liberated in this respect, so I looked at the sky where the bomb had exploded with half-dead eyes. And I couldn't help but open my eyes wide.

White, cold fluffy crystals that fall like flower petals.

"...eye?"

"yes. Do you like it? Unlike the demon world where there is no climate change, the human world sometimes snows, so I thought it might help change Demon's mood..." "It's definitely not that bad..."

Such a peaceful method. I guess demons knew how to use this method too. But why did you do that all this time?

I held out my hand and received a snowflake. cold. It's real snow. It's interesting, but why did they even broadcast something like this?

The answer to my question came quickly.

"Waste is falling from the sky..."

"We have to clean this up..."

"What can we do... It's what Daemon is doing... It's better than dying at His hands. That's right... let's shut up and clean it up..."

"Haha hahaha." Everything is good, so I hope you don't use it too much...."

"I hope you don't use the red one too... but that won't work, right?"

Ah...

I understand.

They seem to be half in a daze. What should I do? I feel sorry and look around, but without realizing it, Ed puts scissors in my hand and urges me to cut Daemon too. No, it's not that you don't notice, it's that you just don't notice.

He seems like a heartless bastard.

However, it was nice to see the snow after a long time and I wanted to try it myself, so I pretended not to notice and took the scissors.

Ed said in surprise when he saw his bandaged wrist.

“Ah, Demon, your hand... I will cut it off.”

“That’s it.”

It’s been a while since I’ve been feeling like I’m being treated like a kid, so I don’t like it.

Of course, that wasn’t my intention, but I didn’t want to be treated like that anymore, so I held the stick in one hand and the scissors with my fractured hand and aimed at the marked line.

‘...my hands are shaking.’

My injured hand keeps shaking and I can’t gauge properly.

It won’t work. I moved the hand that was holding the end of the stick closer to the marked line and applied the scissors again.

Suddenly.

“...ah.”

“Daemon’s hands...!”

First of all, I cut it. I immediately moved my hand so that the cut point was pointing towards the sky.

Pow! The same roar as before was heard, and red snowflakes began to fall among the white snow. I feel like I can hear the sorrowful wailing of a demon somewhere, but I guess it’s just my mood.

I looked at the red liquid that had melted on my palm and then looked at Ed as if asking for an explanation.

“Ed?”

“Yes, Demon.”

“Why...”

A familiar smell emerges from the red liquid.

The moment I realized where I was smelling the smell, the snowflakes in the sky that looked quite pretty appeared eerily.

I opened my mouth with difficulty, trying not to be disgusted by the thing that was landing on my head.

“Why do I smell blood in my eyes? This can’t be right.”

Is it real blood?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 124

124. The world's protection (1)

I swallowed the gossip. However, as always, the quick-witted adjutant noticed what was being said and responded immediately.

"no. "We just added blood flavor to make it feel like real blood."

"No, just snow is enough, so why bother making something like this..."

"Because war is greatly affected by climate and atmosphere. It was developed in the hope that it could be useful when fighting a war with the human world. Rather, Demon's hands..."

They weren't meant for children's toys. Well, that means you need the devil's permission.

'More than that...'

I followed Ed's gaze and saw my fingertips dripping with blood.

I was only trying to cut the stick, but I ended up cutting off my finger as well. It's only a small cut, but it's unlikely that the cut will come at this much...

“Daemon!”

...is it coming?

There is a certain level of professionalism, but you come to work for something that is nothing special. Aren't you tired?

I looked at him with bewildered eyes and was about to put my injured finger in my mouth when someone grabbed my wrist.

“...Ed?”

“Ben, let's get him treated. “The cut was much deeper than I thought.”

He wraps his injured finger in a handkerchief and presses it firmly as if to stop the bleeding. My eyebrows naturally furrowed from the tingling pain.

Ben hurries over and Ed stands up, removing his handkerchief. The blood that had stopped began to gush out again. Ben clicked his tongue softly.

“I can't use magic, so I think I'll have to disinfect it first... stop the bleeding, and sew it up.”

“I want you to treat Demon properly so he doesn't end up putting blood in his mouth.”

Ed, who had taken out the communication console from his pocket as if he had received a call, spoke to Ben and immediately connected the communication console and left.

That was done like that on purpose. You didn't give Ben a chance to retort.

Ben also trembled as if he felt unfairly treated, but he was unable to give up his strong professional spirit and began to treat his wounds with a grin.

Oh, come on...! Now wait a minute. I wasn't under anesthesia...!

'...Hmm, your expression is grim.'

Let's just keep our mouths shut.

Ben, who had been mesmerized by the rare experience of stitching up a wound raw without anesthesia, carefully tied the knot for a moment, then trembled as if he had belatedly realized the fact.

Trembling eyes turned to me.

"Daemon, are you... alright?"

"Yes... well..."

If anyone saw me, they would think I was trying to kill them. I smiled detachedly to calm him down from his fear. It hurt, but it didn't harm my body, and it was already over, so what could I do?

...But why are you shaking more?

"How...how could you make such a mistake?"

"Ben...?"

"I'm so sorry, Daemon! Even if I die, I have nothing to say!"

My doctor is disqualified...!

It was only after hearing those words that at first glance seemed like tears that I could understand why he was shaking. So he cannot forgive himself. As much as you have a strong professional spirit, you cannot tolerate mistakes like this.

“...It’s really okay, so there’s no need to apologize further. “If it wasn’t okay, I would have told you a long time ago.”

I couldn’t say it because I was scared. If it really hurt like I was going to die, I would have told you. My life is precious to me too.

I felt like he was going to hit his head and die right before my eyes, so I hurried to stop him, feeling burdened.

But Ben, who normally would have stopped at this point, instead raised his head and glared.

“okay! That’s it. Why didn’t you tell me sooner! “You must have been sick!”

I was startled by this ferocious attitude I was seeing for the first time and kept my mouth shut.

Ben must have understood my silence, so his high eyebrows dropped and he muttered gloomily.

“Daemon... you must not endure pain in front of your doctor. There are limits to the magic stone signal, and even that signal is unstable these days. Demon-sama, you have to express where you are uncomfortable or in pain for easy treatment with minimal pain...” “....” “ up raw without anesthesia... How can Demon-sama endure that...?"

Sewn

"...."

"Besides, it's okay... without reprimand... isn't this being too generous..."

Hmm, what should I do with this atmosphere?

He rolled his eyes for a moment and then held out a finger that showed signs of stitching.

"Are you not bandaging it?"

"ah...! No, you have to wrap it to prevent infection. "Just a moment..." As Ben was carefully taking out gauze and bandages and wrapping them around the wound, Ed, who had finished communicating in the meantime, came up to me.

Looking at his extremely sorry expression, it seems like something happened. I don't think it's my fault.

"Demon, the Demon Lord is calling you. "He said there was a place he needed to visit together urgently."

I knew it.

Since you didn't do anything wrong, there's nothing to complain about. When I nodded that I understood, he glanced at Ben and urged me sarcastically.

"Have you finished treatment yet?"

"...It's just over. Take him with you. ... Ah, Demon. If possible, avoid allowing water to come into contact with the wound.”

I nodded that I understood and started walking after Ed without delay.

When I arrived at the Demon King’s office and opened the door, the Demon King was holding his forehead as if he was in pain.

Unlike the irritated face that could be seen at first glance from the angle, the voice greeted me kindly as always.

He lowered his eyes motionlessly as if he had recognized the other person without even making face-to-face contact, and a delicate voice came out of his mouth.

“I’m here? Even though I heard that you were not in a good mood, I called you this to make you feel better. Sorry. Something urgent came up. “No, it’s more of a hassle and annoyance than an emergency.”

Finally he raised his head. The annoyance from earlier was gone and a calm face faced me.

Look at the change in facial expression. That’s creepy. After all, no matter how soft he looks, the devil is still the devil.

“I’m going to listen to the complaints and frustrations of the fairies. Of course, this is only from my perspective.”

“ .... ”

“The land of the fairies is quite beautiful considering it is located in the abyss. “Unseasonable snow is okay, but this won’t be any worse for a change of mood.”

Come with me.

The Demon King grins and holds out his hand. I quietly looked at him.

‘If it were the devil I knew, ‘Would you like to go with me?’ ‘I would have used an invitation-like tone of voice.’

Words with no choice.

I stopped the meaningless snowball fight and placed my hand on top of his.

My perspective has changed.

***

It wasn’t my intention, but this confirmed that I was still in control of this game.

Then the emperor would be no different. I felt a little relieved.

‘He pretended to be relaxed.’

It seems like you’re so anxious that you even abandon the invitation-like tone of voice.

It’s probably because I heard that I was in a bad mood.

‘Are you worried that I might be on the emperor’s side?’

huh? Devil.

Are you afraid of losing this game?

***

The Demon King did not move straight to the land of the fairies.

[Oh, Demon King, Demon. What's going on here...?!]

[Let's go.]

[!?!]

He went somewhere in the Demon King's garden and almost kidnapped Hien, who was tending a monster plant, and took him with him. Finally, I saw a handsome man with blond hair, green eyes and pointy ears. I was able to.

"Yes, because of that demon, the seeds entrusted to us by the world have become contaminated. How are you going to take responsibility?"

Of course, as soon as he saw the Demon King, he began to question him with a fierce attitude.

I held my breath, rolled my eyes, and looked at the fist-sized seed he thrust in front of the Demon King. It looks like there are a lot of black stains, as if there is mold.

Is that contaminated with that demon energy? To me, it just looks like mold...

Before I could even finish thinking, black smoke seeped out of the seed. Oh shit. That's right Magi.

"...Hien."

The Demon King, who was listening expressionlessly to the protest of the man who appeared to be the Fairy King with his arms crossed, pointed to the seed with his chin.

"See if you can be revived."

"yes yes...!"

Hien took the seeds with trembling hands and examined them with eyes shining with extreme excitement. The eyes, which had been shining with pure interest, quickly lost their vitality and sank, as if they were remembering the question the Demon King had asked, 'whether or not it is possible to revive him.'

I could tell just by looking at their expressions.

It's impossible.

"I don't think it's completely impossible to sprout and grow, but... there's nothing we can do about it being contaminated with demonic energy."

"...this."

"Take responsibility."

The Fairy King growls, twisting his beautiful eyebrows grimly.

The Demon King scratched his cheek as if he was troubled and asked another question as if to change the subject.

"Did you say the world entrusted it to you?"

"okay. We are the species that most respects the will of the world. That is why the world trusted and entrusted this seed."

"Then there's no reason to be so desperate."

"what?"

The Demon King shrugged his shoulders.

"You said 'respect' with your own mouth. But why are you so obsessed with just one seed? "This goes beyond respecting the world. It's as if your species is the world's dog."

"What nonsense!"

"It's not nonsense, it just seems that way."

Yes, that's right, it's not nonsense, it just seems like a provocation.

In order to survive, I slowly moved away from the Demon King. Judging from the Fairy King's expression, it's not a lie, it really looks like he's about to kill someone.

However, unexpectedly, he did not explode with anger. Rather, he let out his anger with an earth-shattering sigh and muttered in a much calmer voice as if he had been liberated.

"Okay... Just like you said, our species is not the world's dog, and the seed issue has already become irreversible, so let's move on..."

Hien, who had been listening quietly, raised his hand.

"Well... then this seed..."

"...you can keep it."

"thank you!"

I feel this every time, but this one is really not normal...

Hien is happy and carefully touches the seed, as if not feeling the absurd gaze of the leaders.

The Fairy King looks back at the Demon King in an attitude as if he can't even see his surroundings. His eyes were so clear that even I could read them, and he was asking, 'What is he?' The Demon King, who could not have known that, quietly touched his forehead.

The Fairy King, who was silent for a moment, spoke slowly again.

"...I want you to do something to deal with the monsters first."

"We are also hunting hard. However, the number is increasing more than the number being processed. If there was a hero, it would have been suppressed a little..." I was nervous for a moment because I had seen the Demon King speak in that way before during a similar conversation during a meeting at the Demon King's castle, but fortunately, he didn't make any eye contact with me.

'...No, but why do I have to be nervous and relieved?'

It's unfair. It has nothing to do with me.

I completely took my eyes off them and took a few more steps to get further away from the demon lord. As a result, I naturally reached the lakeside and found something there.

'what? What kind of person is...'

Demon? Fairy people?

Looking at the Fairy King's attitude towards the Demon King, it is impossible for the Demon to be in the pond. So are you a fairy?

...It has fins?

"It's a remark as if we're waiting for the birth of a hero. You'll have to hope that the hero doesn't show up. Now that you think about it, have I ever told you that the world is on the brink?"

Oh, I laughed. You smiled at me, right?

I don't know who you are, but your smile is quite elegant.

"Well, but I definitely remember I said this. 'Anyway, the hero will appear and I will greet him. This is what has been happening until now. There is no reason to be afraid anymore.'"

"You..."

I intentionally ignored the bloody conversation between the leaders of the two races taking place on one side. If the fin man in front of me hadn't popped out of the water, I would have been able to ignore it for the rest of my life.

Even though I was startled by the sudden movement, it was quite mysterious to see the fins transforming into human legs. Bruises. The exposed white feet step on the ground.

"The Demon King will die at the hands of the hero born this time."

I was speechless at the noble and clear voice. Because I admire your voice? No, because of the content that attracted the attention of the two leaders.

What if he suddenly appears and says something that attracts attention like that?...

As expected, the eyes of the Demon King and the Fairy King are in this direction. Fortunately, the focus was on that woman and not me, but just being in the range of her gaze made me suffocate and I tried to sneak away again... but I was caught by the woman!

Hien hien! help me! I think you're the best here.I'd rather be by your side!

'...are you possessed by the seed?!'

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 125

125. God's protection of the world (2)

The speckled, moldy, fist-sized seed is so pretty that I don't even think about looking back because I'm just looking at it.

Even if it's your first time seeing a seed, you damn gardener.

Suddenly, the Fairy King's eyes landed on me. Blue green eyes shined with interest.

"Yes, the Mermaid Queen can see the future... I've seen her briefly before, but she's a very interesting person. "What is the name of the human there?"

"It's Deon Hart..."

He spoke in a whisper, but glanced at Hien just in case.

It's obvious he didn't hear it. The Fairy King also seemed to sense the situation and nodded.

"Hmm... Okay, I'll remember that."

You don't have to remember. Please forget it.

No matter how I felt, the Fairy King examined me carefully as if evaluating me, then turned his head and looked at the Demon King. A much calmer voice than before called out to the other person.

“Demon Lord, why did you bring this person here? “Is there anything that needs to be heard?”

“Because the scenery here is the best in the abyss.”

“...what?”

“I brought you here to ensure mental stability.”

“This is not a tourist destination!”

Voices rose again.

...Isn't now the time to fight about something like that? I definitely heard a woman called the Mermaid Queen talk about the death of the Demon King. Why is there no response?

‘Did I hallucinate?’

I slowly raised my head and saw the woman still holding my shoulder. As if she sensed his gaze, she immediately lowered her head, met his eyes, and smiled softly.

I immediately turned my head and avoided eye contact. There was an unknown kindness in their eyes, which made me feel uncomfortable for some reason.

I heard that soft and elegant voice from behind me.

“You seem to be very hated by the world, Demon King. “This hero was no joke.”

“To begin with, our species itself is a thorn in the side of the world, so there is no need to be more hated. Rather, isn't seeing the future any different from prophecy? “The future you see can change at any time.”

“Well... the future I saw this time is a bit special... wouldn't it be a miracle if I could change it?”

“I told you. “The world is on edge.”

These are remarks made by the heads of two races. Even though I didn't know much, I knew it wasn't something to ignore.

Nevertheless, the Demon King was uncharacteristically calm for someone who had heard threatening remarks. Her smooth face, without a single hint of agitation, was plastered with a smile.

“Shall I tell you a fun fact?”

As always, with his light and relaxed voice behind him, the Demon King's unique atmosphere began to dominate the space.

He stands crookedly with his arms crossed, smiles playfully, and snaps his fingers as if teasing the two nervous leaders.

“Do you know what humans call the power that we demons use?”

The sound of giggling laughter echoed throughout the vast space.

The small but vivid laughter that rang in my ears silenced not only me but also the heads of the two races.

As if answering the question that was never returned, the Demon King gave his own answer in a short space of time.

“‘miracle’.”

“....”

“...So arrogant.”

After silence, the Fairy King lightly clicked his tongue and looked back at me... Why are you looking at me?

“There human. “You hurt your hand.”

“Yes... well....”

“It looks like they couldn’t treat it properly because the Demon King banned magic, and instead treated it with primitive methods. I will treat it myself.”

“No, it’s okay...”

“Follow me.”

Yes...

it seemed like he was strangely interested in me earlier, but I guess I had no choice. For some reason, I feel like they want to use wound care as an excuse to observe me more... Maybe it’s my mood, right?

He hesitated to look at the back of the man walking ahead, then turned his head and looked at the demon king. He smiled and waved his hand, as if he couldn’t see my eyes asking for help.

“Go ahead. “I’ll be here talking to this mermaid.”

Damn it...

I looked back at Hien with some hope, but...

‘He’s still doing that.’

I’m just going to give up.

Leaving behind Hien, who was about to marry the seed, he obediently followed the Fairy King.

Even though it was the same night as when I was in the Demon King’s Castle, the scenery here was quite beautiful.

The moon casts a soft curtain of light, and green trees rise tall beneath it. There was a clearing here and there with gently shining flowers, and even though the trees were quite large, there was never a time when the moonlight did not reach the ground.

‘The devil didn’t bring me here for no reason.’

This was the first time I realized that such pretty flowers exist even in places where there is no sun. Hien, why does this bastard do such a thing with such pretty flowers...

‘...let’s not talk about it.’

This may be because it is a plant that can only grow in fairy lands.

I moved on, internally defending Hien. When I thought of Hien, I immediately thought of the monsters of the Demon King’s Castle and was scared for a moment, but soon I was fascinated by the surrounding scenery and forgot about it.

I think I looked around with a sense of fascination that was beyond a change of mood.

What brought me back to my senses was when the Fairy King, who had been walking in silence for a while, snapped his fingers and called someone.

“Bring the herbs for trauma.”

“Where are you hurt?”

I stopped breathing for a moment. I thought my heart stopped.

The view that had been clear just a moment ago was obscured by a black shadow. A black figure with no face suddenly appeared in front of me, against the moonlight, and bowed before the fairy king.

Secret...like an escort or errand boy?

I barely calmed my startled heart and slowly looked at the person who appeared in front of me.

‘He also has pointy ears. They seem to be of the same race, but the ear shape seems to be a racial trait, right?’

Jaykar, the commander of the Demon King’s 1st Corps, also had pointy ears.

After considering the correlation between Jaykar and the Fairy tribe, he quickly shook his head.

‘Let’s stop making unanswered speculations and focus more on this.’

It looks like it jumped from a tree.

The tree here is quite high, but the fact that they landed without making a sound, let alone getting injured, shows that they are a different race from humans not only in appearance but also in other aspects.

“It’s not me, it’s the guests here.”

“A customer...? All right.”

The guy who glanced at me kicked between trees a few times, jumped up onto a high branch, and disappeared in an instant, stepping on the branches as if crossing a stepping stone.

It was a movement that left me completely amazed.

“I wonder if Jaykar can do that too....”

“Jaykar...?”

No matter what, this kind of admiration shouldn’t come out of my mouth.

The Fairy King’s pointed ears twitched. He looked back at me with his eyebrows slightly narrowed as if he was doubting his ears, and then his entire face frowned as if he was convinced that he had heard correctly.

There’s no way he wouldn’t know the name of the second-in-command who also acts as the Demon King’s agent. Even if you don’t know, given the circumstances, it would be predictable that the person I’m talking about is a demon.

How would he feel because he dared to compare the fairy race to a demon race that they were not even on good terms with?

‘Damn...’

This situation was clearly a mistake on our part. I was about to apologize for being rude, but before I could say anything, a sharp voice came at me.

“Yes, a warrior of our clan who has been contaminated by the demon king’s magic energy. It’s been a while since I heard that name. How is he?”

Hehehe, it was really related!

As I said before, the power of the Demon King does not purely unite among themselves to create demons. It seems that Jaykar is a demon from the fairy race, born from the power of the demon king.

The Fairy King deserves to hate the Demon King....

‘And now he might hate me too.’

He didn’t seem to have a very good personality, but I made a mistake in speaking that touched a sensitive part...

Ignorance is not a very good excuse.

I couldn’t answer that I was doing well, or yes or no, so I hesitated. The Fairy King, who was looking at me for a while, let out a light sigh and held out his hand.

“...?”

“hand. “I need to treat it.”

A soft voice calls out to a child.

I reflexively placed my injured hand on top of his and then looked around. The guy who went to get the herbs hasn’t come yet? I don’t think I have to stay like this until he comes.

—At that moment, I saw the Fairy King picking up a small box from under a nearby tree.

‘...You’ve already come and gone.’

It’s also fast without any trace.

I obediently handed over his hand. The bandage wrapped around the fingertips was removed, revealing a small wound.

“...I cut off almost half of my finger. “The width is narrow, but the wound is deep.”

When you say that, it doesn’t seem like a small wound...?

As I was laughing awkwardly, the Fairy King opened the box, took out some herbs, crushed them, and spoke.

“You said you came here to get mental stability.”

Nope. That’s an excuse the devil gave up on his own.

“Our species’ territory is not a tourist destination, but this is the first time humans have set foot in our territory, and since we have already arrived, I will personally guide you as a souvenir, especially after the treatment is over.”

yes? No, wait a minute, you don’t have to...!

I was shocked and was about to refuse when he put crushed herbs on his fingertips and pressed them. My body stiffened in surprise at the unexpected action.

ah! It hurts...ah...it doesn’t hurt, does it?

‘...is it a dream?’

Everything is healed. I couldn’t understand the situation, so I blinked for a moment.

I took off the herb and carefully played with my exposed fingers. The look is so clean that it looks as if the wound never occurred, to the point that anyone would think that the bare skin was sewn.

...I crave medicinal herbs.

The Fairy King seemed to have noticed my lustful eyes and snapped his fingers in front of me, who was looking blankly at the herb box.

“Deon Hardt.”

“sorry.”

“...what?”

Ah, that’s what my expression must have looked like when the demons suddenly apologized.

I learned something I wasn’t even curious about. He avoided the Fairy King’s gaze with a shy expression.

“it’s nothing. Instead, just call me Deon.”

“...Yes, Deon. “You seem uncomfortable with my favor.”

He looked at me with suspicious eyes, took my hand again, untied the stitches, and started talking casually.

Are you saying that because you knew? This bastard....

‘...he knew I was uncomfortable for a moment, but he pretended not to know and brought me to a place where no one was around...’ Are you trying to kill me...?!

No, but you treated me. There's no way they could kill it after treating it at best. What on earth?

...I don't know what it is, but in this place where it's just the two of us, it's better not to go against his wishes. I answered with a straight face.

"no."

"There is no need to lie. "It seems like not only me but also the mermaids' representative is uncomfortable."

It doesn't work.

As if retaliating, he undoes the stitches and presses the crushed herb again on the spot where a little blood is oozing out. My body trembled with a stronger force than before.

He put down his clean-cut hand, as if throwing it away, and reached for the other bandaged hand.

"Doesn't this unreasonable favor bother you?"

"...."

"Hmm... bone-related herbs..."

He rummaged through the box, took out another herb, crushed it, grinned, and patted it on his fractured hand, who didn't know when the bandage had been taken off. His flowing blonde hair swayed with his movements.

"It would be uncomfortable for me to treat you like this now. "You'll probably want to refuse the offer to guide you, too."

You know it well.

"Then you can tell me the reason."

My hands are cool. The throbbing pain that had been bothering me all along disappeared.

This time, he mutters 'herbs for muscles' and rummages through the box. A monotonous voice came out dressed in a casual tone, as if asking if I wanted to eat.

"Because the world is paying attention to you."

"...yes?"

"I don't know why the Mermaid Queen shows favor to you, but that's the only reason I show favor to you."

Thinking about it again, that wasn't something to say while dabbing muscle herbs all the way to your wrists.

—Because the world is watching you carefully.

Called.

"As the head of a clan that most respects the will of the world, I cannot help but show favor."

...I was told that my physical condition seemed to be pretty good these days, but it seems like there was a physical problem going on.

Yeah, no matter how much I think about it, I feel like my ears are tired. Otherwise, you wouldn't keep hearing nonsense. Who is the world paying attention to and why?

I tried to stay calm and asked back carefully.

"Could you... say it again? I think I misheard."

This time, I concentrated and opened my ears wide, so I should be able to hear properly.

Let's just ignore the trembling voice.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 126

126. Protection of the World (3)

"You seem to be suspicious."

"No, that's not it..."

The Fairy King brushed aside the human's negativity as he organized the box of herbs. Since I didn't say it with any particular intention, it doesn't matter what answer I get.

Instead, he grabbed the person who was trying to retreat and slowly examined him from head to toe.

A body that looks weak despite its small size. What differentiates them from other humans, namely their red eyes, is that they are weak to light, which actually acts as a hindrance to their activities, so in the end, there is no positive aspect.

'...I won't know even if I look at it again.'

Why is the world paying attention to this man? I couldn't understand at all.

I could tell from the first time I saw him that he was the head of the fairy race who was sensitive to the will and flow of the world.

The world is expecting something from this man.

I don't know what that is. The world didn't tell us directly, and there's no way to know what it is because it didn't go in and out of the world's head – the 'head' doesn't exist in the first place. All we can do is guess.

'Since when did it start? The world paid attention to this guy.'

I don't know, but it must have been quite a long time ago. Because this movement of the world was observed a long time ago. The first time I discovered flow was about 10 years ago.

Still, it was only recently that I met him in person. Since we didn't really plan on meeting, it just passed by.

An unexpected first meeting. Although it was very short, the Fairy King studied him for enough time to define his opponent, and what came to mind was doubt and doubt.

Are you really saying that the person in front of you is the person the world is paying attention to? He's just a weak human with a slightly strong smell of blood. Did the world make a wrong decision?

I narrowed my eyes. I can see that the world is working hard to supplement that weak body without being noticed.

...That would be the equivalent of pouring water into a bottomless pot. The Fairy King clicked his tongue lightly and looked away.

'If there's nothing special about you physically, are you only focusing on it because of a special situation?'

It is still too early to doubt the world's judgment. Because the world is a system, not a person with a body and emotions. There has only been one case so far where a system that calculates and judges the situation more calmly than anyone else has made a mistake.

Let's see, what was his situation?

The only human who travels between the human world and the demon world. I heard that both the owner of the empire, which can be seen as the center of the human world, and the Demon King put him in important positions and cherish him.

'...Oh wait.'

There, the Fairy King was able to think of one possibility.

Return your thoughts. He shifts his gaze again, examines the human, and rolls his head.

I looked a little closer and saw it. That body that the world is complementing. That is not a supplement that makes the body strong or healthy.

'Supplementation and modification of classes that allow us to better accept the forces of the world.'

If his health has improved, it may have been a side effect of this process.

'That's right.'

That was it.

Now I understand why the leader of the mermaids bothered to touch his shoulder while saying that.

[The Demon King will die at the hands of the hero born this time.]

I looked at the human in front of me with new eyes. White hair, pale skin, blood-red eyes.

Among them, the Fairy King looked into the eyes, which at first glance seemed to contain ordinary emotions, but felt a sense of discomfort, and quietly agreed.

‘The next hero is you.’

The world has chosen you as a candidate for a hero for a very long time.

***

Not so long ago, there was a warrior who cared about a comrade even until his death.

Even in death, he cared about his comrades. ‘If I die, my comrades who do not even have the fragments of a hero will die at the hands of the devil.’

So I devoted my whole heart to it and made a strong wish.

[Please save him.]

The world answered.

[I have been watching him for a long time.]

***

But there is an unresolved question.

‘It wasn’t that long ago that the human Deon Hart began traveling between the demon world and the human world.’

I'm not sure, but I believe it's been about 2 years at most.

The world paid attention to him 10 years ago. What on earth happened then?

'...Let's think about it like this.'

The Fairy King stopped thinking.

Even if you think about it any longer, you won't find an answer.

'Rather than that, he chose this human as the next hero...'

He has no idea what the reason is, so all he can think is that the world is suffering for the sake of it. It is said that previous warriors also modified their bodies without realizing it in order to accept the power given by the world, but they did not undergo this much modification.

It's just a modification to accept the 'power of the hero', but it's almost like they're remodeling it.

"You must have felt it subconsciously too. Have you ever felt strangely lucky?"

"...."

"Even if you live in a situation where you feel like you are going to die and suffer permanent injuries, you end up with recoverable injuries."

I removed the muscle herb that had been attached. Clean hands and wrists were revealed. As if checking the condition, he gently swept the area around his wrist and then grabbed it and pulled it.

The light body was dragged helplessly. For some reason, the red eyes that had sunken into silence were still looking up at me. As the distance between them got closer, the Fairy King growled lowly.

“Honestly, you might be inclined to believe this and act accordingly.”

“....”

The world’s protection is strong. They’re wrapping this person up tightly.

This probably means that he has overcome the danger of death many times and that the world has directly shielded him from death many times.

The world rarely intervenes directly. Aftermath and Problems of Intervention We have already suffered greatly from unexpected side effects, realized the dangers, and are still working to resolve the side effects.

How could this person think that a world like that would directly protect his life?...

“Have you ever felt like your body was in a strange state? At some point, a force stronger than calculated can be generated or shocks can be withstood better than expected. Especially in a life-threatening situation, his physical condition must have fluctuated from good to good. However, if you look to see if your body has become healthier, you will see that it is no different from usual.”

“....”

...Well, I guess I’m confused too.

The world's attention is both fortunate and unfortunate in itself. Convinced that the life of the human in front of me would not be smooth in the future, I let go of my wrist and turned my back with some sympathy.

Since you have healed a human wound that the world is paying attention to, you don't have to worry about ruining the seed you were entrusted with.

"Then now, let me guide you..."

"King, King!"

I made a promise, and I felt pity at the same time. As I was about to guide him through the forest as planned, small fairies came flying in.

A face that looks urgent, unlike its usual playful and bright appearance.

"It's a monster! "A monster has invaded!"

"...Devil...!"

He stopped gritting his teeth.

***

The monster invaded. This is where the devil is!

It is a place where there are even heads of other tribes. Have they lost a lot of sense? Or did you suddenly turn around and lose your head?

I quickly followed the Fairy King and returned to where the Demon King was, without even realizing the gap in memory that had occurred in the previous conversation. I stopped in shock when I saw the Fairy King glaring at the Demon King as if he were going to kill him. The force was so terrifying that even the Demon King, who always kept his composure, made the corners of his mouth tremble.

“...I’ll handle it.”

“of course. Rather, it seems like they have lost their survival instinct...”

They invade the place where the leaders of each race are gathered.

To the fairy king’s mutterings, the fairies flying around him added their words one by one.

“I got stronger!”

“I got more scared!”

“That’s what happened after I ate some strange brown liquid!”

huh? Wait, the last one... what?

There is no way the leaders of a race would miss what I noticed. Realizing the importance of the last words, they all looked at the fairy child.

“Brown liquid?”

“yes! “I ate some strange brown liquid and it got stronger!”

“...So, is this a conspiracy targeting our clan?”

Oh, I feel like I’m caught up in something I don’t want to be involved with at all. Can you please send me home right now?

The demon king tilted his head without even looking at me, perhaps because he couldn't feel my gaze, or because he noticed but was pretending not to notice.

"At a time when I and the head of the mermaid tribe are here?"

"That's strange too. I'll have to do some more research. Of course, after dealing with the damn monsters."

Do it quickly.

At my silent urging, the Demon King sighed, nodded, and looked back at me.

I'm sure you're not asking me to go with you. Unlike how nervous he was, he smiled and told me to stay here.

"I'm not doubting your skills, but since it's my first time here, there's a chance I could get lost. "It can be difficult to tell when using wide-range magic."

Then, of course, you should be waiting here. I was planning on happily complying without having to explain it that way in the first place.

But wasn't widespread magic prohibited? He gave the order himself...

'That's right, he gave the order himself.'

In other words, the authority to withdraw orders or make some exceptions is also in his hands.

Are you saying I can do it and other kids can't? The mindset is exactly like that of a devil lord.

Anyway, since it had nothing to do with me, I lost interest and nodded obediently.

“Please come back.”

After the demon king disappeared, I looked around to check the atmosphere. Maybe it was because he was the one I encountered most often out of all the people here, but the first person I noticed was Hien, who was rolling his eyes nervously while holding a seed in his arms.

‘...Even in this situation...’

It was only for a moment that the damn gardener was in sight. Just don’t think about it. It’s better not to worry about it here. I complied with the familiar command to turn away from my head and glanced at the Fairy King.

As if he sensed my gaze, he glanced at the source, checked me, turned his head, and snapped his fingers. The fairies, whom I had already seen once, appeared silently again and showed their courtesy.

“Bring me that brown liquid.”

“All right.”

Due to my previous experience, I was able to watch the entire process leading up to his disappearance without being surprised. This time, I made sure to join quickly, so there were no mistakes like before.

In the quiet space again, the Fairy King turned around without regret and saw the Mermaid Queen. I don’t know when she went in, but she was in the pond, flapping her fins and leaning her arms on the water’s edge.

“Who did this and with what intention?”

“I know, right. “Even if we try to suspect humans, it is questionable whether we will be able to get this far. In the first place, humans only know the existence of demons and do not know much about the existence of other races, so they are not suitable as criminals.”

“Even if you try to assume that someone in the clan did it, there is no reason to do so. “There is no situation for that.”

“There is insufficient reason to suspect the devil as the culprit. The Demon King is the type of person who uses force to suppress any dissatisfaction, and since I have now gone to kill the demon...”

“What about you?”

This is something I feel every time the Fairy King opens his mouth, but his tone is very sharp. Should I say that it makes the listener feel bad?

If I were that mermaid, I would feel pretty dirty. It’s not like I’m saying it back, but I’m saying, ‘What about you?’

‘Is that the snout that calls out to the hawk?’

It seems like fights that shouldn’t happen like this will break out...

Fortunately, the Mermaid Queen, who had a good personality like she first impressions, took his tone of voice without much attention. A calm voice came out quietly.

“I don’t have any good reason for that either. What would be the use of making monsters that can’t be controlled stronger? Even I am here. "If the monsters come all the way here, the most dangerous person is me."

"That... too."

"Then the rest of those here are...."

Hien and I.

Their heads turned towards me and then towards Hien. Seeing them holding moldy... or rather contaminated, seeds carefully, they shook their heads at the same time as if they were thinking the same thing.

"It's not him."

"I'm not a demon."

You got rid of all your doubts right away. Congratulations, Hien.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 127

127. Tightrope Walking (1)

Their eyes moved again and landed on the only remaining human. Yes, damn me. Me.

“....”

“....”

What... Why aren't you saying anything?

The expressions on their faces when they look at me are subtle. An expression that doesn't tell you what he's thinking.

It was strange for them to take the initiative to defend themselves, so I just waited for the words to come out of their mouths, and then the fairy tribe who had left after receiving orders, probably because they had retrieved the brown liquid, fell in front of the fairy king.

“I saved you.”

“Is this...”

A familiar smell passed my nose.

This....

“It smells like coffee.”

“Is it coffee?”

Even if I smell it again, it still smells like coffee. A vaguely familiar coffee scent.

But even if it's coffee, it's strange. Even though coffee makes you mentally alert, it doesn't have the effect of turning monsters into mutants... is there?

‘You have to have fed coffee to a monster to know that.’

The answer came from the Fairy King.

“It is said that monsters became stronger after eating this, so it must not be coffee. “Where did you get this?”

“I collected what fell from the monsters' mouths. “I wanted to find the source, but I couldn't follow it because the traces led to the demons' territory.”

“Our territory?”

They said something about wide-range magic, but it looks like they actually used it. Otherwise, it wouldn't have been possible to come this quickly.

The demon lord, who looks so disheveled that even if he went for a walk nearby and is not a monster opponent, looks at the unknown liquid without any sign of fatigue. After a moment of interest, a laugh was heard as if it was ridiculous.

“It seems like they wanted to frame our race. “I'll allow it, so just find the source.”

I'm curious about the culprit's face.

It was a low, threatening voice, like a growl. The Fairy King stared at him for a moment and then spat out a word.

“Did you hear?”

“yes.”

He’s really busy too.... He looked at the back of the fairy family disappearing again with sad eyes and then lowered his gaze. The heads of the two tribes made eye contact.

...?!

“This person has no reason to do something like that, right?”

“Yes.”

“But if you look at the ‘reason’, there really is no culprit.”

“That too.”

The atmosphere takes a strange turn.

Does it feel like you’re questioning each reason one by one, only to turn it over again and start doubting it from the beginning? But it seems like it started with me.

“This man is special, but getting him out of the dragon’s wake is another.”

“Yes.”

What, so you’re doubting me now?

I couldn't understand what was going on so I just stayed silent, but the Demon King came out with his face crumpled in dissatisfaction.

"Wait a minute, are you suspecting Daemon now?"

Demon King...!

He confirmed with annoyance, as if he was very uncomfortable with the situation of doubting me.

"Not a demon."

"How can you be sure of that...."

"I told you that when you asked me before if I could trust you. He is very trustworthy 'as long as he is here'. He's here next to me now. "You can trust me."

I don't know what the conversation is about, but I know he's defending me.

Honestly, I was a little impressed. As I was looking at the Demon King with new eyes, the fairies appeared again. He was holding a familiar-shaped water bottle in his hand.

...uh? wait for a sec.

'Why are you holding that?'

It was a tonic... a container... that Remember had brought with him when he came to the demon world... but he was quick to grasp the situation.

'I went crazy.'

I am the cause. What on earth did Gonggui make?

I'd like to discuss the palace's alchemy... no, the medicine-making skills, but the situation is not right now. What we need to think about right now is how to die without getting sick.

While I was half out of my mind at the shocking truth, the vulgar fairy politely offered me a bottle of water and immediately opened my mouth.

"There was this at the entrance to an unnamed mountain range to the west of the demon realm. "There were several cans, but I thought one was enough, so I brought only this."

"That one smell is the perfect coffee scent. Was it disguised on purpose? I don't know who he is, but he's really meticulous... The devil? "Why is your expression like that?"

"No... nothing..."

The Demon King seems to have noticed too.

In fact, this barrel was discovered in the mountains of the Demon World, and although it is said to be an 'unnamed mountain range', there is nothing that cannot be inferred since the direction is also known.

He raised his hand and gently touched my shoulder. As I slowly raised my gaze, I saw the corners of my mouth turned up a little stiffly, unlike usual.

"Anyway, he's not the criminal... so don't be suspicious.
"We'll just have to go."

"Without even solving this case?"

"I have a corps commander meeting soon. We'll talk about this separately later. "Okay then."

“sleep...!”

My perspective has changed.

Back in the central garden of the Demon King’s Castle, I quietly raised my head and saw the Demon King.

It’s not something I should say in this situation where I made a mistake... but I still feel like I need to say it.

“You left Hien behind.”

“ah.”

***

We need to reduce the use of magic, but do we really need to bring it in?

I thought about it for a moment, but I had no choice. Anyway, Hien is a talented gardener who oversees almost all the plants in the Demon King’s Castle. It was obvious that without him, managing the plants would be quite difficult.

“Demon King?”

“...Okay, I should bring him. wait a minute.”

Actually, using magic is an excuse. Even without looking, I could clearly see how the Fairy King would look at me, so the Demon King quietly sighed.

It’s because I’m so embarrassed. I don’t know how long it’s been since I’ve been this embarrassed. It must have been several decades.

After looking with admiration at the cause of the emotional turmoil, I moved back to the central garden, which had been magically treated for interaction with the heads of each race, as a medium.

“...excuse.”

He turned away from the Fairy King, who was looking at him with a bewildered expression, snatched the gardener with a bewildered expression, and returned to release him in the garden. He still seems dazed, but like a demon who has survived in this demon castle for a long time, he quickly comes to his senses and walks away.

I looked at the guy's back and then turned my gaze to Deon, who was still standing still. He rarely twitched his fingertips, as if he knew he had done something wrong.

“...Deon Hart.”

“...yes.”

“....”

“....”

There is a lot I want to say, but there is not much I can say.

If you say something wrong, the guy who was walking the tightrope might decide where to stand and end up on the floor. As a demon lord with my arms wide open underneath me waiting for this guy to fall on me, I couldn't say anything carelessly.

“...There are situations where I can roughly guess, but it would be better to be sure.”

“....”

“First of all... you brought those drugs, right?”

“yes.”

“It was probably for your body.”

A weak body full of aftereffects.

“you’re right.”

“It was probably built by another human.”

Are aftereffects just aftereffects?

Deonhardt’s body is not the kind that can be healed. So, Deon himself wouldn’t have asked for the medicine. He probably was forced to give it to him even though he didn’t need it.

As expected, Deon nodded in the affirmative. The Demon King, who gained confidence, continued to make assumptions in his head.

“I guess the reason you came over here and threw it away is because you were forced to take care of it, right?”

“yes.”

“To just throw away such a dangerous drug... No, no. “You probably didn’t know either.”

Even if I ate it myself, I wouldn’t have felt such a big effect.

Rather, we should pay attention to the person who created that level of medicine. What on earth is it? Judging from the effects, it felt like he was determined to make Deonhardt’s body better... no, it felt like he had a desperate determination, as if his life depended on it.

‘Did any of the humans succeed in the alchemy they had only talked about?’

It was only for a moment that a trembling feeling crossed my smiling face.

The Demon King, who has an expression on his face again as if he had never done that before, takes a step closer and places a hand on Deon’s shoulder. A light touch, as if comforting rather than pressuring, was delivered to Deon with the intention of reassuring him.

“Okay, as long as it wasn’t intentional, it’s okay.”

“...!”

“You would be very surprised too. “Go in and get some rest.”

“The corps commander’s meeting...”

“Oh, it’s already been this long... It’s okay to take back what I’ve already said... It’s okay to leave.”

Permission to leave, not a command to leave.

There is nothing specifically preventing you from participating in the meeting, so if you miss the meeting like this, you are doing so out of your own volition, so you are not breaking the rules of the game.

‘It’s already been so long... what is it?’

I knew this and said this on purpose.

If his semi-contractor is a snake, then the Demon King is a thousand-year-old snake, or rather, an imoogi. The Demon King, who naturally narrowed the way to participate in the meeting and reduced the leakage of information, said with a grin.

“Ah, if resting here isn’t enough. If you miss the daylight, you can always go to the human world.”

The location tracking stigma is still clearly engraved.

Additionally, he would have earned points for his response to this incident, so there would be no problem if he were sent to the Empire right away.

‘The demon world and the human world are at war, and there are high-ranking beings from both sides going back and forth between the two camps...’ That would be fun.

Even though he knew that the moment Deon Hart returned to the empire would be the start of an all-out war, the Demon King calmly raised his other hand and touched both of Deon’s shoulders. The evil eye, the symbol of the devil, faced red eyes.

“Instead, I hope you don’t bring drugs or anything like that. “Even if you bring it with you, don’t throw it away anywhere... so you’d better bring it to me right away.”

“...yes.”

***

It only took a moment for me to cool off from the talk about drugs.

‘You can skip the meeting...’

What kind of scary words are you saying?

Did you know that I would just be happy? I’m not a clueless idiot. I always wanted to skip the meeting, but I knew that if I accepted the devil’s words and skipped out, I would never get good results.

‘You don’t have to live only for today. You have to look at the future rather than the present.’

Even if I don’t, I feel pricked by my conscience for lounging around instead of working, so why should I even indulge in this? So be sure to participate.

In the grand scheme of things, life is at stake. I participated in the meeting with the enthusiasm of a newbie who had just gotten a job, and...

I regretted it.

‘Yes, if a meeting were held in the current situation, the topic would naturally be this.’

War with the Empire.

...Passion is shit. Let’s not make a fuss and just stay still.

From now on, I am a bean bug. I quietly lowered my eyes, hoping to avoid being noticed by the Demon Lord as much as possible.

***

Deonhardt is not stupid. After all, he is a human walking a tightrope between the devil and the emperor, so he can’t be stupid. If I was stupid, I would have died long ago.

The Demon King, who was staring at Deon, who had entered the meeting with his chin tilted crookedly at the head of the table, raised the corner of his mouth as if he could not be seen.

‘You noticed.’

Deon Hardt saw through the devil’s intention to prevent information leaks and participated in the meeting in the nick of time. The proof is that even though he participates in a meeting, he lowers his eyes and shows no interest as if he is not interested. Close your mouth, keep your ears open, and focus on the information coming to you.

Well, actually, it was a situation where I had no choice but to participate even if I didn’t like it. You can’t go back to the empire without any information.

Even so, in a precarious situation where you have to choose a side in the near future, you go back and meet the emperor, but there is no information to give?

‘It will arouse the emperor’s suspicion.’

It was a sensitive time, with monarchs on both sides paying close attention to Deonhardt’s actions. Doubt in this situation could lead to death, so from Deonhardt’s point of view, he had to get something that could answer the emperor’s question and return home in order to survive.

‘I guess I’ll remain neutral for now.’

The emperor won’t just sit back and watch, but how long can he continue like that?

The Demon King has never been pressed for time and is relaxed even in the current situation, but he is not a human emperor. It seems like he is holding out for fear that Deonhardt's choice will have a negative impact, but in the end, it is human patience. The Demon King was confident that the Emperor would urge Deonhart again as soon as possible.

That too, with the option of killing being considered.

Either join me or die.

'And Deonhardt, feeling the burden, will come to me.'

It is a mask worn for that moment. Deon Hart, feeling the gaze, quietly watched as he turned his head in this direction and smiled at the moment our eyes met.

"—Let's begin the self-doubt. I'm sure everyone has guessed the topic, right?"

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 128

128. Tightrope walking (2)

The voice was so light that it felt like flying.

On the other hand, the other corps commanders stiffened, thinking that what was coming was coming.

As status was status, there was a lot of information that could be heard even if one stayed still. Was there really no information about the empire among them?

“It looks like the emperor is determined to start a war.”

“In the end....”

Tsk, clicks of tongues could be heard here and there.

There have always been minor conflicts along the border, so the ‘war’ we’re talking about now probably means ‘all-out war.’ Even the corps commanders who liked battle were not happy, and the corps commanders who said they were a little confused narrowed their eyes at the incomprehensible situation.

‘I thought that if I put enough pressure on him by pretending to step forward, he would back down.’

'Is the name of the Demon World only worth that much to humans? Or is the emperor that serious about conquering the continent?'

Has so much time passed that the warnings from the demon world seem ridiculous?

There was no way he could have known why the Demon King had made such a move, but the Emperor ignored the silent warning to stop at that point and instead openly announced that he would go to war with the Demon World.

This is a situation that cannot be avoided since the Demon King is the first to argue.

"...We always covet the land of the human world and are prepared for war in our own way, but from the emperor's point of view, it would be more advantageous not to go to war."

The lifespan of humans is short, and that of demons is long.

A monarch in the human world must care about not only external enemies but also internal enemies, but this is not the case with the Demon King.

The current demon king is so tired that he does not attack the human world first, but the story that he used to be a fierce man and pushed the human world to the brink of destruction is passed down orally among the demons.

As the past shows, in the end, the longer the war took place, the more disadvantaged it was the human world.

Is there some kind of ulterior motive? Idelia, the 4th Corps commander, frowned and spoke.

“If you really want to fight such an unfavorable war... I don’t understand. “I don’t think the emperor I knew was stupid.”

From the emperor’s point of view, the people who divide and scatter at the slightest opportunity are a loss whether he wins or loses.

If we win, it will be a problem to deal with the aftermath of a fierce war, and we will lose the external enemy called ‘Demon World’, which is a means of controlling the empire and the human world, and if we lose... I don’t need to say more.

“If we just remain in a relationship of moderate conflict and retreat, it will help strengthen the imperial power, so why bother...”

I heard that the empire is still in charge of the boundaries that appear in each kingdom. This would mean that the influence of the empire gained through the use of the demon world was great.

The devil himself came up with a contradictory answer to the foolish actions of the not-so-stupid emperor.

“Isn’t there a rough answer? “You want to die.”

“...Emperor...are you going?”

That toxic person?

When Idelia frowned at the incomprehensible answer, the Demon King smiled as if he understood and called out Develania.

“What does Emperor D’Vellania value most?”

“That’s right... it’s ‘responsibility.’”

“What’s higher than that?”

The half-exposed pupils under drowsy lowered eyelids roll over and then close in annoyance.

Develania is the commander of the 2nd Corps in charge of information collection. It was enough to hurt her pride that there was something she didn’t know.

‘Actually, it’s natural that you don’t know.’

The Demon King smiled and gave an answer instead.

“guilty.”

“...It’s called guilt.”

“okay.”

A voice as fluent as a song rang through the space.

“Shall we go over it step by step again? “What was the reason why Emperor Idelia killed her own brothers to ascend to the throne?”

“Because we decided that the cause of the death of the closest brother was a succession battle between them.”

“Yes, but in fact, he was killed by Stave Illuster, the current Duke of the Empire.”

Contrary to the seemingly insignificant words, the content was something that could not be taken lightly. A fact he knew because his anti-contractor was Starbe Illuster.

The conference room is shaking with the truth that I had no idea about. Develania and Idelia had their eyes wide open.

Amidst the confusion, the Demon King spoke leisurely.

“He must have felt a lot of guilt because he had suddenly killed innocent brothers. “How do humans usually behave in times like this?”

“In extreme measures... they commit suicide.”

He runs away by dying under the pretext of atonement.

Information processing is the responsibility of the 4th Corps. Idelia, who had carefully put together the information given by the Demon King, trembled as if she remembered something.

The Demon King smiled cheerfully, as if he was amazed.

“That’s right, but the emperor has responsibilities. ‘Enthronement’ was the problem. Because I was responsible for countless people. In addition, I have to take care of my nieces and nephews and the children left behind by my close brother. Even if you kill yourself, you will be insulting the brothers you killed to ascend to the throne.”

“...Oh, as expected....”

I think I understand now.

Guilt above responsibility. However, this was the plan chosen by the emperor who could not die on his own.

Only then was Idelia able to understand the emperor’s actions of continuing to fight unprofitable wars. For what reason did they choose an all-out war against the demon world?

“It would be easier if I did my best to take responsibility and then died.”

“To be exact, I’m ‘pretending’ to do my best, but that’s right.”

If you can’t die from guilt, wouldn’t it be easier to die from being weighed down by responsibility? At least if you die while pretending to do your best to fulfill your responsibilities, you will have an excuse even after you die.

In that sense, I must have been happy that the demon world, which I could not dare to attack first due to my responsibilities and status, started to fight. Thanks to this, the possibility of dying has increased. Problems after death would be none of his concern.

“How selfish. Just for that reason, countless people were driven into the battlefield. is not it?”

I rolled my eyes happily as I looked at Deon.

There was no reply, but the Demon King shrugged his shoulders regardless and spoke again.

“Well... what can I do? “He says he wants to die, so I have to kill him.”

“ .... ”

“I’m jealous. “There are enemies who will kill you.”

He was said to be selfish, but strangely enough, the Demon King was able to understand the Emperor. As beings who have lived for a long time and as the heads of a species, they are similar in that they are unable to kill themselves, if nothing else.

It is the hero's job to suffocate the devil.

"I think it would be fun to see how far a person who is not a hero and only has the fragments can do, so let's just skip it for now."

Idelia's expression became strangely distorted.

"...Are you really...going to fight an all-out war?"

The Demon King nodded lightly.

"Isn't it embarrassing to start an argument first and then back out? "I heard that the 7th and 9th corps commanders on the front lines are already having fun fighting?"

"If we finish fighting moderately like we have done so far..."

"The emperor will once again turn his attention to conquering the continent, and as long as he lives and breathes, he will eventually pour the national power he gained during the conquest into this side, no matter how long it takes. "It will be a tougher fight."

"Why are you so confident that the emperor will succeed in conquering the continent...?"

"Then you don't think so?"

The last words were a question posed not only to Idelia but also to all other corps commanders.

The Demon King asked again, casting his gaze at each of the corps commanders sitting in their seats.

“really?”

“ .... ”

There was no answer.

The Demon King, who knew that he couldn't openly acknowledge humans and chose to remain silent instead of answering, chuckled.

“It's been a long time since we last had a proper war. Think of it as loosening up your stiff body and just enjoy it.”

“Yes, Idelia. “If Trover were here, he would have grabbed me by the collar right away, calling me weak.”

Idelia pursed her lips and remained silent at the sarcasm of the 3rd Corps Commander Ashild.

In the natural silence that came for a moment, the Demon King looked at Deon, who had his eyes fixed on the desk from beginning to end, as if he could not hear anything, and then spoke with secret mischief.

“Perhaps an all-out war will begin when the demon leaves the mission.”

Deon's eyelids fluttered.

“Do you mean to attack while Demon is away?”

“Trying to take advantage of an opportunity when you don't have the best power... That seems like a cowardly thing.”

“Well... let's say so.”

As long as Deonhardt is in the demon world, the emperor cannot make any moves. If he's not careful, his movements could be seen by Deon Hardt as an act of abandoning me.

It was natural to be cautious, as there was no record of moving troops after considering profit or loss, regardless of whether the life of a general captured in the enemy camp during the war was in danger.

So, if an all-out war starts now that Deonhardt is in the Demon World and there is a very real possibility that he will be on the Demon King's side, it will probably be after Deonhardt returns safely to the Human World Empire.

"In other words, it means that the authority to open the gates to an all-out war is up to us... or rather, the Demon."

You have already handed over your authority by saying that you can return to the human world at any time.

The eyes of the corps commanders were focused on one place. The Demon King also glanced at Deon. Deon, who seemed to feel the gaze, raised his head, glanced at the crowd, and then slowly came up with an answer.

"We plan to start preparing right after the meeting."

"Did you hear?"

"It's too fast..."

Idelia muttered reflexively.

It was a muttering, almost like talking to herself, but to some it seemed like it was an argument, and Lirinel stood up on one side.

"Are you now criticizing Demon's choice?!"

The red brooch on her chest catches the light and sparkles. Idelia looked at Lirinel with bewildered eyes.

“But it’s true that it’s too fast. “We should have time to prepare too.”

“So now you’re criticizing Demon’s choice!”

“...This cult leader...!”

Suddenly, Idelia also got up from her seat.

“stop.”

“....”

“....”

The air in the conference room became cold.

Idelia, trembling and looking at the Demon King’s notice, slowly sits down. Lirinel also rolled her eyes nervously, closed her mouth, and slumped down in her chair.

The Demon King, who had been watching the two’s actions with his expression hardened, glanced at Deon and then bent his eyes like a crescent moon, hiding his pupils. A painted smile appeared on his face.

“It reminds me of preparation. “When have we ever prepared and fought a war separately?”

“....”

Those who thought of the 7th and 9th corps commanders, who were already in conflict with the empire on the front lines, slowly shook their heads.

What are the preparations? The demon world has always waged unexpected wars. Because of this, preparations for battle have been taking place in daily life, so what would be different even if more time was given?

Although it may be the 2nd and 4th corps commanders who deal with information, other corps commanders did not have any complaints because they did not suffer damage due to the short or long time given.

After scanning the silent audience, the Demon King raised his elbow and supported his chin with the back of his hand.

“Still, what Idelia said is not entirely wrong. It would be much better to prepare than not to prepare at all. When the war begins, the 7th and 9th corps alone will not be enough, so I wonder if it would be okay to withdraw operational troops in advance... Let’s see....” The voice flows out dryly, as if reading a book. A poor plan thrown together to appease the dissatisfied 2nd and 4th Corps commanders.

In addition to all this, the Demon King may or may not have been aware that his crooked head was showing his haphazard attitude toward living life, but with his eyes half closed, a list of corps commanders appeared in his head.

There was only one thing he cared about and put effort into.

***

[In other words, it means that the authority to open the gates to an all-out war rests with us... no, with the demons.]

At that moment, all the corps commanders’ eyes were focused on me.

Cold sweat runs down my back from the stinging gaze that I can feel even without raising my head. When I barely raised my head and looked around, I felt like I was going to burst into tears because I was so thankful for the gazes that met my expectations and did not disappoint.

‘...Anyway, now is the time for me to tell you, right? ‘I’m telling you when you’re going to go.’

So I barely came up with an answer.

[...We plan to prepare immediately after the meeting.]

[It’s too fast...]

How scary it must have been to have complaints follow us without even thinking about it. That alone made me feel like my heart was pounding, but when Ririnelle started a fight with the speaker immediately after, I really wanted to be a bean bug.

It was even more so because I heard stories about the emperor that I didn’t want to hear.

‘If you accidentally spill this in front of the emperor, it will be destroyed.’

Even if you show that you know, you die.

Regardless of whether it is useful or not, it will die unconditionally.

‘It’s fortunate that the gap in memory is particularly large in this part... But now, do I have to consciously control my unconscious mind?’

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 129

129. Tightrope walking (3)

I know the fear of unconsciousness. Just today, didn't you offend him by speaking without filter in front of the Fairy King? Fortunately, it passed without incident, but the Emperor probably won't.

So, I was tightening my heart and liver again to control the size of my heart and liver so that I would not speak out even inadvertently. I was so surprised when things suddenly turned out like this.

Oh, of course, I have no intention of changing my itinerary to the Empire.

'First of all... I made a big deal here...'

I brought in medicine given by the palace doctor and threw it everywhere to strengthen the monsters... I suddenly became a smuggler of illegal drugs, so the answer is to get out as soon as possible. The Demon Lord himself said he would just let it go, but looking at the moment of bloodshed when he stopped the fight between Idelia and Lyrinel a little while ago, it would be helpful to extend his lifespan by leaving the place immediately and returning after some time.

‘Let’s go to the empire.’

as soon as possible.

As I was once again making up my mind, the Demon King’s voice continued.

“Still, what Idelia said is not entirely wrong. It would be much better to prepare than not to prepare at all. When the war begins, the 7th and 9th Corps alone will not be enough, so I wonder if it would be okay to withdraw operational troops in advance... Let’s see....”

***

Deonhardt returned.

The Emperor did not ask Deonhardt, who returned sooner than expected, whether he had ‘made up his mind’.

I just included the content of looking into his eyes and reflecting on the other person in the conversation. And as soon as I realized that Deon’s role had not changed yet, I turned my attention to the other information he had brought me.

‘...Yes, spies during war are also quite useful.’

—, trying to pass it off.

The problem is that the spy is neither on my side nor on the other party’s side, and is a person who may change at any moment... but it’s still okay. You can wait.

Perhaps the Demon King is waiting for my patience to wear out and put strong pressure on Deonhardt.

‘Waiting for Deonhardt to escape to the Demon World.’

If this were to be expressed in Southern terms, could it be likened to opening one's mouth under a persimmon tree?

It's not even funny. The Emperor's patience was not short enough for the Demon King to look down upon.

"So... is that all?"

"This is the only answer to Your Majesty's inquiry."

I know the missions of each corps commander thanks to Deon Hardt asking me about them.

Therefore, the emperor was not very satisfied with the information he had just asked.

"...Ha, the preparations for the war with this empire were so-so."

Not the quality of the information, but the content of the information itself.

The 6th and 12th corps, which deal with demons, carry out their duties as is. The 5th corps, which patrols the entire Demon World, waits at the Demon King's Castle. Even the 10th and 8th Legions, which guard major cities in the Demon World, do not change their missions... Ultimately, they are used in war. The corps means that in addition to the existing 1, 3, 7, and 9 corps, there is up to 5 corps to prepare for unexpected situations.

The 2nd and 4th corps are also used in war, but they only move in relation to intelligence and rarely engage in combat, so they are excluded. Excluding the 11th Legion, since it is one of the few enemies in history that went into battle...

'There are a total of 12 legions... no, 13, but there are only five...'

Isn't this just looking down on the empire?

What is the point of doing this when it is not enough to immediately bring in all the legions except the minimum troops and have them stand by?

The emperor pressed and released the back of his gloved left hand and frowned in annoyance.

"There are degrees of looking at something funny."

"...."

"...Anyway, good job. "You're going to be busy from now on, so it's best to go back and get some rest."

Deon, who had been quietly listening to the words that flowed naturally and could not be ignored, flinched and shook his shoulders, then slowly raised his head. The inexplicable red eyes that reminded me of someone's green eyes rudely looked straight into the golden eyes.

"...Am I joining the war too?"

"okay."

Even if he does not put pressure on himself, the psychological pressure will be considerable if he goes back and forth between the two sides in the war. If you do that, there will be a day soon when you will be able to come down from that awful single line.

It was a tightrope walk that was initially carried out under the generosity of the two monarchs. If he wanted to, he could have grabbed him by the collar and dragged him down right away, but the emperor didn't do that.

A talented person who does not have sincerity is just a bomb that will surely explode one day.

“...”

“...?”

I gave a confirmation, but no answer came back. The Emperor, who slowly rolled his eyes and quietly observed the extremely expressionless expression without any emotion, muttered faintly as if he realized something.

“So... I guess this is your first time participating in the war since the eight-year war?”

In the meantime, he only experienced a few minor battles and did not participate in the war. Even during the recent war of conquest, Deonhardt was in the demon world.

“Yeah... I've always wanted to tell you something.”

It was such an obvious statement that I almost overlooked it this time, but thanks to that attitude, it came to mind. Should I say I'm glad I remembered it now?

Something you must say to Deon Hardt before sending him off to war.

The Emperor takes a big step forward and closes the distance between him and him. Deon looked in surprise at the opponent who had intruded into his range, but the emperor didn't care and just stretched out his hands and lightly touched both of his shoulders.

“You do better than anyone else when the battle starts, so I don’t have to worry about your physical health, but I think you should medicate the other side in advance.”

So, let me tell you this in advance.

The slow voice fell with weight.

“If someone swings a sword and kills someone, you blame the person who wielded it, not the sword.”

It was really funny. The author, who has taken advantage of that point and continued to walk a tightrope, has not even thought about this.

Is it because this mindset was hardened at a young age? Thoughts engraved in childhood often remain in the unconscious and influence even adulthood, so it is not completely incomprehensible.

If that’s really the case.

“You are my sword. “Isn’t that right?”

“...That’s right.”

As the owner of the sword, I should personally break it.

I don’t know how much impact these words will have, but I know it’s better than not saying anything at all.

“Does the sword feel guilty?”

The emperor, who did not want the sword called Deonhardt to be damaged, willingly opened his mouth.

It’s really foolish. He tells me not to blame him for falling into someone else’s hands because he is a sword, but he actually feels guilty when he kills someone with the sword.

As if the words were completely unexpected, the red pupils widened in anger. The emperor watched the scene without missing a beat and quietly spoke.

“Everyone who participates in war is the sword of the commander. All the bad karma they accumulate by killing people belongs to the person who created the platform to wield them and belongs to the commander who wielded them. “The commander must also have a superior who influenced him, so ultimately, if you follow the relationship that forms this triangle, there is a ‘monarch’ at the top.”

“ .... ”

“Do you understand? This means that generals like you are without sin when it comes to fighting a war. Killed someone? What should I do since Jim ordered me to kill him? guilty? That should be entirely mine, so why does the sword try to feel guilty? “This is an excess of authority, arrogance, and disrespect for the monarch.”

All the sins they committed on the battlefield are the emperor’s responsibility. So, it would be right for the cost of doing so to also be the emperor’s share.

But how dare something like a sword try to steal its share of the burden?

“I assure you. All the blood and resentment that existed in the eight-year war, that existed in the recent war, and that will arise in the upcoming war with the Demon World are mine. So do not remember the faces of the dead and do not listen to their stories.”

Whether it’s an enemy or an ally.

“Memories are a burden.”

“ .... ”

Looking into the red eyes that were looking at me, the emperor slowly raised the corners of his mouth, which was rare.

“You just have to do as instructed above.”

***

Return to the Empire. Before leaving, I called Hien and Ed and asked them a question about the strange plant I had in my bag last time, and then I thought they were going to kill me, so I had a hard time...!

‘Will Edgar grab Hien by the collar and kill him? I asked...’

Anyway, it was resolved safely...

[Did the plant cause any problem?]

[Hmm... Should I say so...]

[I’m sorry. I will pay for my sin by cutting off Hien’s head.]

[No... Why did you cut Hien’s head...]

[Oh, I will sacrifice my head too.]

[There is no need...!]

Safely....

[The plant Didn’t it help you...?]

[It was useful in the end...]

[Then next time...!]

[No, that's a bit...]

It was resolved safely... I ?

Well, I was told that I would be in trouble if I was caught carrying a strange plant around the human world, and I got a promise not to do it again, so I guess it can be said that it was resolved safely.

Anyway, due to the trauma from the monster last time, this time I returned safely to the mansion empty-handed and without any camouflage baggage. Let's put aside the fact that I coughed up blood as soon as I arrived.

'It's a war against the demon world, not any other country.'

It seems like heaven wants to plunge my life to the bottom.

Damn it, now not only the battlefield but also the two camps that are fiercely hostile to each other come and go. It's a bonus that both sides have to worry about what their superiors think.

So, I took stomach medicine instead of snacks and was prepared to go through a lot of trouble as I was busy going from place to place... Should I say that it was as expected or that my prediction was wrong?

It got very busy. In so many different ways.

"Marquis, your hand has stopped."

"ah."

I moved the pen that had stopped and scribbled my signature on the document.

The Marquis's troops are called out... Of course, permission is given... No, the murderers... No, the Lofty Knights are going out... Oh, they're going quite far. I'm happy to give permission... It's difficult for a normal commander to control, so I ask that someone who can lead it come along... I guess I can just send Lien. Somehow, it seems like he wants me, but I just chalk it up to my mood... nope!

I stopped my pen and raised my head. He made eye contact with Dan, who was looking this way as if he was about to point something out again.

"...But aren't we at war?"

"Yes, that's right."

"But why am I not busy?"

"Aren't you busy right now?"

"No... I didn't say I was busy in this way..."

Don't you go to war less often than you think? I was called in a lot in the beginning, but just looking at the current situation, I'm leisurely processing documents... Of course, the location is not the marquis' residence, but the military hut.

"Marquis, I have a mountain of documents to process."

"...Why are you here?"

"At the request of the guard and butler, I monitor the processing of the Marquis' documents... no, supervise... no..." Are you this bastard?

“Hmm, I’m here to help.”

“It’s late, you bastard. go away.”

“Ah, the story about ‘the Marquis not being busy’ that you mentioned a little while ago.”

It’s obvious that you’re talking back and forth. Who did you learn from?

If I were to change the subject, it would be me who developed my own tolerance by being bullied by Remember a lot. I still can’t defeat Remember, but I’m not at the point where I can fall for this guy who is lower in status than me and less talkative than Remember.

“It seems that His Majesty does not want to send the Marquis to the battlefield. I heard a rumor that you are busier than usual for some reason...” “

So, why don’t you want to send me to the battlefield? It’s not bad, but it feels uncomfortable. Rather, don’t change your mind and turn it off quickly....”

“Now that I think about it, I recently heard a rumor that the fighting styles of the commander of the 0th Legion of the Demon World and the third hero of the Empire, Deon Hart, are similar.”

“Loss...what?”

Ah, I ended up skipping it.

I learned very well from Remember. Damn it.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 130

130. Tightrope walker (4)

Dan looks at this side and smiles. Her personality changes every time I see something. Did I get used to it that much, or did the Marquis's characters have an influence on his personality?

No, now is not the time to think about that. I put away useless thoughts and glanced at Dan. I didn't forget to keep my expression firm.

"...What is your intention in saying that?"

"I'm just telling you that there are rumors. "I think you should know, Marquis."

"...."

I relaxed my eyes.

I have no idea what this guy is thinking. Enemy or friend? What should I do with this guy who became vaguely close to me, vaguely comfortable with me, and vaguely became my person?

...Even if I think about it now, I can't find an answer. I looked down at the documents again and muttered.

“I’m the only one at peace. “If this place wasn’t a military camp, I might have mistakenly thought the war hadn’t broken out.”

“I don’t think something like that would have happened.
“The guns of war exploded so spectacularly.”

“...That’s true too.”

Ah, stress.

He quietly took out a handkerchief and put it over his mouth. It is no exaggeration to say that it is a highly absorbent cloth obtained and distributed at the top of the hem, and the blood that comes out quickly seeps into the handkerchief without leaking.

I grumbled to myself as I neatly organized it and put it in my pocket.

‘The frequency of hemoptysis has decreased. It’s no different than before.’

This is all because of stress. Considering that he vomited blood horribly when he was often called out in the early days of the war, there was no doubt about it.

I feel a stinging gaze from one side. When I turned my head, I made eye contact with Dan, who was looking at me with narrowed eyes. That’s right, I was talking to him. How much did you talk about?

...Yes, the guns of war exploded spectacularly.

“The war of words between the two monarchs was very colorful.”

“The appearance was also gorgeous.”

“....”

“I’m kidding.”

“...You’d better keep your distance from Remember.”

I scolded him coldly and grabbed the pen. However, the hand only held the pen and did not move immediately.

The very impressive declaration of war that day came to mind, and before I knew it, I was lost in thought, tapping my fingers on the desk.

***

Surprisingly, the Demon King declared war by following a very standard procedure.

I don’t know if this should be considered standard, but since it wasn’t a sudden attack, it can be roughly considered similar.

As if to show off his magical power, he sent video magic across the entire continent, as if he had sold the magic ban he had issued. So that not only the empire but each kingdom and even small rural villages can see this.

As everyone focused their attention on the unfamiliar magic, Jaykar, the commander of the Guernsey 1st Corps, who acted as the Demon King’s agent, appeared on the screen.

– Inform the human world from the demon world.

It was a start that cut out formalities.

- From the perspective of the Demon World, which loves balance and peace, it was judged that the Empire's war to conquer the continent was overheated and dangerous, so it declared war on the Empire in order to prevent the Empire's excessive actions before they destroyed the human world.

Honestly, I burst out here.

Balance... wow and peace... love... so much... the Demon World... A lot of time has passed and the people who fought the war against the Demon World are no longer alive, but it's still not enough to be fooled by such lies. .

Just looking at history books right now...

'... do commoners ever... ever read history books?'

Ahhh?

I quietly covered my mouth. He spewed blood as he pleased and covered his mouth as he pleased, causing an uproar among those around him, asking if he had vomited blood again, but their voices were not heard.

There is no way that commoners, who are satisfied with just eating well and living well, would be interested in history, not from aristocratic families who provide compulsory education about the dignity of nobility and such! Jaykar, no, the Demon King was aiming for this!

- Since the goal is the goal, we are willing to back down and 'give' the empire if it promises not to move any further.

Wow crazy. He just provoked me.

For some reason, Jaykar looked at the screen blankly, feeling like he could know the emperor's expression even without looking at it. Then, he looked straight ahead again and gently raised the corner of his mouth.

It's definitely the first time I've seen a smile, so why does it look so familiar?

'I know who you were imitating and laughing at....'

The devil.

One thing about her smile is that she smiles pretty and well. Should I call it a smile that relieves tension?

- Are you watching, Emperor? There must be a shaman there too. The Demon King gave permission. If you can, try interfering with this magic and try to answer the question. Since the barrier has been lowered, it won't be difficult.

...It would only work if the words were pretty. Jaycar's tone of voice is a disqualifier.

Rather, it proves that shamans can reach into the realm of magic. The imperial family has a dedicated shaman, so at least you won't have to worry about finding a shaman.

'Then the question is whether the shaman's skills are capable of interfering with that magic and whether the emperor responds to those words...' The emperor is not one to avoid provocation. I'm sure they'll call a shaman to intervene.

Sure enough, whether it was true that the words about lowering the barrier were true or whether the shaman's skills were outstanding, it didn't take long for the screen in the air to crackle and shake, and soon changed to the emperor's face.

A young man with blond hair and golden eyes, for an emperor, was draping his arms over a book on the armrest of his throne and glaring at the screen as if he were embarrassed.

- I heard you barking. I received new information that demons have a unique way of barking instead of human speech. I have to tell the scribe to record it properly.

Laughter broke out here and there.

Fake laughter to relieve tension. Everyone is probably feeling it. If we are not careful, the empire could become completely isolated from the human world. If that happens, you will have to fight the demon world alone without any support.

So I couldn't laugh.

'I completely dried this up.'

I am confident as I know a little more about the emperor than others. The emperor never gives up on conquering the continent. He'll probably try to hold the sword as long as he still has breath.

In such a situation, what would happen since Jaykar, or rather the Demon King, even provoked the emperor by saying, "I can step down," in case the emperor meekly steps down.

'What choice will our Majesty, who does not avoid an oncoming fight but gladly responds to provocation, choose...!'

Fortunately, the emperor was also smart enough to say directly, 'Are you not going to stop the war of conquest?

Instead of answering, 'Are you going to continue?', I started by pointing out the blind spots in the other person's words.

- The fact that demons love balance and peace is something that will turn the world upside down. If the whole world knows how cruel you are, why do you have the audacity to tell lies? While Jim is showing his face right now, isn't the devil hiding behind the 1st Corps commander and manipulating him? The personality of those who have such a guy as their ruler is obvious even without looking at it.

They put on a good-natured mask and lie often, causing internal division or backstabbing.

"...oh."

"...."

The flow changed again. The distrust toward demons that had been sown for some time becomes fertilizer and sprouts. The eyes of people who were previously filled with anxiety showed determination and vitality.

From the perspective of an imperial citizen, it is fortunate, but I do not understand. It's not like the Demon King doesn't know anything about the Emperor, so why did he allow interference? There's no way I couldn't have expected this situation.

The moment my thoughts went crazy, a new screen appeared right next to the screen floating in the air.

- It's a shame that you hid.

A converse eye in which the white and black colors are reversed. A familiar face with a gentle smile.

It's the devil. It didn't seem like that would happen, but it seems he eventually fell for the emperor's provocation.

It's not just blocking interference, it's creating an extra screen....

'Do you have any magic power left? 'Have you really abandoned the ban on magic?'

- I never thought the emperor would step forward in person. Thanks to you, I got to see your face in person for the first time. Of course, it's difficult to say it in person, but it's the first time I've seen it live and not just a painting... I knew its age, but it looks much younger than I thought. It's really surprising.

- ...You're confusing the point of what you're saying. Was there anything in Jim's remarks that seemed off-putting?

- What do you mean by the binding part?

The Demon King closed his eyes and smiled as if drawn. His attractive appearance, which was not much different from that of a human except for his eyes, shone.

-There is no lie in what we said?

I could hear the maids expressing their admiration.

That was definitely intentional. I intentionally smiled to hide the parts that were different from humans.

"With that face, I can do anything..."

"That person, that demon... is he a demon lord? "I believe it, Demon Lord..."

The emperor seemed to have sensed the intention of that smile and narrowed his eyebrows.

The only way to deal with this is to smile brightly without giving in to the emperor, but there is no way for the emperor to smile brightly. Ugh, I get goosebumps just thinking about it.

While he was wiping away his goosebump-covered arms, the emperor, as expected, chose logic over face-to-face confrontation, and opened his mouth with a growl in his throat.

- This hypocrite...

- Hmm?

- Get rid of that stupid mask because it's disgusting. Did you say that if Jim retreats, the demon world will also retreat? It's not even funny. Did you think that just because so much time has passed since the war between the demon world and the human world, your past actions and remarks would be forgotten? No way!

Voices get louder. The world fell into silence.

The emperor's voice soared high into the sky through the quiet space.

- Knowledge, wisdom, and events that occurred in the past are passed down to descendants through records. Let's take this further to prevent the same mistake! This must be the proof!

I pick up the book I had placed on the armrest and shake it against the screen.

- This is a history book that was sleeping in the library of this palace. There are quite detailed records of the war that took place in the past against the demon world. There was a lot of interesting content. Let's read just a few of them...

He opened the book, found the page, flipped through it, and fixed his eyes on one spot as if he had found the part he was looking for.

- There is a saying that a human king who was cornered during the war desperately cried out. I asked why they invaded the quiet human world. Then the Demon King laughed lightly and answered.

After saying that, the emperor raised his head.

He looks straight at the screen with fierce golden eyes, as if looking at someone beyond the screen, and speaks slowly. A slow but serious voice resonated throughout the world.

- "As a demon, isn't it natural to covet a land where the sun shines?"

For that moment, no one could open their mouths, as if someone had used magic.

Truly an eerie silence.

Even as I was endlessly staring at the golden eyes on the screen, the emperor struck a nail, breaking the silence that seemed like it would last forever.

- In the end, the Empire's actions were just an excuse and an attempt to induce division within the human world, but weren't they originally targeting the human world at will?

– You’re saying you’re making an excuse, but are you sincere when you say that if the empire withdraws, we will also withdraw? Just pretend you’re being fooled and take a step back. If the demon world does not retreat, it will not be too late to move again.

Both monarchs seem to be talking to each other, but they do not forget their goal of inciting and persuading the majority of people watching this screen.

There are probably quite a few people nodding their heads at the Demon King’s remarks that just came out. For example, people from other kingdoms who looked at the empire that was waging an aggressive war of conquest with uneasy eyes, or people who opposed the war against the demon world within the empire.

The emperor, who could not have been unaware of this, did not give up and raised his voice again.

– Right now, I guess. This book also contains stories about the lifespan of demons. It’s so long that it can’t even be compared to a human. So I was able to guess without difficulty. Currently, the Empire is the most annoying opponent in the human world, so it may be their intention to keep it in check and waste time, and then as time passes and a generational change occurs and the Empire declines, they may easily swallow it up... That’s a pretty reasonable guess. In the end, Jim has only two choices given to the current generation of humans.

It was only after hearing the next words that I could understand what the emperor intended when he said those words.

– Do you seek to ensure the safety of your descendants by immediately going to war with the current empire, which is so strong that even the demon world feels uncomfortable, or do you run away in the vain hope that it will disappear someday and delay it, leading to the extinction of your descendants?

The cause of the war against the demon world has completely changed.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 131

131. Tightrope Walking (5)

This war is not fought simply out of the personal greed of the emperor who could not give up the war of conquest, but becomes a noble war for future descendants.

People feel uplifted by being involved in something noble and great. Would anyone be so crazy about religion that they would sacrifice their lives for no reason? The legitimacy of 'nobility' has that much power.

– So, I'm asking all the people watching right now. What should we do! Should we really gain immediate peace by selling the future for a single word from those incredible demons, or should we gain the future by turning our overflowing national power against them now that the empire is enjoying its heyday?

A boiling voice that makes you forget that it all started with the empire's merciless war of conquest.

As if in response, somewhere out there, 'We must win the future!' A voice was heard shouting.

This is why public speaking is scary. You can calmly discover loopholes in logic by reading and re-reading the text and pondering the content, but in a speech that touches your emotions and paralyzes your reason, if you get emotional even for a moment, it passes by before you can even think about the content, making it difficult to notice loopholes or contradictions. . Because of this, everyone shows the same reaction as if they are under hypnosis.

‘Besides, once you get into a mood like this, even those who care about reason won’t be able to point out the flaws in logic....’ From the devil’s point of view, this should be cut off midway. Instead of the internal strife that was intended, it looks like we’ve come together as one.

Just when it seemed like this war of words was going to end on the emperor’s side, applause was heard.

– Clap, clap, clap.

Everyone’s eyes turned to the Demon World side screen, right next to the Empire side screen. There, the Demon King was clapping his hands with the corners of his mouth smoothly raised.

A light voice continued as if cold water had been poured into the atmosphere.

– Excellent. It was a great speech.

– ....

– But. No matter how well you package it, that’s the bottom line, right?

It’s random, but I think I understand why the Demon King allowed the Emperor to interfere with video magic.

- The empire does not give up on conquering the continent.

Because it's fun.

Although they had been fighting a war of nerves all along, they had the opportunity to meet face to face and have a war of words with someone they had never seen before. Of course, I would have been happy to induce it.

"...."

"...."

The heated atmosphere cooled down.

It was a mistake for the emperor to try to deal with logic in the first place. I'd rather face it like the devil....

Just as the devil said. It was transformed into something plausible, but in the end, when you open the packaging, the core message is, 'We can't give up conquering the continent, so let's go to war.' That's about it. Since the Demon World's early speech saying that they would withdraw obediently if the empire stopped the war of conquest was answered with a war, it is only natural to tie it in like this.

'Is it a close match?...'

The emperor's defeat.

Although there is still a little bit of propaganda left, it will be difficult to have the same effect as before no matter what words you repackage, since the devil himself has torn up the packaging like this. It would be difficult to reverse this atmosphere right now.

It's a dangerous situation where you could fall down if you touch it. What the emperor chose in an uncomfortable situation where almost all humans were glaring at him.

- If you look at it that way, isn't that the conclusion of the Demon World side's argument? To keep the empire in check and seize the moment to take over the human world.

He grabbed the other person by the collar and fell with them.

To give another example, instead of throwing away or avoiding a flying fist, you would completely give up your defense and strike the fist in the same way.

A strong will to never die alone!

The Demon King covers his mouth at the unexpected remark, then lowers his head and shakes his shoulders. The laughter, which was barely audible, grew louder as time passed and burst out loud through magic.

- Ha ha ha! Ha ha ha ha ha!! It's really fun!

- ....

- I wonder if this is the first time I've laughed in years! I admit it. You are the best, Emperor! Maybe I would have coveted you before I met him!

I feel like I'm encountering a lot of scenes today that I've never seen before.

The devil laughs out loud. He always smiled like a mask, but this is the first time I've seen him smile so loudly.

...But why do I have chills....

***

"I have chills...."

"...Sir."

"Chill...."

"Marquis!"

"Yes? why?"

I quickly woke up from my thoughts and raised my head. I made eye contact with Dan, who was looking at me with worried eyes, wondering when I had approached him.

...It's too close. It's a burden, so please stay away.

"Are you okay? "You keep muttering that you have chills."

"Ah... it's okay."

"Are you sure you're okay?"

"huh."

"Then please complete the paperwork quickly."

"Now that I think about it again, I don't think it's okay."

"If you lie, you will lose your hands... No, this is not it. "It's become a habit."

what?

"Even if you lie, I won't believe you."

"...are you still gambling at the top?"

“What kind of scary words are you talking about? My top was very clear from the start. “We have never done anything like opening a gambling house under the guise of a merchant and collecting commissions or hiring players to steal money from the players, and we will never do anything like that in the first place.”

“...The explanation is very detailed....”

It is better for your mental health not to delve into it.

Dan went back to his seat as if nothing had happened and looked at the documents again, but suddenly something caught his eye and he narrowed his eyes.

“Looking at that document, it doesn’t seem to be mine...”

“Oh, I brought it because I had to process documents related to the upper part... Damn Lowfel upper part! also!”

The crumpled documents were crumpled.

I know that the top of the low-fel is the top that held this floor tightly until the top of the den rose. It was also the reason why Viscount Rowfel was not ignored by the Empire.

It seems like they are rivals with the top of the den now...

“Maybe they started an argument?”

“They signed an exclusive contract first for something we were looking to distribute!”

“Of course, there are a lot of checks... At this rate, it would have been more difficult to get into that floor, so what did you do?”

“Hu huhuhu....”

A sinister smile even at first glance.

“As expected, gambling....”

“I’ll say it again, that’s not it. “We succeeded in distributing Deusa tea leaves, which had always failed, and made customers aware of the existence of Den Sangang.”

“...You’re the same.”

“There was no choice but to break down the monopoly system. This is the bad one. Rather, the Marquis’ hand stopped.”

shit. In the end, do you have to go around and process the documents?

I sighed and moved my hands. I’ll have to take some time to think about this again, so I’ll put it aside...

‘What was I thinking before Dan called me?’

Oh right. I was thinking of the war of words between the Demon King and the Emperor.

What was the result of the war of words at the time?

‘It was probably a draw.’

My mind gradually leaks to other places.

I put down the pen and rested my chin. Dan, who opened his mouth as if to point out something, called out one step ahead and spoke first, blocking his mouth.

“But who won the war of nerves between the two monarchs at that time?”

“Was there a winner? “They exchanged blows with each other, but at the end, they coolly grabbed each other by the collar and fell into the mud together.”

“Is that so too?”

“Yes, he spoke well during that time. Thanks to you, it has become a good textbook.”

“Textbook....”

Are you saying you will develop further from there? I’m really... scared of what kind of hybrid will be born.

I turned my head to look away from him and went back to thinking.

In fact, I was curious about the reactions of the people of the empire, so as soon as the video magic disappeared, I put on my robe and went outside. To conclude, the Emperor could be said to have achieved only average results.

‘No matter what the ending was, there are those who support the emperor’s previous remarks because they make a lot of sense, and those who have bad feelings toward the emperor, thinking that no matter what the previous content was, it means that they will not give up conquering the continent and will start a war with the demon world. The ratio of people who don’t care how things go in the world, and even if they did, would say that it’s not something we can do anything about, the ratio is 1 to 1 to 1... ‘Ah, there was also a person who discussed the Emperor’s personality, pointing out that he liked the Demon King

. Was it there? Well, that person also belongs to the group of people who have bad feelings towards the emperor...

There were people who were curious as to who 'that guy' mentioned when the Demon King burst out laughing, but it quickly died down.

While most people were debating right and wrong, there were people who were uniquely educating others.

***

"Did you see it, Paul? That's how you say it. In particular, that one seems to be a war of words between individuals, but its main purpose is to incite the majority, so it will be a very good textbook that can be examined from various angles."

"It's all good, but why bother using the emperor's appearance as a textbook..."

"Whether you like the other person or not, you have to learn what you have to learn."

The content was quite interesting, so I think I stopped without realizing it.

"The devil used a simple method of obscuring the point of his words and then catching us off guard, so let's move on. ... To be honest, the Demon King should be said to be proactive, but he seems unmotivated."

"It definitely seemed like the reaction was based on interest. Even when I speak, it's as if I'm tapping an interesting bug..."

"Is that so?"

Did you? Now that I think about it, the emperor's words were overwhelmingly numerous. Even though the Demon

King could have hung up, he just listened quietly and said a few words lightly.

‘Those few words were heavy enough to be the final blow, but...’

“As you know, the best thing to do in a war of words is to completely defend against the opponent’s attack and counterattack. But there’s no way things could go that easily, right? If defense is difficult, you have to find another way. In the video a little while ago, when the demon called the commander of the 1st Corps said that he would step down if the empire gave up on conquering the continent, what did the emperor, who has a great weakness of never giving up on this, do?”

“... Instead of answering directly... I diverted the conversation. “I attacked by pointing out the loopholes in the opponent’s statement.”

Attack to evade. And then the attack was carried out under the guise of a counterattack.

“that’s right. That’s why it’s important to listen carefully to what the other person says and find loopholes. “If the opponent’s attack is of a type that you cannot respond to, you must attack in return.”

“You can think of this as evading and counterattacking.”

“yes. And yet, when the Demon King pointed out his weakness and evasion became impossible, what did the Emperor do?”

Ah, this is easy.

“I brought down my opponent as well.”

“answer! Do you know why the emperor did this? This is not a simple war of words between individuals. A war of words in front of the majority must never be lost. How many times have I told you about the importance of images? Images really influence a lot of things. The morale of the soldiers, the difficulty of inciting the public, in addition to the individual perception of the speaker...”

The explanation continued one after another.

I don't know what he does, but he teaches really well. The students are smart and answer well.

The wind is cool and the weather is good. I slightly lifted the hood of my robe and raised my head to look at the sky. The sky was so clear that it was hard to believe that there had been a declaration of war by the devil.

‘Ha yeah, fucking declaration of war.’

Now war is really happening. A war not with another kingdom, but with the demon world!

Ah, I suddenly felt like I was under a lot of stress. For some reason, it feels like the speed is getting hotter and hotter...

“Cough.”

Well, it wasn't an illusion. I'm sure you're under a lot of stress.

I thought calmly, wiping the red liquid flowing down my chin with the back of my hand.

...My questions have been roughly resolved, so I should go back now. To my mansion, where documents that I want to throw as kindling await at any moment.

Without thinking, I lowered my head and made eye contact with the man who was teaching the child.

“got it? Silence equals defeat. If it’s a simple argument between individuals, it may be okay to lose, but if other people are watching, even if it means getting stuck in the mud with the other person...”

“...?”

What, why do you stop talking when you see me?

...Oh, maybe it’s because he vomited blood... No, but the hood was almost taken off! You must have seen my face!

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 132

132. Tightrope walker (6)

I quickly pulled on my hood and covered my face. Nevertheless, the gaze that seemed to have already inferred my identity showed no signs of dropping.

“Brother Daniel?”

“....”

The student who was listening to the explanation also turned around as if he sensed something strange. However, the student's actions were stopped by a teacher named Daniel.

He played with his waist a few times, frowned when he looked at the corner of my mouth, turned around, and patted my back as if to encourage a student to walk.

“Shall we go back and talk about the rest?”

***

“Marquis....”

“...Okay, okay.”

I'll take care of the documents. I do it.

Now, I was completely out of my thoughts, nodding my head at Dan's call, which was almost pathetic.

Yes, you can't put off the documents forever. I braced myself and looked down at the paper on my desk... wow, I really don't want to do this. Because of the war, there was more paperwork.

'Is it because I feel so tired that I don't want to do more?'

To come to my senses, I leaned against the backrest and tilted my upper body as if I was stretching. It was almost at the same time that a sword passed before his eyes.

...huh?!

"Mars... Marquis!"

What is crazy! Why is a sword passing in front of my eyes?

I was so startled that I jumped up without thinking, straightening my upper body. I don't know when someone approached me and my delicate forehead was hit by my chin! It was then that it collided with a sound.

"Ugh...!"

"Tsk!"

It hurts... Seeing the sparks flying in front of my eyes for a moment, it looks like I hit it pretty hard... Is the guy I hit going to be okay? That's a chin.

I quickly placed one hand on the desk and rubbed my forehead a few times before raising my head. The attacker, who seemed to have lost all strength in his legs, and Dan, who was holding a sword to his neck, gradually came into view.

...No, now that I see it, it's not at the level of holding a sword.

'What are you doing... trying to kill someone before finding out who's behind it?'

A blade that has already partially penetrated the flesh.

I looked at the bloody thing with a lot of blood with tired eyes and then turned my gaze to Dan. He noticed this with astonishment, moved his eyes to look at me, then fixed his gaze on the attacker as if he were wary, and muttered in an admiring tone.

"Somehow... You said you had chills earlier and you didn't even bother doing paperwork..."

"Hmm?"

"I guess they did it because they noticed that someone was sneaking in and were on guard."

"Yes...?"

"Surely 'chills' was a signal? 'I'm sorry I didn't notice.'"

That's not true at all... You don't have to apologize... I rolled my eyes, trying to ignore the throbbing pain in my forehead.

...Yes, because good things are good.

"are you okay. "You may not know."

As time passed, I became more and more shameless.

***

Another shadow, who had been hiding and watching this whole scene until the soldiers who Dan had called outside came rushing in and arrested the attackers, muttered after silence.

“There was no need for me to step forward.”

Is he a hero after all?

It was a long time ago, but now I know for sure. He had been aware of those hiding here from the beginning. Even the shadow itself that is hiding like this right now.

I am certain because when I was consoling a subordinate who was blaming himself that he might not know, he glanced at where I was hiding.

‘...It’s nice that I get the public money.’

Did he ask you to protect him from numerous future attackers?

I think they’ll survive just fine without me, but since I’ve been paid, I guess I’ll have to work.

As if not getting tired of the previous failure, the shadow moved towards the attackers who were sneakily approaching again and taunted them silently.

‘Some people want to kill you for money, and some people want to protect you for money... I don’t know what they’re trying to do.’

***

I wonder what the hell is going on....

After dumbly watching the situation being neatly organized, I walked shakily and sat down in front of the desk.

I think Dan was happily talking nonsense, asking if he really wanted to work now that he got rid of his annoying gaze... I didn't want to hear it, so I just brushed it off and ignored him.

'Okay, what happened a little while ago never happened.'

Something like accidentally subduing an attacker with a headbutt, or being misunderstood for some reason... In any case, such embarrassing things have never happened again. I'm erasing it from the list of past records in my head.

'...Let's just shut up and do the paperwork.'

This might be the best way to erase random thoughts.

With a deep sigh, I picked up the pen... and then stopped. Because there was a slight vibration coming from the inside pocket.

My face suddenly crumpled.

'I'm already tired, so why now...'

The side where I felt the vibration was none other than the left side.

So, what was in the left inner pocket... was it a 'communication stone'? A communication device that connects to the Demon King.

On the right is a 'communication device' that connects to the emperor.

Either way, it's not the kind of thing you get here. As I quietly got up from my seat to change places, Dan, who had been sorting documents on one side, quickly raised his head and responded.

"Where are you going?"

"Outside for a moment. I'll be back soon so just wait. "Don't follow me."

"...."

"You can't even do it secretly."

"Yeah..."

Leaving behind the suffocating voice, I left the military camp and headed towards a deserted place, sighing deeply.

'What do you want me to do this time?'

It's quiet now for some reason, but at the beginning of the story, when the war between the Empire and the Demon Realm had just begun, I had to take the lead, going back and forth between the two camps to the point where it was really annoying.

Dan said there was a rumor that the fighting styles of the hero Deon Hardt and the Commander of the 0th Legion were similar. It's worth it. Because that's how I acted! Oh my gosh, most of my memories have been blown away!

'If you put me in the lead here, I'll call you from the other side and put me in the lead too! 'Do you even compete with something like this?'

It's not a child, it's really too much.

Thanks to this, our crazy dogs and members of Legion 0 are fiercely competitive with each other as the vanguard of each faction. Watching them wait for the day when they can properly face each other without even knowing that the leader is the same... Ha... ‘

... Wait, are you really holding yourself back because of those rumors?’

The brisk pace stopped and suddenly slowed down.

There are limits to suppressing rumors, so the only way is to reduce the frequency of using myself. It would be better to at least avoid putting yourself in the lead.

‘So...’

That’s why I’m stuck in that document hell!

I gained enlightenment. Damn it.

...Anyway, there won’t be anyone around here. I didn’t feel like he was being popular, but I looked around just in case, muttered something meaningless and told him to turn off, and then took the communication seat out of his pocket.

“Yes, I received the message.”

- Ah Deon. I’m sorry you’re busy, but why don’t you just walk northwest from where you are now? It’s not that far, probably an hour at four paces.

Suddenly...? Plus 1 hour...?

No wait. If you’re northwest of here... you’re pretty close to the front line. Since my camp is located in the rear... to be exact, it will be in a remote location about 15 minutes from the border.

‘These demons... Even though there are few battles on this border and the atmosphere is passive, isn’t that too much?’

Do you want to know where it is and move there? What should I do if someone catches me in the middle?

There aren’t even exact coordinates. If you move in the wrong direction and suddenly appear at the border line where you are in confrontation, it is the end!

You could say that it’s difficult to find a direction, but because the boundary line exists in the mountains in the first place, it is difficult to determine the exact direction, and the terrain is uneven, making it difficult to move in the desired direction. Going straight makes no sense.

– Don’t worry about getting lost. If I go in the wrong direction, I’ll let you know.

“Ah, location tracking... I understand. But for some reason...”

I told Dan I’d be back soon, but I guess I’ll have to hurry.

I rubbed the brand on the side of my neck above my collarbone with my thumb and diligently hastened my steps.

– Oh, didn’t I tell you? Sorry I was surprised. I’m a little out of it these days.

“no.”

I think I didn’t say it on purpose.

– Are there any weapons before that?

“yes.”

- That’s it then. It’s no big deal.

Look at this. You’re not saying it on purpose.

When it comes to weapons, I take them with me. They are fully armed. Even though the opponent is from the Demon World, for some reason, attacks have become more frequent these days, so even when I go to sleep, I sleep with the bare minimum of preparation.

There are so many people who would target me just because it is the emperor’s favorite sword, so even if I pass over this side, it would be hard to deal with even a single Demon World, but it is a bit surprising that he has so much leeway to attack a fellow human. I don’t know who it is, but I really want to see your face.

‘...More than that, I’m anxious because you didn’t tell me the reason.’

I just keep pretending it’s no big deal.

...Are you sure you’re trying to kill me?

‘really?’

Should I go back now?

Suddenly, the steps stopped. I stood there, lost in thought. If I wanted to, I could immediately go back without following his words, but I couldn’t... ‘

....’

I belatedly became aware of the stigma I was still touching with my thumb and took my hand away.

...I'm not sure he's the enemy. I am in a position where I cannot be the first to act carelessly.

'...This idea is sealed.'

The thought of becoming deeper and heavier was blocked at some point.

What was I thinking? As I was reorganizing my memories, the Demon King carefully spoke as if soothing me, wondering what he had read from my stationary position and silence.

- No, it's really not that big of a deal. Rather, I was afraid that you would be disappointed and try to go back... so I didn't tell you.

"...."

- If you don't believe me, I'll tell you. Instead of listening and not going back?

"...I will listen first."

-There is a group of monsters at the destination. It's not that much and you can easily organize it on your own... so it's working fine.

- Deon? Why are you going back...is it because it's so boring? Are you annoyed because I called you for something trivial?

"...."

- I ask for your understanding. I think it would be a good idea to get rid of it in advance because of the location, but it would be a waste to send troops separately...

I don't think it would be a waste. You're saying you're going to send me as a sacrifice, right?

If he had seen my rotting expression, at least he would have stopped talking. The calm voice of the devil, who had no way of knowing what I was thinking, continued.

– Wouldn't it be much more efficient to send one of you and divert the troops to go there to the other side? Moreover, it seems like if we move our troops now, we will create unnecessary vigilance. The emperor is sensitive these days.

“ .... ”

– If it's bothersome, you can just scare it away. The problem is not the 'monsters' but the 'location' where the monsters are. What kind of variable would it be because it's so close to the borderline?...

Where on earth do the humans who scare the monsters live?

First, I corrected my direction again, moved, and got lost in thought. The sound of the Demon Lord's relief heard through the communication seat was so annoying that I cut off the communication.

'If I take a wrong turn, I'll contact you again. Rather...'

...It's not that I don't understand the Demon King's situation at all. It's pointless and a waste of time to fight here.

This borderline where I am now is the borderline located furthest from the capital within the empire. This means that there is no reason for the Demon King's army, which has already selected and pounded several nearby border lines, to advance through here.

Even if you move with the purpose of striking the rear, the news will spread before you even reach your intended location due to the distance.

‘No matter how much the goal is to deal with monsters, if you send troops here...’

The emperor, who can’t just sit there and watch, will send troops to not be outdone. Meaningless conflicts may occur.

However, it is difficult to leave the monsters alone because they are a species that attacks and eats both humans and demons. Since it takes manpower to even constantly watch and monitor the situation, it would have been cleanest to send me in to handle it.

‘I’m not strong...! I’m weak...!’

That’s also when I was strong.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 133

133. Tightrope walking (7)

...I'd better go back as expected. I know that disobeying the words of either of the two monarchs in the current situation is a dangerous action that could put one's life at risk, but wouldn't it be right to avoid death at hand? If I leave the death that comes after that to my future self, things will work out somehow.

'My life has never been like a candle in the wind.'

It's been like this ever since the day we went to war, so there's nothing new about it.

'I' felt a sudden surge of stress and closed my eyes tightly. My complicated mind became clear and my mental fatigue went away a little.

'Oh, I'm craving medicine. Even alcohol...'

I've always been like that, so even though I quit taking drugs a long time ago, I wonder why I crave it so much these days.

Anyway, let's go back first. As I made that decision and turned around, a vibration came from the communication box I had in my arms.

‘what? Did I take a wrong turn?’

I think I got the direction right....

With a brief question, I took out the communication table. As soon as I connected the communication, what I heard was a short groan that sounded like pain.

“What... did I take a wrong turn?”

– no. Deon better get ready. The work may end sooner than you think. The monster is moving that way now.

“...yes!?”

I was trying to run away now.

The ground shakes slightly, as if to let you know that it is already too late to run away. ... Yes, I was at a level that I could handle on my own. Let me see your face somewhere.

I turned my head to find the source of the vibration. I could see a tree on one side crashing down, revealing five or six large monsters.

...Haha.

‘Is this something I can handle on my own? I’m serious?’

How high did you rate my level?

They say there aren’t that many of them, but that number is definitely smaller than the other groups of monsters I’ve encountered so far.

It’s small, but...

‘He’s no joke!’

The tree is broken! I didn't mean to destroy it, I just moved it!

After silence, I barely opened my mouth. Even so, my voice did not tremble and I calmly called out to the other person.

“Demon King?”

– Oh yeah. If you leave the communication seat on, it will be a distraction, right? I'll hang up first. Please contact me when you're finished organizing.

Pop.

....

“Shii...bal....”

The hand holding the communication seat suddenly gained strength. I wanted to just throw it away and vent all my anger, but...

I quietly lowered my gaze. The communication seat is fine, but only the hand that gave strength has turned white and is trembling, a pitiful sight.

After taking a quick look at it, I relaxed my hands and put the communication stone in my arms.

Yes, living comes first. Even though my body is already weak, I can't relax my strength in unnecessary places.

“Okay, let's see who dies, you bastards.”

I took out my familiar dagger and glared at the guys running towards me.

And I remember my head gradually rising as the distance got closer...

‘Did I go crazy when I realized how ridiculously large it was?’

I don’t remember anything after that.

***

They also failed to kill Deon Hart. Some of them were even eliminated by an unknown person before they could reach Deonhardt.

The duke quietly crumpled the note he was reading in his hand and raised the corners of his mouth. His gaze rose and he made eye contact with the other nobles standing in front of him.

...It’s annoying, but dealing with them should be a priority right now.

“So... why did you come to me without any message?”

That’s how many people do it.

I moved my eyes from left to right and slowly looked at the people in front of me. Familiar faces. If they weren’t from the aristocratic faction, they would have been kicked out right away.

While I was swallowing my subtle regret with my tea, one of the people who had been sitting on the sofa watching me mustered up the courage to boldly open my mouth.

“I think the emperor is crazy.”

“oh.”

That's too bold.

It's not completely wrong, but it's not something to say out loud like this. Should I say that it is fortunate that we inherited the users in advance?

I slowly put down the glass I was holding. Once I took the attitude of listening, others seemed to gain courage and began to raise their claims loudly.

"From the beginning, it was a war at a disadvantage for the empire. Even if you win or lose, it's still a loss."

"We have to stop it now."

"It is still early in the war, so it is not too late."

It is true that it is a war at a disadvantage for the empire, and it is true that it is a loss whether it wins or loses. If you can block it, it's right to block it, but...

The duke lifted his delicate hand and placed it on his chin, tilting his head. Her purple hair flowed to the side as she moved.

"What is the reason you come to me and make your claim?"
"All I have to do is give advice to His Majesty."

"The emperor... doesn't you know?"

Well, that's true.

Even if you rebuke, it's lucky if your head doesn't fly off. Because the emperor is especially merciless towards the noble faction.

"...great. "You insisted that we should stop it, but is there any way to do it?"

“that.”

“For your information, this war has already occurred. Even if you want to stop here, there is a possibility that the Demon Lord will not accept it. “It will have to be a plan that takes all of this into account.”

Even so, I am on edge after hearing some unsatisfactory news. If the plan you come up with is clumsy, it would be a good idea to be prepared.

The Duke smiled brightly as he put the crumpled note in his clenched hand into the remaining teacup. The nobles, who sensed something ominous, trembled as if they were not completely oblivious.

Still, I opened my mouth to see if I was in the room I had brought with me.

“I’m going to hit the emperor’s... neck.”

Unfortunately, it wasn’t a very good method.

The duke stopped and couldn’t believe his ears at the sudden suggestion of treason.

“...I beg your pardon?”

“The Demon King said that he would retreat if the empire made no further moves. But the Emperor is a warmonger. Rather, they welcome the war against the demon world and have no intention of stopping it. So...”

“—You will stop the war by beheading the emperor?”

“If we hand over the emperor’s head to the devil, won’t the devil know what we mean and retreat?”

“Ha...”

That’s stupid.

As he was looking at them, the duke felt like his head was pounding for no reason, so he quietly closed his eyes. Negative emotions such as anger and irritation boil over, but then subside under the pressure of cold reason.

Perhaps due to the aftermath of the rapid emotions that soared to the point of explosion, a voice close to lament came out weakly.

“Why don’t you know that that’s what the Demon King wants?”

“...yes?”

“Have you ever thought about why the Demon King said that when he declared war?”

“yes? “That’s right...”

He trails off. I tried waiting for a while just in case, but there was no answer.

That really is a noble of the empire.

“Of course it led to internal strife, didn’t it? Aiming for division within the human world and division within the empire! “The devil is trying to create strife against humanity!”

Oops. Voices rose unexpectedly.

The Duke wiped his face and lifted the teacup in front of him, then found the note he had put in a moment ago and calmly put it down. I can’t call the employee because of the topic we're talking about right now, so I have no choice but to endure it.

The brief silence that had fallen for a moment was broken by a calmer voice again.

"You must have learned history with the basic knowledge of an aristocrat."

"Yes, yes... of course..."

"Then you understand. "What was the cause of the majority of countries failing?"

"...."

There is no answer again.

This country is bad. Even if it wasn't because of the monarch, it was because of his subjects. Even the emperor knows the importance of history, so where did such stupid nobles come from?

As I once again see the shortcomings of the hereditary system before my eyes, I feel the urge to wholeheartedly support those calling for revolution. Of course, it's just a fleeting impulse.

The duke sighed and calmly answered.

"It's an internal dispute."

"Ah...."

What is 'Ah....'?

Of course, the proportion of countries that collapsed due to foreign powers has increased due to the current emperor, but ultimately, throughout history, the cause of the fall of almost all countries was internal strife.

“On the outside, it may seem like it collapsed due to foreign forces, but if you look into the details, there were many cases where it was already in a precarious state due to internal strife.”

When a country is in trouble due to internal strife, another country suddenly touches it and it collapses.

“But... dividing the nobles into various factions and fighting against each other has been the practice since before this country became an empire. According to what the duke said, this country will soon...”

“Oh my god.”

You can't even tell the difference between political confrontation.

A sigh comes out of nowhere. The duke looked at them in bewilderment, not even thinking about removing the hair that had flowed down like a curtain.

“...Who said confrontation was bad? “Political confrontation is a natural and natural phenomenon that inevitably appears in order to achieve better results.”

“Then, just now...”

“However, the confrontation and the replacement of the emperor must be done depending on the situation. Even if such a thing were to be done while the country was still intact, would it be dangerous to engage in a confrontation in a situation where there is a threat from foreign powers? “That's crazy.”

How many times does your blood pressure rise today? There are limits to suppressing with reason.

The duke raised his hand, pressed his forehead, and spoke quietly.

“All nobles have a basic obligation to protect their country, whether politically or militarily. No matter how divided our factions are, if a foreign force attempts to invade, we must join forces to drive them out. “The fight is what comes after.”

Who do you think you are eating well and living well right now?

Protecting the people of the empire is the number one duty of nobles and monarchs. Out of frustration, sharp words well up in my throat.

I swallowed them hard, placed my clasped hands on my crossed knees, and smiled brightly at those who were just looking at me.

“The words leaked to a slightly different place, but you understand now. This means that the thoughts the monks have now were induced by the devil. How can you believe the devil’s words in the first place? There are rumors throughout the continent that demons are prone to lies. “Even if you hand over the emperor’s head and receive a promise of peace, will they protect you?”

“ .... ”

“So, in the current situation, beheading the emperor is consistent with destroying this country and handing over the human world to the devil. “Do you want to wear the crown alone in a collapsed country and play the role of a master with no one to cater to you?"

Of course, before you can even play such a meaningless game of house, you will already be dead and only corpses will be lying around.

Anyway, I think I understood it correctly as intended. The nobles, whose faces turned pale, hurriedly waved their hands.

"Oh no."

"We were foolish."

"...Your Majesty has said this over and over again. It is a sin for the person standing on top to be foolish. "I think you need to know why history is one of the basic skills of nobles."

I thought they wouldn't leave me alone if they came with a clumsy plan... but when they came up with a plan that was stupider than I could imagine, I lost my strength.

The duke, who was suddenly tired, raised his hand and gave the order to congratulate the guests.

"I also need to find out the truth about the rumor about the Honorable Marquis Adeon Hardt's vampire theory..." "

...Please leave."

"yes yes!"

In the space left behind after the people who were watching hurriedly left, he remembered the note he had been looking at before those stupid nobles arrived.

‘Attacks always fail, and poisonings fail because people either overthrow the poisoned food by pretending it was a mistake or detect it before eating it...’

In addition, there is the protection of someone whose name is unknown.

In addition to formidable skill, unbelievable luck. To be honest, I’m a little disappointed, but...

‘...Whether it’s luck or skill, if I keep pushing until I succeed, it will happen someday.’

Because his thoughts had not yet changed, the duke did not withdraw his initial request for murder, telling him to try until he succeeded, saying he would give him as much money as he wanted.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 134

134. Tightrope Walking (8)

The bet between the Duke and Cruel, which had been postponed for a while due to Deonhardt's absence to go to the Demon World under the pretext of a mission, began as soon as he returned to the Empire.

The loser makes a bet where the first person to kill Deonhardt who grants the winner's wish wins.

'You survived today too.'

Cruel, who received a note reporting how many attacks were made, how many poisoning attempts were made, and how they were resolved, quickly closed his eyes while calculating how many times Deon was at the risk of life and death in one day.

'thank god.'

But the duke won't give up just because of this level of failure.

That is why the request was entrusted indefinitely.

Even though it was clear that money was leaking out of his pockets, Cruel did not give up on the request to protect Deonhart, knowing that the operation was persistent.

***

The Duke requested murder, and Cruel requested protection. Also targeting the same person.

When the emperor was reported this fact, instead of saying something right away, he sat down, lowered his eyes halfway, and raised his hand to smooth the corners of his eyes.

Golden eyes wander here and there, seem to focus on empty space, and then hide under the eyelids. The emperor pulled out his dagger with the dexterity he had become accustomed to.

Phew!

“...Whew.”

The gaze of Nemeseus, who was standing still, landed on the emperor’s pierced left hand.

The Emperor exhales slowly while holding the handle of the dagger, opens his eyes and pulls it out. As blood spurted out from the affected area with an eerie sound, Nemeseus familiarly approached and began treatment.

A sneer appeared on the emperor’s lips as he held up the dagger with his right hand and picked up the document he had put down for a moment, leaving his left hand to him.

“...okay. “They want to kill one and protect the other.”

Two people who are seemingly on the same side.

Deonhardt even hates those who try to protect him with all his heart, so what should I say about this?

The story involved was too heavy to be considered funny, and the emperor was not given the right to take it seriously.

I forced my mouth, which wouldn't open easily, to open it.

"Really...."

"...."

"It's an unfortunate fate."

This is not something I should say as a person who had a hand in that unfortunate fate.

Since when did the emperor start talking about qualifications? He shamelessly commented on this laughable comedy and turned to the next document.

"The treatment is not over yet. "Please remove your hand."

"...It's become a habit."

Without realizing it, I withdrew my hand from reaching for the affected area on my left hand.

Ignoring the gaze of Nemeseus following me, I focused my eyes on the contents of the next document. This document also did not contain very good content.

Words filled with sighs flowed out.

"Again?"

"...."

"It doesn't seem like you're getting tired of it. "I guess I'll use the time to spread rumors like this to think of ways to deal with the demons."

There is a rumor that the fighting styles of the Demon King's Army's 0th Legion commander and the Empire's hero Deonhardt are similar.

Both of them have their faces covered, use daggers, and adhere to a brutal fighting style, so suspicion is reasonable. It is the emperor and the devil's job to remove these suspicions from the beginning.

"As always, handle it quietly."

"...."

The hand that was wrapping the bandage stopped.

The emperor, who felt strange that there was no sign of completion of the treatment no matter how long he waited, let alone an answer, raised his head and saw Nemeseus, who was not willing to avoid his eyes, stared into the golden eyes for a moment and then slowly began to speak.

"...May I dare to ask if the two are really unrelated?"

"...."

Until now, he had done everything he was told without asking any questions, but for the first time, he was asking questions about this rumor.

I'm sure you've had quite a bit of trouble yourself. The emperor could not easily tell a lie, so he remained silent for the time being.

Silence descends along with a strange sense of tension. The silence, which was derived from a war of nerves that was not a war of nerves as they stared at each other for what felt like an eternity, was broken when the emperor fixed his gaze on the documents again.

“Jim... didn’t allow questions.”

The emperor did not answer lies.

“...I apologize.”

The general realized the meaning behind those words.

The emperor, who was about to add something to that, looked at the signal from the communication device and raised an eyebrow.

This communicator must be connected to Deon Hardt.

‘What’s going on? Because of the rumors, I haven’t given any special missions yet.’

Did something happen?

He stretched out his hand and grabbed the communicator and softly gave a command.

“Go away.”

“...yes.”

***

Only one guy gets it right.

If you cruelly kill them in front of their eyes as an example, even those damn big monsters will get scared and back off.

Deon’s eyes rolled back and he twirled his dagger as he looked at the guys running towards him, then raised the corners of his mouth with a grin.

‘I heard that the monsters are increasing exponentially, and it seems like that’s true.’

I thought that as long as I had this brand, I would never be attacked by a monster. How hungry must he have been to think of attacking me?

Hunger enough to overcome the demon lord’s energy felt from the brand. The fact that it was alone, separated from the group, and that it was small and formidable in appearance must have removed their hesitation.

“You can’t do that.”

The bright red eyes sparkle with madness.

Everything else is fine. Even if something more is added to this weak body, nothing will change. As long as you don’t come across as easygoing, it’s okay to vomit blood, get stabbed somewhere in your body, and have your limbs fly off.

but.

“You can’t do that.”

It is not enough to appear easy-going.

After making a name for himself in the Eight Year War and making a rather extreme appearance in his first meeting with the Demon King, no one in either the human world or the demon world looked down on him.

So it’s been a long time since I felt this way. It didn’t matter to the monsters I met before without the stigma, as it was natural for them to rush at me, but now that the stigma exists, their actions mean that I look easy enough to ignore the demon lord's energy.

"Come on, kids. "It's been a while since you touched my stomach."

I will kill you very well.

The dagger spins, and the thumb folds and unfolds several times as if it were going to use the handle. Deonhardt, throwing away any thoughts of safely returning, smiled brightly and opened his arms to greet his opponent.

***

The monsters run away in fear. If anyone in the human world had seen it, they would have been shocked and thought it was impossible. To humans, 'monsters' that are stronger than a certain level are those that will flinch at the opponent's strong inaction but will not run away.

I stood firm and watched their backs, and only collapsed when they completely disappeared from sight.

'It hurts...'

My wrist hurts. The sides too. My legs also hurt as if all their muscles had been torn. There was a fishy, iron taste in my mouth, as if I had vomited blood. When I looked down, I saw that most of my top was stained red.

When I came to my senses, I realized how absurd it was to see that my body was in this state. I don't remember, but I think I know what I did. It's the only thing that can destroy my body so delicately.

‘It was quite a dangerous situation for me...’

It was the only way to do it once while still in a normal state.

Drawing on and using power beyond physical limits.

‘Or maybe I panicked and used the technique recklessly...’

It was natural that my body, which couldn’t withstand it, was destroyed.

...No matter what the situation, going back is the priority. I was away for too long.

Strengthen your legs to get up from your seat...

“...Huh?”

I looked down at my legs dumbly and then gave them strength again. I only feel sharp pain and no strength.

I did not give up and tried to strengthen my legs several times to get up, but as soon as I could barely take a step, I fell hard and ended up hitting the floor with my throbbing wrist.

It hurt so bad that I rolled on the floor without a sound.

“Haha, I’m screwed.”

Although I expected it to some extent.

Should I crawl too? What is the distance from here to the military camp? What if the monster comes again in the meantime....

I was lying down on the floor and staring blankly at the sky, then a thought crossed my mind and I suddenly raised my upper body.

‘Let’s report it to the Demon King first...!’

And you’re asking me to do something about it! To take care of a light human, it’s enough to send just one demon rather than multiple troops!

I put my trembling hands in my arms and rummaged around, perhaps because of the pain or something else.

So... I’m in a daze right now, probably because of the aftereffects of the battle, but... the ‘communication seat’ was on the right, right?

***

– Mission completed. I plan to return to the Empire right away, but I am injured and have difficulty moving. I would like to ask you to send just one demon to help me.

“ .... ”

Communication was cut off.

The emperor, who had been looking down at the ‘communicator’ while leaning loosely in his chair, stood up.

Without saying a word, I put on my cloak and took my sword. After taking a quick look at my condition, I went outside and Nemeseus, who had been waiting a little distance away, approached me. The emperor stopped him, who was accustomed to following him, and summoned another soldier with a wave of his hand and ordered him to do so.

“Bring a first aid kit and a set of clean clothes.”

“yes!”

Nemeseus, who was quietly watching the scene, suddenly spoke.

“Where are you going?”

“walk.”

Even if you provide a first aid kit, there is no way you would take clean clothes with you just to go for a walk. I even prepared a horse, but how could this be a walk?

...But there must be a reason for me to go for a walk.

Normally, he would have retreated as he wished, but this time, Nemeseus, who had been silent for a moment because of what wind was blowing, opened his mouth in an attempt that would not work.

“|...”

“That’s it. “Don’t follow me.”

Of course, it was cut with a single knife.

The emperor gathers the prepared items and turns around without regret. The hem of his cloak fluttered in time with his movements.

The general watched his retreating figure and calculated which direction he was going, then realized his disloyalty and closed his eyes.

***

The monsters caught me lying down a little while ago. It looks like they couldn’t completely chase it out in the end.

Yeah... these guys are simple and one feeling doesn't last very long. It is natural that persistent hunger is more influential than a moment of fear.

'Wait a minute, isn't this almost a mission failure?'

I should have chased away the monsters and left. That way, monsters that haven't gone far don't know where I might be wandering around, so they take precautions and run far outside the area that is inferred to be my territory.

The mission failed, my body was damaged, and now my life is in danger...

haha. I laughed as I looked at the monsters running towards me with a confident spirit.

'Good.' very good.'

Of course, this is irony.

I summoned my will based on my survival instinct and managed to stand up, ignoring the pain I felt in my legs.

Perhaps because of the pain, my vision became blurry, but if I waited a little longer, it would return to normal. Dripping cold sweat can't be helped, but you can hide your facial expressions. Holding the dagger, I pretended to be as nonchalant as possible and fixed my gaze on what I could infer was the front.

As if the aftereffects of the fear from earlier had not completely gone, I felt the footsteps that had been relentless for a moment slow down.

'Just go like this... please. huh?'

Otherwise, you'll die. I.

Despite my expectations, the sound of footsteps became faster again as if it had never happened before. The vibration of the ground beneath my feet conveys their harsh energy to me.

The hazy vision slowly cleared and the world began to appear on my retina. The first thing I saw through my blurry vision was the monster that had arrived right in front of me —

Suddenly!

—It was a sword that cut it like cutting tofu.

‘...Are they demons sent by the Demon King?’

I blinked blankly for a moment, then moved my gaze along the hand holding the sword and looked at its owner.

Brilliant blonde hair and golden eyes like a beast. A very familiar atmosphere.

“Uh...”

Why are you here...?!

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 135

135. Tightrope Walking (9)

The emperor, who glanced at me in suppressed astonishment that leaked out like a groan, jumped off his horse, scanned the remaining monsters, raised his sword, and lightly slashed from left to right. At the same time, the upper and lower bodies of the two animals were separated.

‘Someone almost died...’

Once again, I can feel the emperor’s skills.

The rest of the arrangements were done in an instant. In the quiet forest, he lightly swings his sword to shake off the monster’s bodily fluids, puts it back in its sheath, and looks back at me.

“...For someone who has difficulty moving around, he looks better than expected...”

“...Ah, glory to the empire...!”

“I guess that’s not it. Was it miasma?”

While trying to say hello in a hurry, he picked up the body that was collapsing as if pulling out a radish.

...Since he held my arm, I guess I can see him as a supporter, right? But why am I so embarrassed?

As I was hanging on by one of his hands, the emperor, who was silently looking at me to see what he was thinking, slightly raised the corners of his mouth and spoke leisurely.

“This is my first time meeting you like this. Isn’t that right, Commander 0 Corps?”

“...!”

“It looks like you confused the communicator and communication seat. Both are magic stones, so it’s easy to get confused, but it’s better to be careful next time. “Does a spy have to be this sloppy to be useful?”

The communication seat was on the left...!

It feels like all the blood in my body is draining out. The world, which had barely found its color, turned white again. My face is probably whiter than anything else in the world right now.

As if my stress had exceeded its limit, something hot surged up inside my body without any time to suppress it.

“Wow...! “Cough!”

“Is this an internal injury or a curse...”

He clicks his tongue softly as he looks at the red liquid dripping down my chin and slowly sets me down on the seat.

The emperor looked down at me with eyes that I couldn’t tell what he was thinking, and soon he opened his mouth as if he had discovered something strange.

“My eyes aren’t focusing well.”

“Ah... this is....”

“Now that you have an excuse, just answer this. “Is this temporary or a permanent injury?”

“This is a temporary phenomenon.”

“That’s... fortunate.”

“....”

It was an ordinary voice, just a little slow and nothing special, but I had to do my best not to show the fear that washed over me like a tidal wave.

‘I almost died...’

A moment ago, the emperor’s mood was one of measuring the usefulness of objects rather than treating people.

If I had answered that it was a permanent injury, I would have died right here. If you lose your eyes, your usefulness as a spy drops and you almost lose your combat abilities. The emperor is not one to keep a broken sword in his hand out of affection. This is probably the same for the Demon King as well.

As I was calmly breathing to calm my pounding heart, a bundle was thrown right next to me.

“Clean clothes. “It looks like he came out secretly. If he went back like that, wouldn’t there be an uproar?”

“Oh, thank you.”

“And...”

The emperor paused for a moment while handing me the bandages and medicine, looked me up and down, and sighed.

“...It’s almost like my vision is blurry. Do you know that blood is flowing from your side right now? “It’s almost flowing like water.”

“yes...?”

Oh right. When I was assessing my body condition, I felt pain in my side.

I lowered my head slightly. As if he had overlooked it because his entire clothes were stained red, he later saw the affected area bleeding through the torn clothes.

The front turned white not because of the pain, but because there was a lack of blood.

“The wound... looks like it was cut out. Why is that? Was it difficult for you to come to your senses because of the curse?”

“....”

“Or could such a wound have been caused by a monster attack?... It looks like you let your guard down.”

How are the difficulty of coming to one’s senses and the shape of the wound as if cut out?

And why don’t you think it might be a lack of skill? The Demon King and the Emperor... how highly do they rate my skills?

The emperor looked at me blankly for a moment, wondering how he could handle being speechless from the absurdity, then took out disinfectants and hemostatic agents, lined them up, and took out a bandage.

“Anyway, it would be best to get treatment quickly.”

“Yes, thank you...”

“Take off your clothes. No, the wound may open in the process of taking it off, so it would be better to just cut it.”

“...yes?”

“Stay still. “If you’re not careful, you could end up with one more wound.”

No, no, I’m going to die if I don’t! Are you going to cut my clothes off with that scary-looking sword? You’re not cutting me too?

‘That’s the sword that was cutting monsters just a little while ago! I just don’t want to get treatment. Please don’t push that in...!’

Save your life....

The opponent is the emperor, so you can’t run away. As I looked at the emperor holding the sword with trembling eyes, I eventually gave up and closed my eyes.

Please don’t cut me in two...

The brutal treatment is over.

Until I picked up the sword, I thought I was going to die like this, but fortunately, after cutting off my clothes, they treated me well as usual. Should I call this surprising?

“Thank you...thank you.”

“Now that we’ve said hello, let’s get dressed.”

After fiddling with his neatly bandaged side as if curious, he took out a clean shirt from the bundle the emperor had given him and put it on his arms.

The Emperor, who was standing a step away with his arms crossed and watching me button my shirt, opened his mouth.

“I buttoned it wrong.”

“ah.”

I was nervous because I was in front of the emperor.

While I was finding the wrong button and fixing it properly, he took out his pocket watch, checked the time, and called me.

“Can you walk?”

“...yes.”

maybe.

There was no way the emperor would believe an answer that showed such obvious hesitation. He frowned slightly, then came back and grabbed my ankle.

...?!

‘No... Your Majesty the Emperor...?!’

The position of your head is lower than my eye level...?

Should I bow down too? How to lower your body while sitting.

“You keep sitting there without getting up... What are you doing?”

“...no.”

I slowly straightened my awkwardly bent upper body.

The emperor, who had been looking at me with a subtle look, seemed to have chosen to ignore me and move on, lowering his gaze again to look at the ankle he was holding and repeating what he had left unsaid.

“You kept sitting without getting up...”

“....”

“You are not so rude as to dare to sit while the emperor is standing....”

“Your muscles are just a little damaged.”

It is better to have been forced to show no manners due to one's physical condition than to be seen as wanton and rude in front of the emperor.

The emperor, who was feeling the bones of the ankle, shin, and knee in that order, chuckled at the overly quick answer.

“I guess so. “There is nothing wrong with the bones.”

“....”

“I'll give you a bandage, so wrap it properly and return home safely. “You will be called in a few days, so it would be a good idea to take good care of yourself until then.”

“Call... do you mean?”

“Yes, since you followed the Demon King’s words this time, wouldn’t it be fair to follow Jim’s words next time?”

Wow... oh my...

why is my life like this? It’s really driving me crazy.

Even when I reflexively took the bandage the emperor gave me and was alone again, I couldn’t hold back the spirit that had escaped.

***

Ironically, because the ideology of the emperor and the duke, the two leaders of the imperial and noble factions that are at odds with each other within the empire, are somewhat similar, the nobles have basic common sense related to noblesse oblige regardless of faction.

For example, the country and its citizens should be considered top priority.

Nevertheless, if you were to ask why there are so many selfish and senseless nobles, it could be said that it is similar to hitting someone even though you know that you should not hit them, but in any case, no matter what their actual behavior was, the basic common sense of being an aristocrat was clearly embedded in a corner of the heads of the current nobles.

Why did this story suddenly appear?

“As a noble of this empire who puts the country first, shouldn’t we clearly clarify the truth about the rumors about the honorary Marquis Deonhart? “It is a rumor that, depending on whether it is true or not, could endanger this country.”

There are rumors about the Honorable Marquess of Deonhardt.

The rumor is that he is a vampire!

“I came looking for an old book. “The number and territory of the demons was overwhelmingly large, so they were not exposed to the human world that much, but it was said that ‘vampires’ definitely existed in the demon world.”

“Isn’t it past tense?”

“There is no way to know at the moment. However, we cannot ignore the possibility that the Honorary Marquis of Hart is the last remaining member of the clan.”

“It’s definitely suspicious. Also, the fighting style involves excessive bloodshed!”

“Your eyes are red too.”

“What about that pale skin? “I heard they can’t be exposed to sunlight for a long time, but aren’t the vampires written in the book like that?”

Surprisingly, they were serious.

If it’s written in the old book, vampires and demons live in the same demon world, so isn’t there a high possibility that they will take the demon world’s side when the human world and the demon world go to war? As if various kingdoms within the human world were at war with each other but stopped the conflict to fight against the ‘demon world’!

"I need to make sure I know this time."

"you're right. But His Majesty surrounded him..."

"What I would like to say to His Excellency the Duke is..."

"I was kicked out before I could say anything."

To the Duke, who knew the truth, it was only natural that it was nothing more than the nonsense of foolish people.

"It seems we have no choice but to find out for ourselves."

"I have already set my eyes and ears on the Honorable Marquis of Hart."

"I posted it too, but I wonder if the news hasn't stopped..."

"Now that I think about it..."

"It looks like he's dead. "He's a hero too, so he must have developed a sense of spirit."

As expected, it is a formidable opponent.

This was the thought that all the nobles present thought of at the same time.

"...I'll have to pick them as carefully as possible and put them back together."

"Then I will attach some people to watch from afar, just in case."

"But... what do you plan to do if he really is a vampire?"

"...."

“....”

Can the emperor definitely get rid of this even if it is cheap?

Even if it is revealed to the world that he is a vampire, the only thing that will change is that his hostility towards Deonhardt will become stronger, and it is unlikely that the Emperor will easily throw away his useful sword.

Maybe it's about knowing and embracing it. We definitely control the information about him. Rather, we cannot ignore the possibility that vampires taking the empire's side can be used to form positive public opinion.

“...Let's think about it then.”

“is it so. “The authenticity hasn't even been determined yet.”

The method most people who face unanswerable problems choose is to look away.

The nobles avoided uncomfortable families that were sure to be complex and headache-inducing.

“Oh, and there are rumors that the combat styles of Commander 0 and Deon Hart are similar... Could it be that they are the same person?”

“Hehehe, even a joke! Could that be possible? “Whether it's the emperor or the devil, they won't stay still.”

“Haha, that's right. It has been more than two years since the existence of Commander 0 emerged as an open secret. That means there is a possibility that it existed in the Demon World even longer than that. You saw the day when the Demon World declared war, right? It is impossible for the parties involved in such a war of words to have been unaware of it for over two years. "It was a funny joke."

"Ahaha, isn't that right?"

In the meantime, a nobleman suggested a unique hypothesis, but this was dismissed as a joke to lighten the mood and was met with laughter.

It was a ridiculously unreliable hypothesis, but it actually lightened the mood.

In a warm atmosphere, everyone praised the nobleman's witty jokes and focused on the 'Deonhart Vampire Theory'.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 136

136. Cracked dam (1)

The ground shook and dust arose.

I don't think I would be full just by eating this small body, but there weren't many, but large monsters running towards me with excitement.

The good news is that they run as if they are competing, as if they know that they cannot share 'me', so the distance between the person running at the front and the people behind him has widened a little.

'I', who was standing still and watching the scene, grinned.

'That's enough.'

I don't know who is running in the lead right now. That you may be hunted by your prey again.

'I' have some talent for this type of play. Especially when the opponents are such simple people, leading the play according to the scenario is a piece of cake.

If you make one guy the scapegoat and reveal the twist, the other idiots that were chasing you will be embarrassed and stop. That gap is enough time to create fear for me.

‘They say they’re failures who couldn’t become demons, but they’re simple and stupid... I really like them.’

The dagger in my hand spins. My thumb kept folding and unfolding as if it were going to be used as a handle, and ‘I’ slowly lowered my posture—and when the leading monster reached right in front of me, I jumped out of my seat and ran out.

In their eyes, it probably seemed like I had disappeared for a moment.

Because I was going at a speed that my body couldn’t bear, I heard a snapping sound from my legs. I ignored it, jumped into the air, swung my arm, and plunged the dagger into the guy’s neck. It took a bit of effort to insert the dagger into the tough leather, but it was okay.

Ignoring the burden on my entire arm, I shifted my weight and lowered it as if I was hanging on.

“Kaaaa!”

“Maybe it’s because he’s big. “Even though I was stabbed in a vital spot, I still have a lot of energy.”

So who looked down on ‘me’?

Before falling, the dagger in his other hand was re-inserted into the wound, fixing it and sticking to it.

Looking at the location and size of the wound, it seems like it will die even if left alone, but ‘my’ purpose is not to ‘kill’ this guy. Those who are following behind must also be taken into account.

“After all, attacking the eyes would have a good visual effect, right?”

Deep.

I committed this against humans as well, so there is no way I would hesitate against monsters. I raised my weak arm, thrust the dagger into the guy’s eye, and twisted it.

“Kaaaaa!!”

“it hurts?”

He kindly put his face in front of his remaining eye and smiled innocently.

Eyes the size of fists shake. The screams of ‘anger’ at being attacked by prey began to take on the quality of ‘fear’.

The other monsters who were running in a panic at the unexpected situation that happened in front of them stopped and glanced at them. ‘I’ raised my dagger and started to roughly cut out the remaining eyes.

And then it stops.

“...Oh, there was poison in your fingernails.”

The front paw of the struggling guy scratched his side.

I looked at the wound that was turning purple and saw the guy. Even though he lost his eyesight, he has a triumphant look, as if he has a general idea of the situation he is going through.

...For someone who will die soon to struggle.

After glancing at the monsters that were beginning to approach from behind, he plunged the dagger in his hand deep into his eye and jumped down.

And without any time to waste, 'I' took out a clean new dagger, cut off the side, threw it on the floor, and trampled on it.

Clap.

The crushed flesh beneath my feet made an unpleasant sound.

"I thought about throwing it to you guys, but I didn't want to create any unnecessary variables."

Wouldn't it be a big deal if you eat something and end up rolling your eyes at how delicious it is?

Only then does the mangled monster fall down with a thud, as if its tenacious life has run out. The monsters that followed behind had already stopped a long time ago.

'I' said with a wide smile at the guys.

"What's wrong with you? "I can't wait to come."

I thought he had managed to inject poison after chopping up one of his compatriots, but he cut off the flesh himself before it could spread to his body... and even smiled brightly, as if he was not even conscious of his side, which was bleeding.

Basically, a crazy person is recognized regardless of his or her race.

The monsters slowly began to retreat.

***

I had a dream again. I seem to be having strange dreams often these days... I frowned as I stabbed the neck of a small, rabbit-sized monster with a dagger.

‘The contents...’

I don’t remember the contents.

‘So in the dream, I...’

I don’t remember.

I definitely don’t remember the content, but seeing as how I didn’t feel very good after waking up, it couldn’t have been good content.

‘Ah, I’m craving medicine...’

Against the background of a beautiful moonlit night, I was wearing comfortable everyday clothes with my face bare for the first time in a while... I sighed as I slayed the crowd of little monsters.

As if considering my poor physical condition, the emperor ordered me to hunt a minor monster a week later.

Yes, I’m glad it’s not a big, fierce and scary monster, but...

‘There are too many small monsters and they run away easily...!’

I threw my dagger angrily at the fleeing guy. The guy whose torso was pierced precisely fell apart.

It's not threatening. If we were to compare it to a wild animal in the human world, it is literally a monster the size of a rabbit or rat. However, since they also try to eat the flesh of living things, it is only difficult if their numbers increase.

'Well... let's just say it's dangerous.'

Although their numbers had not yet increased to a threatening level, it was an order from the emperor who judged that it would be better to eliminate such variables in advance as it was a war situation.

Whether it's the emperor or the devil, they pretend to care about my body, but in the end, they use it here and there. Is that really the case when you become a monarch?

"Anyway, it seems like everything is roughly organized..."

Rustle.

"...I don't know what to say."

As soon as you speak, the remnants appear?

I held the dagger tightly in my hand and looked towards the grass where I heard the sound. As if it sensed that it had been caught, the grass shook, and then something jumped out and ran towards me at full speed.

"Demon Nieiim!"

"!?"

I barely stopped the dagger I was swinging reflexively.

A familiar-looking demon with leaves on its head runs towards me, calling out a familiar name in a familiar voice.

For a moment, my head felt overloaded.

Was I... on a mission as a 'Demon'?

"...Ben?"

"Yes, Demon! "I managed to escape from the Demon King's Castle and come here to seek treatment for this Ben Demon!"

What is that now...!

My feet were twisted because I was embarrassed. I reflexively stretched out my hand to get my balance, but it had no further effect than touching Ben's shoulder.

'No, usually he just supports me, holds me, and lifts me up, but now he's asking me to do something.'

Yes. I fell on top of Ben now.

One hand pressed down on Ben's shoulder and the other hand holding the dagger rested on the ground next to Ben's head... while inserting the sword into the ground.

Anyone can see that this is attempted murder or at least a threat to kill...?

Thinking that Ben would misunderstand me, I quickly put away the dagger and tried to make an excuse, but Ben, who rolled his eyes and checked the blade next to his head, spoke first.

"sorry! "I received a signal that Demon-sama was injured, so I was in a hurry... did I get in the way?"

"yes...?"

“As expected. sorry...!”

No, that’s not it... didn’t I raise my eyebrows? Why are you doing that?...

I opened my mouth to explain, but this time, Ben spoke faster.

“still...!”

“...?”

“I’m so glad you’re safe.”

“...under.”

What should I do with my doctor who has this crazy professionalism?

He smiles happily, as if he is truly happy. I couldn’t bear to get angry at that, so I slowly withdrew the dagger.

‘I didn’t mean to get angry in the first place.’

The snake scales that cover part of his face remind me that he is a demon, so how dare I get angry about that. Being used to it and having a swollen liver that makes you angry are two different things.

Still, due to the unexpected worry, the fatigue that had accumulated without knowing it appeared, and the stiff expression on my face relaxed. Ben, who astutely noticed this as he was watching me, did not miss the opportunity to ask a question.

“Are you feeling okay? “When you look at the signals, it doesn’t look like there are many places in good condition.”

“...it’s okay.”

“It’s probably a lie, so I won’t believe it.”

Rien said the same thing and he too... If he was going to do that, why did he ask?

“Based on the movement, it seems like the muscles in the limbs are also a problem... Ah, the sides! Is your side okay?! “The signal was no joke!”

“It’s okay....”

“I don’t believe it!”

Then don’t ask!

“Excuse me, but let me take your clothes off.”

“Don’t be rude, just.”

“Can I take off the bandage?”

“no.”

“Yes, I will solve it.”

This bastard...?

The hand inside the clothes fumbles to find the knot of the bandage. It’s cold! Maybe it’s because they’re demons, but their hands are cold. I got goosebumps.

I felt like even if I refused verbally, they wouldn’t listen, so I quickly shook off his hand, stood up, and took a step down.

“I’m really fine. I finished the treatment and my body is in some condition...”

“Marquis?”

“!”

An unfamiliar voice.

I quickly turned my head to check where the voice came from. A man dressed in imperial uniform was holding a weapon and looking at me and Ben in turns.

Ah...

‘I’m ruined.’

I made a mistake. Just like when carrying out the Demon King’s orders, this mission should have been carried out in secret.

Honestly, there is no need to keep it a secret when carrying out light orders given by the emperor in the imperial camp. The emperor didn’t say it was a secret mission, and the mission itself was really light and nothing special.

So I moved confidently. As a result, they said they could not send the Marquis alone, so three knights from the military camp followed along to guide the way.

‘I barely managed to separate Dan from following him...’

Originally, more knights were going to follow, but the reason the emperor moved me in the first place was to minimize the waste of troops, so I read his intention and compromised with just three. .

‘Your Majesty, I did my best...’

In fact, I wanted to take more, but... this was the best.

Because our numbers were small, we had to divide the area into separate areas to deal with the monsters. Still, why didn't I go alone? Giggle... Not!

I never thought a problem like this would occur.

'What should I do with that person?'

Kill me? If you explain the situation, the Emperor will understand. But...

I looked at the imperial knight with troubled eyes and quietly touched my forehead. My head hurts and I feel my stress level skyrocketing.

"Cough."

Oh nice timing. It's a bit absurd that my head hurts and blood comes out of my mouth, but now is not the time.

"place...!"

"go."

First, he threw the dagger next to Ben's face as he tried to call out 'Demon' and blocked his mouth.

It was a small voice, almost like talking to oneself, but since he was a demon, he must have understood it well. Even if you didn't hear it, he's not a completely clueless person, so he would have roughly figured out what he meant by his actions just now.

Sure enough, Ben, who slowly got up, quickly turned his back and left. The driver who saw it tried to chase after it, but...

"Cluck, cluck, cluck!" Cooler gasp! Keheek kek!!"

“Marquis Hu!”

I guess I got caught once or twice.

He broke the blood in his mouth into his trachea and coughed out a very bloody bloody cough. Then he gave up on Ben and quickly came to me.

Okay... I’m sick, so let’s leave that guy behind and go back quickly. Ben, don’t come back again.

***

‘The demons... ‘Marquis Hart...’

The knight who was restlessly examining Deon Hart, who was coughing up blood and almost as if he was dying, gritted his teeth and recalled the situation from a moment ago.

The Marquis stands proudly holding a dagger in front of a demon who barely raises his upper body from a lying position.

It wasn’t difficult to understand the situation. The Marquis, who was alone, was busy hunting monsters when the demons attacked him.

‘Still, the Marquis would have won.’

The result would have been the scene I saw.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 137

137. Cracked Dam (2)

The problem is that due to the circumstances, the Marquis was not able to subdue his opponent completely without damage.

“Cough.”

Blood came out.

Without missing the opportunity, the demon rises up. The Empire's third hero caught sight of this and threw the dagger even as blood was spitting out of his mouth.

The dagger barely passed by the guy's face, as if his fingertips were shaking due to hemoptysis.

‘If you were in good shape, you would definitely have been hit.’

As if the demon had sensed that fact, he retreated with a white face and quickly ran away.

The Marquis is the one who tried to catch him by going like that. You must never miss it.

With firm determination, I pulled out my sword and tried to chase after the demon...

“Cluck, cluck!” Cooler gasp! Keheek kek!!”

“Marquis Hu!”

Maybe you will be angry. From the Marquis’ point of view, he would have wanted to chase the demons rather than take care of his own body.

But still, the Marquis’ body comes first.

Preparing to be severely scolded later, the knight put back the sword he had drawn and quickly approached Deonhardt.

***

Demon sacrificed himself. The sight of him spitting out blood and telling me to go away...

I can’t be stubborn even though he did that. Ben did as he was told and walked away, biting his lip.

‘I need treatment...’ Instead of providing treatment, it became just a burden.

It was the first time the signal was so strong. A sign of massive bleeding due to trauma, not simple hemoptysis.

I think that’s why I fell into a panic. When I came to my senses, I succeeded in escaping, which had always failed.

When I met Demon, I felt joyful at finally being able to examine the wound in person...

“Cluck, cluck!” Cooler gasp! Keheek kek!!”

“Marquis Hu!”

With a violent coughing sound, I feel the imperial knight who was trying to chase me return to Demon.

My running speed slowed down due to my miserable feelings. No one is chasing me. Ben stopped on the spot and muttered lowly.

“Daemon... you were a nobleman, after all.”

I expected that he would never be of insignificant status.

“My status on the human world is still alive.”

Was it to act as a spy? Since you went out in the name of carrying out the Demon King’s mission, the Demon King must have known.

It is an important issue to understand and is confidential. Even if I were to die after finding out about this, I would have nothing to say.

So let’s just think about it to this point. Ben consciously stopped his brain from calculating and understanding further.

‘In the end, I found out it was my fault.’

I had no desire to dig up his information, and even now that I know some of it, I still don’t.

So....

‘I don’t know anything.’

Ben chose to just forget.

***

The rumor spread.

“Honorary Marquis Deonhart was ambushed by demons while subjugating demons.

Because of that, he suffered internal injuries and lost most of what he had caught.”

This changed after Deonhart received a medical examination from the palace doctor personally sent by the emperor.

“Honorary Marquis Deonhart was ambushed by demons while subjugating demons.

Nevertheless, I caught almost all of them without any damage, but I lost them due to the devil’s curse.”

The reactions of those who heard the rumor were varied.

Some argued that the title of ‘Hero’ should be taken away, asking if the title of ‘Hero’ is worthy of a person who is so stubborn that he misses every demon he caught due to a curse, while others argued that it is not right to take away the title since it was a curse obtained while recovering the body of a warrior, and it was not something else. He argued that it would be better to just step away from the front line and let him recuperate.

Some people said that since at least one more person is needed to deal with the demon world, they should choose tasks that are not immediately important, such as subjugating monsters, while others said that it would be a waste to hire someone skilled enough to take the demon’s surprise attack without damage and subdue them in reverse. He even said that he couldn’t leave them out there and that they should just do what they were doing.

Regardless of these claims, there were also people who sighed in relief and sighed.

“It looks like he’s not a vampire.”

“At least it doesn’t seem like they are on the side of the demon world.”

“That’s right. “If we were on the side of the demon world, rather than taking the damage and trying to subdue the demons, we would have tried to kill the knight who was a witness and steal the demons away.”

“I’m so glad.”

You don’t have to worry any more about the Honorable Marquess of Deonhardt.

In this way, the Deonhart vampire theory, which had been a hot topic among some nobles, was resolved to some extent and slowly died down.

And the emperor, who heard this news along with the rumors, sat back loosely in his chair and let out a light laugh.

“Vampires... It’s absurd that the idiots who believe such rumors are the nobles of this empire.”

“ .... ”

“Rather than that, they are demons.”

I guess I’ll have to call up Deon Hardt sometime soon.

***

At some point, the emperor’s hallucinations became worse.

The emperor, who had called for Deonhardt and processed the documents until he arrived, quietly frowned as his hallucinations became more severe than before. He also took out his dagger for a moment...

"Your Majesty."

"...Why do you do that, general?"

"You were aiming at the wrist, not the back of the hand."

"...."

A giggling voice rings in my ears.

My vision, which had been obscured by hallucinations, cleared and I belatedly saw the position in which my wrist was being aimed. To prevent this, Nemeseus took the risk of being rude and grabbed the wrist holding the dagger.

"...It would be difficult to remain sane in this state."

"The wound on your hand is big enough."

"I know Jim."

Cheer up.

The emperor obediently laid down the dagger. He watched Nemeseus pick it up and take care of it in preparation for an unexpected situation, and then leaned against the backrest as if to relax his body.

The Emperor lowered his head and covered his eyes with the back of his hand for a long time before opening his mouth as if muttering.

"Something is strange..."

“What do you mean?”

“hallucination. Rather than the familiar malice that comes from Jim’s imagination, there is a feeling of blatant and unfamiliar malice. Every time that happens, the surroundings become cold....”

It lifts up reason that has lost its function due to fatigue from war and hallucinations. I reorganized my messed up brain and forcibly squeezed it out and rolled my head.

The emperor is a man who has clearly trained his mental powers. He skillfully found the decision I needed to make despite all the distractions.

“...Quietly call the shaman.”

A shaman, not Taei.

Nemeseus paused for a moment and then lowered his head as if he had never done that before.

“All right.”

It wasn’t long before the shaman arrived.

She followed Nemeseus steadfastly, trembling as if she had heard the explanation, and turned pale when she saw the emperor. It got worse as he got closer to the emperor, until he stopped and started to gag.

“Ugh...!”

“dare.”

“done.”

The emperor, who stopped Nemeseus from drawing his sword, slowly turned his eyes to the sorcerer.

“It looks like Jim was cursed as expected, right?”

“Yes, yes... you were cursed... but...”

“It seems like it was a curse so strong it made you feel nauseous.”

“Ah...no...! “I can handle the curse itself!”

“if?”

The curse was not caused by poisoning and nausea.

If so, what is the cause?

The shaman, who made eye contact with golden eyes full of questions, hurriedly lowered his head, avoided eye contact, and stuttered as he opened his mouth.

“That is... the karma and resentment that His Majesty has carried is so great...”

“Ah, it seems you can see what he has done. “Is that really that harsh?”

“How do you maintain your sanity? I dare to ask.”

“impolite.”

Now Nemeseus drew his sword.

“It’s okay, General. “Isn’t that wrong?”

The emperor smiled and waved his hand, uncrossed his legs and leaned his upper body crookedly on the armrest.

A relaxed posture to relieve the other person's tension.

Nemeseus, who read the emperor's will, also sheathed his sword and took a step back. The emperor slowly spoke while the air was much more relaxed than before.

"Anyway, it's true that Jim was cursed... Is it possible to trace it back?"

"Backtracking is inherently difficult. "How can we trace something that leaves no trace and can only be seen by the person who suffered it and those with special eyes?"

"is it. "I was wondering who it was, but it's a shame."

It was a simple voice without any regrets.

The shaman who was watching carefully asked.

"Are you... not angry...?"

"Well... I'm sure more than half of the world hates and hates me, but isn't it funny that no one among them uses witchcraft, and it's even more funny to find them and take revenge on them? "Jim was just curious about who would be so foolish as to curse the monarch of a country that is on the front line fighting the demon world in these times."

"Ah, it's been quite a while since the curse took effect... but it seems you didn't know about it."

"hmm?"

This is also unexpected.

"How long has it been?"

“It seems like it’s been more than a year...but it’s only recently that it started to take effect. “It seems like you’ve been suppressing it with your mental strength.”

“As for mental strength... I’ve certainly become quite tired recently, and perhaps because of that, my hallucinations have gotten worse.”

“Even hallucinations... When you look at that karma and resentment, it’s even weirder not to see it... but how on earth have you held on until now?”

The emperor just smiled cheerfully.

In any case, your mental strength has been recognized.

‘This fulfills one of the qualities of a monarch.’

Meanwhile, the shaman took out a piece of yellow paper from the luggage he was carrying and began to write something down with blood on his finger.

“I can’t do anything about the karma and resentment caused by what Your Majesty did, but...”

“That’s something I don’t want.”

“As expected, you say that. In any case, the curse on Your Majesty can be removed. “Right now, we are not ready, so it is best to temporarily suppress that power. Please call us again in three days and we will make sure to prepare and remove the evil spirit.”

Evil spirit?

The emperor’s eyes twitched at the first words that appeared after meeting the shaman.

Was the curse the type that attached evil spirits?

“I thought it was a curse that took my life away... but it was just an evil spirit attached to it.”

“When you kill, you receive in return the most precious thing of the caster himself and the most precious thing of the person who asked the caster. In most cases, it is your own life or the life of a precious person, such as a family member or lover. Since you are directly taking the other person’s life, shouldn’t that be the right amount to balance the scales? Therefore, the type of curse you mentioned...”

“I don’t think it will ever be used. However, if the ‘direct’ method is the problem, then there must also be an indirect method, right?”

“The evil spirit that possessed your Majesty is an example of that indirect method.”

Yellow paper with red letters stretches out.

As if it wasn’t painful enough, the shaman bit his fingertips again every time the bleeding stopped, causing the blood to bleed and create an amulet.

Unauthorized people cannot wear weapons in front of the emperor, so that is the only way to shed blood...

“Give me at least the Nemeseus dagger.”

“...Yes, Your Majesty.”

“Oh, it’s almost done, so you don’t have to.”

“I dare you to ask for His Majesty’s favor....”

“That’s it, General. Let’s continue what we were talking about earlier. “I don’t think that was the end of the explanation.”

The Emperor, who calmed Nemeseus down by tapping his fingers on the armrests of the chair, chuckled.

Nemeseus is also fun to look at. I told him to practice hiding his facial expressions, but when I ordered him to hand over the dagger, what would I do if he blatantly showed signs of dislike? He actually felt bad when the shaman refused...

I glanced at the shaman. As if she had finished making an amulet, she gathered up the scattered papers around her and continued her interrupted explanation.

“The evil spirit that has attached to your Majesty is the kind that shakes your mind and slowly sucks your vitality. “It’s one of the methods commonly used against someone who really wants to die.”

“Interesting.”

“It’s a sad and vicious way to use a dead person to harm someone. First, I will temporarily burn this talisman to suppress the evil spirit.”

Using the dead to harm someone... You might think so.

The emperor waved his hand, signaling them to take care of it, and rested his chin.

After listening to that explanation, I think I understand how I have endured for such a long time.

I can’t believe how crazy it would be if the malice of a weak guy who used the dead without even having the courage to harm him directly affected me. It's just laughable.

As I was quietly watching the shaman do the work, I heard a voice outside.

"His Majesty the Honorable Marquis Deonhardt has arrived."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 138

138. Cracked Dam (3)

“...How much is left?”

“You just have to burn this.”

“Then come by.”

Permission was given and the entrance was opened to let in, but the person involved did not come in.

Is there some problem? The emperor looked at the entrance with doubt. As the weather got closer, my sensitive ears heard Deon Hardt muttering, ‘What kind of smell is this...’

After some time delay, Deon Hardt finally enters. As soon as I entered, I thought it was unusual to see him coughing while covering his mouth and nose...

“Cough, cough, glory to the empire... Cough!”

“...blood?”

At this moment, everyone except Deonhardt was of one mind.

Nemeseus and the emperor reflexively looked back at the sorcerer. After understanding the meaning of his gaze, she couldn't help but shake her head in embarrassment.

'no.'

'Isn't it really true?'

'Not really. That person is definitely a living child... wow.'

A talisman that suppresses the energy of evil spirits. Deon Hardt hesitated, mentioning the 'smell' before coming in. And as soon as I entered, I started coughing and bleeding. Moreover, when the shaman approached to check, he even started to gag.

Can a coincidence like this even happen? Naturally, I was suspicious, but the shaman who covered his mouth resolutely shook his head.

'That person also committed a lot of sins. 'I'm carrying a grudge on my back.'

'Then Deonhardt...'

'Certainly my talisman does not affect the living, but that does not mean he is an evil spirit. It's just pure coincidence.'

"...Then is it because of the Demon King's curse? "How can this not be solved?"

The day Deon Hart retrieved the warrior's body with an unprecedented brand on it, of course he first went to a shaman to remove it.

The shamans who saw his brand said that it was magic that the devil had planned and used, and that no shaman could interfere here.

"...I guess I should call the council member first."

They say there is no treatment, but we can't just leave him spitting out blood like that.

The Emperor snapped his fingers.

***

What on earth are you burning in the space where the emperor is? It's full of an acrid smell.

My throat curled and I coughed. Because of that, I put too much force on my stomach and the blood ended up flowing backwards. It probably hurt my delicate neck too.

In the meantime, General Nemeseus was watching me with his hand on his sword, and a woman I had never seen before slowly approached me and made me nauseous... "...Then is it because of the devil's curse? "How can this not be solved?"

The presence of the two was immediately erased by the emperor's voice.

"...I guess I should call the council member first."

You don't have to call me.

This is very ordinary hemoptysis, no different from usual. At this point, you'll probably get used to it.

Of course, the thoughts I muttered to myself never reached the emperor. The strange woman disappears and Tae-ui comes in... Tae-ui?!

"your majesty?"

“The only member who came the fastest was Taeui. “You don’t have to worry because he is more capable than other lawmakers.”

That’s because it’s exclusively for the emperor!

If you call, of course they will think something is wrong with His Majesty’s precious jade body and will come running!

burden. I wondered if I would dare to receive a medical examination from Tae-ui.... After looking at him, I quietly took a step back.

“Honorary Marquess Deonhardt. Are you ignoring the emperor’s words now?”

I had to stop at that one word.

In the end, it was only after the diagnosis was made that no action could be taken that I was finally able to escape from Tae-ui.

Even though I endured the pressure and even received a medical examination, the mood was not very good.

When they were told that no action could be taken, they would have been told that the devil’s curse was the cause.

“...Everyone, leave except the Marquis Hart.”

The emperor presses his eyes and holds out his hands as if he is tired.

I’m left alone with the emperor, who seems uncomfortable! I feel like I’m left alone in a beast’s den. I lowered my gaze slightly, fearing that I might offend him in this breathtakingly quiet space.

I was so preoccupied that I forgot, but I was summoned by the emperor. It's probably not a good thing, and it's probably related to the contact with Ben, the demon.

'It really wasn't intentional...' It's unfair.

Ben, what a bastard.... While I was chewing on Ben in my mind and thinking about how to prove my innocence, the Emperor's voice fell.

"Raise your head."

"...?"

Following his words was a reflex action.

The emperor made eye contact as if he had been waiting for me to raise my head. Fierce golden eyes capture my gaze.

"...."

"...."

There was no way he didn't know about the demon incident that was widely known in the world, but he didn't mention it at all. He simply looks into the eyes, softens the corners of his mouth as if reading something, and speaks.

Unlike his soft mouth, the words that followed were quite... sharp.

"You will be going to war soon, so prepare in advance."

It was fortunate that there were no persistent interrogations and reprimands, but I could not bear to be happy.

***

After being called to do odd jobs for a while, I ended up on the battlefield again.

‘It would be nice if I could just leave it to you to deal with trivial monsters.’

After inspecting the white uniform that seemed like it had been a long time since I wore it and fiddling with the white mask and cloak hood that covered my face, I looked up. A clear, high sky filled my field of vision, just like it did one day.

I can’t be sure because of the mask, but the air will be clear and clean. Well, it’s going to be full of bloody smell soon, so I don’t really want to take down my mask to check. If you feel that sense of disconnect, you will feel really strange.

While I was just staring at the sky, I felt someone’s presence behind me.

“Junior.”

An unfamiliar yet familiar title and a neat voice.

I turned my head reflexively. A man with a straight and upright posture was smiling elegantly in this direction.

“...Stigma senior?”

“Yeah, it’s been a while. “I was looking forward to meeting you again, but I never thought we would meet in a place like this.”

“Yes, yes....”

“You seem very embarrassed by the way you keep talking.
“If anyone sees me, they’ll think I’m scary.”

Honestly, it’s a bit scary... no.

“Hmm, I see that you put two heroes in one place in a situation where power is important...”

This place seems to be very important. Well, I heard it was a bit dangerous situation.

I watched him muttering like that, dumbfounded. I gave up thinking about this a long time ago. Why should I get stressed out by thinking about something when all I have to do is do as I’m told.

These thoughts seem to have surfaced. Stigma slightly narrowed his eyes and called out to me.

“Junior.”

“yes.”

“Junior, don’t you also have troops under your command that you have to take responsibility for?”

“That’s right.”

“So that means your junior is also a commander. I’m sure you don’t know the dangers of a commander who doesn’t think...”

Scary... Scary!

Is it because the place is a war zone? Why is it so scary? I’m sure it wasn’t like this when we first met...

...wasn’t it? Was it like this when you first met?

As I was shaking and unable to answer, someone who seemed to be a Stigma knight approached me.

“My lord. “The war of nerves between the Knights of Lofty and the Nameless Knights directly under the Imperial Family is overheating and is affecting our children. What should we do?”

“I’m sure none of the guys under me will act rashly. If so, take responsibility and make sure they are educated.”

“Yes, I understand....”

“And.”

Sigh.

Stigma grabbed the knight by the collar and pulled him.

“I’m talking to my junior. “I guess I’ll only use it if I get involved with something like that.”

“...sorry.”

...Okay, now the stigma from a little while ago is no longer scary. Instead, I am very scared of the current stigma.

He was being very kind to me...

I shrunk even further and started shivering, then suddenly raised my head as a thought crossed my mind. No, wait a minute. Didn’t you hear something very familiar in the conversation a little while ago? The Lofty Knights...

‘They’re our kids!’

The official name of the Murderous Knights!

I was startled and looked around for the kids. Finding the crazy dogs wasn't difficult.

"In a place where there is no fragment of a hero!"

"On the topic of the nameless knights!"

"The name of the knights has nothing to do with combat power?!"

"We fight well even without the hero's fragments!"

"...If you fight properly, you will lose!"

"Jujureutmun rat-eye jujuwe-."

"you!"

As expected, there is a constant commotion where they are. Where has Lord Lien gone?

As I quickly looked around, thinking that a fight was going to break out, I heard a voice.

"If you are looking for the knight commander under your command, I am away to talk to our knight commander."

"ah."

That's right, I said I'd be away for a little while to do the bare minimum.

The only person who can control the crazy dogs...! As I silently despaired, Stigma, who was looking at me blankly, suddenly asked.

"Isn't there a vice-captain?"

“It’s Milan... The guy in front with his sleeves rolled up is the vice-captain. “Yes, the one who just drew his sword.”

“...Your knighthood as a whole will need training.”

The tone is extremely light and elegant, but for some reason it is scary.

I suddenly wondered how well Stigma had been trained, so I turned my head and saw knights waiting in an angled posture as if they were in a completely different world.

The gaze is straight ahead and the facial expression is expressionless.

‘Wow... I wonder if this is what elites are like.’

“It is said that the attitude of subordinates sometimes replaces the dignity of their master. Junior, you need to learn more about the posture of nobles. “If a noble is noble, shouldn’t he be treated as a noble?”

“Uh...”

That... doesn’t have a good feel to it.

Since it seems unlikely, is the stigma also that way?
Aristocratic supremacy?

This time, Stigma added, as if his thoughts were being revealed.

“It seems you misunderstood what I meant. This doesn’t mean you should be arrogant. I don’t mean to catch your subordinates like you would catch rats. “When people judge others, they usually judge them based on their facial expressions, posture, tone of voice, and the way other people treat them, right?”

Ah, I understand.

But was my expression this easy to read? Probably not.

In that case, the only assumption that remains is that Stigma has a good sense of vision and that he is focused on me enough to notice even the slightest change in facial expression.

...The latter is scary, so let's think of it as the former.

“I'm just saying this because I don't want my junior to go somewhere and be ignored, so I hope you'll listen carefully. “Especially, if you are ignored not because of your mistake but because of the attitude of your subordinates... I think you will feel quite bad.”

I can feel the murder in his words....

I couldn't answer and was staring at him fiercely, and when he met my gaze, he gently raised the corner of his mouth.

“More than that, if I do that, someone is really going to die. Do you mind if I don't stop you?”

Oh right!

“I'll be back for a bit!”

“Please come back.”

***

‘Hero candidates’ do not recognize Deonhardt as a hero.

How can a human being without a fragment of a hero be a 'hero'? The place should have been theirs.

No matter how outstanding his achievements are and how good he is in battle, he is ultimately only an average human being and is confident that he will win if he fights properly, so the eyes of those who see Deonhardt are naturally based on a mentality of looking down on his opponents.

What was the reaction of the Murderous Knights who saw this?

'How dare you, my child... no, the captain... Are you looking down on the Marquis?'

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 139

139. Cracked Dam (4)

How dare these kids who have never experienced a war dare to discuss who deserves to be a hero?

In the first place, a 'hero' is not determined by the presence or absence of a warrior's fragments. A hero may not seem like much, but it is a truly special title.

A person who runs into a burning house and saves people is a hero, and a person who shouts to evacuate because there is a fire is also a hero. A person who shows kindness to a child on the side of the road becomes that child's hero, and upright parents also become heroes to their children.

Something that is both easy and difficult to obtain is the title of 'hero', but isn't it natural that someone who covets it without even knowing it doesn't have the qualifications to be a hero?

Moreover, the Murderous Knights were saved by Deon Hart during the Eight Years' War.

There are many people who are guided by that small hand at the crossroads of life and death. Even if the Empire does not recognize him, they recognize him as a hero, but when they show Deonhardt in front of their eyes by not recognizing him as a hero... isn't the reaction of crazy dogs obvious?

"Are you jealous?"

"...what?"

"Hey guys. "These bastards are jealous of our Marquis!"

"These guys? Our Marquis? You don't even know the topic? dare?"

I will secretly stab you during the war.

In the chaos, at least one person might be killed by our allies.

Above all, Deon Hardt, whom I first met during the Eight Years' War, was too young.

No matter how small the age difference between him and the Knights Templar is, they go from being an older brother and a younger brother to being like an average uncle and nephew, so how could there not be affection for the other?

Some of them have a really large age gap, and the difference is on the level of father and son, and their leader is a monster when it comes to combat and psychological warfare, but in the end, he is a child who is not good at everything else, so in the process of taking care of him secretly, knowingly or unknowingly, he naturally comes to think that he is 'my baby'. I had no choice but to get stuck.

'In the end, I failed to put underwear on...'

Did you say that if underwear gets wet with blood and sticks to it, it will interfere with movement?

It became such a habit that I ended up not wearing underwear even after the war was over.

‘The war ruined everything.’

Tsk. After regaining his appetite, Milan grinned as he walked towards the ‘hero candidates’.

“Marquis Arthur is not of such a low standard that you guys would dare to be jealous. You should look at stairs you can climb, but what if you’re looking at the sky? “Why don’t you just give up cleanly?”

“...under!”

Of course, I know that the hero’s fragments are not something to be trifled with. If you fight them head on, you will lose out of a hundred.

Still, I can’t just sit there and watch my baby being ignored, right? In particular, our captain hates being ignored more than anything due to his fighting style.

“In a place where there is no fragment of a hero!”

“On the topic of the nameless knights!”

“The name of the knights has nothing to do with combat power?!”

“We fight well even without the hero’s fragments!”

“...If you fight properly, you will lose!”

“Jujureutmun rat-eye jujuwe-.”

“you!”

I giggled as I saw the guy grabbing me by the collar, then looked at me with a straight face and pulled out my sword. As they have been working together for a long time, the other guys also take their own positions and raise the tension.

While the hero candidates were shocked, Milan twirled the wrist holding the sword a few times, then put his chin on his shoulder and smiled crookedly.

“Let’s fight? “We can’t see anything, but you can’t, right?”

“ ....”

They are not murderers... but the Lofty Knights are directly under Deon Hardt.

They went through hardships and hardships on the battlefield for 8 years, and the bond they shared even afterward is not going anywhere, so even if they curse, they will overlook most accidents, but the ‘nameless knights’ in front of them are under the direct control of the emperor.

There was no need to go through hardships and hardships with the emperor, and the emperor would not be swayed by his affections, so if an accident occurred, it would have been the same.

“Ah, since you are a hero candidate, you don’t want to die.”

Because the emperor cherishes talented people.

“In return, there will be some disadvantages.”

“All we have to do is get criticized.”

“The captain will probably hit you a bit.”

“Oh right. “That was it.”

As we stood there making useless small talk like that, for a moment I asked,

“What are you guys doing?”

“Ah, Marquis!”

Deon Hart has arrived.

Milan immediately smiled, put away his sword, and turned around. A white hood can be seen with the top slightly folded, as if the hood had been lifted for a moment.

What should we do if our captain still can't organize his outerwear like this?

“It's no big deal!”

I slowly reached out my hand to clean up that part and smiled as if nothing had happened.

***

And there was a battle. A battle to stop the Demon King's army advancing toward the empire.

—No, it wasn't blocking, it was 'annihilation'.

It is said that the devil used his brain a little. They pretended to push through the shortest border and then entered the human world through another border.

The 'border line' is a passage connecting the demon world and the human world. Just as it is not possible to see every corner of a house from the outside just because the door is open, it is impossible to infer movements with the naked eye from a distance, so it is difficult to notice what is happening in the human world in the demon world and the movements of the demon world in the human world without going through a spy.

Still, the emperor, who had a rough idea of the devil's thoughts by combining various circumstances, sent troops fairly quickly, but it was not enough to drive out those who had already arrived. On the contrary, they were pushed to a very dangerous position and all the major troops were almost gathered together.

The second hero, Stigma Primiro, and the third hero, Deon Hart.

In addition, there are hero candidates who can provide great power against demons.

'It's very luxurious.'

I understand the 'annihilation' order not to send even a single person alive.

This combination would be quite possible.

'The compatibility wasn't good, though.'

Cletor, a member of the Murderous Demon Knights, recalled the clash with the hero candidates that had occurred in the morning, sighed and retrieved the weapon that cut into the demon's stomach.

Since the Marquis Primiro and his knights were responsible for blocking the retreat route and killing those who were running away, the murderous knights inevitably had to kill the enemies along with the hero candidates.

He growled right before the battle started, but will he become calm after the battle begins?

“you! “You almost died!”

“Oh my gosh, why is it going that way? sorry-.”

“This crazy bastard...!”

The blind weapon strangely aims only at the back of the hero candidates' heads. Perhaps out of pride in being on the same side, those who failed to defend themselves only received minor injuries to their arms and legs and did not injure any vital parts...

“Do it in moderation!”

There is nothing good about fighting between allies with the enemy right in front of you. As expected, I could hear the angry shouts of leader Lien Reiner.

Normally, I would have tried to stop him before the leader stepped forward, but this time, Cleter pretended not to notice and just ignored me. I looked down on the Marquis, but I have to do this.

‘Well... I can’t even think of looking at you funny anymore.’

I rolled my eyes and looked at a corner of the battlefield.

A place where the smell of blood is stronger than anywhere else. A lump of red meat, presumed to be a demon, was rolling on the floor, and in a place filled with fear, there was their leader, smiling broadly.

‘You’re tough, our Marquis.’

The conscious mind thought so, but the unconscious expressed rejection.

Even though I know that relying on drugs is not a good thing, I keep wondering if I should have taken drugs like other people.

It was difficult to see the devastation committed by Deon Hardt with a clear mind.

‘I didn’t use medicine because I was dealing with a demon...’

Wouldn’t it be better to do it now?

Since this war was not against humans but against demons, there was a divide within the knights between those who practiced medicine and those who did not.

Those who decided to turn to medicine because they could not deal with human-like demons with their sanity, and those who decided to treat them on the same level as monsters since they are demons that are different from humans in at least one part.

Cleter chose the latter because he did not want to abandon ‘reason’.

‘I failed to consider the Marquis’ actions...!’

Regardless of feeling rejected, my eyes keep going in that direction.

This feels similar to not being able to take your eyes off a wild animal you accidentally encounter.

The unrealistic and unreasonable feeling that if I looked away even for a moment, that beast would bite the back of my neck, caught my attention.

Even I, who have watched him closely for a long time, feel this way, but what about the hero candidates I met for the first time today?

‘I was scared.’

Their frightened gaze is fixed on Deon Hart. Her eyes were confused and were trembling.

Even the guys who were good at fighting suddenly found Deon Hart in their sights and couldn't easily take their eyes off him, as if their gazes were tied together. It was a dangerous act to look away during battle, but since this applied equally to demons, the damage was less than expected.

Cleter indifferently looked away from the hero candidates and adjusted his grip on his weapon.

‘...Should I also take medicine next time?’

Annoying hero candidates are not even considered.

Although not as good as Deonhardt, he gained time and recovered his stamina by brutally killing demons in his own way, and took up his weapon again to end this damn battle quickly.

Even if you are someone who has not mastered even the most basic sword techniques, you will develop some knack after spending several years on the battlefield.

Cleter: The Murderous Knights no longer recklessly and cruelly kill their opponents.

Deonhart alone is enough to create an atmosphere, so at the start of the battle, he only acts cruelly to suppress the momentum, leaving that field to the captain and focusing on ending the battle quickly by killing as many enemies as possible. The cruel hand was a tactic used to buy time when stamina was low.

This is not a rational way of thinking and acting, but an instinctive behavior that occurs even while under the influence of drugs.

Should I be happy or bitter?

‘For now... let’s think positively.’

Cleter stopped thinking and moved.

***

Of course, the battle did not end with just one fight.

The Demon Lord sending support, the unchanging ‘annihilation’ order.

Is it fortunate that they did not send a corps commander? Stigma Primiro was able to observe Deon Hart in his own way through these several battles.

Deon Hardt, he observed, was quite anxious.

‘Maybe it’s because it’s a war zone.’

I can’t explain it exactly, but it feels like water is slowly overflowing from a cracked dam. Even if a single small stone falls, a wave occurs and the water overflows, making it impossible to take your eyes off the water.

It looked dangerous just by looking at it, but it was an area that no one else could compensate for. Stigma wondered for a moment with a bit of regret whether other people had not noticed, but then turned his gaze elsewhere.

“Keep your back straight. Straighten your shoulders and lift your chin appropriately. Walk straight and without shaking. “When talking to someone, you must make eye contact and speak elegantly.”

Advice as a ‘senior’.

Although I didn’t realize it, he called me ‘senior’ and I also acknowledged him as ‘junior’, so as a senior, I guess I should give him some help.

Deonhardt’s fighting style is the complete opposite of Stigma. So, he can’t or shouldn’t touch this area, and the only advice he can give is ‘how to go somewhere and not be ignored’.

In noble language, wouldn’t it be ‘the attitude of an aristocrat’?

“If your subordinates ignore you, others will also ignore you. So, be a respected boss. It doesn’t matter which way. Whether it is respect due to fear or respect due to affection. “You just have to show others that you are respected.”

Among the information obtained while observing Deonhardt was about his immediate order, the Knights of Lofty.

At first I thought they were ignoring Deonhardt. But when I watched closely, I saw it.

“Youngjae, you are already loved so much, so all you have to do is train him into the knighthood. “How should I express ‘respect’ for the boss I love?”

Their blind love for Deonhardt.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 140

140. Cracked Dam (5)

How can I receive that much affection from my subordinates? This goes far beyond the walls of superiority. How can a junior with a cruel hand receive that much affection?...

Swallowing his doubts, Stigma continued.

"You often used profanity during the war. It may be strange to use kind words in a rough battlefield, but use vulgar words as they will lower your reputation, so try to refrain from using them. "Try to refrain from thinking in your head as much as possible."

"Just thinking in your mind...."

"Thoughts become words. Words you say often often become habits. Moreover, swearing is a type of habit that can easily become a habit. What kind of habit is easy to change? "It would be better to catch it in advance."

"...."

He said, flicking his index and middle fingers and tapping the lips of the guy who muttered that it had already become a habit.

“I’m saying this for my junior.”

***

It was from then on. Stigma started to hit me.

Whenever someone swears, he says ‘I have a bad habit of talking’ and snaps his finger to hit his lip, so I have no choice but to keep my mouth shut even though it hurts.

What should I do if it has already become a habit? Si...
burre.

“Didn’t you think of a swear word just now?”

“no.”

“It seemed like his eyes were swearing.”

It’s a ghost!

As he was checking the weapon, he looked at me as if checking for authenticity. Because he was about to go into battle, his keen senses caught every single place his gaze landed.

The gaze scanned the entire face, starting from the eyes to the mouth, and then focused on the eyes again.

“Hmm... I’d like to give you one more piece of advice before the battle begins.”

“yes...?”

What else are you trying to say?

“It seems that hand signals are a habit, but for clearer communication, it would be better to give signals along with words. Who would be watching the junior's hand signals in all that chaos? "At least you have to raise your voice to get attention from your junior."

Oh, that's... I guess it'll be okay because there's a kid who's paying close attention to my hand signals.

Actually, it would be better to speak out now that I don't have to hide the blood, but... habits are really scary. I was making hand gestures without even realizing it.

Anyway, at some point, Stigma started giving advice like this whenever he got the chance. Duties as a senior? It seems like it, but it's pretty useful advice, so I'm listening to it... but the conclusion is always strange.

[All of this is irrelevant as long as you are overwhelmingly strong.] They say that your strength before the start is the best.

Elegance? atmosphere? Culture? etiquette? If the power you have is overwhelming, you don't need it all....

[But since there is someone else in power above you, and you yourself don't have the warrior's fragment, your power cannot be considered 'overwhelming.' And above all, wouldn't it be much easier if the other person reads the mood and responds before you even show your strength?]

...Well, I'm worried about Stigma's personality.

But since you are nice to me, it doesn't matter, right? I looked at the sheath of the dagger Dan had strapped to his body, thinking that if someone had heard, they would have been worried about my personality as well.

A total of 6, crossing both thighs, waist and back! ...but they added one more to each ankle, bringing the total to 8.

‘Six wouldn’t have been enough...’

I can’t remember because I was distracted during the war, but I can’t be unaware of the aftermath.

Every time I came to my senses, my hands were empty. Or maybe he only holds one dagger.

‘...and then Stigma laughed.’

How many battles was it? When I came to my senses covered in blood after the battle, the hero candidates who looked at me with strangely negative eyes were startled and averted their gaze every time we made eye contact, and on one side, they were laughing and saying that Stigma was also my junior. At first I thought it wasn’t him because he burst out laughing.

What on earth happened?...

“If you do well, junior, this could be the last battle here.”

“...?”

“It seems like the Demon King realized that sending clumsy troops here would be useless. “There was news that they had diverted their troops to the other side.”

“ah...!”

“I wonder why they don’t send the corps commander.”

It seems he has finally noticed it. The news is so slow. Well, since there was no news for a while, there was no way to know the situation here.

The battle here consisted entirely of surprise attacks.

At first, we were wiped out in a surprise attack. They went up to the metallurgical border and hid there, and when the Demon King felt strange about the lack of news, he sent his troops again, and they were ambushed and annihilated at the corner of the road. In other words, the demons had no time to report to the demon king.

But at this point, even the Demon King couldn't have known. After this battle, there may not be any battles for a while.

'Freedom...!'

I was hesitant because I hated every battle where I had to overcome the risk of death, but this time I didn't hate the approaching time.

***

Correction. I hated it. It would be nice if the battle time didn't come forever.

I looked down at my blood-soaked hands in a daze in a space filled with the smell of blood and screams.

'Why... have you come to your senses now?'

The war isn't over yet? It's in full swing. Isn't it normal to be more alert?

I looked up. In the distance, you can see the stigma of a graceful person disappearing and turning into a beast, cutting down enemies.

‘Before, that person was a beast disguised as elegance... I thought he was like a black leopard...’ But now I see the true value like this.

In the meantime, it was so amazing to see that he looked clean in contrast to me covered in blood.

I belatedly came to my senses and lowered my gaze. A lump of meat whose shape cannot be identified is in sight... Ah?

‘What is this...’

Looking at the size... human? No, the opponent in this war is the demon race, so it must be the demon race.

Why is this lying at my feet?

why?

“—Wook.”

Horrible. When I came to my senses, my body was often covered in blood and I was fine, but I had never seen a corpse like this before.

...Not even once?

The vomiting spewed out and blood flowed out. My vision became blurry and I raised my hand to rub my eyes, but when I saw that they were soaked in blood, I lowered them again.

A blood-soaked hand, a dagger in that hand, a horrible corpse lying in front of me.

‘Ahhh.’

—My hair turned gray.

‘I...’

I blinked. My vision clears again and I feel liquid running down my cheek.

‘I didn’t do it.’

No alcohol, no drugs. I need to take medicine...

Even though I knew I wouldn’t be taking any more medicine, I searched through my pockets, which were obviously empty.

My current state would be strange to anyone. There is no way an enemy would miss this opportunity.

Sure enough, the enemy moved.

“Die, you monster!”

It’s like a demon calling a human a monster.

Thanks to you, I came to my senses. I looked blankly at the spear aimed at the heart and smiled slightly.

It’s a close call, but it can be avoided. But I stopped reflexively trying to avoid it.

‘If I avoid it, what happens next?’

It is not unusual for the attack path to be clean. Since I couldn’t see it when I just came to my senses, it must be a general-level demon that came to me. I don’t have the confidence to kill this demon that has reorganized its stance.

‘You want me to fight like this?’

If there are a hundred, a hundred will die.

Do you dodge it first and dodge the demon’s attack again, consuming all your stamina and looking for an opening that might come out at any time, or do you just close your eyes and lose a lot of stamina and take the guy’s life?

‘...If you have a general, you can show off.’

During the war, he vomited blood and panicked. After it’s over, interrogation will be inevitable. You have to catch at least one general to make a profit.

More than anything, I want to rest right away.

I turned around. Instead of avoiding critical points, attack other areas. The blade of the spear dug into my shoulder, causing a burning pain.

‘It hurts more than I thought... Oh, I really want medicine...’

The demon clucks his tongue at having missed the mark and gives strength to retrieve the spear. But I was faster.

simplicity and honesty.

The blade of the spear, which had been digging deeper and deeper as I moved, pierced my back and completely popped out. Despite the terrible pain, I continued to stride forward without stopping.

Because I know that if I stop here, I will die.

“what...!”

“Die, you bastard.”

I'm getting paid for my shoulders!

He suddenly stabbed the dagger in his hand into a vital spot.

....

And I got scolded.

One general died, and perhaps he felt a sense of crisis, and another general gathered his troops and defeated them. The moment I sighed, feeling fortunate, I was attacked by crazy dogs.

"Captain, no Marquis! shoulder! window! Oh my, what should I do!"

"In the meantime, you also vomited blood!"

"From what I saw earlier, it was like stabbing yourself! Are you crazy! What are you going to do with this shoulder?"
"Take responsibility!"

If anyone hears it, they'll think you have a bad shoulder... I couldn't even put my hand on it, and while I was looking at the people in front of me who were frantically trying to fix it, not knowing what to do, I quietly opened my mouth.

"First of all... can't we call the military doctor first?"

I feel like I'm going to die like this...

Even if I don't, I've shed too much blood.

As if my face had turned unnervingly white, they started noisily looking for a military doctor.

“Old military doctor! “Military medicine department!”

“Cut off the spear stem first! “Don’t cut it so close that it doesn’t bother the Marquis when he carries it around!”

“Oh my, our captain is dying! “Look at how pale your complexion is!”

“I won’t die! Don’t be so lucky! But why is your face so white? “Uneasy!”

“Marquis, can you see us? Don’t lose your mind! “How many of us are there?”

How do I know when so many people are walking back and forth right in front of me? I’m going crazy so please get out of here....

With sloppy first aid measures, I was picked up by crazy dogs and taken to the barracks.

“oh my god! “Is this all your blood?!”

“No way! What do you think of this person? Of course it’s someone else’s blood!”

“ ....”

“Where are you going? “We have to treat the Marquis.”

That guy’s crazy snout...

Fortunately, the treatment proceeded properly, although the military doctor had to avoid the useless behavior of those damn people.

After removing the window and sitting down to receive treatment, I inadvertently raised my gaze and met someone. His eyes were extremely harsh, as if he had been looking in this direction the whole time.

“My lord. The damage to our knights in this battle was....”

“If there are those who died from those insignificant demons, they were probably just weak creatures, so I’m not interested. The same goes for injuries. “I don’t need weaklings in my knights.”

Stigma, who pushed away the approaching subordinate, approaches this way.

The elegant and dignified steps that I always talked about leave footprints with wide strides. It was clearly his usual gait, but for some reason I could feel the spirit of a rampaging beast I had seen on the battlefield a moment ago...

He came right in front of me in an instant, looked at the affected area being treated, and closed his eyes tightly, stroking his hair as if to drown out his emotions. It’s all gone.

“Junior...”

“ ....”

“You need to respect your own body.”

I already value my body enough.

Still, the battle ended quickly because the general died. Since the order is to kill, we’ll have to fight another battle...?!

Damn I didn’t think of this.

“When you talk to people, you have to look at their faces.”

He snapped his fingers and tapped my forehead, then crawled over and made eye contact with me.

“This decision was foolish. “You probably know this too, right?”

“Yes, what...”

I had forgotten the ‘annihilation’ command.

Although I killed the general, I was also injured, so I was unable to clearly break the enemy’s momentum. Because of my injury, even my allies had to watch them retreat.

‘Of course, they won’t return to the Demon World, so there’s still a chance.’

I will contact the Demon King at the military camp. There are the second and third heroes and hero candidates of the empire. The Demon King who heard this news will never order them to return, even though he knows there is no hope with them alone.

‘Once you’ve faced off against Deon Hardt, someone might realize that he and Commander 0 are the same person.’

In case of an unexpected situation, I will choose to throw them away cleanly, even if it is a waste.

The emperor must have taken that into account and issued the order to ‘annihilate’...

‘Huh?’

Why do I think like this...

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 141

141. Cracked Dam (6)

I was blinking blankly, but Stigma quietly called to me as if he had been observing me the whole time.

“Junior... do you know that your mood fluctuates between extremes?”

“yes?”

“It looks quite dangerous, but I’d like to ask if you can guarantee that there will be no problem.”

“yes?”

“...It’s not an area I can touch, so no matter what the answer is, the result will be the same.”

After saying that, he reached out his hand and lightly brushed the area around my eyes.

“But you’re not crying now. That’s a good thing. “It will be troublesome if something like this happens often, so I hope it can be resolved as soon as possible.”

“ .... ”

You saw it all.

There was a short silence.

With only the military doctor busy, the nagging that seemed to have ended, as if the previous conversation had been treated as if it had never happened, continued.

“I’m sure my junior could have avoided it at that time. Is not it?”

“...yes.”

“Of course, killing a general is important. However, if that method involves thrusting yourself into the enemy’s weapon and risking injury to kill him, then I would give him the worst possible score. “You should have avoided me at that time.”

Brown eyes look again at the healing wound.

I’m not sure because I’m under anesthesia, but how serious is it? Just as I was about to slowly turn my head to look at the wound, Stigma pressed down on my head.

“Don’t move as it may interfere with the treatment. “Do you know why the enemies retreated when you killed the demon general?”

Is that because the general died?

“It’s because I was nearby. If all you did was simply kill the general, there was no way you would just leave behind a good, injured prey. Even if I retreated, I would have killed my junior and retreated.”

“....”

“Do you understand? “The judgment my junior made today was the worst.”

It's really hitting my bones...

I know, but it still hurts.

"We killed the general, but our junior was also seriously injured, and we failed to boost the morale of our troops. However, it did not reduce the morale of the enemies. As a result, the allies had no choice but to let go of the retreating enemies. why? "Because my junior, one of the people with high status and status here, was seriously injured."

"...."

"We need to quickly stop the battle and look at my junior's wounds, because if we keep blocking the retreat, the battle will never end."

The battle continues whether a single soldier dies or not, but the higher the rank, the more sensitive he or she becomes to death and injury. Its influence is such that it can even influence whether to stop fighting and retreat.

"I'm not saying your junior's behavior itself is the worst. It was just bad judgment. "Such actions should only be used when there is really no other way, after carefully examining the situation."

"...."

"Your junior wouldn't have made a foolish decision without a reason..."

I wish I could just move on without mentioning anything.

It's just that I didn't have the confidence to fight in this mental and physical condition, so I just wanted to grab a general and show off.

“I think it was due to my junior’s unusual condition, but I guess that’s why I made the wrong decision, right? Rational thinking seemed impossible. “If you think about it, this shoulder is not a wound caused by being completely distracted during the war.”

When I came to my senses, I was embarrassed because the war was in full swing.

Ah, thinking about it again makes me crave medicine again.

“...You’re mesmerized again.”

“ah.”

“Okay, junior, you must be tired too, so it would be better to get some rest. It looks like the treatment is over, so go in.

“I’ll clean up after you.”

He left. Even the military doctor left, saying that the treatment was complete, and stood up while fiddling with the bandage on his shoulder.

Dan, who heard the news of my injury and ran out nearby during the treatment, quickly comes over and puts a coat on me. Even though it wasn’t, I felt cold as the cold air touched my bare skin, so I quickly took it and put on my coat.

“...I’ve felt this every time, but each knight has a strong personality.”

“hmm?”

I thought they were going to lead me right inside, but suddenly I heard something out of the blue.

I glanced at Dan, then turned my eyes to follow his gaze.

‘...ah.’

Dan’s gaze fell on the three knights lined up under Stigma’s command. To be exact, the attire of the three knights.

A murderer covered in blood from head to toe... The Lofty Knights.

A nameless group of knights dressed in appropriately blood-splattered clothing, as if they had just fought a normal battle.

The Knights of Stigma maintain a strangely neat appearance.

‘No, Stigma is almost at the level of tearing his enemies to pieces when he fights, so how can he maintain such a neat appearance?’

The same goes for his knights.

Similar to their master, they never had a calm fighting style. In fact, it was quite the opposite.

A wild beast let off its leash.

Yes, I can define it in just one word. And yet, it was clean without a single drop of blood...

As I was standing still and admiring it, Dan, who was busy looking at the three knights with his eyes, muttered softly.

“...Three stages in which a person becomes soaked in blood....”

“Phew.”

“ .... ”

“....”

Let's go in.

***

Does your junior know? Every chance they get, there are people who try to take their lives.

Even in the military camp, which provides a place to rest even on the battlefield.

“Keuuuu-.”

“I don't want to make a fuss, so please be quiet. Otherwise, everyone is tired from the battle, but I can't rest because of you.”

Your life isn't worth that much.

Stigma tightened the hand strangling his neck and raised the corners of his mouth.

“Who sent it?”

Although my junior has many enemies due to his political position, it is not to the extent that many people come here without any break. So, rather than several people sending one or two people at a time, it would be one person persistently sending many people. If you just find that person and kill him, things will be resolved smoothly.

Even so, my junior is not in a good condition these days, and on top of that, these flies have been caught in his way.

“Idiots who don't even know the dangers of this war.”

You just want to ruin the human world, right?

Wow.

“...Such a mistake.”

Just killed it.

For a moment, I couldn't control my strength. He shrugged his shoulders and laid down the still warm body, then raised his head and fixed his eyes on a certain place.

“Do you know where they come from?”

“ ....”

“There is no answer. “If you hadn't been dealing with the attackers coming towards you, junior, you too would have died by my hands.”

Perhaps my junior knows that too, so he is keeping it alive.

I can feel the shadows getting tense in the darkness. Stigma laughed and turned his back as if he was not interested.

“I hope you take good care of your junior.”

***

Cruel arrived at his office as usual, opened the door, and paused for a moment at the scene unfolding before his eyes. A familiar feeling of déjà vu arose.

“What are you doing if you don't come in?”

“...Your Excellency the Duke.”

When did it happen? It wasn't that long ago. The duke was in the office at that time too.

I wasn't that surprised, perhaps because I was used to it since I had already experienced it once, but the small round table in the middle of the room, which seemed to have changed the structure of the furniture at will, was a bit unexpected, so my eyes immediately landed on the changed furniture.

"Lord Cruel."

"...."

At a short prompting, Cruel, who looked alternately at the chessboard on the table and the smiling peacock sitting in front of it, silently closed the door and came in.

As if there was some kind of wind blowing, the Duke offered me a seat across from him and smiled.

I was always smiling, but perhaps because of my mood, I had a particularly uncomfortable smile.

"It looks like you enjoy playing chess. Would you like to play a game with me?"

It's ominous. The instincts trained as a prosecutor were warning of danger.

However, it is an unavoidable situation.

"...Gladly."

Cruel obediently followed his words.

Takkak. Just right.

The chess pieces are placed without hesitation, as if any hesitation has been thrown away. Turns change quickly without time delay, and each person's eyes move busily, examining the opponent's movements and the resulting change in the game.

They were too busy concentrating on the small world that was running without stopping, so the conversation between those coordinating from above was a luxury. In fact, the last conversation between the two was probably before the game started.

[What color are you going to choose?]

[...I will choose white.]

[I see.]

Cruel is white and the Duke is black.

—Just right.

‘...’

The flow was broken. Purple eyes take their eyes off the board and slowly look at Cruel. The eyes, which had completely hidden emotions, were examining the other person tenaciously as if trying to uncover their intentions.

The white horse was placed in the wrong place. It is a place that is not even a bait, much less an attack, but an imaginary number.

“...I received a very interesting note.”

The situation was clearly one in which Cruel had the upper hand.

The duke pretended not to notice and began speaking slowly.

“I thought it would be good to see the landscape, so I came here in person.”

“....”

Takkak.

The tables have turned. If it weren't for Cruel's mistake, this would never have happened.

—No, is that really a mistake?

The White camp, which was gaining momentum, collapses. The black words that did not miss the opportunity gradually became suffocating, and eventually.

“Checkmate.”

The Duke won.

The Duke stretched out his hand and picked up the white king, rolling it in his hand and then putting it down as if he was throwing it. What was thrown in front of Cruel was not only chess pieces.

A small note lying around next to a chess piece.

Cruel, who was staring at it, couldn't resist the Duke's gaze telling him to open it, so he slowly stretched out his hand.

“....”

It was a report note that always came.

The problem is that it is a report note personally requested by Cruel, not the Duke.

A report on the request to protect Deon Hardt, how many people attacked Deon Hardt and how many were dealt with just today.

The Duke, who waited patiently for his green eyes to focus on me again, met my gaze and smiled.

“Unfortunately, there was no name of the client.”

Although I am already convinced.

Just because you got that note means you already know everything. You can’t get it without knowing the route through which messages are sent.

Cruel kept his mouth shut even though he knew that he was playing with his neck, as if giving a cornered rat some breathing room. Since the note was revealed, he was in a position where he had to bow down.

The Duke traced the note with his finger, fixing his gaze on Cruel.

“Lord Cruel. “Is this note yours?”

What answer should I give?

Cruel seemed to know what answer he wanted.

“I don’t know.”

“ .... ”

“ .... ”

There was no further conversation beyond that. The two quietly looked into each other’s eyes as if something big would happen if they avoided eye contact first, and the subtle tension was cut off when the duke opened his eyes first.

He picked up the note again and made a strange voice.

“Isn’t that right?”

Grumbling.

A note thrown into the fireplace burns up in an instant. Cruel’s eyes turned towards him for a moment and he said, “Kneel.”

The green eyes returned to their original position at the words, which did not match the neat behavior of the duke, who was leaning against the back of a chair with his legs crossed and his clasped hands placed neatly on his knees.

Cruel, who was looking at the Duke calmly without answering, stands up and slowly kneels down on one knee. The duke, who was quietly looking at him, spoke in a low voice.

“more.”

“ .... ”

The mask of laughter was removed and a cool expressionless expression was revealed, staring at Cruel. Cruel, who made eye contact with him for a moment, lowered his eyes and bent his remaining knee.

“ .... ”

There is no answer even though both knees touch the floor.

In response, both palms touched the floor and the head was lowered. The head, which was lowered until there was an answer, stopped only after the forehead touched the floor.

Perfect prostration.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 142

142. plaudite!(1)

It was the first time.

The Duke and Cruel had a delicate relationship. Although Cruel claims to be the Duke's subordinate and follows him, the Duke also respects Cruel, and the relationship is neither vertical nor horizontal, but rather vaguely inclined.

As such, the Duke treated Cruel differently from his subordinates, giving him the honorific title of 'Lord', and the only time he brought Cruel to his knees was when he had suspicions.

The Duke, who was looking down at Cruel, who bowed his head, got up from his chair.

Since the distance was close to begin with, he reached in front of Cruel in two steps, lifted his shoe and placed it on his hand on the floor.

"What should I do with my husband?"

Weight is placed on the foot resting on the hand.

"By nature, I am not the kind of person who gives these types of spies or traitors another chance."

“....”

“Kicking away the opportunity I was given.”

The duke was sure.

“Receiving the Hart Territory as a reward for the Salvation Church incident must have been for Deon Hart, who rejects the Hart Territory.”

Pop. Ttuduk.

An eerie sound is heard and a crushing pain is felt, as if the hand is being strained.

Nevertheless, the Duke, who was silently fixating his gaze on the floor and looking at the motionless Cruel with a venomous look, put his foot away as if something occurred to him.

“The Lord was right-handed.”

“....”

“You almost got into big trouble. “I almost broke the right hand of a right-handed prosecutor.”

Move your foot with your left hand.

Crunchy. When I stepped on it with enough force and rubbed it, the sound of a broken bone echoed throughout the room.

There was no screaming or moaning.

“Rather than killing Deonhardt, I’m trying to protect him...”

“....”

“There is evidence. Originally, I should have killed him or made him of the same level and kicked him out, but even so, I care about him, so what can I do?”

You should give it one more chance.

Finally, he stepped on Cruel’s hand, then took his foot off and bent his knees in front of him. Place one hand on your shoulder, lower your head, and whisper in your ear.

“Kill Deonhardt.”

“!”

Even when I crushed my hand, my body, which had been steady, started shaking.

The duke continued, pretending not to notice.

“Pick up the guy’s head with these hands. “This is the last chance I give you.”

I’ll keep my eyes peeled, so don’t even think about foolish things.

***

Only after the Duke left and left alone did Cruel wake up. Before I knew it, the crushed hand was covered in purple, blue, and red and was swollen.

Without hesitation, he removed the chessboard from the table and brought out another chessboard.

A chessboard I gave as a gift to a child who only stayed at the mansion when he was young. It was a worn-out chessboard that had been left around for a long time, but Cruel did not forget to take it with him when he left the mansion where the disaster occurred.

‘Deon, kill that kid yourself.’

Takkak.

Pieces move on an old chessboard.

The Duke himself said it was his last chance. If you fail or show any strange signs, they will most likely kill you. Basically, all of the official heroes of the empire are under the emperor’s protection, but the emperor may not want to protect even the heroes under the opposing duke.

‘...is it about time?’

The old shaman said.

If you feel like you’re going to die, kill that kid and die.

I was reviewing the chessboard I had left before going to the hunting competition, then I cleaned it up and started putting it back up again.

A messy and messy game of chess where you must send a pawn to the edge of the enemy’s lines at any cost and turn it into a queen.

Cruel completed his duty and grabbed a chess piece that was lying outside the board.

‘Is it Acta est fabula?’

A long time ago, when I was learning culture as the eldest son and heir of an aristocratic family, I chuckled while repeating a phrase I came across in a book.

‘There is no need for applause.’

It was a play with no audience to begin with.

It would be right to bring down the curtain quietly, without anyone knowing.

***

“I’m going to commit suicide.”

“...In this current situation?”

“yes.”

As soon as I returned to the mansion, I wondered something about the unexpected visitor.

The duke quietly touched his forehead as he looked at the leader of the revolutionary army with a stern expression.

“I thought I told you the timing wasn’t right.”

“I waited too long. “There are limits to quelling discontent within the revolutionary army.”

“Haven’t you done well so far? If you hold on just a little longer...”

“Just a little longer...?”

The duke paused for a moment at the mocking tone. Daniel was laughing as if it wasn’t an illusion.

He stopped laughing for a moment and slammed the table.

“The end of the war cannot be easily guessed! How can we be sure when it will end? Even the lifespan of demons is longer than that of humans!”

“....”

“If things continue like this, rebellion may not be possible for our generation.”

“If you leave it to the next generation....”

“Emotions are not passed down!”

He seems quite excited.

If you see them laughing, interrupting, and doing things they wouldn't do to a duke.

However, the opponent is the leader of the revolutionary army. This is a person who needs to be held on as tightly as possible and consoled and comforted because you don't know where he will end up. The duke quietly paid attention to the saying that emotions are not passed down.

“The majority of the revolutionary army is a group of people gathered together out of anger! There are many cases where even knowledge is lost, so how can emotions that cannot be written down be passed down from generation to generation? Next generation? It might be possible right now. But it won't be as good as before. So what about the next generation? Even if you go down three generations, you will forget the past! The revolutionary army will disintegrate. “I would rather give it a try and fail if it fails. I don't want to see those who worked hard to save and their plans go to waste!”

Looking at that situation, I don't think it's possible to appease her.

“...Are you really saying you want to move?”

“Yes, since we don’t know when the war will end, I think it would be better to stage an uprising in the early stages before it gets more serious. “This is just a thank you for your help so far, and I’m just saying this out of affection, so you don’t have to help me, Duke.”

“No, I will help you.”

“...yes?”

In that case, I should kill you.

I can’t guarantee how the headless revolutionary army will turn out, but since the party that should be holding the reins is trying to run amok at the forefront, what can be done?

“It’s not that I don’t understand your feelings, and it bothers me that you’ve been telling me to endure it for so long. “I will help.”

Impatience narrows your perspective.

A narrow perspective turns even a genius into a fool.

The revolutionary army is now over.

***

The leader of the revolutionary army is not stupid.

Although his remarks and actions just moments ago were definitely stupid.

Daniel, with a calm expression on his face as if he had never been so excited, slowly walked down the hallway and arrived in front of a familiar room. As always, knock and ask for permission.

“This is your mother, Danielle.”

“Come on in.”

I tried to keep my usual expression, but it seems I can't avoid the mother's feelings.

He said with the gentlest smile he could muster toward his mother, who greeted me with a soft smile and then her expression hardened when our eyes met.

“I know it's rude, but I want to return the gift I gave you last time.”

***

When I am in the Empire, I am loyal to the Empire, and when I am in the Demon World, I am faithful to the Demon World.

Maybe that's why only a very few people, including the Emperor and the Demon King, know my identity.

Why are you suddenly saying this?

“Don't fucking chase me!”

I mean that I am the number one power that both sides aim for first.

When in the Empire, the number one prey of the Demon World's generals. When in the Demon World, the number one prey of the Empire's generals!

I'm not happy at all! damn!

“go away!”

I was now running away from the demons with the crazy dogs.

I shouldn't have given a chance in the last battle. I never thought that my injury caused the demons to come back in such a big way. I should have just avoided it then.

‘...But why did I just get hit? It certainly seems like it could have been avoided.’

I tilted my head and strengthened my legs that were trying to give out at the urging of the crazy dogs.

This time, even if you swear as much as you like, the stigma of ‘speech habits’ doesn't follow. Because he stayed in that hell island to buy time.

So, to briefly summarize what has happened so far, I fell into a trap.

I chased after the retreating demons to carry out the ‘annihilation’ order, but it turned out to be a trap. The fact that even the escape route was clearly blocked gave me a strong feeling that they were intent on exterminating us, filled with their resentment.

[Sssssssssssssssssssssssssssssss...bts!]

[Junior's speaking habits.]

[I haven't told you everything yet...!]

[If I hadn't stopped you, I would have said it all the way.
Hello junior. Those who come in from here will be blocked by me and my knights, so run away. You can break through the escape route on your own, right?]

While rubbing his numb mouth, Stigma smiled and pulled out his sword.

Retreat? Even if I die, I have to break through. If you don't get through it, you die... but you stay?! I was startled and grabbed his sleeve.

[Then, senior...!]

[Did I look weak enough to be worried about you?]

[...Still, be careful.]

I just happened to become attached to you.

Although they harassed me by saying it was a nobleman's dignity and speaking habits, I know that it was advice given with me in mind. It was too beneficial to accept it as the nonsense of an old man who wants to act like a senior.

Stigma's eyes widened as if surprised, but then he folded the corners of his eyes and smiled.

[okay. See you later.]

I turned my back and moved to lead the murderous knights to clear a retreat route...

"Why are you the only one chasing me!"

"Stand there!"

"Damn it!"

This is why I can't help but swear!

Of course, I'm focusing on running away, and Sir Lien and the mad dogs are mainly doing the breaking through, but even if that's not the case, I can't help but lose my stamina quickly.

Where have the hero candidates gone? Since they are all scattered, is there any way to know?

How long had it been since I had been fighting and running away like crazy? At some point, the people following me disappeared.

Seeing that there was no one blocking the way, it seemed like I had escaped properly...

"Where am I...?"

"Hehe... I don't know... I'm sorry...."

"Huh... Where should I go? Ook..."

"If you don't know, just keep your mouth shut! I'm sorry, my lord. "I don't know either."

Yeah, I'm an idiot for asking them.

As I looked around, I realized that this was a street corner somewhere and my body trembled. It was a reflex reaction of rejection because I had fallen into a trap on the street earlier.

"Marquis, are you cold?"

"Hey, someone please take off your clothes."

"Shut up... Don't show me your blood-soaked clothes..."

I'll kill you...

I raised my eyes fiercely in frustration, but stopped when I heard a sound.

“...Can’t you hear something?”

“yes? “What are you talking about...”

“His low voice...”

“Who is there!”

“...There is no need to go out. attack!”

“Master?! It was so sudden...”

“Wow!”

I never thought a siege would have formed this far!

I looked at the guy in the lead and then looked behind him. It’s hard to see until the end because the road is a little curved, but at a glance, it looks like the leader is that guy in the lead.

‘...Then if I just hit that guy, everything will work out.’

For some reason, this situation seems embarrassing, but I guess it’s just my mood. Even if that’s not the case, as long as those over there are demons and this side is humans, nothing will change.

I twirled the dagger. I habitually folded and extended my thumb, swept the handle, and adjusted my posture.

I could vaguely hear Cleter’s shout coming from one side.

“Milan! “Take care of the Marquis!”

“Take care of the Marquis!”

***

Deon Hart cut off the demons’ supply route.

Even while running away from the enemy’s trap, he managed to find a supply route and cut it off.

In the process, due to overexertion, he was carried back by murderous knights, but the empire welcomed the hero who brought good news and provided him with a competent doctor to ensure his speedy recovery.

“I told you to please be healthy... It’s not a difficult request, but why...”

There was a rumor that a desperate cry was heard somewhere along with a muttering of a double-effective medicine, but it quickly disappeared after hearing the news of a hero. I sat down.

Stigma Primiro, who survived by slaughtering his enemies safely, burst into laughter upon hearing this news.

“As expected, you’re a junior. But...”

“ .... ”

“Where is the person behind that rumor now?”

“That thing...”

“I heard it was definitely here.”

The room where Deon Hardt was said to be located was empty.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 143

143. plaudite!(2)

About an hour ago, Cruel checked the sword.

Seeing him carrying several daggers not only on his sword but also on his thighs as if he was very determined, and drawing and retracting them several times, his subordinate Senzer, who had been quietly watching his actions from a corner, quietly opened his mouth.

“Are you leaving?”

“okay.”

“I will follow.”

“no.”

Crash. After finishing preparations, Cruel looked back at him with an expressionless face. The subordinate who had always silently supported me from behind, as if he was there or not, was looking at me.

How long has it been since I met him? Since we were together before going under the duke's command, I guarantee that it won't be a short time.

Even though he couldn't express it on the outside, he was a subordinate whom he trusted enough to trust and entrust to him.

Thanks to this, Cruel was able to learn one thing.

"Senzar."

"yes."

"When did you stop calling me 'master'?"

The fact that the measure of betrayal does not vary depending on the time spent together.

I thought about it. How did the duke get the note? When I broadened my horizons a little, the answer came quickly.

Cruel quietly closed his eyes. The eyelids that cover the eyes are fluttering as if they are wandering.

"Since when?"

Compared to the price of life for the truth being discovered, the answer is extremely shabby.

"Have you become the eyes of a peacock?"

I swallowed the devastation that I could not bear to express.

There is no one else who knows the existence and route of the message and can intercept it. Because Senzar was always watching Cruel from behind when he was doing something.

Even if they were not together 24 hours a day, Senzar would have been aware of the contents of Cruel's request, as when Cruel participated in a hunting competition to save Deonhardt, he assembled the circumstances and reported it to the duke without having to follow him and see it. So, I guess I reported it this time too.

“...Does it matter?”

Senzer lifted his downward gaze for a moment and faced Cruel. The gaze was so confident that the viewer was left speechless and looked directly at the green eyes.

“...no.”

The green eyes were calm, as if they had never shown signs of agitation.

Now is not the time to waste your attention on things that cannot be undone. Cruel skillfully looked away.

“I will not allow you to follow.”

“But I...”

I know. You must follow the duke’s orders to keep an eye on me.

But should I really take that into consideration?

“I’m not good enough to leave a traitor by my side on important matters.”

“....”

“Is there a need to follow and monitor something that can be killed if it fails? “There must be people other than you who are secretly watching me.”

“...All right.”

The guards will move as soon as they see anything suspicious.

Senzer nodded obediently and stepped back.

***

Talk. Something cold landed on the tip of my nose.

“Ah, it’s snowing...”

It was hard to believe that it had just begun to fall, as the snow filling the sky and falling was filling my vision. In direct contrast to the pure white snow, I feel like my insides are burning black.

Damn my son. The war is going to be tough. Looking at the thick snow, it looks like it’s going to pile up quite a bit...

‘Anyway, how far is this bastard going to drag me?’

With eyes full of dissatisfaction, I glared at the thick hand that was grabbing my wrist.

It was obvious that he could feel my stinging gaze, but there was no way his hand would loosen even when he was struggling and swearing just a moment ago. Since I had already lost my strength after making a fuss, I soon gave up and followed the guy’s lead, remembering the previous situation.

After barely escaping from the demons’ trap, getting lost, encountering another group of demons, and managing to return alive from that shitty situation.

To be honest, I don’t remember the situation when I returned. My arms and legs were hurting like crazy and my body couldn't move, so I was too busy focusing on my situation. I remember the crazy dogs carrying me away... Anyway, I am certain that I returned safely.

And became a hero! He was originally a hero, but...!

'shit. 'I never thought that that road was a supply route.'

The demons I encountered were carrying supplies.

'The number of internal enemies that used to be numerous has increased...'

As usual, the closer one gets to power, the more radical those who cannot sit still and watch someone rise to succession become more radical.

The checks will become more severe. The number of raiders will definitely increase.

There is already talk about the road that could have been used as a station being arbitrarily cut off.

Of course, it seems like no one is listening because it's bullshit, but it's still unfair. That's not what I meant.

'What should I do when the crazy dogs ran amok and caused a landslide, causing the cable to break...'

Because I almost died, I remember that much clearly. At that time, I thought that place would be our grave.

I was a little touched by the actions of the guys who never let go of me, who was a burdensome burden, and took care of me while I was frantically running away, but since they were also the ones responsible for almost killing me, I didn't have very kind words to say.

‘But I should think it’s thanks to him that he got better quickly and is moving like this.’

As soon as the crazy dogs arrived, they started screaming and running wild, so he is in good health. I heard there was no major problem with my body, but my muscles were damaged a lot due to excessive movement. Oh, I heard that my leg bones were slightly misaligned, so I had to adjust them again.

I heard that our talented Lien managed to find the road.

‘Finding the way and controlling the crazy dogs... You must have had a hard time, Sir Lien...’

Anyway.

I looked at the front. A black figure walking ahead caught my eye.

After barely finishing my treatment, I was resting in the assigned barracks when they suddenly attacked and dragged me out, leaving me to just walk around like this.

“What on earth are you talking about? “I said I didn’t want to listen.”

“....”

“...damn you bastard.”

Damn Cruel Hart.

I cursed with a lot of emotion. It was then that his steps, which had not stopped the entire time he was moving, stopped.

“...Deon.”

Chaang!

It was nice that he let go of his wrist, but Cruel drew his sword.

...I said I cussed a little, but is that something that would go that far?

The sight of him approaching with a sword in one hand against the entrance of a familiar mountain range was quite scary, so I hesitated to retreat, but he narrowed the distance completely and raised his bandaged hand to grab my shoulder.

A small voice whispered.

"...there are people trying to kill you."

"That's it..."

"I was very determined this time. "You sent me with a force capable of killing a hero."

"...."

The words, "It's always been like that," were easily heard.

Aside from having enough troops to kill a hero, you sent Cruel? To kill me?

'...crazy.'

I know Cruel's skills well.

Are you intentionally trying to drag me to a place where there are no people and kill me? I've moved too far for too long to say that it was unnecessary...

Perhaps my senses have become dull due to his incomprehensible actions. I should immediately shake off this hand and increase the distance, but even though I'm this close, I strangely don't feel any murderous intent.

So, after hesitating for a moment, he turned around and nudged my shoulder in the direction of the mountain range.

"Go to 'that side'."

"...!"

At the entrance to the familiar mountain range, Cruel traveled a long distance to this place and pushed me in that direction.

Understanding the situation was quick.

"Go and never come back."

Cruel knew that I came and went from the demon world.

This must be considered. The guy's voice seemed somehow submerged, so I gathered my composure, thinking that my hesitation might have been just an illusion.

"You..."

But before I could finish speaking, a dagger flew from somewhere.

Cruel, who swung his sword like lightning to hit the target precisely at my left eye, looked back at me as if urging me to do so. When I encountered eyes that rarely showed emotion, I hesitated with an unknown sense of fear, like someone facing something unknown.

‘But... I can’t cross the border of the mountain range like this...’

The border here is a border that both the Demon King and the Emperor are deliberately hiding. If you are not careful, you may end up guiding attackers who may not know where they are hiding.

‘If that happens, won’t the Demon King kill me...?’

I moved to survive, but it could end up being a situation where I die...!

It seems as if Cruel, who protected me, is also regarded as an enemy, and numerous daggers are flying among the snowflakes. It looks like it will be a hedgehog if it is targeted at the two people in a wide range and rains down like rain.

It is even difficult to accurately determine the location of the dagger due to the snow.

I laughed out loud.

‘Well, one way or another, it looks like today is the day I die.’

Still, I don’t think I’ll die trying to cross a mountain range, so I guess it’s a good death.

Although I was able to move around after receiving treatment, it was still difficult to do intense movements such as in battle, so I gave up and stood there when Cruel pulled me and swung his sword.

Kaga River! Sigh!

...Hook?

“you...!”

There is no pain in the body. It means I wasn't hit. As I rolled my eyes a little, I saw that there was a dagger stuck in Cruel's right arm that I had never seen before.

His left hand was also covered in bandages, and even his right arm... It was all very different.

Maybe it was because it was for my own benefit, but sarcasm couldn't come out of my mouth.

“Why...”

It seemed like an illusion as blood seeped out in droplets, staining my clothes red and slowly running down my sleeves. I couldn't understand.

Even though it wrapped around me, it only allowed one attack, so if Cruel was alone, it would have been possible to block them all and avoid them. So why?

‘Why did Cruel get hit instead of me?’

Didn't Cruel abandon me? Since when did you treat me like this? No way....

“Don't think about it.”

My vision darkened.

A low voice interrupted my busy thoughts.

“Just like always, rationalize and ignore it.”

Chaeng chaeng! Sigh! Suddenly!

My hearing, which has become more sensitive due to my vision being blocked, picks up the sounds of metal clashing and flesh being cut. Perhaps it was because of the bandages, but the large hands covering his eyes were as cold as a corpse.

“But...”

The direction of my body changed and my vision opened up. Cruel and the raiders are on the other side of my field of vision, and the only thing I can see is the entrance to the mountain range, which is closer than before.

Cruel, who had his hand on my shoulder from behind, spoke slowly.

“If you really want to open your eyes.”

There is still a bloody sound in the background. Phew! And right behind me, I heard the sound of someone being stabbed with a blade.

I was about to turn around quickly, but a hand on my shoulder stopped me with force. Instead, a low, calm voice, different from usual, rang in my ears, as if letting me know that I was fine.

“Before that, face everything you have done so far.”

“....”

“Now go.”

hurry.

***

On the day when the Count's mansion was covered in blood at the hands of his only brother, Cruel was faced with a choice.

Should I take revenge by killing Deon, or should I protect him who has become my only bloodline?

Cruel's choice was the latter.

I know that my younger brother did this because there was some misunderstanding. It also has something to do with the 8 Years War.

In such a situation, if you take revenge by killing that child, all you gain is a huge sense of loss.

Cruel had no confidence not to aim his sword at himself in the midst of that enormous loss.

That was the reason why he decided to pour his life on his younger brother rather than die even if he got revenge.

'in action.'

I learned that there was a reason behind Deon's participation in the Eight Year War.

However, the family has already died at the hands of Deon, who misunderstood. They decided to hide the fact in case the child, who found out the truth, went crazy with guilt and revenge and ended up pointing his sword in all directions and trying to kill himself.

'more.'

I learned that Duke Stave Illuster was targeting Deon.

He volunteered to be by his side in order to distort and purify the duke's orders.

'What should I do?'

Cruel Hart became the bait.

By focusing Deon's anger on me, he prevented anyone from questioning his participation in the Eight Year War, and served as a filter to filter out the Duke's murderous intentions toward Deon. In the meantime, it was a bonus to erase any evidence that might raise questions about Deon.

That may be why the shaman said that at the time.

[If you feel like you are going to die, kill that child and die.]

I know.

When I die, sooner or later, that child will know the truth.

We all know that we will be weighed down by guilt and sharpen the blade of revenge, and that the sword drawn for revenge may turn into a situation where we find a target for revenge in order to swing the sword.

but.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 144

144. plaudite!(3)

[The second Confucius... is very weak. You are also very vulnerable to stress. I think it would be a good idea to create an environment as stress-free as possible.] [

The child called me because he was vomiting blood... Does that mean he vomits blood even when he is stressed?]

Yes... That's right.]

[Oh my god. ]

[...Did you hear, Cruel? Our second child broke many people's hearts when he was born, and it looks like he will do so often in the future. Although he has a unique appearance, there is no denying that he is our child and your younger brother. You will live longer than us, who are all old, so please take good care of me as an older brother.]

[Yes, father.]

[Yes. They say children are sensitive, but if you take care of them too much, your child may think he is a useless person and fall into a sense of shame, so don't do that. It would be better to keep a reasonable distance and take care of him knowingly or unknowingly.]

[Brother, I want to go outside the mansion.]

[That...]

[I'm just kidding. I don't even have time to go out because I'm busy reading books. What do you have in your hand? It says 'chess'... Is it really the 'chess' mentioned in the 'Basic Chess Rulebook' I read the other day?] [

Yes, I thought it would be good to keep it with you.]

[Oh, of course it's good. I was bored just reading books, but it was good... oops.]

[....]

[... tongue hyung. How is your swordsmanship these days? How's it going? Last time I took a peek out the window, it wasn't a joke, so show me properly later.]

Yes, but.

How could I kill this child?

It is only necessary to combine a few circumstances to know that the child is the leader of Corps 0 in the Demon World. Since he was even given the non-existent position of Commander of the 0 Corps, his life and treatment there must have been quite good. That's why I took the time to come here.

It would be better to lead a safe and peaceful life in the demon world than in the human world, which is full of all kinds of threats.

The right arm with the dagger in it is hot.

It was so clear that it was an action for the child, so even Deon seemed agitated this time. As a bright child, I could already see his head spinning, so I reached out and covered my eyes to stop my thoughts.

“Don’t think about it.”

“....”

“Just like always, rationalize and ignore it.”

Perhaps because of the content, the mouth that spits out the words is bitter.

It wasn’t long before I discovered something else. Perhaps it is an aftereffect of the war, but the child remembers only what he wants to remember.

I was devastated beyond words when I found out that I had given myself two personalities and that the other personality, which remembered everything, was only brought out when needed. I was truly sorry and saddened. How hard would it have been to make such an extreme choice?

It was probably a choice made to protect the body, which is vulnerable to stress. therefore.

Rather blame me.

Don’t have any doubts, just think of it as refreshing.

He continued speaking while striking down and cutting down those who showed up and attacked. Since the child’s eyes were still covered, some injuries were inevitable.

“But...”

Since that day, you have always disobeyed me, so you will be stubborn this time too.

therefore.

“If you really want to open your eyes.”

I can't stop you

“Before that, face everything you have done so far.”

This is my arrangement.

To prepare my younger brother, who is weak against stress, so that he does not collapse from shock.

Even this might be too much for you. I would rather live and die without knowing anything.

It's a small desire because I've realized how great a blessing a peaceful death is.

‘The choice is up to Deon.’

As an older brother who loves his only younger sibling, I will support every choice you make from now on.

Even if it means destroying the world.

‘Deon baby.’

I will protect you even if I die.

“Now go.”

hurry.

No matter how much of a hero you are, there is nothing you can do in the face of overwhelming numbers.

Cruel laughed while holding numerous weapons on his back.

....

He had to see his parents die at the hands of his younger brother, and in order to protect his younger brother, he went under the duke's wing and served as a dog.

At the end of the war, he rolled over and over again to become a hero, and fought a battle of wits with the Duke, who was trying to kill his brother.

It may seem like a pathetic and shabby life. Some would say it is a miserable life.

But Cruel was quite satisfied.

In any case, isn't it a death he faces while protecting his younger brother?

'It's the perfect ending.'

I hope that the child receives a lot of love in the demon world. If not, I sincerely hope that you will receive a lot of love in the future.

I don't mind dying, but I'm worried that after I die, you'll be left alone in a world where no one will love you.

***

Stupid Cruel Hart.

Even if you cover your eyes and turn your back, you won't be able to hide it until the end. Just now, isn't he pretending to run away and then looking back like this?

Deonhardt looked at Cruel, who was dealing with the attackers with arrows and daggers stuck on his back, with an expressionless face. It was no exaggeration to say that he had enough troops to kill a hero, and he was struggling against numerous enemies.

Arrows and daggers fly and raiders rush in. Funny enough, in a situation where his life was at stake, Cruel prioritized blocking attacks aimed at Deonhardt rather than at his own body.

Bisu stretched out his bandaged left hand to block. His palm was pierced, but he pulled it out without any hesitation and struck down another dagger aimed at Deon. The guys running directly towards Deonhardt threw the small weapons strapped to their thighs as they passed me, piercing vital points, so it was natural that the priority they had to kill was set on Cruel.

Deon, who had been moving diligently considering the other person's sincerity, slowed down and stopped before he knew it, tilting his head.

'Do I have a reason to do something like that?'

The reason he ended up in this situation is because of me.

I'm thinking about it again, but didn't he abandon me? I thought he was probably hiding his feelings of dislike beneath that terrible expressionless expression...

Cruel paused as he resumed his interrupted thoughts.

[Don't think about it.]

But.

[If you really want to open your eyes.]

[Before that, face everything you have done so far.]

Since when did I listen to him?

Just as I was about to ignore it and continue my thoughts, I heard a voice that I couldn't ignore.

"Now he's dead."

what?

My head turned reflexively. I could see people dressed in black stabbing the fallen Cruel with their weapons, as if confirming the kill.

"Toxic guy. I didn't even shed a moan until the end. "How many people has this bastard killed?"

"Since he is a hero, let's give significance to his killing. "Of course... there was a lot of damage."

uh...?

"Anyway, I have to complete the remaining requests."

One guy gestures towards Deon, who is standing in the distance.

Even though he hesitated and moved reflexively, Deon could not fully accept the situation just a moment ago and only blinked his eyes blankly.

‘Is he really... dead?’

I didn’t think I would be very impressed if Cruel died, but I thought I would actually be happy.

‘Uh...’

Is it because I have doubts about his actions?

Emotions wander aimlessly, as if confused about what to express. Even my head, which is supposed to make a cool decision, doesn’t turn as if it’s blocked by a white curtain. While looking at Cruel’s tattered body, I saw the remaining attackers moving towards me and turned my back.

Even though Cruel has killed many of them, the remaining numbers are still a threat. They are seasoned human hunters who work well together, and their confidence has already increased by killing one hero. Even Deon himself is not in good condition right now, so fighting would be a loss.

‘First... first, to the Demon World...’ Okay, let’s go to the Demon World. No matter what anyone says, living right now comes first.

I forced myself to start walking faster. When I heard the sound of someone chasing me from behind, my feet picked up speed and I started running with all my might.

It seemed like the weapon was being thrown from behind, but because the distance was quite wide and the snow was blowing from the front, only a few hits were made.

However, it wasn’t like it wasn’t there at all.

Clink!

One day, the magic stone necklace that Lirinél gave me broke. This means that there was a threatening attack among the attacks coming from behind.

Deon ignored it and ran on.

I'm glad it snowed. Thanks to the cold snow hitting my face, my head began to spin to some extent.

—No. It wasn't 'fortunate'.

As my mind accepted the previous situation, emotions came flooding back like a tidal wave.

It wasn't until the cold wind scratched his face and stole the liquid running down his cheeks that Deon realized he was crying.

'What is this... what on earth...!'

The pursuers had long since lost sight of the enemies and covered their tracks with snow, but they didn't even realize it and kept running. Even though his ankles were buried deep in the snow, which would have cost him a lot of stamina, Deon didn't even realize it and forced his body forward.

"Cough!"

Patter.

Blood pours out of my mouth. A fishy liquid seeped onto the white snow, causing dark red flowers to bloom.

In a way, it was natural. With the physical and mental shock added to the harsh cold weather, it would be rather strange that my physical condition was normal.

Only then did Deon realize that the chase was over and stopped walking.

‘Why why?’

Damn Cruel. Stupid Cruel.

If you wanted to stop thinking, you shouldn’t have done anything that would raise suspicion in the first place.

Don’t think about it? Rationalize and ignore it like you always do?

“Haha- lol, I never thought I would get back what I said to the crazy dogs like this! Ouch! “Big!”

Blood dripping down my chin. The two eyes, filled with clear liquid and bloodshot, shake as if they will break. I wasn’t even blinking, but for some reason, countless tear marks were left on my cheeks.

You died for me before my eyes. The contradiction of what I had believed to be true up to now was clearly revealed before my eyes, but did you think I would be so simple as to just ignore it and be happy about it?

rationalization? outside? There are degrees to that too!

‘To begin with, I’m the type of person who knows and buries everything, whether I rationalize it or ignore it.’

Deon raised the corner of his mouth trembling.

But... yes, considering your actions of sacrificing your life for me, I would like to listen to your last will.

I said that if you really want to dig into it, you have to face everything you've done so far. That shouldn't be difficult.

I knew everything from the beginning.

Even so, it had recently reached its limit. Now that the mind has been devastated by war, there is a limit to forcing yourself to ignore the memories that keep coming back and pretending not to notice.

Therefore, Deon gave up holding on to the cracked and leaking dam, using Cruel's will as an excuse.

After I gave up trying to hold on, it was a quick time.

The embankment that had been built for the past 10 years collapsed. All kinds of memories that I had been ignoring come pouring out, and the emotions of the time come flooding back vividly.

I know that no matter how limited it may be, it is an issue that needs to be seriously considered and decided over and over again. Although it was somewhat impulsive, it was an action that came from the judgment that it would be okay since, unlike back then when I was immature, I have now become an adult for a long time.

"Huh huh huh huh huh huh..."

I can't breathe.

My head felt like it was going to explode, I couldn't move my body, I stumbled and fell down in the snow.

The cold touch woke me up, but unfortunately it had the opposite effect.

“Ugh ugh ah... ah ah ah....”

My vivid mind replays the nightmare-like situation over and over again. It feels like my brain has been hacked countless times by sharp daggers. As the scene plays out vividly before my eyes, I find myself contemplating whether to gouge out my eyes.

“Aaaaaah!!!”

I felt like I was going to strangle myself with these overwhelming emotions, so I clenched my frozen hands into fists and hit the ground for a long time until my bones broke.

“Daemon!”

The last time he heard the young voice, Deon Hardt lost consciousness.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 145

145. plaudite!(4)

In the end, I couldn't retrieve the poison from my mother.

I shouldn't have given it in the first place. He has never defeated his mother, so even if he goes back, he will give it to her.

Daniel pulled up his scarf to hide his increasingly dark face and diligently headed to the meeting place. Wherever he walked, a sense of solemnity appeared like a trace.

"You're here. "Are the people behind you the only ones you brought?"

"yes."

"It's less than I thought..."

"The Duke said he would provide military support, so I think this will be enough. Still, it's only half of the total number of people, so you can't say that's a small number."

Daniel grinned.

The man who had been quietly looking at his face turned his body. Daniel slowly gathered his thoughts as he said a word to follow and followed behind the man walking ahead.

As if keeping his promise to help, the duke sought various information. The times when the emperor is in the palace, the changing times of the palace guards, the shortest route to the room where the emperor is, etc.

They even went so far as to make plans on the condition of providing troops.

“Team 3 can follow that person from here.”

“yes. See you later.”

“It’s finally really starting. “It’s a new feeling.”

Despite all the delays, the work progressed steadily.

The plan was sound, but since they could not fully trust the Duke’s troops and could not completely rely on him for any mission, the revolutionary army decided to split their forces and move with the Duke’s troops.

“The second group is that person.”

“I’ll see you again after work.”

At first, Daniel didn’t pay much attention to the plan.

Knowing only the bare minimum and agreeing to carry out the plan, he remained with a small group and walked without expression.

It was when he was surrounded by the duke’s troops that his steps stopped.

Chaang!

Those who blocked the revolutionary army drew their weapons all at once. Feeling ominous, the revolutionary army did not give up and each took up their weapons. Despite their quick actions, their eyes were shaking mercilessly, unable to hide their embarrassment.

“What is this now...!”

“Hey guys! What are you doing now? “This is not the time!”

Some of the leaders who followed Daniel could not overcome their anxiety and raised their voices. Daniel, who had been looking at the duke’s troops without any hesitation, glanced at the pitiful sight and slowly opened his mouth.

“...Is this a betrayal?”

– It was a trap from the beginning.

The answer came from the communicator of the person standing in front.

Daniel frowned at the familiar voice and spit out the other person’s name as if he was chanting.

“...Peacock.”

“What is that!”

“Are you saying he is a real duke?”

– ...I want to have a quiet conversation with Daniel, but there are a lot of interruptions. It would be a good idea to tidy up your surroundings first.

The duke’s troops moved at the words coming out of the communicator.

“Now sleep...!”

Suddenly.

Well-trained elites cut down the revolutionary army. Although the revolutionary army was taken aback for a moment, they did not give in and fought back, but due to splitting up the personnel earlier, they were short in numbers and did not work well together, so it was not enough to defeat those who had been thoroughly trained by working together for a long time.

The sound of weapons clashing gradually decreases. Daniel, who had been watching the scene from beginning to end, turned his eyes to the communicator.

“The duke obviously wants a revolution....”

– Ah, of course that’s a lie.

“False....”

– As a duke, why would I want to give up my power because I regret it? What I want from you is to lower the emperor’s approval rating. “That was it.”

The sound of the weapons stopped.

The duke sitting in front of the desk across from the communicator swiveled his chair around with a sneer on his lips.

The emperor must not die at the hands of the revolutionary army. What the duke wants is to bring down the emperor, not his death or the disappearance of the throne.

Therefore, the duke was thinking of using the revolutionary army but abandoning it at some point.

“It wasn’t funny to call it a revolution. Do you think revolution is that easy? “Even if there is only one change in government, the country will be greatly shaken.”

Even if the monarch changes through proper succession procedures, there will be confusion for a while.

“But changing the political system at all? A world where everyone is equal? Are you planning to throw this world into chaos?”

It’s a dangerous idea. The duke realized as soon as he heard their argument.

The ideology of the revolutionary army is like an infectious disease. It is highly addictive, gives you faith, and makes you feel justified in everything you do for it.

Their ideas will spread around the world at a rapid pace.

Those at the bottom of the hierarchy will firmly push that dangerous belief. Nobles will not be willing to give away what they have easily. If this continues, an armed conflict is expected.

It was obvious without even looking at what consequences an armed conflict within one country would have, let alone with another country.

“If you follow your thoughts, this country will self-destruct. Of course, you may be able to achieve your goal. But who will guarantee the lives of those who suddenly lose their country?”

- ....

“You probably don’t know how the people of a fallen country will be treated. Did they really say they wanted to create an equal world? They didn’t say anything like that and didn’t want that kind of world, but do you really think they would be happy if you were to destroy the country of those people who lived well and ate well without any complaints, claiming it was for their own benefit? “It’s so ridiculous that a minority goes out of their way to represent the opinions of the majority.”

- ....

“Do you really think that the revolutionary army is a saving group? no. Rather, they are a group of evil people trying to throw the world into chaos.”

- ....

“I picked up a philosophy that didn’t even seem like a word from somewhere.”

Thank you so much. I hope you have peace on your way.

The duke, who was about to end the communication with those words, stopped when he heard a soft laugh coming from the other side.

- We.

Daniel, who was holding both shoulders of the person holding the communication device connected to the Duke through the communication device, was smiling without hiding his brightly shining eyes.

“He is a revolutionary.”

A revolutionary, not a philosopher.

"I don't know anything about philosophy. The philosophy I know is something that people who are well-fed sit at the table and talk about. "The revolution occurred because the hungry were angry at injustice."

- ...This is a remark that disparages all philosophers in the world.

"I can't help it. "How can those who cannot eat or learn know the sublimity of philosophy?"

Daniel lightly shrugged and turned around.

The body of our comrade lying on the floor was the first thing that caught my eye. As I raised my gaze a little, I saw that the people who had dispatched all the revolutionary troops were glaring at me without raising their swords.

A situation from which it is impossible to escape.

Daniel smiled calmly.

"The Duke was worried about chaos after changing the political system."

- ...That's a long story. Is this just to kill time? Even so, the fact that you will die remains the same.

"I just want to have a conversation before I die. So far, we haven't been able to talk comfortably because we've been hiding our cards from each other. "You don't want to even accept the last conversation of someone who will die soon, do you?"

- ...Keep talking. I will listen.

In the first place, I had no intention of returning alive.

Therefore, Daniel began to leisurely express his thoughts.

“Humans are animals of adaptation. Even if you initially act as if the world will turn upside down when you implement anything, you will eventually get used to it and over time, you will take it for granted. “If we had not tried for fear of confusion, humanity would not have developed this far.”

– ...It doesn’t have to be now. It’s not wrong, but isn’t the situation the situation?

“you’re right.”

The duke fell silent at the obedient affirmation.

This is why his actions do not match his words at all.

Contradictions in actions and remarks that seem to take time. The duke did not allow a conversation with Daniel for nothing. I used this as an opportunity to rack my brain to find the source of my discomfort, and Daniel continued.

“Shall we move on to another story? In the Duke’s remarks a little while ago, there was also a part where he was worried about the country being ruined. My goal is to abolish the throne, not the country. So I thought about it.”

Is there a way for the country to run properly while everyone is equal?

“The answer was simple. All we had to do was share power.”

– ...So do you think the country can run properly? What happens when power is divided and a conflict of opinion arises among those in power?

“Why can’t I? Rather than handing power over to people, you can hand it over to institutions. Many people work in one powerful organization. Of course, there will also be a need for someone to oversee the institution, but...” “

I said we would share power. All you have to do is create multiple institutions with power. “If there are too many, they will not be able to come together properly and the country will not run, and if there are two, the country may be torn apart even though it is compatible, so there is an appropriate number of three.”

Rock Paper Scissors. I’m sure you’ve tried it at least once, right?

“People’s greed cannot be trusted. Therefore, by giving each of the three organizations different powers, they can keep each other in check and prevent them from going astray. “It would be better for the people of this free country to elect the heads of each organization.”

Dangerous. The duke stared at the communicator and quietly clenched his fist.

I’m so glad Daniel was going to die here. I can’t imagine how far he would have planned if he had been given more time.

At that time, Daniel’s voice continued as a mumble through the communicator.

– Of course, in the end, the institution is run by people, so it cannot be completely free of loopholes... but at least it will be much better than one person holding all the power, and that part can be left to future generations... future generations

. ?

After a moment of doubt, the duke slowly opened his mouth.

“You were a dreamer, not a philosopher.”

– He is a revolutionary because he does not stop at just dreaming but takes on the challenge of realizing it.

“...Why did you question the caste system?”

– It started with my mother. But after that...

“....”

– Once the question was asked, it didn't stop. Why are humans' class and status determined from birth? It's unfair that we're just born, but our status is divided based on luck. A long time ago, a nobleman blamed the sins of his past life, but how can he prove it and believe it? At the very least, if this country was a sacred country with devout religion, it wasn't that. So I was angry.

A nobleman's statement about 'crimes from previous lives' did not work.

In the aftermath, there was a backlash.

– Why do we try to blame our past lives on those who were born with good fortune?

“....”

– Why do we even want to pollute our souls...!

“....”

- In fact, I suspected that it was because they themselves knew that this was wrong.

It's a good thing that Lee didn't make a speech in front of the people of the empire.

A voice full of appeal. Even the duke himself sympathized for a moment, but what would the reaction of the people of the empire have been if they had heard this statement?

While I was feeling fortunate that I could once again kill Daniel on the spot, the voice continued to speak.

- The current emperor abolished slavery. Isn't this because he also knows that it is wrong to divide people into different social statuses and serve the same people?

A conclusion has been reached.

"...As expected, you are a dangerous person."

- haha.

Daniel laughed lightly. A burst of laughter spread through the air, as if all the burden had been thrown off.

Each of them held their weapons and looked around at those who were aiming at them, then stretched out their hands and snatched the communication device from the leader. Perhaps because the duke had allowed the conversation, the guy obediently handed over the communication device.

There was no way he could see the person on the other side, but Daniel said while staring straight at the communicator.

“Now that I think about it, there was a time when I said something stupid.”

The day I insisted on performing a rebellion against the duke.

“It was said that anger cannot be passed on to future generations, so if it takes too long, it will die out.”

- ....

“I will correct this. The pulse of the revolutionary army is uninterrupted.”

Only then did the duke understand the identity of the sense of discomfort.

- So, nothing changes, does it?

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 146

146. plaudite!(5)

“Why would I tell this dangerous story openly? Are you sad that you will die soon? “It can’t be.”

Why did I insist that I would move in this situation?

The duke’s head must be complicated by the dizzying situation. One of the few moments when the duke’s judgment was short-lived.

Was it really a coincidence that he moved at that moment?

“I was sending hints to the Duke all along.”

- ....

“I left a successor.”

bang! The sound of a desk being struck was heard from beyond the communicator.

Daniel added, giggling like a child who succeeded in a prank.

“I handed over all the knowledge, including the remarks I made earlier. “Even though time was tight, the extremely loving and bright child absorbed it in an instant.”

- ....

“This will not lead to personal anger towards the emperor, but it will continue the anger from ‘unfairness.’” won

The revolutionary army’s core ideology is ‘creating a world where everyone is equal.’ In the sense that it is for the majority, it would be the same as already gaining the support of the majority. Who would reject an ideology for their own sake? I wouldn’t know if they were drawn to the group and gathered together.

Paul: Since the importance of education was emphasized to the child, this ideology will continue unabated even when the child becomes the leader. In the end, ‘anger’ will continue as long as the unfairness of the ‘class system’ does not disappear.

- ...You used my troops to cut out the cancerous mass inside the revolutionary army.

“Didn’t you use my troops to put pressure on the emperor before? “Did they use the emperor to keep the revolutionary army in check?”

He shrugged, mentioning an incident where Saerin once incited one of the leaders of the revolutionary army to lose 1/9 of its strength.

From a distance, those who gathered in anger against the emperor are no different from the cancer of the revolutionary army. As the first leader of the revolutionary army, I have to sort this out for future leaders.

In the end, half of the troops that Daniel brought out committed embezzlement and corruption, such as stealing and selling self-made bombs from within the revolutionary army, or were buried in the goal of killing the emperor, ignoring even the words of the leader and trying to pressure them again. This means it was a lump.

“And His Excellency the Duke was also an obstacle blocking the revolutionary army’s path forward.”

– I understand that you are trying to cut off the leash that is tied to me with this, but... do you think that if I take your life, you will let the rest go? And those with dangerous ideas? That’s foolish.

“Why do you think I came to the point of death, even leaving a successor?”

The premise is wrong.

Daniel did not come here by creating a successor and sacrificing his life just to remove the cancerous lump.

– What is that...

– This is an urgent report from the duke!

“Oh, I guess the news has finally arrived.”

Before I died, I wanted to see the Duke’s reaction and die, but thanks to this, my small wish came true.

You can hear the rustling sound of paper unfolding. Soon, an exasperated shout came out through the communication box.

– Daniel!!!!!!

“Looking at the reaction, it looks like we did the right thing.”

Why did Daniel come here?

It was to focus the Duke’s attention on this area.

So that the majority of the troops near the Duke are concentrated here. So, to make it easier for the revolutionary army to move their base and raid each of the duke’s territories to deal a blow to his troops.

In the end, the main purpose is to get rid of the peacock, and the secondary purpose is to clean out the cancerous mass inside. The goal is to shake off the duke, but the life of this leader should be put on the line as bait.

“I have calculated to reduce it by at least half, but I am curious what the result will be. “Did that really happen?”

Since this side also loses half of its troops, the other side also needs to give up at least half of its troops to make ends meet.

Of course, the pitfall is that what this side loses is useless troops.

“For your information, the Duke’s location is the very last location in the raid plan.”

– Kwaaaang!!

No sooner had he finished speaking than an explosion was heard from the communicator.

Daniel raised the corner of his mouth lazily, looking at the confused enemies around him.

Perhaps the revolutionary army will not be able to kill the duke. Still, his troops will definitely be reduced. That's enough.

While the revolutionary army is gaining strength, the duke will also be busy gathering himself and will not be able to target the revolutionary army.

"The leash must be definitely taken off. "Isn't that right?"

By now, the revolutionary army's base will have already been moved.

Since the leader of the revolutionary army, who was the only one who could contact, contact, and follow the duke, dies here, there is no longer a link between the revolutionary army and the duke.

'It's impossible to create new links.'

The first leader died due to the 'duke's betrayal', so there would be no way for the second revolutionary army to join hands with him.

It is truly a clean break.

- Kill me now!

Daniel smiled faintly as he looked at the weapons coming at him from all directions, thinking that it would be enough to kill just one person. Perhaps because of the thick scarf, it appears to be targeting the heart instead of the neck.

Out of frustration, I let my thoughts out and provoked people to think that I was a person who must be killed. So as not to distract the duke's senses and prevent him from taking me hostage.

Daniel himself was well aware of the value of the first leader.

‘Self Paul.’

This brother dared to use the killing department under the pretext of protecting the future of the revolutionary army.

Who within the same revolutionary army has the authority to arbitrarily decide the life or death of others? I, who polluted the ideology of the revolutionary army, will die along with those who are buried in personal emotions, so I hope that you will move forward with pure anger towards the ‘unfairness’.

No regrets.

Oh one thing. There is something that bothers me.

‘Not getting back the gift I gave to my mother.’

That one thing bothered me.

***

Could it be that the love for one’s children is connected by one thread?

Even before the news of Daniel’s death was delivered, the mother who lost her child was already crying.

Who helped me realize my ideals? When did I say I wanted your sacrifice?

Are you really saying that you, a clever person, did not understand the meaning of what this mother said when she gave me the scarf she knitted herself?

“You foolish thing, you foolish thing...!”

What is left for someone who has lost their beloved spouse?
What did you think I had seen and lived so far?

I didn't have to make it big, so I just hoped to survive.
Watching my son grow and live has been the joy of my life.

I killed you.

“I am a sinner...”

I feel like my heart is being torn apart. Even if my body and limbs were torn apart alive, it wouldn't have been this painful, so I couldn't control my body and ended up sitting down and shedding tears.

You always thought you could never beat me. One thing was wrong.

Is it for no reason that it is said that no parent can beat his child? If I could have defeated you, I would have defeated that dangerous revolutionary army a long time ago.

I was eventually defeated by the way he moved around with a lively face and full of motivation, so I just left him alone.

“I am a sinner...”

I shouldn't have said that in the first place. They should have refrained from making comments that might raise questions about the caste system, and even if they had said it, they should have at least prevented it from being put into action.

The poison that was demanded from you in the name of a gift was this mother's last stubbornness. The safety of Daniel, the son who risked his mother's life as a hostage to secure it. That was all, and now even that has failed, so what's my life worth?

"...This mother will soon follow."

What should I do if my child, who has many enemies, is still being harassed by vengeful spirits even after he dies?

He took out the poison that he had once requested from Daniel. I hear footsteps outside, so I pour it into my mouth and swallow it without hesitation.

Not long after the liquid passed down my throat, I quickly felt drowsy. As he fell asleep without pain, he felt Daniel's own efforts as he could not bear to give his mother false medicine, so he smiled faintly and closed his eyes.

'Did you know that a mother would not know what her child is thinking?'

This is a child born after being born for ten months and raised with love. As a mother who anxiously watched every step he took, I knew what was going through my son's mind.

He probably wanted to leave this mother to the next leader after his death. He probably said it already. The sound of urgent footsteps like that is the proof.

"...But my brother directly asked me to look after my mother. "Even if I postpone the arrangement a bit, I have to personally come and apologize and take care of it."

The sound stopped at the door.

smart.

“This is Paul, Daniel’s younger brother. “Can I come in?”

“ ....”

“...Why are you answering... Mother? “Are you there?”

“ ....”

“Mother?”

“ ....”

“...Excuse me!”

Suddenly. The door opened and it seemed as if it had found me with my eyes closed, as if it was about to rush in at any moment, but then stopped.

“...Please call Representative Iram.”

“Yes?”

“Come on!”

An urgent, muffled voice is heard, as if submerged in water.

Is it necessary to entrust oneself to an organization without a son? It is clear that as time passes, my handling of it will become an embarrassing burden that I cannot bear to throw away.

‘My son must retreat like this until the end...’

It seemed like he had planned a new start, but he left behind the remnants of the past like this.

—That was the last thought she had.

***

[Side: I will protect you even if I die]

The revolution of the revolutionary army must not succeed. Because Deon is under the protection of the current emperor.

However, it cannot lead the duke to victory. Because the Duke is trying to kill Deon.

A situation in which both the revolutionary army and the duke are trying to harm Deonhardt.

So I calculated it.

Takkak. Just right.

Chess pieces go back and forth. The thick, bony fingers stretched out comfortably grabbed the pieces of both sides and moved them alternately.

While the mysterious green eyes watched this, the horses moved without stopping.

The black horse attacks the white horse. The white horse does not lose and eats up the black horse. The black horse pushes the white horse away and sits down, but then the other white horse pushes it away and sits back down.

Sigh.

“Checkmate.”

The leader is dead.

Cruel picked up the black king that was lying on its deathbed and rolled it in his hand. A pensive green eye captures the chessboard where the war ended.

The winner is White, but considering the pieces remaining on the chessboard, Black has the advantage. Unlike White, who lost most of his operational troops, Black only lost some of his pawns.

A revolutionary army that has lost its head but its main strength is still alive.

A duke who has lost his troops but whose head is still alive.

The two must be pitted against each other. It would be best to completely destroy oneself, but since that won't happen, it would be better to calculate the damage so that it is as big as possible. If you're too busy taking care of yourself and don't even pay attention to Deon, it's a success.

Cruel was prepared to die from the moment he stepped onto the tightrope of psychological warfare with the Duke. It wouldn't be surprising if his life were cut off at any time, so why would we believe it and wait until Deonhardt dies naturally?

He acted as if he was only going to live for today, and so he had the distant future in mind.

'We have to find a way to keep Deon safe even after I die.'

A future in which Cruel himself is not dead.

Looking at the times, it would be difficult to achieve complete safety, so at least some of the countless dangers in the child's path should be removed. So I shook my head.

Since you can't do anything about the Demon World, just look away. With his eyes set on the Empire, he looked for the child's greatest threat.

'The duke and... the revolutionary army.'

Even a single duke would be in trouble, and even the revolutionary army.

The gloom was short-lived. Daniel is the leader of a group called the Revolutionary Army, and the Duke is a skilled politician who rivals the Emperor. They are not bound by promises based on affection or trust, but are joining hands for their own benefit.

The calculation was done quickly.

'Did the revolutionary army leader's mother say she wasn't feeling well?'

After investigating, they also found that hemoptysis....

Cruel thought for a moment that he paused as he remembered his weak younger brother.

'The leader said he doesn't know about it yet.'

I heard that at her request, all the revolutionary troops serving her kept quiet. But even that has its limits. It is certain that it will be discovered at some point.

You don't even have to look at the psychological shock that the leader of the revolutionary army would suffer at that time.

I gave an order.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 147

147. plaudite!(6)

[Keep a close eye on Daniel. The location doesn't matter, so if he goes in or comes out of somewhere, let me know immediately.]

That would be the moment I found out about her hemoptysis.

There's no way he's sane. Daniel, whom Cruel investigated, was usually rational, befitting his bravery, so it can be said that that was the only moment when his mind wavered.

Even a fool would know that this is an irreplaceable opportunity.

'The only problem is when you find out.'

If we induce Daniel's actions, we can adjust the timing, but that is not as easy as it sounds, and it is impossible to move carelessly in a situation where the duke's eyes are on you.

Rather than taking risks and reaching out to the revolutionary army, Cruel decided to respond flexibly to the given situation.

[Will you contact me when Deon is in the empire or when he is away?] It would be best if you contacted me when Deon was around, but it doesn't matter if you don't.

The main purpose is to engage the revolutionary army and the duke, and the secondary purpose is to prevent the leader of the revolutionary army from killing Deon. Those two premises were among the conditions that influenced the latter.

Contrary to his detached attitude, as if heaven was helping him, the call arrived when Deon was at a banquet hall within arm's reach of the Empire.

Cruel looked at his younger brother, who had suffered an accident and his physical condition had deteriorated rapidly, even hemopting blood, and then he sighed faintly.

'I'm sorry Deon, but I still have to take it while I have the chance.'

Because your body is in a mess, you become more determined.

Please understand that I will not allow the leader of the revolutionary army to directly touch your life.

I forced myself to open my mouth that wouldn't come out easily.

"Go tell Deon. "Just for today, don't just wander around the streets and go home right away."

Since that child never listened to me after 'that day', he will end up on the street again.

You have to move one step faster than Deon. Cruel put on his robe and quickly moved away.

“That boy... just have a conversation about the festival near that guy and mention Day Street to the east.”

“Are you really paying me to do just that...?”

“okay.”

As soon as the news came in, the movements of the leader of the revolutionary army were being reported in real time. Currently, he is wandering the streets of Day in a dazed state.

We need to have him and Deon run into each other. In that sense, it was not difficult to induce the child to move.

Cruel’s plan was simple.

‘The key is to show the hemoptysis of someone who ‘looks like he’s about to die’ to the head of the distraught revolutionary army, making it look like his mother’s.’

So it makes you impatient.

‘Did he say that the reason he created the revolutionary army was to show his weakened mother the ideals she dreamed of before she passed away?’

When I think about this, it’s strange that I don’t become impatient.

However, in order to start a rebellion, you must meet the Duke, who is your biggest helper. The duke would be against it. The reason the duke joined hands with the revolutionary army was not to support them but to keep them in check.

Perhaps, seeing Daniel half out of his mind, he may let his guard down and try to suppress him by revealing his arrogant personality.

No, it definitely will.

‘Because the duke is arrogant.’

Cruel has been watching him closely for quite some time.

That’s why I assure you. The duke’s weakness is arrogance.

Arrogance catches one’s guard down, so it’s likely that the mask he’s wearing will crack and show cracks. There is no way the leader of the revolutionary army, who was quick to notice this, would not know this.

‘I will definitely find a way to escape from the duke.’

Since you are a smart person, you will quickly realize that you will not escape unscathed.

After this, it is the responsibility of the leader of the revolutionary army. However, after thoroughly researching him and understanding his tendencies, Cruel was able to roughly predict what choice he would make.

So, it was such a bold move.

‘...And determining ‘who’ in ‘showing the hemoptysis of someone who is about to die’ will determine the success of the secondary purpose.’

It would be best if that ‘someone’ is Deon, but if not, you can send a candidate you have looked at in advance.

As for why he chose Deon... Cruel knew that Daniel was a softer person than he thought.

‘Especially if you meet him while he has not yet recovered from the shock of seeing his mother’s blood, even if the opponent is Deon Hart, he will not be able to survive that day.’

Since we cannot prevent the group called the Revolutionary Army from targeting Deonhardt, we target its individual leader.

Although he doesn’t seem like he will live that long, it would be better to keep him from targeting children at least until then.

In the first place, small things like this can determine a person’s life.

[It would be best if the image of the child bleeding would remain deep in his mind and Daniel would not be able to personally take Deon’s life from then on.] [If he hesitates to kill Deon when he encounters him from that day forward, that is enough

. ]

[The worst assumption would be to let them go safely on the day the panic occurred and then try to kill them without any regrets when they encounter each other....] In the last case, it would be a wasted effort, but when viewed as a whole, there is no harm in trying. does not exist.

Above all, even in the final case where failure is assumed, Deon will eventually return safely.

So I tried it.

“Cough.”

“...?!”

After giving money to passers-by several times to encourage the child to walk, the path finally overlapped with the leader of the revolutionary army. Cruel did not miss the opportunity he had managed to seize, and, aiming for the moment when the two passed by, gave Deon a moderate shock to his back and pushed him.

Blood comes out of Deon's mouth and Daniel, embarrassed, starts to panic and immediately picks up Deon and carries him.

Cruel watched from a distance and turned his back only after they disappeared from sight.

‘With this, all the seeds have been sown.’

I'm a little worried about my younger brother who vomited blood, but judging by the attitude of the leader of the revolutionary army, he'll probably go on a rampage to save his life, so I guess it'll be okay. The treatment will be done in secret, and even if he is found out and his colleagues demand that he be killed, the child will eventually come back alive.

As I said again, the leader whose reason has been clouded cannot kill Deon today, and his colleagues who are guilty of hiding his mother's hemoptysis will have no choice but to lose to him in the end.

‘Let's go back.’

The growth of the seed is not related to the life or death of the person who sown it, so even if Cruel Hart is dead or absent, it will germinate on its own.

So let's go back now.

'I have to continue my daily life.'

The duke is still trying to take the child's life.

Now is the time to look at reality again and live.

***

"The last breakwater has collapsed!"

The blinders of disaster have disappeared! Disaster will soon wake up!

An old shaman woman who was looking at the stars in the deep night sky of a small mountain village suddenly shouted. Ignoring the granddaughter's words to calm down a little, the loud shouting finally seemed to wake up the villagers, and lights began to come on in each house one by one.

People come out rubbing their eyes. A look of slight annoyance was directed at granddaughter Ran, who was attending to her grandmother, as if requiring an explanation.

"We have to move town!"

"...What is going on?"

"...Grandma is right this time. "I need to move quickly."

It was a very sudden remark in the middle of the night.

However, since he had already saved his life by moving villages based on the advice of the shaman grandmother once during the 8 Years' War, the villagers looked at Ran's expression instead of saying what nonsense that was.

Her face was somewhat pale as she comforted her grandmother and examined the stars in the night sky.

"...Where do I have to go?"

"Esperanes!"

"When should I move?"

"Within a week!"

Should I say I'm glad it's not tomorrow?

But still, there is not enough time.

"There is not enough time to move from village to village... Shouldn't we erase traces like we did during the eight-year war? If you give me a little more time to prepare..."

"No! "I will be here first before the disaster becomes active!"

"But..."

"Yekki! no!"

"Everyone calm down for a moment."

As expected, it was Ran who calmed down the somewhat overheated atmosphere.

She held her grandmother's hand tightly and looked back at the villagers who looked troubled and anxious.

“It’s definitely sudden. “Would you mind if it were 10 days plus 3 days?”

“Ran!”

“If it’s 10 days...”

I checked them as they nodded and turned my attention to the grumpy-looking grandmother.

“Do not worry too much.”

“Ran, but...”

“Even if we do meet them, they will come before they are active, so no one will die.”

“...Okay, you must have something in mind too...”

As if she was convinced, the grandmother’s momentum also decreased. Ran bowed her head to the villagers while supporting an old woman who seemed exhausted from shouting in the middle of the night.

“You were rude late at night. “We’re going in now, so you guys can go in and rest.”

***

It is said that the king of the Shan Kingdom somehow persuaded the monarchs of other small kingdoms to make him a vassal state. Not to be outdone, the Rweche Kingdom also promised material support and protection and placed the Kingdom of Taehon under its command...

‘With this, the number of kingdoms in the human world has been reduced to four.’

The empire of Rwece Esperanes.

The demons, who welcome fighting among humans, would not be very happy because their forces were united without bloodshed. Perhaps the monarchs of those two kingdoms were aiming for that.

“Deacon, the cleaning of all floors has been completed.”

“Good job. “I’ll take a look, so you can go in and rest.”

Remember continued his thoughts as he walked down the hallway.

The current empire is in a noisy situation in another sense. Deonhardt, an honorary marquis and the third hero of the Empire, has gone missing.

Opinions are divided even within the empire, as it is not easy to be sure whether it is a betrayal or whether someone has put one’s life in danger.

Because of that, like now,

“Deacon.”

“Ah, Lord Rien. “What’s going on?”

“Deacon... do you really not know your master’s whereabouts?”

“How can this old man know something that even Lord Lien doesn’t know?”

There were many people who asked me about Deonhardt’s whereabouts.

How could a mere butler managing a mansion know the whereabouts of a knight who had a master-servant relationship with him?

Nevertheless, perhaps because of his unique, suspicious atmosphere, Remember remained silent in response to the people who kept asking him questions.

Dan, who had been quietly observing the situation, spoke cautiously.

“Since he even disappeared leaving behind the knights... isn’t it also intentional?”

“...It seems like they would have abandoned the country, so it’s not credible.”

Remember, who heard Lien’s words, smiled kindly, as if looking at his cute grandchild.

“Do you really think so?”

“....”

As if caught off guard, Lien closed his mouth.

Even though Deonhardt seemed to hate her and push her away on the outside, she knew that there was an underlying trust and affection that she could not understand.

‘Of course, trust seems to be greater than affection.’

I turned my head and looked out the window. Perhaps due to the disappearance of their lord, a group of murderous knights, who had recently become depressed, came into sight.

...I usually don't like the idea of having accidents, but seeing him drooping like a dog in the rain just now doesn't bother me.

'It seems like I've become attached too.'

...More than that, where is my lord really?

When I looked at them, I felt like my mood was sinking, so Lien took her eyes off the knights and thought of something else.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 148

148. Cruel Truth, Cruel Fate (1)

The captain has disappeared.

Thanks to this, I was able to escape the battlefield for a while and return quickly, but I was not happy at all.

The members of the Order of Murderous Demons, sitting huddled together in one corner of the backyard, each sighed deeply.

“Where have you gone with that body?”

“You weren’t kidnapped, right? “If... if that’s really the case... is the kidnapper providing proper meals?”

“Are you planning on eating in the meantime?”

“It’s important.”

“That’s right.”

“....”

I wonder if our Marquis is eating properly.

“...More than that, what should we do now? “The Marquis isn’t there either.”

“Shall we go look for it ourselves?”

“I don’t know if we’ll be able to find it, and more than anything, we’ll catch it quickly. “It’s called desertion.”

“Then what?”

The answer was given by Cleter.

“...Let us follow the Emperor’s words only until the Marquis returns. “Now that the hero has disappeared, he must be looking for him diligently.”

***

Deonhardt was dying.

The extreme stress that came from the combination of the terrible memories that had been forcibly separated was added to the stress that had accumulated so far, and this caused the work.

My fever rose like crazy and I was coughing up blood all the time. The situation of crossing between life and death several times a day did not change even though I was safely transported to the demon world.

“Do something!”

Lirinel, who was the one responsible for transporting Ben to the Demon World, came running after receiving the signal from the necklace given to him and scolded Ben.

Her voice sounded like she was about to burst into tears.

“This is the realm of the mind. All I can do is... cool your body and replenish your blood...”

“You’re the doctor! “I’m Demon’s doctor, why!”

When I saw him lying in the snow, I was scared and brought him to the demon world. I moved around with only one thought in mind: that as soon as I get to the Demon King’s Castle, everything will be resolved.

Lirinel wanted to burst into tears right away, but she knew that crying wouldn’t solve anything, so she picked up a handkerchief instead. I looked at my bloodshot, bloodshot, unfocused eyes to see what on earth I was looking at, and then wiped the corners of my eyes. There was blood on the handkerchief.

“If that doesn’t work, try using magic, please...”

The sight of her not even blinking when the handkerchief touched her eyes made her look like a doll whose soul had been lost, and she began to cry.

“You’re crying...”

I’m sure I just wiped it, but the blood is flowing down again, leaving a trace as if it was never clean again.

Tears would have been better, but the red liquid flowing down her cheeks was so unsettling that she had no choice but to cry like a child.

“...The ban on magic has not been lifted yet.”

“Say it now!”

“and.”

Ben looked down at the 11th Corps commander, who was grasping his neck with both small hands.

The voice continued in a choked voice, perhaps because the throat was strangled or because of emotions.

“If it had been possible to solve the problem with magic, I would have used it a long time ago.”

Magic or whatever, the top priority is Demon’s life. He who escaped from the Demon King’s Castle and went to the human world because he already received a strong signal, would he now think about what to do next? If there was a way, I would have used it right away.

That means he really has no choice.

A doctor who can’t do anything with a patient in front of him. The most miserable demon here was none other than Ben.

“More than that, Demon, it seems like your body is starting to heat up again. Could you please let go of this hand?”

“....”

“...Thank you.”

I walked towards Demon, pretending not to notice the arm that had fallen helplessly.

My whole body is boiling. With a fever so severe that he thought he was going to die, Ben chewed his lip until it bled and took out a towel he had soaked in ice water.

He muttered as if he were lamenting while wiping his scarred upper body, which he had taken off to relieve his fever.

“Unfortunately, the Demon Lord was out at this time...”

He said he would come back soon after hearing the news through the communication box, but why hasn't he come yet?

I sent Ed to wait for a detailed explanation, but did something go wrong?

—As soon as I could think of this, the Demon King appeared right next to me.

At the same time, the strong smell of grass filled the room.

The Demon King who appears with Ed looks around the room, which is hot due to the heat from Deonhardt, and at the crying Lyrinel, and then sets his sights on Ben.

A cool and calm voice came out softly to the point where Deon would have asked who it was if he had heard it.

"I'm a little late because I received the news and received herbs from the Fairy King. How is your condition?"

"...It's serious."

The mouth that was supposed to report the patient's condition in detail uttered only one word.

Ed, who belatedly saw Deonhardt's condition, let out a faint groan. The Demon King rolled his eyes and glanced at Deonhardt without paying attention, then quietly nodded.

"It seems so. "I have been receiving various herbs as needed, but I don't know if they will be effective."

"...."

"You should know better what these things are. Ben, please classify it properly and use it."

Fairy herbs are effective, so if you use them well, you may be fine. The first thing to do is to bring down that fever.

Ben's movements became busier.

Ed was the one who took over the role originally played by busy Ben. He soaked the towel in ice water again, took it out, twisted it, and wiped Deon's upper body.

The Demon King, who had been standing still and watching this whole scene, took a stride.

After just a few steps, he stands at Deon's bedside and extends his hand. A finger delicately wiped away the blood flowing down from the corner of the eye, and a low voice continued.

"What on earth did I see?"

I wonder if she's crying this painfully.

I waved my hand to roughly shake off the blood and looked into the eyes of the human whose eyes were wide open and seemed as if he was about to suffocate due to high fever.

Eyes with bloodshot whites and even redder eyes, as if they were looking at something.

The answer came out without difficulty.

"...You quit."

Turning away and rationalizing.

The Demon King paused for a moment, then straightened his slightly bent back as if nothing had happened.

Meanwhile, Ben hurriedly approaches, holding a small pill that seemed to be made of medicine. The Demon King took the medicine from him.

“It’s a fever reducer.”

“Well... I think sedatives or sleeping pills would come first.”

...Still, it might be a good idea to give it a try.

I approached Deon with the medicine I was looking around for. Meanwhile, the corners of his mouth were messed up, as if he had vomited blood.

Ed quickly turned his head to the side and wiped his face again, gesturing with his hand and calling out to him.

“Daemon. “Can you hear me?”

“ ....”

“I need to take this medicine, can you take it?”

“ ....”

“...that can’t be possible.”

In the first place, there is no way you can feed him something when he is vomiting blood.

Fairy herbs are effective, but this is a problem.

For a moment, he thought about forcing his mouth to open and force the medicine down his throat, but since it could cause serious trouble, the Demon King gave up and threw the medicine away.

The small bead containing Ben's efforts rolled across the floor and disappeared somewhere.

"...I don't think you'll die easily, but it would be troublesome if you die already."

It's finally starting to be fun, but I don't plan on losing this long-awaited opportunity like this.

"Yes, it would be fun to check your fate at this time. "Will you die here or not?"

"...Demon King."

Ed realized what he was trying to do and urgently called the Demon King. On the contrary, seeing Ben silent, the Demon King stretched out his hand and covered Deon's eyes.

—All creatures living on this earth have a certain lifespan.

In general, the majority of people die before they reach their designated lifespan due to problems such as unexpected accidents, so much so that people who have lived their entire lifespan are said to 'enjoy their life in heaven.'

Are you dying now because you have reached the end of your life span, or are you dying from an 'unforeseen accident'?

'If it's the former, no matter how much I reduce the fever, calm it down, and put it to sleep, it will die.'

If not, I will buy it.

Even if it is the latter case, the current actions of the devil can be seen as changing the 'future' of a human being's 'death'. Because it saves people who could have died.

Changing the 'future related to life' requires a considerable price.

'The price is 90% of the magical power I have.'

If it were other demons, they would have felt significant inconvenience in carrying on with their daily lives, but the demon king is different. Not only is it inconvenient, but even after doing this, you will probably have the most magical power among the demons.

How can we compare 90% of the water in a basin with 90% of sea water when the sizes of the bowls are different in the first place?

If we were to say the problem, would it be that the difference in magical power between the second-ranked demons is not as overwhelming as before and is narrowed to a difference of a bucket of water?

'Ah, it will be quite annoying when dealing with heroes later.'

...Well, let's think about it then.

I concentrated my mind.

"...get a good night's sleep first."

What you need now is mental rest.

Bright light from the hand filled the room.

***

The Demon King, who left Deon Hart sleeping lazily, immediately summoned the corps commanders. To be precise, 'those who are familiar with demons'.

The corps commanders who could not come due to work were connected to the communication table, and with Ed, Ben, and even Hien in attendance, he softly opened his mouth.

“Who is the demon that Demon Arut trusts the most here?”

“....”

A silence fell, heavier than ever.

I definitely thought they would fight each other, claiming it was him, but the situation was completely different from what he expected, so the Demon King raised an eyebrow.

“Why is there no answer? Daemon asks who he trusts most. “If you don’t know whether to trust me, it’s okay to be your closest demon.”

We need a demon to help restore Deonhardt’s broken mind.

Fortunately, if the demon he trusts or is closest to is by his side, he will quickly stabilize.

But...

‘Deonhard, how on earth have you been?’

Those proud people are just looking at each other and can’t move forward.

He looked around at the demons who could not easily step forward, and then fixed his gaze on the 2nd Corps commander, Develania, who was the source of information.

“Develania. “Didn’t you guys respect and follow Daemon a lot?”

“...because feelings are not always two-way. “I can assure you that I like Demon-nim second to none, but if you ask me whether Demon-nim trusts me the most, I think it would be difficult to give a definite answer.”

“He always treated us with an invisible wall.”

3rd Corps Commander Ashild nodded and added.

Silence fell again.

The Demon King, who was speechless due to the unexpected situation, quietly turned his head and looked at Ed and Ben Hien. As if Deon’s behavior was no exception to them, each of them shook their heads as soon as their eyes met.

The Demon King opened his mouth a few times, but instead of speaking, he let out a deep sigh and waved his hand.

“Okay... I understand, so let’s just disperse.”

***

The memories that came pouring out when the wall collapsed were roughly resolved, but that does not determine whether the mind is healthy or not.

As soon as Deon Hard woke up, he began frantically gathering information.

How can your body be healthy if you are doing this and even giving up eating?

The bloody tears stopped and the frequency of hemoptysis decreased to a level similar to before, but the fever that the Demon King had managed to keep down rose again as soon as he came to his senses.

Pop.

Cold sweat broke out.

Deon Hardt paid no heed, moving with unsteady steps and standing in front of the huge door on a certain floor.

A place I've been to once before. A place where information compiled by 2nd Corps Commander Develania and 4th Corps Commander Idelia is located.

"open it."

"Daemon?"

"right now!"

A sound like an animal growling came out of my throat.

What kind of spirit is this for a subject who is pale and dripping with cold sweat?

It is completely different from his usual moderate appearance. Maybe he was nervous because he was sick. The gatekeepers hurriedly opened the door.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 149

149. Cruel Truth, Cruel Fate (2)

0 The corps commander took a step back after stopping for a moment.

As if the rumor that he was suffering from a high fever was true, the gatekeepers could not help but stiffen in shock at the intense heat they felt from him as he passed by.

‘No matter how you look at it... I think you should go to your room and rest rather than the library...’

Putting aside the worries of the gatekeepers who couldn't reach him, Deonhardt entered the library.

The librarian on one side saw him and jumped up, but Deon passed him as if he didn't even see him and stood in front of a familiar bookshelf.

I was able to find the book I was aiming for without difficulty.

[Information about the heroes of the current empire]

[Author: Idelia Develania]

I urged Idelia and Develania to provide information about Cruel. If I didn't have it, I uncharacteristically forced myself to scrap it together and give it to them. The answer was that it would take a long time due to the vast scope, but even that was forced to shorten the time.

I have no intention of sitting still while the two of you move to gather information.

Deon reached out and took out a book. Skip the previous content at random and stop at the part where Cruel's portrait appears. My eyes met with familiar green eyes.

[(Former) Fourth hero. Cruel Hart. (Currently deceased. Information to be deleted.)]

[Known to be related by blood to the third hero, Deon Hart. Although he is known not as a person of the emperor, but as a person of the duke who opposes him...]

Yes, I closed the book here.

It takes strength in your hands. Deon read the following without even blinking.

[...He acts as if he is suppressing the Duke's orders rather than following him faithfully, such as distorting or offsetting them.] There is no way the Duke would have entrusted Cruel with handling important information, so even if the orders were given, they would be of the type to kill or bury someone. It must have been an order from .

So who was the person the duke mainly wanted to kill?

Although his head was not working well due to the heat, Deon was able to find an answer even in that situation.

"...under."

I just laughed.

“Hahaha... Ahhahaha!!”

I feel like I’m going crazy. I’m really going crazy.

I never thought I would resent the head that praised Cruel for being so smart when I was young.

If I had read this when Cruel was alive, I would have laughed it off and wondered if that person would be me. Then, unable to overcome his discomfort, he began to investigate.

The Duke, who gives orders to harm someone, and Cruel, who acts as a filter between them.

And since Cruel died with me wrapped around me, the suspicion that arose from the first clue was put to rest.

There can be no clearer evidence than this.

Deon laughed maniacally, spitting out the blood that was surging in tears.

It was me.

You were protecting me.

From the perspective of the head of the aristocratic faction, who would be the most annoying person?

He is known as one of the emperor’s favorite swords and his faithful dog. Unlike other heroes who act openly, he moves underwater, making it difficult to predict where he will land.

Isn’t that Deon Hardt?

“Then why did you do that?”

Habits built up over ten years are trying to ignore the truth that is difficult to handle. When I consciously stopped this, the direction of my thoughts reversed and I chose to blame Cruel.

Because there were still unanswered questions.

“Why did you send me to war?”

If you’re going to die like that, then you better not abandon me. When did you send me to the battlefield and why are you trying to protect me now?

Did you feel guilty later? Then I don’t have to feel guilty. It was probably just an action to alleviate the guilt of an abominable hypocrite.

“Daemon.”

“...Demon King.”

I raised my head feeling a little dazed.

The Demon King, seeing Deon’s face filled with all kinds of indescribable emotions, including anger, frustration, and guilt, slowly lowers his gaze as if assessing the state of his body. The clothes soaked in cold sweat were a sight to behold, but when white feet wearing nothing came into view, he clicked his tongue.

Even though he spoke as if he hadn’t seen anything for a while.

“I heard you asked for information about Cruel Hart.”

“....”

“The kids were amazed at the vast scope...”

I looked into the red eyes with deep saturation.

“Did you say that because you really couldn’t specify the range you wanted, or was it because you couldn’t tell them the range you wanted?”

“....”

“It’s the latter.”

Well, Cruel Hart is also related to the Empire’s third hero, Deonhardt, so I had to be selective about what I said. If you are not careful, it will be discovered that you are the same person as the commander of Corps 0.

It may be difficult to think clearly when you’re so heated, but it’s helpful to know what to say and what not to say.

Seeing Deon with new eyes, the Demon King couldn’t just leave the patient he saved for a moment like this, so he smiled softly to reassure the other person.

“Then tell me. “It’s okay if it’s me, right?”

“....”

“I’ll help you.”

The Demon King knows his identity and hides it, so there is nothing to worry about.

Perhaps because he felt a little relieved, Deon’s senses were overtaken by the heat and he staggered closer to the Demon King. He raises his trembling hand and grabs the demon king’s collar as if he is hanging on, and he stutters to open his mouth.

Like a child, unfinished sentences came out randomly.

“So, Cruel died instead of me... We obviously had a bad relationship...” “

...Aha.”

The Demon King, who had carefully picked up the gibberish words and put them together, realized what was happening and let out a low exclamation.

“okay. “I will investigate.”

“Thank you...”

“So let’s get some sleep for now.”

I didn’t touch it directly, I was just grabbed by the collar, but the air touching my skin was hot. How did I walk all the way here in this condition? And barefoot.

I touched Deon’s forehead with my fingertip. Only after slowly closing his eyes and lifting him up as he fell, did the Demon King remember that his magical power was no longer what it used to be.

‘Before, even if I used this level of magic, I didn’t feel anything at all.’

Now I can feel my magic power decreasing a little.

Still, I rolled my eyes again and looked at the poor human, thinking that I should restrain myself from using the magic I had already used, even putting Deon Hart back in the room.

Even though he was asleep, he narrowed his eyebrows and was breathing heavily, as if he was suffering from a fever.

“Deon Hardt.”

I softly whispered his name as if to check that he was asleep.

“Do you know when humans fall?”

He lived as a demon king for a long time and saw the corruption of countless people.

Oh yeah. It would be more correct to say ‘broken’ rather than ‘corrupted’.

“It’s when you lose something precious.”

Precisely when there is nothing left to lose.

When people are cornered and cornered and can’t even breathe, they are completely broken and corrupted. There will never be another person as creepy and scary as him.

He quietly whispered cruel facts as if he were reading a book.

“You lost the only person who truly cared for you.”

It will probably be difficult to find a person like him ever again.

Who would want to give their all for others?

“Poor Deon.”

The Demon King laughed quietly.

“I’m really alone now.”

***

[Bring the information to me first before you bring it to Daemon.] After receiving the information he had researched from Idelia and Develania and organizing it appropriately, the Demon King went to Deonhart with only a single document summarizing everything. .

Knowing exactly what information Deon Hardt wanted, he asked everyone in the room and without hesitation placed the document in his hand on Deon's lap.

"The amount of information Develania and Idelia sought is so vast that it seems difficult for you to find it, so I summarized it. "Is this the information you wanted?"

"...."

Deon sits on the bed and looks at the Demon King for a moment, then picks up the paper on his lap. His red, bloodshot eyes began to read the letters.

The whites of my eyes, which were fine until I read the first letter, were only a little bloodshot, but as they move back, blood lines appear and the corners of my eyes turn red. Is it because it's sad?

...No, this was anger.

"Ha haha...."

A terrible murderous intent towards oneself.

Originally, Cruel was supposed to participate in the Eight Year War. The documents changed in the middle and I had to go.

“|...”

The cause is the Duke. He touched the papers and sent me away.

The family I killed with my own hands sent several documents to the imperial palace requesting corrections in the early stages of the war to bring me back, but they couldn't wait and even sent people, but they all remained silent, so there was nothing they could do.

Of course, the person who cut off communication between the families was also the duke.

“What have I done?”

I want to kill him.

I wanted to die. I wanted to send this useless body to death in the most cruel way right now, but I couldn't easily end the life that Cruel had saved by sacrificing herself.

Deon Hart, who closed his eyes to drown out his emotions, was unable to hold on and threw everything he could get his hands on the floor, forgetting that he was in front of the Demon King.

Wow!

A flower pot thrown into the air shatters and splinters fly out. Deon looked at a large piece of debris that had ended up on top of his blanket, then stretched out his hand.

The attempt to catch it failed due to the Demon King's actions, which stopped him by grabbing his wrist.

Thanks to this, Deon seems to have come to his senses a little and looks up to follow the hand holding his wrist and makes eye contact with the Demon King. The red eyes were overflowing with suppressed murderous intent and anger.

“...Did the Emperor know this?”

Hmm. The Demon King let go of his hand, crossed his arms, and tilted his head to one side.

I intentionally left out the information about ‘why the duke did what he did’, but they really didn’t ask. Well, I probably don’t have time to think about that right now.

Well, it doesn’t matter because it’s comfortable and good from this point of view.

“I even worked as a businessman, so there’s no way I wouldn’t know.”

“haha.”

Deon slowly wiped his face.

I think I know why Cruel said that.

If I hadn’t knocked down the ‘wall’ in advance, when I got the current information, the wall that had reached its limit would have collapsed and I would have been even more stressed than I am now.

“Cough.”

It’s a truth and stress that even I, who had already knocked down the wall and managed to fix, can’t handle, but what would it have been like if it had been combined with what was pushed in by the wall collapsing?

'Just because the wall collapsed was the difference between life and death.'

Needless to say, he was definitely dead.

'You protect me even in death.'

The more I know, the more murderous intent I have towards myself, so what should I do?

I can't easily throw away the life you saved.

As my anger reaches its peak, I become calmer. Instead of throwing things or screaming again, Deon quietly raised his head and looked into space.

'brother.'

Sorry.

I know that I don't have the right to apologize and that there's nothing I can do by just saying I'm sorry, but I can't think of anything else to say.

'I shouldn't think like this anymore.'

Really.

'I want to die.'

As if the suppressed emotions have been replaced by blood, a fishy liquid gushes down the throat. After hearing the Demon King click his tongue and say, 'Oh my...' at the unexpectedly large amount, Deon surrendered himself obediently to the darkness encroaching on his consciousness.

***

The world made up of misunderstandings and illusions was shattered.

***

As soon as Deonhardt regained consciousness, he started looking for the Demon King.

The Demon King quietly looks up at Deon, who is standing in front of his office desk as solemnly as when he submitted his resignation letter, and picks up a nearby communication seat. A few signals went through and someone received the communication.

“Ben, come to the office door right away.”

– yes? Where are you hurt?!

“no. And don’t be confused as it is not the office but ‘in front of the office door’. “I’m waiting there until I’m called.”

A look of puzzlement at the incomprehensible command was clearly conveyed through the communication device, but since he was not the person he should be concerned about, the Demon King ignored it and hung up.

After putting down the communication desk, he raised his head again and looked at Deon. Their eyes met and his dark eyes hid under his eyelids, which were curved like crescent moons.

“Then I’ll ask you now.”

“...”

“What brought you here?”

Even though I’m not feeling well.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 150

150. Cruel Truth, Cruel Fate (3)

The answer did not come right away. The low, red eyes seemed to be looking towards the floor, but then they looked at the Demon King again and then looked towards the floor again.

Soon, a slightly cracked voice came out in a rough tone.

“Do you know why the duke did what he did?”

“...no? “How can I know the true intentions of mere humans?”

Could it be that he noticed something? The Demon King's nerves were tense.

Fortunately, Deon lowered his eyes and said, ‘Is that so?’ as if he had just thrown it away, then raised his head again and asked the question that seemed to be his original purpose.

“...Can't we turn back time... with magic?”

“Hmm?”

The Demon King, who was surprised by the unexpected question and realized for a moment what the question was asking, arched his eyebrows as if he felt sorry.

“Magic is not omnipotent. “There are areas that can never be touched no matter what, and the most representative ones are raising the dead and turning back time.”

“...I see. All right.”

“....”

The demon king, who was expecting hemoptysis and seizures and was about to call Ben, who had been waiting outside, stopped at the reaction, which was much calmer and calmer than expected.

Deon calmly turns around, as if he didn't notice the devil's signs. He walked towards the door and looked back at the Demon Lord for a moment before putting his hand on the handle.

“I'm going to go to the human world for a while.”

“....”

Instead of an answer, an embarrassed silence returned, but as if that was enough, he placed his hand on the doorknob.

The Demon King expressed his belated approval by not bothering to capture him.

....

“Daemon!”

When I opened the door and came out, the person I met was Ben.

The man who was restlessly pacing in front of the door suddenly approaches, looking angry as if he had been waiting. There was blatant concern as his gaze scanned his body's condition.

"Are you feeling okay? I still have a bad fever, so if you move like this..."

"...."

"...Daemon...?"

"...."

It wasn't long before I felt something strange.

Ben, who had been walking at Deon's pace and unable to help him as he stumbled, and was giving advice filled with concern, stopped in place. I am standing here, but I am walking forward without stopping as if I can't even see him.

Ben, startled by the sight of someone seemingly lost, hurriedly walked to the side.

"Daemon, can you hear me?"

"...."

"Daemon?"

"...."

"Daemon!"

"Uuuuk cluck!"

Blood dripped down the hallway.

As usual, urgent action had to be taken, but Ben couldn't bring himself to move.

‘What kind of look...’

I could see the oppressed life so clearly in his eyes as he wiped away the blood with the back of his hand.

Although he seemed calm on the outside, his senses, which had been trained while living in the Demon King’s Castle, were warning him not to mess with him now, so Ben could only stop in place and watch his back as he walked away.

***

The emperor does not lie.

If you ask someone who thinks he is a tyrant and calls himself evil whether he has done something bad, what reason would there be to lie? Since I am a wicked person, I will answer with confidence.

Even if that wasn’t the case, there were many reasons for the emperor not to lie.

‘The emperor... is obsessed with being an emperor.’

Stigma was like that. He doesn’t acknowledge his status and is obsessed with proving it.

After hearing that, I saw it. The symbolism of the emperor’s manner of speech, manner of speech, etc.

He was not trained as a successor from a young age to become an emperor, but he appeared to be too perfect for a man who ascended to the throne by rebelling.

‘I don’t know why I didn’t know about it all this time.’

Everything that makes up Edoard Desert is blatantly proclaiming that he is the emperor.

So he will most likely not lie. Because those in the highest positions have no reason to lie.

‘Even if you commit a crime and say you did it, no one will say anything. Because that’s power.’

Of course, this is an extreme example, and if the emperor made a mistake, he would be scolded by the nobles, but Deonhardt was confident nonetheless.

All lies, unless they are white lies, are generally ugly.

The emperor was a human being who never became ugly even if he died.

Before discussing the nobility of the ‘emperor’ who should not be ugly, this is his innate nature.

Jerk.

Footprints were left on the white snow. Deon Hardt, standing in front of the ornate main gate, looked at the gatekeepers who were on high alert and glaring at him, then immediately lifted the hood of his robe.

“...Hart...honorary Marquis?”

“I want to meet your Majesty.”

“Oh, please wait a moment...”

“Right now.”

“...!”

The unidentified person who walked to and from the imperial palace in a carriage without saying a word was the missing Honorary Marquis of Hart.

This alone is making me lose my breath, but I want to see Your Majesty right now.

Normally, he would have gotten out of the way without hesitation, but the atmosphere surrounding him was unusual. Moreover, every time he exhaled, his breath contained more heat than the others...

“...Are you feeling well?”

I think you have a fever.

“I don’t think it’s within your authority.”

The answer that came back was cold.

The gatekeeper, who was startled, looked at his colleague, nodded, and stepped aside. At the same time, his colleague also turned his body to get out of the way.

“Excuse me. Please come in.”

In the first place, he had no authority to stop Deonhardt.

The Honorable Marquis Deonhart is someone whom the Emperor has given permission to visit in any form at any time, and now that he has returned from disappearance, the first person he must meet is none other than the Emperor.

***

“Where is your Majesty?”

“Who... Honorable Marquis Harhart?”

“answer.”

“He is in the office. Please wait a moment and I will contact you... Marquis!”

Office. It's the office.

Without even having to remember, Deon moved forward without hesitation.

In fact, he was more familiar with the office than the throne room. For him and the emperor, who had secrets that should not be revealed, an office with fewer people and good soundproofing was much more comfortable.

How long did he walk? It wasn't long before he came face to face with the knights guarding the office door.

The knights, who had been looking at the intruder who dared to enter the emperor's presence with harsh eyes, soon realized who they were and opened their eyes wide. With the return of the missing hero, the vigilance became even more relaxed.

“...Marquis? Are you really the Marquis? “I'm sure you went missing...”

“I need to see your majesty.”

The knights fell silent at the sudden remark.

The atmosphere calms down. The boundary that seemed to have been broken rose sharply again.

One of the silent knights cautiously opened his mouth.

“No matter how much you are the Marquis, it would be difficult for you to just leave like this. At least ask His Majesty for permission...”

“That’s it.”

The door to the office, which seemed sturdy, opened.

“Your Majesty has given permission.”

Nemeseus, who was looking at Deonhard with disapproval, turns his body that was blocking the door to the side and nods for him to come in.

Deon walked past him and entered the office without any sign of regret or hesitation. With Nemeseus’ voice commanding the knights from behind to retreat, I looked straight ahead and my eyes met with familiar golden eyes.

“...You don’t look well.”

The emperor, who immediately noticed Deonhardt’s physical condition, put down the pen he was holding and began to remove the documents on the desk.

“Why did you bring my body to find my luggage when you could contact me through a communicator?”

I didn’t say anything like whether I was okay, whether I needed to rest, or that I would call the palace doctor.

There must be a reason why he came to me with such unreasonable force, and more than anything, it was because I couldn’t say anything else with that look in his eyes.

As I waited leisurely, organizing the documents so that the other person could speak comfortably, Deon Hardt, who had been unable to speak easily by opening and closing his mouth several times, finally spoke with difficulty.

“...Did you know?”

Stop.

For an instant, the hands that were organizing the documents stopped.

There was no need to ask what it was about. The emperor let go of his hand holding the document and raised his head to meet the red eyes that were looking at me as if waiting for an answer.

“okay.”

“...why.”

The simple answer without any lies or excuses actually makes my voice tremble.

The Emperor expressed his approval. That alone would have been enough, but Deon couldn't help the emotions that were boiling over him, and he spoke out with doubts and resentment.

“Why did you do that?”

“....”

“If only you had let me know, if only you had at least given me a hint, if only you had at least refused my request!”

What if the emperor had chosen something else instead of silence during the 8-year war?

“Everyone would have survived...”

Parents would not have suffered the tragic death at the hands of their children, and older brothers would not have sacrificed themselves for their younger siblings.

And Deonhardt wouldn't have wanted to kill Deonhardt.

The last words were almost a whisper, but the emperor, who understood them with his excellent hearing, slowly opened his mouth.

"Are you blaming Jim now?"

"...."

"The direction of resentment is wrong. In the world of nobles, not knowing is a sin. "The resulting damage is also your responsibility."

Is there an adage that says you should pretend to know something even if you don't know it?

"You are still a child."

Even the emperor clearly gave him a chance.

Should we call it the price of silence? The emperor offered a better option: a solid title, jewels, and fiefdom. The person who defied all of this and wished for the extinction of his family was none other than Deon Hardt himself.

"...but."

"...."

"It was all your choice, and Jim just listened to your request, but if you ask why, yes."

"...."

"I guess it was based on my desire to acquire a talented person like you."

Actually, there was something else I originally wanted to say.

Do not blame others for your sins. Do not take other people's sins upon yourself. Judge objectively and think about who you should really blame and hate.

Nevertheless, putting all that aside, if I were to say that as the reason why I called myself a villain, then it would be fine.

'It's just a whim.'

No, in fact, it is ambiguous to even consider him to be a villain. The emperor can never be considered a good person.

Deonhardt's expression hardened.

He was silent for a moment, as if suppressing his rising murderous intent, then looked at the emperor with cool red eyes and spoke as if chewing out each word.

"I am not the type of talent your Majesty thinks I am."

The emperor did not bother to answer.

***

After Deonhart returned, Nemeseus, who had been watching the situation the whole time, quietly opened his mouth.

"Why did you just send it away?"

I don't know much about the circumstances, but I do know for sure that Deonhard harbored an indescribable hatred for the Emperor.

That alone was a reason not to just let Deonhardt go, and especially the moment he saw his eyes turning around, his senses as a general sent a strong warning.

“It will definitely come back later.”

“...I know Jim too.”

There was no way the emperor did not know this.

He is the emperor who always meets Deonhardt whenever he travels to and from the demon world, looks directly into his eyes, and determines whether he is neutral or not. He spoke to Deon Hardt here today and noticed that he had completely turned his back on me.

Nevertheless, if you were to ask why I sent it, it could be said to be a whim.

“If you do it, why!”

“Well...”

But that’s the reason and I can’t say it out loud.

Nemeseus would definitely be angry. I won’t understand. So, if I had to pick a specific reason... okay.

“Doesn’t he resemble Jim?”

Killing my family in a moment of misunderstanding.

“Of course, the difference is that Jim had a bad relationship with his family from the beginning.”

“ .... ”

As the emperor had intended, Nemeseus could no longer say anything.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 151

151. Cruel Truth, Cruel Fate (4)

The snow fell without stopping, as if I was not tired.

Deon Hardt arrived in front of his mansion hurriedly through the snow without any intention of putting on his hood, which had fallen backwards due to the heavy snowfall. He spotted me from afar and stopped in front of the noisy gate.

“The Marquis is back...?!”

The gatekeeper could not finish his sentence.

Deon Hardt's knee buckled. He falls to his knees as if collapsing. The situation was not directed at a specific person, but simply occurred because the body could not withstand it.

Even though I knew that, I couldn't help but feel embarrassed. One of the gatekeepers, startled, was about to approach him in a hurry when Remember, who did not know when he came out, passed him and approached Deon.

“Marquis.”

The old butler, who was also kneeling because he did not dare to look down at his master, let out his usual old voice.

It's a normal voice, but it makes me nervous for no reason.

"Can you hear me? Wake up. "It's cold."

"...Remember."

"I will take you to your mansion, so please forgive my rudeness."

Remember, who had reached out to support him, paused for a moment as he felt the sudden heat.

He pretended not to notice for a moment and tried to support him, but his attempts were thwarted by the owner's actions of holding on to both shoulders and almost clinging to him.

'....'

The white hand that was tightly grasping the butler's shoulder trembled painfully. The tremors that started in my hands gradually grew, and soon my whole body began to tremble.

The desperate calls continued, like a helpless child clinging to its only adult.

"Remember Remember...."

"...Yes, Marquis."

"My I...!"

A suppressed cry, not knowing whether it was a scream or a sob, came out with difficulty.

I thought there was nothing more to break since my spirit was already broken after going through all the trouble in the Demon King's Castle, but it seems that wasn't the case.

Funny enough, I'm finally starting to realize it.

'I killed my family.'

They killed innocent family members and made them die.

Maybe it's the heat or the emotions that are too much to handle, but my eyes are spinning. At the same time, the direction of the accident jumped out at random.

Now I understand why I asked the emperor 'why' at that time. I was hoping for an excuse.

It's not like a petty feeling of betrayal. What kind of idiot would trust a monarch who is supposed to be for everyone in the first place? At least it wasn't Deon.

just.

'If you say you were swayed by someone's intentions from the beginning.'

The Emperor's affirmation is an affirmation of the Duke's actions informed by the Demon King.

In other words, it is an affirmation that they calculated and intended to use me thoroughly from the beginning.

'I'm becoming so miserable.'

There is a difference between using something just because the situation happened to be right and using it intentionally by creating a situation from the beginning.

Participation in the 8 Years' War among numerous 'exploits'. Thinking that it was not someone's calculated situation, he chose to 'exterminate the family' and moved on.

'What kind of life have I been living...?'

Maybe that was someone's intention.

My fingertips were cold.

In a seemingly precarious and dangerous situation, Remember stopped watching him and patted his back with one hand, aimed at the back of his neck with the other hand and lifted it up.

puck.

"...!"

Amid the silent astonishment of the gatekeepers, Deon Hardt's eyes slowly close.

At some point, Remember, who had lost his strength and was supporting the collapsed body, cast his gaze towards Dan, who was watching the situation nearby.

"Take me to your room."

"...yes."

Despite the confusion in his eyes, he strides over and hugs Deon.

Remember watched him enter the mansion, then turned his head again and saw the gatekeepers, who were dumbfounded by the situation.

...There's still some work to be done. You kneel down and cry in this open space.

“You... haven’t seen anything today. Do you understand?”

“Yes...yes!”

***

Deon Hardt locked himself in his room. I didn’t even eat food.

The food that Remember had carefully brought inside the door without even touching it had dried out and had to be collected again, as it never came out. At times like that, where the stamina comes from, the sound of breaking things resonates violently throughout the mansion, putting the mood of all the occupants on thin ice. It was made with

He even strangled himself or pointed something sharp at his body, and Remember often had to rush in to stop him.

It was like that today too.

“Marquis, this is enough, right? “Stop hurting this old man and stop now.”

“Huh huh—.”

After receiving a call from the personal limb attached to Deon Hardt, Remember immediately rushed in and overpowered the owner who was about to hit a piece of glass on his forearm.

My body, weakened by complete lack of food and drink, was unable to resist properly and was held powerless.

“Marquis...”

I know that he only targets non-vital parts because he can’t bear to die, but as a butler, I can’t just sit by and watch my master get hurt on my body. Remember took the sharp piece of glass from Deon's hand and let out an inaudible sigh.

"This old man does not know what the Marquis has seen, experienced, and learned."

"...."

"But we can't keep doing this forever. "He's not even going to die."

I don't know what bound him to life.

Most likely, something he saw or a truth he learned made him want to die and at the same time held him back from dying.

"So, come to your senses now. "You have to live."

"...."

Dan, who was watching this whole scene from the hallway outside the open door, was silent.

The state of Deonhardt, who was devastated and had no idea what had happened, was truly a sight to behold. It was a shock.

'I came to follow disaster.'

Which aspect of the author is the cause of disaster?

I thought that a mental shock would reveal the appearance of a disaster, but the current Deon Hart is just a weak human being eroded by emotions and struggling, and the appearance of a 'disaster' was nowhere to be found.

I decided not to doubt it.

‘Did I guess wrong?’

When I see this, confusion comes to me.

In the meantime, Remember, who had laid the calmed Deon down on the bed, quietly closed the door and came out.

Even with Deon Hardt out of sight, Dan couldn’t move easily. Until Remember, who couldn’t wait, urged him to get out of the way.

***

The confusion was resolved sooner than expected.

The deacon’s words had an effect, as a few days later he gathered himself and came out of the room.

“Are you out already? “You don’t rest anymore.”

“ ....”

Deon passes by Remember, who is worried about his health, and stands in front of Dan.

A gaunt face and deep dark circles, as if the new weight had been lost. In addition to the completely different atmosphere from usual, Dan flinched at the extremely dry expression. For a moment, Dan tilted his head as if he had something to say.

“Marquis...?”

“ ....”

Remember, who was looking at the two in turn, quickly found a nearby room suitable for a private conversation and guided them, and Dan, who was rolling his eyes here and there in the space left alone, couldn't overcome the awkwardness and opened his mouth.

"I'm feeling fine...."

"What am I to you?"

"...."

Deon, who was quietly looking at him, spoke.

"Why are you following me?"

I know that Dan's purpose is to follow him. The person he wants me to be is not a gentle person, but a rough one.

However, since he had no idea what the reason was, Deon decided to make a different decision based on his answer and waited for Dan's answer.

"...."

Dan looked at Deon's sunken eyes and fell silent for a moment.

After following him and learning various things here, Dan realized that he had a talent for speaking. So, I could have come up with an answer to this question in a fancy way, but...

...I just didn't want to do that.

"The person who ruined my life."

He gave a raw answer.

Dan smiled softly at Deon, who was silent for a moment as if embarrassed by the unexpected answer.

“And the person who will achieve my goal and the goal itself.”

I resent you, but at the same time, I like you.

I know you are not guilty. I know very well that what was wrong was the witch doctor grandmother who spoke the wrong way, the village people who were swayed by her words, and ultimately, some evil adults who wanted me dead.

‘But without you, my life would have been pretty easy.’

You would not have appeared in the future predicted by the shaman grandmother.

That’s why I felt resentful, but I was also glad that it was you who was the one who could give the mean adults a proper blow. It couldn’t have been better because during the short time I followed you down and set up the upper level, I encountered all kinds of dirty people.

‘disaster? It’s good. very good.’

Let this dirty world be destroyed.

“...Come with me.”

Deon, who had been silent, held out his hand.

Dan is neither the emperor’s person nor the devil’s person, but he is the only person of mine who has followed me solely for Deon Hart. It wouldn’t be a bad thing to have at least one person like this.

Dan, who saw the bright red eyes, smiled faintly.

Instinct was speaking. That's the 'disaster' you wanted to see.

...iced coffee.

'In the end, no matter how many excuses I make.'

I guess I'm destined to fall in love with you in the end, just as the shaman predicted.

Yes, in fact, any reason I came up with was quite weak as a basis for following 'disaster'. Looking at this, it seems like fate really exists.

Otherwise, I wouldn't be overwhelmed by the sight of you right now.

We held hands.

Deon pulled up the corners of his mouth and drew a dry smile.

I was going crazy alone in my room, and after coming to my senses after hearing something from Remember, I was worried the whole time.

'What should I do?'

What can I do to atone for you, Cruel, even just a little bit?

A way to atone for my brother and suppress the desire to die right now. After thinking about it for a bit, the answer came quickly.

'plural.'

[You have to live.]

[...Yes, you have to live.]

Let's get revenge.

I'm going to kill them all.

***

And Deonhardt asked.

[You've met me in the past, right?]

Dan nodded.

***

Early part of the Eight Years' War.

Dan was moving with the village elders following the instructions of the shaman grandmother.

Did they say that this village will soon become a sea of fire, so we need to move the village quickly? Young Dan only remembered 'having to move' and ignored the rest.

And a short break during the trip.

Dan, who had curiosity and great stamina like other children, quietly got up and walked around.

Because he was an orphan who lost his parents at a young age, it was not difficult for him to secretly leave his place as there was no guardian who would notice and pay attention to him even when he was away.

After walking through the grass for a long time, not far from where he started, he came across a boy covered in blood.

“....”

“...cough.”

He was vomiting blood.

Instead of opening his mouth carelessly, Dan carefully examined the other person.

White hair and red eyes. Extraordinarily white skin. I thought his eyes resembled those of a cat, but as if he were really a cat, he was glaring at Dan with his fur bristling and snarling.

“...who?”

“....”

Yes, there was no way I could answer...

Instead, I lowered my gaze and looked at the other person's doubles. It was hard to see because it was covered in blood, but I was able to figure it out right away without having to wait too long. This is an outfit I once saw from afar while traveling.

The uniform of regular soldiers in the Imperial Army.

The moment Dan realized this, he blurted it out without even thinking about his age.

“A soldier? “A child like this?”

“....”

The child's eyes narrowed with embarrassment and irritation.

"do you want to die? go away."

"...You have a foul mouth."

"Show me what a real foul mouth is? Fuck you, you little bastard, if you don't go away right away, I'll cut off your limbs and rip your light snout off..." "

Stop it! I'm sorry I was wrong."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 152

152. Cruel Truth, Cruel Fate (5)

Why do children speak so harshly?

Is this the harmful effect of war? It seems like the swearing I've heard here is worse and more numerous than the swearing I've heard since I was born...

Dan hesitantly backed away with a pale, tired face.

"...Are you okay alone? From the looks of it, he looks like he's been left behind and he's vomiting blood..."

"Do I have to tell you twice? Really porridge...."

"Ahh, okay. "I'm really going."

However, the feet do not fall off easily.

How long would a child like that survive in this war?

A small and delicate body, and a sharp attitude that seems to have gone through a lot of hard work. Dan was so anxious about all of this that he couldn't take a few steps before turning around and speaking to the boy who was glaring at him warily.

“Um... is the thing that caused you to vomit blood an injury or a chronic illness?”

“You really, you bastard...!”

“If you have a chronic illness, I recommend hiding it.”

“ .... ”

“You’re an ordinary soldier, right? “In fights between ordinary soldiers, the most formidable ones are targeted first.”

While on the move, I once watched a battle in a valley from the top of a mountain.

“Whether you swallow the blood or stuff a cloth in your mouth, it would be best to hide it at all costs.”

“ .... ”

***

I hear someone coming down the stairs of the mansion.

Remember, who was standing in the central hall, looked up and saw Deon and Dan following him. In the atmosphere that seemed to have been sorted out, the old man’s unique playful voice flowed leisurely as always.

“Are you leaving?”

“yes.”

“I was just about to teach you some internal affairs, but you’re leaving out talented people like this. “I am also very old, so I don’t know where to find a replacement.”

Deon chuckled at the playful grumbling of the old man who noticed that Dan was being taken away. It was a dry laugh.

“Now that you’ve decided to teach me, what have you been teaching me so far?”

“I was only entrusted with processing documents that were superficial and auxiliary, leaving out all the important information. “In the beginning, we were entrusted with processing fake documents to determine whether he was a spy or not.”

“...Then why on earth did Dan change the filing system...?”

“Isn’t it possible to understand how the document system works just by processing fake documents? In that sense, Dan was an excellent candidate for deacon.”

“...I’m asking this again, but what is Remember’s true identity?”

“I am the butler of the Marquis Hart.”

“....”

Deon, at a loss for words, began to walk again, having stopped for a moment.

Remember passed me and spoke to me behind him as he headed toward the door.

“Aren’t you taking the Murderous Knights with you?”

“It’s easy to get caught in large-scale movements. Besides, they are the ones who will not move quietly even if they die soon...”

“That’s right.”

“So, I’ll just leave...”

“Then what about Lord Lien?”

Are you not taking me with you?

Deon stopped and turned his head to look at Remember.

“She is so upright. It won’t fit where I’m trying to go. “You know.”

Don’t ask questions you know.

Remember, who smiled kindly despite his irritated voice, spoke softly to Deon, who was just stepping outside.

“I’m so glad you recovered.”

“....”

Deon paused for a moment and walked out without even looking back.

Dan, who had stopped for a moment to watch his steps seem to be a little faster, nodded in greeting to Remember and hurried after him.

....

“There’s a place I’d like you to stop by before you go.”

“...I’m not asking where I’m going.”

Deon, who was loosening the reins in the stable, just rolled his eyes and looked at Dan.

The eerie red gaze scans the expression. Dan smiled calmly in front of him.

“I think I know.”

“...So where would you like to stop by?”

***

The people of a small village in a mountain valley who were just about to pack up their belongings and move were frozen by the unexpected visit of an uninvited guest.

“Was it here?”

“yes. It’s usually a quiet place, but today it’s very chaotic.
“As if... they were about to move.”

The man whom the shaman grandmother referred to as ‘disaster’ and Dan, who said he would be a ‘pawn of disaster’.

Dan puts his hand on his sword and looks around at the people without any emotion. He spots the person he was looking for and raises one corner of his mouth. He kept walking and approached an old man who was trembling with fear and anger.

“Long time no see.”

“you you...!”

“I suddenly remembered it. “I came here because I wanted to see my grandmother’s face at least once before I put her prophecy into practice.”

Dan, who had said that far, burst out laughing.

“Then why are you shaking?”

Shamelessly.

He took a step closer with an eerie expression that didn't contain any emotion, then lowered his head and whispered softly into the grandmother's ear.

"You are the one who made me like this."

I shouldn't have said something like that so carelessly. I went astray like this.

It is not for nothing that shamans are reluctant to talk about the future. Dan smiled as he kindly showed him the consequences of breaking the shaman's unspoken rules.

"I won't kill you. "You must live to see me fulfill your prophecy."

"...."

"So live your whole life in guilt."

I hope you live your whole life as if you are suffocating, and at the very last moment, die in a more painful way than anyone else.

Words are like blades. Even though it was not directed at him, Deon felt his heart ache and gently closed his eyes.

He opened his eyes when someone approached him.

"...!"

"...what?"

Deon opened his eyes and snatched the hand that was trying to touch his shoulder, glaring at the other person with full of frustration.

He had no intention to kill and had received help before, otherwise he would have put the knife in his head a long time ago.

Without even trying to free his wrist, Ran looks at Deon. When Deon, who couldn't wait, was about to get annoyed, she whispered softly in a voice that no one else could hear.

"Watch your eyes."

"...eye?"

What does snow suddenly mean...

Moreover, it is not clear whether you are talking about snow falling from the sky or snow that is a part of the body.

There was no way he would have noticed Deon's questioning expression, but Ran pretended not to notice and tapped the hand holding his wrist to signal for him to let go, then quickly blended into the crowd and hid.

'...Even if you ask me, I won't say more.'

This is what an excellent shaman said. Deon, who remembered her words in the back of his mind, turned his head and looked at Dan.

He was standing three steps away from the trembling grandmother and looking in this direction.

"...Are you done?"

"yes."

"Then let's go."

The two people suddenly disappear, as if they had suddenly visited.

Ran walked among the people leaving the village at a much faster pace than before, and muttered softly as he watched them riding away.

“Please don’t commit too many sins.”

This too may be just a vain wish.

***

0The corps commander brought a human!

In the Demon King’s city, where all kinds of rumors and news were abuzz due to the war, a rumor that overwhelmed them all spread.

If the people he brought in were prisoners or hostages, there wouldn’t have been such an uproar. However, since that human seemed to anyone to be the assistant to the commander of the 0 Corps, the demons had no choice but to go on a rampage in many ways.

[I’ve never even been able to wash feet, but a human is helping me?]

[I won’t forgive you in the name of demonism.]

[De-se.]

I was jealous.

[How capable is he that Daemon himself brings him here?]

[They even say he’s a human. Other than Demon, I am the first proper human being who is not an intruder.]

[If possible, I would like to have a conversation with them at least once.]

There were also demons who showed pure curiosity.

[Bringing humans into the Demon King's Castle?]

[Daemon-sama is a special case, but other humans are a bit...]

[Daemon-nim brought them directly, so wouldn't it be better to kick them out rather than kill them?]

Showing conservative tendencies There were also demons who expressed a shocked reaction.

And Deon Hardt, the hot potato of the Demon King who drew all these reactions.

"I heard that your fever has gone down, but are you really feeling better?"

The altar was separated and the two of them were face to face with the Demon King alone.

Deon, who answered by nodding roughly, lowered his head, clenched and unclenched his fist for a moment, and then looked at the Demon King again. It's been a while since the red eyes that lost their vitality and completely hid their emotions faced the devil's eyes.

A low voice came out slowly.

"Once upon a time, a shaman predicted my future."

"Hmm... It seems like telling me that will make it come true, right?"

“...yes.”

If I were to be honest, yes.

The Demon Lord, leaning back comfortably in his chair and crossing his arms, touched the corner of his mouth as if he was interested.

“It’s a prophecy.”

“....”

“In case you get confused, I would like to add that prophecy is different from seeing the future.”

Prophecy is an absolute thing that cannot be changed no matter what you do.

Looking at the future is a fluid thing that can be changed depending on how much effort you make.

“Prophecy is the future seen and uttered by those who can break the rules of the world. “It’s that absolute.”

“That means that the shaman...”

“He was a person with enough skill to break the rules of the world if he wanted to. “It’s great for human subjects.”

The topic of conversation continues with no meaning or intent. If it had been anyone else, he would have cut off the conversation right away, asked for the main point, or gotten annoyed, but the patient Demon King willingly rolled his eyes and accepted Deon’s words.

Deon, whether aware of this or not, lowered his eyes as if thinking for a moment and then slowly asked a question.

“So does that mean you can make prophecies?”

The Demon King is the most representative person who can break the world's rules.

The Demon King raised an eyebrow at the mention of 'you' and laughed for a moment as if it was funny.

“of course. Not only me, but all demons can basically make prophecies.”

The race that was born from the errors of the world, ignoring the world's intentions, is the demon race.

The fact that he was born from the power of the Demon King is proof that he can break the rules of the world, but how can it be that the birth itself is like this?

Deon furrowed his eyebrows as if he didn't understand.

“But... I've never seen demons make prophecies...”

“They just don't. “Looking at a future that can't be changed is meaningless and not fun, right?”

Prophecy becomes the basis for even attempts to change it.

It would be better not to make the prophecy at all than to experience something so unpleasant.

Rather than that.

The Demon King smiled happily while looking at Deon.

‘We always exchanged only our goals and kept small talk to a minimum, so I wonder what kind of wind was blowing.’

This isn't as bad as it is, or rather, it's more fun, so I have no complaints.

Deon, who had been silent for a moment as if he was finally getting to the point, slowly opened his mouth.

"Before... when we caught a hero candidate who had infiltrated the Demon King's Castle, do you remember delaying the reward because we didn't want anything right away?"

"of course."

"I want to use it now."

"However much."

The Demon King nodded willingly.

His eyes showed interest that he could not hide, but since he meant no harm to me, Deon spoke without hesitation.

"Please completely destroy the empire."

"...what?"

The Demon King's eyes opened wide.

Deon paid no heed and continued talking like a runaway carriage.

"I've thought about it. "Is there any way to get revenge on the duke and the emperor?"

What is the Duke's most precious thing?

What did the emperor consider most important?

“Empire. The emperor always said that the burden is the empire. Toppling the empire would mean overthrowing the emperor. “We need to investigate the duke’s side more, but he probably also values the empire.”

Because the duke seemed to be aiming for the emperor’s position.

So, if you completely destroy the empire, you will be taking revenge on both of them.

If I succeed in my goal of destroying the empire, their lives will easily fall into my hands. If you directly end that life, revenge becomes closer to perfection.

“So I dare ask. “Please completely destroy and trample the empire so that it can never rise again.”

“...Haha!”

“....”

“Ahahahaha! Hahahahaha!! I never thought I would use it like this! very good! Do you like it!”

In the end, the Demon King couldn’t suppress his laughter and burst out loud.

It’s truly the best! That’s an awesome request! As expected, I chose the right toy!

“You said more investigation was needed on the duke’s side, right? For that purpose, feel free to do as much research as you want! “I’ll help you!”

“That purpose...?”

I was so excited that I made an uncharacteristic mistake.

I smiled and hurriedly added, pretending like nothing had happened.

“You know that request is too big compared to the contribution you made, right?”

“...yes.”

This is not a request worth making just for one hero candidate.

“I will conquer the human world.”

Deon Hardt’s eyes darkened as he realized what his intention was.

He got down on one knee. He lowered his head and bowed his head.

“...I will follow you with all my heart.”

“good.”

Foolish human being.

If the emperor is a hypocrite, then the devil is a hypocrite.

The Emperor is the same on the outside and the inside, but the Demon King is different on the outside and the inside.

Compared to the devil’s sins, the emperor’s sins are nothing more than fireflies in front of the full moon, deceived by the outer shell.

The Demon King smiled, closing his eyes as if to hide his true feelings.

at las.

After a long patience.

The toy fell into my hands.

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 153

153. Deon Hart, the traitor to humanity (1)

Obtained general command from the Demon King.

I also volunteered to do the paperwork.

Perhaps because only satisfactory things have happened recently, the Demon King willingly accepted the offer.

[Since this is the human you brought in yourself, it will be useful anywhere.]

I received permission, so it's okay. Whether it was material or spiritual – I ignored the murmurs that followed.

He also requested an investigation into the duke. The Demon King, who knew the situation, personally went to investigate.

And I am.

'If the general commander is looked down upon, the command center and control will not work properly.'

In the past, if there was a problem, I could afford to go to the human world, but now there is no such thing as a second option for me.

I thought.

‘You shouldn’t look funny.’

If you look funny, you die.

The demons view my physical durability and combat power separately. In reality, it was not like there were such demons, so I accepted it more easily. That’s why, even though he showed signs of weakness, such as hemoptysis, he has been controversial until now.

But what if you completely turn to the Demon Lord’s side and see him face to face and fighting every day?

‘Demons may be a little dull, but they are not stupid.’

Maybe you will find out. The fact that Deonhardt is not as strong in combat as we thought.

If this fact is discovered, what happens next is obvious.

I will fall down the ranks of the demons, and the position of general commander that I have achieved will become a scarecrow. It was obvious that the demons would have no mercy towards ‘humans’ who were low in rank.

The reason I was able to be at the top of the demons until now was because I was recognized as strong before I had the protection of the demon king.

‘So keep the fighting to a minimum.’

Even if you fight, don’t drag it out, keep it short. By being as cruel as possible, you have to not only bring the atmosphere in this direction, but also bring out fear in your allies.

Don't let anyone analyze me. So don't even think about nonsense.

'You can't show overwhelming force, so you have to show at least overwhelming fear.'

Demons who are oppressed by force, oppressed by force, and determine rank by force will naturally mistakenly believe that the reason for their fear is 'force'.

'I shouldn't become friends with demons.'

Bonding and fear have opposite properties. When you face fear, your bond decreases, and as fear decreases, it becomes easier to build bonds. Also, if the bond is solidly built, even if you face fear, the fear may disappear...

To me, the bond with demons is poison.

'Let's build an unrivaled image.'

Fortunately, my image before was one that was not easily accessible, so there is no problem.

'Have you been subject to unintentional misunderstandings and misunderstandings before?'

Now it is my turn to intend it myself.

Just doing what you did before is not enough. Not being ignored and building more walls than before. The purpose of all these actions is to make you not doubt my powerlessness.

'For someone to whom being up there seems as natural as breathing, they wouldn't even dare to doubt its location.'

Coincidentally, Deonhardt remembered one person from that premise.

‘Stigma Primiro.’

The time has come to put to use what I learned from him.

***

Winter passed by in an instant.

How many things have happened so far, with the snow melting and the grass sprouting.

It wasn’t a very long time, but the events that happened were so outrageous that Paul stared at the tree forming new leaves outside the window with a new expression on his face.

‘The most outrageous news I heard recently was that Deonhardt was on the devil’s side.’

At first I thought it was a rumor.

That’s right, Deonhardt is a hero who faithfully followed the emperor’s orders to the point where he was called ‘the emperor’s dog.’ Even the emperor cared for him so much, so who would dare imagine his betrayal?

‘But it was true.’

As if waiting for this news to become known, the death of the fourth hero, Cruel Hart, was also announced. The news that he was the one who was with Deon Hardt until the end is a bonus.

People’s minds were shocked after they realized the context.

[Deon Hart killed Cruel Hart.]

[To be exact, he killed him and fled to the Demon World.]

No one doubted him.

Deon Hart hated Cruel Hart so much. Everyone knew Deonhardt's hatred toward Cruelhardt, as he openly showed his hostility without any intention of hiding it.

'The announced timing is so elaborate that I'm suspicious... but let's move on.'

When this news became known, the continent was greatly shaken.

A traitor to heaven who even killed his last blood relative. A traitor to humanity who turned his back on the human world and sided with the demon world.

It is truly a terrible sin.

Almost everyone was in shock. The majority couldn't help but be angry at his sin, and some shouted that his inhuman appearance was exactly the limbs of the devil. From the beginning, all kinds of malicious rumors, including that he was on the devil's side, were poured out, but soon they lost credibility and were gradually buried.

As a result, Deonhardt became everyone's enemy.

'And if it's another big incident...'

Dalkak. At the sound of the door opening, I lifted my head and lifted the hand that was resting on my chin.

Mr. Lee Ram, who was one of Daniel's strong supporters, was seen coming in, looking tired and squeezing his eyes.

Paul smiled weakly and waved his hand.

“Are you here?”

“Okay, I’m a little tired.”

“Hmm... I guess you came here after fighting with the leaders. “I thought there would be some cooperation now.”

“How can cooperation be possible when the new guys are trying to secure their share of the future by suppressing the others, and the remaining guys are trying to protect their share as they did?”

Moreover, since I am not the official head but a temporary acting head, I smiled awkwardly and pretended not to hear the strangely stinging remarks.

“I thought my brother cleaned up all the trash, but I guess he didn’t.”

“If we had tried to remove all the trash, 90% of it would have been lost, not half. Then it becomes difficult to maintain the revolutionary army itself, so we have no choice but to compromise. Still, I was able to get through it because Daniel cleaned up the really toxic trash.”

“That’s a good thing.”

“...More than that.”

This time, Iram looked at Paul with thorns in his eyes.

It was impossible to understand the meaning of the gaze, so the moment Paul tried to sneak away, he said something blunt as if he would not tolerate any more avoidance.

“Paul Daniel nominated you as his successor.”

“...i know.”

Paul paused and then smiled quietly.

...Another big incident is that Daniel, the first leader of the revolutionary army, died.

Yes, Daniel is dead.

Even when he died, he did not die meaninglessly. After noticing the duke's mastery, he used some of the revolutionary army, including himself, as bait to strike back, completely cutting off the link between the revolutionary army and the duke.

Thanks to this, the leash of the revolutionary forces that had been tied ever since they formed a relationship with the duke was loosened.

As soon as this news spread, Paul moved quickly and made Daniel and the trash that was dead at the time into heroes.

‘If I hadn't moved first, other leaders would have tried to make the ‘Second Leader Paul’ incident something that never happened, pointing out my brother's poor judgment in wasting half of the revolutionary army's strength.’

I can't bear to do something so bold as to denigrate the hero of the revolutionary army.

It feels bad that trash is being revered as a hero, but I like that my brother became a hero.

Paul, who admirably followed Daniel's will and maintained his position, smiled faintly at Mr. Iram, who was having a hard time trying to control the revolutionary army, which was already showing signs of division, and dealing with the leadership who were pecking at him, saying that he could not leave the leader's position vacant for long.

"I'll get my seat right away tomorrow. Instead, please give me freedom today."

"The situation is confusing...."

"I'm going to be busy from now on, but there's someone I want to see one last time when I have free time."

It wasn't hard to guess who that person was.

Iram touched his forehead.

"Daniel and you, really...."

The disciple looks just like the teacher.

What can we do to resemble useless things?

"...I won't stop you, but since you are important now, please bring some guards with you and move."

"yes."

***

After the Salvation Bridge collapsed, Shiia resumed living in the slums.

A life that would not be surprising even if it ended at any time. Will I die today or will I die tomorrow? Even though she made an uncertain bet with herself, she continued to live her life in the hope that salvation would come miraculously if she had to die.

If she was hungry for a long time, food would make her sick, and medicine would be given to her.

The human need for survival is so extreme that even she, who has no will to live, has no choice but to reach out for dubious salvation in the end.

and.

Even today, there were eyes watching the child from afar as he buried his head in his lap without any motivation.

‘I don’t seem to be sick, I feel like I’ve eaten roughly, and most of all, I’m alive...’ I don’t know if that can be considered safe, but I’m glad that I’m still alive and well.

Since I won’t be able to come often from now on, I’ll have to watch it a lot now.

My mouth is bitter. I hope Siia lives with motivation, but Paul doesn’t have the right to have her back. Because he had already led her down the path of destruction called Salvation Church.

‘I checked, so it’s okay. Let’s go back now.’

Paul, who had been standing there watching the child, disappeared and soon after, someone stood in front of Shiia.

“—.”

One-sided words fell out. As if something interesting had been said, Shiia, who had been motionless, flinched and raised her head.

“...Demonism?”

A child who had once been possessed by a pseudo-religion and had yet to escape it showed interest in a new religion.

***

“...Demonism?”

It seems to be a pseudo-religion that worships some kind of devil, right?

The duke laughed at the evilness that could be felt from the very name.

“They say that where there are no tigers, foxes reign as kings... Now that the Salvation Church has become quiet, an unheard-of pseudo-religion is rampant....” “....” “We can’t lose

. Aggressively increase the number of believers in the Salvation Church.”

I need to let people know that the tiger is still alive.

The tiger was clearly alive, although it was pretending to be dead for a moment. How dare something like a fox try to reign as king in the tiger’s territory?

‘In these times, it is a religion that worships the devil...’

It is obvious even without looking at the background. At least it must be a demon world.

The corners of the mouth naturally went up in an asymmetrical way.

“Let’s try to get along with each other properly.”

Who attracts more believers?

Even as he said this, the duke was confident of victory.

How many people would go to a religion with an ominous name? Even if the religion that opposes it has the name of 'salvation' and has once done good deeds, it is natural that people's hearts will be drawn to this side.

That's why the duke was able to draw a leisurely smile.

***

There is something the duke overlooked.

In the eyes of the poor, Salvation Church has already failed once.

Even if the tiger is alive, if it has lost all its claws and teeth and is still alive, how can the tiger's territory be recognized? It would be better to stick to the lively fox who invades his territory and claims it as his own.

A religion that has already collapsed once will not collapse a second time. What the poor wanted was a religion they could depend on, so Salvation Church no longer suited the religion they pursued.

In comparison, what about Demonism?

[The name makes it seem strong.]

[It won't fall down easily.]

[Like the Salvation Church, they hand out food.]

In the first place, the 'Demon Church' is not a fox. If I were to compare it, I would say it is an animal whose identity I have never seen before.

Since we don't know its identity, we don't know the power it has. Is he stronger than a tiger, is he more trustworthy, and what is his personality? Since I had no idea, I was just looking forward to it.

[Then there is nothing to worry about.]

Except for those who turn to the Salvation Church and those who miss the good memories of the Salvation Church and those who have completely withdrawn from religion, the majority of these people turn to the Demon Church.

Contrary to the Duke's expectations, who thought it would be overwhelming, the situation was going smoothly.

***

"Lirinel, you are not participating in the war, so why do you look so busy?"

"I'm busy with Demon Cult work, so the ignorant and ugly commander of the 9th Corps, go away! You're not even a Demon Cult believer!"

"..."

I'm Not That Kind of Talent

Chapter 154

154. Deon Hart, Traitor of Humanity (2)

As if it had been a joke before, the Demon King's army began to advance towards the capital of the empire in earnest.

The general commander is 0 Corps Commander Daemon Arut.

What was your expression on your face when you heard that a city in the empire had fallen to the devil's army not long after hearing this news?

[You finally became a hero. Really readable. I can only admire the fact that brothers became heroes side by side.]

[I am so grateful.]

[Those who have become official heroes so far have received what they wanted from Jim one by one. I can't make an exception for you. Is there anything you wish for?]

Funny enough.

[If not, an appropriate title and money...]

[There is a request.]

The Emperor ended up thinking of Cruel Hart, not Deon Hart.

The remarks of a foolish person who could not bear to hate and chose to embrace the person who slaughtered his family in front of his eyes vividly replay in my mind. The emperor quietly closed his eyes.

[I dare to guess what Your Majesty thinks of me. Since you are the duke's man, you must be on guard. You can remain vigilant. You don't have to believe it. No, I am clearly a manipulative person, so it would be better for you not to believe me.]

[...This is an unbecomingly long story. What is Cheong?]

At a private meeting with the emperor on the day the fourth hero of the empire was born.

[Just as you did when you listened to the third hero's request, I dare ask you to ignore me covering the eyes of the child I brought in.] [....] [It will be a request that is beneficial to His Majesty as well.]

The victim is the perpetrator . I knelt in front of a bystander for the sake of it.

The emperor, who played the role of a character in a comedy that cannot be laughed at, suddenly realized what Cruel Hart was thinking.

They are trying to blind Deonhardt so that he cannot know the truth. The guilt of killing an innocent family member must be so severe that you want to take your own life.

'If that happens, you won't know that your life is being threatened.'

Are you trying to present yourself as bait?

Deonhardt, who hates his family, is obsessed with aiming for Cruelhardt's head, leaving no time to doubt the truth.

Even though it was clear that the feeling of having his head targeted by the hands of his beloved family was absolutely terrible, Cruel Hart was trying to protect his younger brother with everything he had.

It was strange. I thought stories of people who sacrificed themselves this much were stories from far away places that only appeared in books.

Maybe that's why the emperor suspected that he was weak against 'Hart' and gave him another chance, just like he did to Deon Hart.

[As you said, it is a request that is beneficial to Jim. Couldn't they have put it forward as a 'suggestion' and asked for the 'what they want' separately?]

[I don't want anything other than that.]

[...This is terrible.]

I showed mercy at best, but the answer I got was terrible.

[good night. I accept your request. However, since that alone is not enough to merit the name of a hero, I will give you additional wealth. It would be twice the wealth that other heroes received before.]

[Wealth is not needed.]

[Also, a request that is beneficial to Jim. I will also help cover Deonhardt's eyes as long as the gain does not turn into a loss.] [...

Thank you.]

[There is no need to be thankful.]

He calmly bowed.

[Do not say hello, but accept it confidently. There is not a single thing that I have decided to give you that you will stoop down to receive. I intended to blindside Deonhardt without you asking, and riches are my reward for not bestowing the title on you. Since you called yourself the duke's man and told me to be on guard, I can't give you the title easily.]

Now that I think about it, Cruel Hart could have asked for 'covering my eyes' instead of asking 'to stand by'. . Since he wasn't stupid, he wouldn't have known that option.

Nevertheless, if that's the reason you chose to 'stand by' and take the loss...

'...you're reprimanding Jim.'

The Hart family disaster occurred due to the Emperor's neglect.

Even if it's like this, it's a subtle way to feed it. Although it was polite and subtle enough that a dull person would not have noticed.

I didn't feel the need to point it out, so I pretended not to notice.

[...In the end, Jim didn't give you anything. Is there really nothing else you wish for?]

[It is enough. Thank you.]

A faint smile spread over the expressionless expression that made it impossible to tell what he was thinking.

Faced with green eyes that contained as faint a warmth as a smile, the Emperor stopped what he was about to say further, sighed, and waved his hand.

[Jim definitely gave me a chance. Since you were the one who kicked it, let me tell you in advance that there is no use in regretting it later. Go away.]

A lot has happened since then and a lot of time has passed, but the memories are clear.

Perhaps it was because it was a moment when I personally experienced that there were things that even the emperor could not give, which I only knew in my head.

but.

'In the end, your efforts failed.'

Deon Hardt found out the truth.

Wouldn't it be fortunate if, instead of taking his own life right away, he decided on a target for revenge and rushed forward? At least I won't die until I get my revenge.

He willingly took on the stigma of being a traitor to humanity, stood on the side of the demon world, and pointed his sword at the empire. The targets of revenge are most likely the duke and the emperor.

'It's become a nuisance... but at least Deon Hardt doesn't die right away, so I guess I've done my best to honor you for serving others until the end.'

The moment Deonhardt came to me and asked me if I knew, the Emperor had no choice but to know.

Cruel Hart is dead. He would have died for Deonhardt. So, he must have come half-crazy like that.

That was why. It was an unusual whim.

'It was a foolish action for the emperor.'

He knows it too. But what can we do with the desire to pay appropriate respect to a person who served others from beginning to end?

Perhaps he wanted to relieve the feeling of defeat that he couldn't give him when he was alive, or perhaps he wanted to apologize in advance in anticipation of what would happen next because he realized who was the culprit who killed Cruel.

'Even so, it's still a whim in the end.'

Some may be surprised that the word capricious does not suit him, but if you know the reality, it is nothing new.

Because the emperor is a contradictory person in and of himself.

He is a man who cut himself down and crushed himself to fit the position of emperor that he was not suited for. Because of this, the gap between him as 'Emperor' and him as 'Edoardo Desserte' was significant.

Even if one wears a golden crown and a monarch's cape, it does not determine the 'true emperor'. Likewise, even if he changed his tone of voice and acted appropriately to the emperor's position, in the end he was 'Edoardo Desserte', so his nature would suddenly overwhelm his reason at critical moments.

It gives birth to contradictions and leads to capriciousness.

'The price is too high compared to the whim.'

What should I do if it has already happened? I have no intention of regretting anything, so I have to move to make things right.

Hearing that a city had fallen, he took his sword. If it weren't for the news of the VIP's visit, the order would have been moved by now to the area where the easy battle was taking place.

...If it weren't for the 'news of a distinguished guest's visit'.

"...so."

The Emperor, who was sitting in front of an ornate circular table and fiddling with the back of his left hand, rolled his golden eyes and looked at the two distinguished guests who had come to see him.

The circular table represents equal positioning. The moments when this table is placed where the emperor sits can be counted on one hand.

"I wonder what the king of the Mountain Kingdom and the King of Leweché are up to here."

It was natural that the person sitting at the round table would be the monarch of a country.

The emperor looked at the two kings, who made eye contact as if they were choosing words, and leisurely recalled some information in his head. Shanguk and Leweché are allies. Since two allies have come to visit me, their purpose is obvious.

‘Is this an alliance offer? ‘That’s clever.’

I heard that the King of the Mountain Kingdom ascended to the throne with a brilliant mind, but it seems he was quick to grasp the situation.

It would be good for the Empire and Rweché to form an alliance to deal with the Demon World. No, there is no choice but to tie the knot. The empire has excellent military power and Rweché is a wealthy kingdom with plenty of supplies.

But what about mountain country?

‘The leader’s head. That’s all there is.’

Even if we remain silent, it is an alliance between Rweché and the Empire that will be formed someday. From Sanguk’s point of view, it would be better to take the initiative and show condescension. Coincidentally, we are allies with Rweché.

Even if they stayed still, they would have been connected through their ally, Rweché, but it is natural that the right to speak out and gain a direct connection would be stronger than that.

The military power of the material empire of Rweche.
Mountain country on top of that.

When the emperor, who had figured out the current situation and made all the calculations, was inwardly admiring the quick judgment of the king of Shan State, she exchanged glances with the king of Rweche, nodded invisibly and looked at the emperor.

“As the king of the Mountain Kingdom and an ally of Rweche, I would like to make a proposal.”

“It’s expected, but I’ll give it a listen just in case. Something.”

“...How about forming an alliance?”

I knew it.

Instead of answering right away, the emperor relaxed his posture as if he wanted to listen first.

As if she didn’t think she would get an answer right away, she continued to persuade me without showing any signs of embarrassment.

“This war is a war between the demon world and the human world, not a war between the demon world and the empire. “It may be possible for the Empire to stand at the forefront when dealing with the Demon World, but shouldn’t it happen that the Empire deals with the Demon World alone?”

This is natural as a king in charge of a country and as a human being. The king of the Shan State grinned as he described the situation of the empire.

Before the war with the demon world, the emperor waged a war of conquest, inciting the vigilance and anger of all kingdoms.

The kings of each country are not easily helping with this scandalous behavior. Meanwhile, a city has fallen into the hands of the Demon King's army, so the current empire desperately needs support.

'So there's no need to bend this time.'

Usually, in an alliance, the party who proposes first gives in, but this situation is advantageous.

"As many countries as possible must join forces. "There is nothing more ideal than all the kingdoms of the human world joining forces, but that is difficult, so the only way is to gather as many countries as possible."

"I guess that was the reason for his recent moves."

King Yeonhwa of the Mountain Kingdom smiled instead of answering.

The emperor must have also heard that not long ago, Shanguo and Leweché each swallowed up other small kingdoms in a peaceful manner. In particular, I don't know what kind of trick was used, but I'm sure you also know that in that short period of time, the number of kingdoms that it had as vassals increased to three.

Thanks to this, it is safe to say that the main kingdoms of the human world have been completely liquidated, with only four remaining.

'It's not for nothing that they emphasized the 'war between the demon world and the human world' instead of talking about the synergy between the empire's military power and Rweche's materials.'

An alliance offer is not something that can be made lightly. In the process of forming an alliance, or even after forming one, a clever battle of wits takes place to gain the upper hand, and as a king responsible for the fortunes of the nation, it was natural for him to make thorough preparations in advance and make a proposal.

The empire can show off its military power and Rweche's materials. So what about mountain country?

'If you don't have anything to show off, you have no choice but to create it.'

Military power is average, production of various materials is also average. Nevertheless, the State of Shan was at some point referred to as the untitled southern empire. There is only one reason.

Because the monarch's capabilities were outstanding.

The current state of Shanshan had a strange structure in which it was abnormally dependent on a single king.

'Fortunately, it was easy to persuade one kingdom because it had helped the king in a battle for the throne...' The other kingdom quickly gave in after a moderate amount of fear and coaxing, and another kingdom bowed with a bit of threat.

In this way, she created a card that San-guk could present.

The Taehon Kingdom also tried to keep it as a vassal state, but Rweche, perhaps feeling uneasy, quickly took it away.

Still, this is enough.

‘At least it won’t be pressed without a hitch.’

As the importance of unity within the human world was also mentioned earlier, the possibility of the emperor comparing Shan-guk and Rweche and trying to gain the upper hand by suppressing Shan-guk was also blocked.

At the starting line where we were somewhat equal, she held her head high and spoke.

